Only such persons are considered entitled to public charity as are unable of themselves to procure their support, so that without help they must be partly or entirely in want of the first necessities of life. He who is thus entitled to public charity must receive it from that poor district where he has latest, of his own accord, spent a continuous period of three years or upwards, and during that time has supported himself without being a burden to the community. Or supposing he has not spent so long a continuous period in any particular district, he is then to be referred to his birth-place:

In particular cases, where the individual has not, by a continuous residence of three years, acquired a right of help from a particular district; or where his birth-place cannot be with certainty ascertained; or when it is not in Denmark; he is then to receive support from that district, in which during the last three years he has resided most, supposing, however, that such residence was not less than one year.

And supposing that no district can be assigned, which, according to this last rule, is obliged to support him, then the expenses for his support are to be made good by the whole bailiwick, if it was in a country district that he first became an object of public charity, or by the united poor chests of the towns, if he resided in a town at that period.

What has just been said does not apply to Copenhagen, which has no connexion with other towns, and therefore must itself bear the expense of aid to the individual, who having no parish district to which he can be referred, becomes an object of public charity during his residence there.

It is moreover enjoined as a general rule, that, when any one is in want of immediate help, he is to receive it without delay at the place where he makes application; and if found to belong to another district, that district is to refund all such aid thus given in advance, and the individual himself, if not hindered by sickness or other disability, is to be conveyed to his own district, there to receive support.

Wife or widow, becoming object of public charity, must receive support from the poor district from which the husband would have had a right to receive support; supposing, however, in the case of the widow, that she has not since, by residence, acquired a right of support in another district.

The parent's poor district is also that of their children, without regard to where the children may have been born, or may have resided; supposing, however, that they are still under the age at which they could find support for themselves, by going out to service or in any other way, and which is generally considered their 18th year.

Illegitimate children follow the mother, and, even after her death, are in case of necessity to receive from her parish the public charity they may be entitled to.

When servants, in case of sickness, need the help of public charity, they receive it from the poor fund of the district in which they serve without regard to their proper poor district.

The principle that a residence of three years gives a right, in case of necessity, to parish relief might seem calculated to give rise to cabals, where for example a parish dreaded the possibility of a particular individual becoming needy, it might wish to shove the eventual burden on other parishes, either, for instance, by ejecting such a person from the parish before the three years were out, or by enticing him before that period was elapsed to declare himself an object of charity, even although he might still be able to find support for himself. But hitherto in Denmark there have not been many symptoms of such cabals. The first of them, especially, could scarcely be put in practice in Denmark, for besides that it is forbidden to eject any one because he may perhaps in time become poor, and that a combination among the inhabitants of a parish, for the purpose of preventing such a one from having house or home there, would be considered as unlawful and void; it is enacted that the poor commission shall provide house-room for persons willing to pay for it, but not able to procure it; for which purpose, if other means fail, they are entitled to billet them on the parishioners in rotation. This last regulation, if it came to be frequently enforced, would no doubt be found to be not a little oppressive. But however we hear no complaints about it, and its existence has certainly contributed to prevent the combinations above alluded to, which otherwise might very possibly, in particular places, have been entered into by stealth, and might from the force of opinion have acquired a sanction, which the law denied them.

But

But the circumstance that the existence of such a regulation gives the power of defeating such cabals, prevents in a great measure the necessity of ever having recourse to it.

In Denmark we see no symptom of any wish to alter the principle which fixes three years as the period of residence required to confer a right to parish support, although an alteration has in this respect already taken place in the dutchies of Sleswick and Holstein. On the contrary, it would be considered a change for the worse to make the birth-place the rule, or to prolong the period of residence; for, by the former plan, the needy person would be much oftener than is now the case, thrown back on a place that had long been strange to him, and where he had neither friends nor connexions that could procure him private charity or employment, and thereby lessen his need of public help. And as to the second plan of prolonging the period of residence necessary to give parish right, this would, to a certain extent, be attended with the same consequences, and besides more frequently make it necessary to carry investigations back to remote periods, by which disputes about the helping-place would be increased and complicated, and the information on which the decision was to be founded rendered less worthy of reliance.

An alteration in this respect has however taken place in the dutchies of Sleswick and Holstein, so nearly connected with Denmark, where, since the year 1809, the time for acquiring a right by residence was also three years. That period, for example, was in the close of 1829 changed to 15 years, and the reason for this alteration was, that the above-mentioned cabals had there become prevalent to a great extent, partly in consequence of local peculiarities, and partly in consequence of maxims which had taken firm root during the previously existing legislation. And although, as already mentioned, no cause was seen for making a general alteration in Denmark, it was however enacted, as a measure of reciprocity, and forming an exception to the general rule, that individuals born in the said dutchies, or who had acquired a home-right there, could not afterwards acquire a parish support-right in any parish in Denmark without having there resided continuously for 15 years. And in like manner, on the other hand, no parish support-right acquired in Denmark can be lost by a shorter residence in a parish in the dutchies (than 15 years).

No one is allowed parish support before his situation is previously accurately inquired into, that thereby may be ascertained not only whether he is entitled to public support, but also to what extent, and in what manner this is to be furnished to him, and, further, what parish is to bear the charge of his support. Whoever wishes to receive help from the poor fund must apply, if in Copenhagen, to the proper poor overseer; if in a country town or country district, to the clergyman of his parish, who forthwith, by examining what is represented to him, or by any other way, procures the necessary information, particularly the name and age of the individual; how long he has resided on the spot; if he has formerly required or received, or if he still receives, charitable support; and in that case, how much, and whether public or private; the nature of his need, and the causes of the same; the state of his health and strength; how far he may be able to work for his support; what kind of work he understands, &c. &c. When the result of these inquiries is obtained, if it is in Copenhagen, it is determined by the board of directors, and if in the country, by the poor commission of the district, if the applicant can be received as entitled to parish support, and what steps are to be followed in consequence. And as the poor commissions of the country districts meet only once a quarter, and those of the market towns once a month, there is power given in the country parishes to the clergyman alone, and in the market towns to the clergyman and one poor overseer, to grant an interim help for assisting the immediate pressing want of the poor person, leaving the case to be tried at the next meeting of the poor commission, who will decide whether there seems necessity for admitting the poor person to regular support, or to any further help. And as the poor administration only receive those who cannot even procure for themselves the most indispensable necessities of life, consequently the nature of the assistance which they give is merely to see that the first necessities of life are secured. When the poor person is totally unable from his own strength to earn anything, he is received, as far as circumstances permit, into some public poor-house, or in some other way provided for by the poor administration with all that is absolutely necessary; viz. with food, as far as possible in kind, with the most necessary clothing, with lodging and fuel, and medical aid in case of sickness. On the other hand, if the needy person is in a condition to work, he must himself, according to his abilities, contribute to his support; and the public, in this case, only assist him by adding what, after the best employment of his strength, he is unable to obtain for the necessary support of life. If he cannot himself procure work, it is found for him by the poor administration, according to circumstances, either with private individuals, or for account of the poor administration. In some places the poor system is so arranged, that all who receive public charity are regularly admitted into a workhouse erected for the purpose, where they receive the necessary support, on condition of working for it as much as they are able. Under a prudent and careful administration such an arrangement has, among other advantages, this, that no one, who can otherwise support himself, will lightly throw himself on the poor commission, whose help he cannot obtain without submitting to a severe discipline.

Orphans, or children whose parents are in such a situation that the rearing and education of their children cannot be entrusted to them, are, at the charge of the poor fund, placed with foster parents until they can go out to service, or be otherwise provided for; and on such occasions the proper poor commission has to exercise a constant inspection, to see that those to whom the children are entrusted fulfil their duties. All children receiving public support are obliged from their sixth, or at all events their seventh year, regularly to attend school, where they receive instruction gratis, in the knowledge and accom-ishments considered necessary for the common people, among which, in addition to religious instruction, reading and writing are considered indispensable ingredients. By the school laws made subsequently to the organization of the present poor system, it is permitted to all who do not wish their children to receive a higher education to send them to the schools gratis; excepting in Copenhagen, where the parents, if not entirely indigent, must pay a trifling fee. And on the other hand, all who do not give proof that their children receive education elsewhere, are compelled to send them to the schools which have been erected at the expense of the towns, or of the country districts. According to the plan for the poor system of Copenhagen, it is provided, that either in the school buildings themselves or elsewhere, there shall be set apart rooms for children under five years of age, where one or more respectable elderly women may have the superintendence of them, so that the children may be prevented from running the streets, and that those parents who, from being obliged to go to daily labour, or from particular domestic occupations, are unable to attend their own children, may have a place where they can deposit them, with the certainty that they will be well attended to. Such instruction as is given the elder children is of course not given here, but they are merely occupied in receiving instruction in such knowledge, and such petty handiworks, as is suited to their age. By the later school law for Copenhagen, of the 29th July 1814, s. 41-43, similar schools of inspection are instituted for children under six years, without limiting them to such as are under the poor system, and with a more extended aim than that which the poor law had contemplated, inasmuch as in them an attempt is made to awaken reflection and the moral principle. Such schools have, therefore, the same object in view as the infant schools of England, which are now beginning to be imitated at Geneva, and concerning which Edward Diodati, in his work published in 1826, and entitled, "Quelques reflexions sur les écoles d'enfants," has given us some interesting communications. In the meantime, they have not had that success here which they seem to have met with in the foreign places just mentioned.

In regard to medical attendance it is to be remarked, that not only those who receive alms or other support from the poor administration, have, in sickness, a right to free medical aid and attendance at the charge of the poor system, but also such persons who, when in health, are able to maintain themselves and family without public charity, are yet, in other respects, so indigent, that when sickness attacks them they have not the means to pay for such medicines and attendance as the poor administration furnishes to the enrolled poor. And, moreover, the poor administration continues to give suitable support to such persons as are thrown back in their circumstances by sickness, until they are again able, without the help of public charity, to support themselves.

Individuals receiving support from the poor fund, as long as they continue to receive such support, are under the constant inspection of the poor overseer, who has to take care that the needy do not, to a greater extent, or for a longer period than necessary, remain a burden on the public; as also, that the help allowed them is given in a way answering to the intention. The poor administration also, when the poor are guilty of offences against that good order and morality, which those who receive public charity should observe, and when exhortation and reproof have proved unavailing, are authorized to inflict certain petty punishments specified in the law; but cases of this nature, requiring more considerable punishments, are referred to the usual tribunals. In Copenhagen and Odensee, there are houses of correction where refractory poor persons may be placed for a longer or shorter time, in which houses there are also places of solitary confinement for the purpose of increasing the punishment when the offence requires it; but this increased punishment cannot be employed for a longer period than 14 days at a time: and when the offender shows symptoms of bettering, the poor administration may curtail the period to which he may have been sentenced.

As every one that cannot support himself may, by applying to the poor administration and proving his need, receive the necessary help, all begging is consequently prohibited, and suitable punishments enacted for the same. In those places where there are houses of correction, such are also used as a means of punishing beggars, for a shorter or longer period fixed by sentence of court in conformity with the law; such period being for a first offence only short, but in cases of repeated offence proportionally longer.

When a poor person dies without relations able or willing to pay the expenses of his funeral, the same must be paid by the poor fund, and the expenses so incurred are to be made good from the effects of the deceased as far as they will go. If the effects, when sold, yield a greater sum than the expenses, the surplus belongs to the poor fund, if the relations of the deceased cannot or will not pay what the poor fund had spent on his support. It is enacted for Copenhagen, that when the deceased's effects yield a greater amount than what will fully reimburse the poor administration what is due to them, the surplus shall be divided among the heirs of the deceased, when such are either husband or wife, children or other lineal heirs, father and mother, brother and sister, in so far as they, or their children in their stead, are entitled by law to inherit along with the mother; but if no such near relations of the deceased are found, the poor fund inherits the surplus.

The amount of public charity spent on a poor person is to be ultimately furnished by the parish where the individual concerned, according to the rules above given, was entitled to receive support. Every poor district has therefore its own poor chests, to which belong sundry, either fixed or contingent revenues, and in so far as these revenues may be inadequate to meet the expenses, the deficiency is made up by a poor-tax charged on the inhabitants of the district. In the towns (excepting Copenhagen,) and in the country parishes, this contribution contribution is equalized in proportion to the fortune and circumstances of each individual, according to the estimate formed by the poor commission. In Copenhagen, up to 1814, there was no occasion for making any such equalizing tax, because, besides a number of fixed sources of income, which the government had assigned for that purpose, a voluntary subscription, and many considerable legacies, and occasional considerable support from government, had fully supplied the poor fund. But its resources being greatly weakened by the consequences of the war, from 1807 to 1814, it was found necessary in the last-mentioned year to introduce a general poor-tax for the metropolis, which is imposed each year to an amount sufficient to cover the deficiency arising from the excess of the expenditure above the receipts of the preceding year. It is equalized over the inhabitants not in direct proportion to the supposed fortune of each; but, as basis for the apportionment, the ground tax has been followed, being a tax which is charged on the square contents of the area taken up by each dwelling-house and its appurtenances. It was appointed by ordinance of 1st October 1802, of which a copy is sent herewith. The plan followed is, that the simple amount of this tax (or its double, triple, &c. if necessary,) is charged to each house as its poor-rate. By assuming this basis, the intention is no doubt to distribute the tax in proportion to the supposed fortunes of each individual, since it may reasonably be supposed that the space occupied by a family, if it does not give any infallible criterion of its wealth, must nevertheless bear a certain proportion to its abilities to contribute to the support of its needy fellow citizens.

A direct apportionment according to the fortune of each individual is considered as both too difficult, and too uncertain.

At the time that a general poor-tax was introduced into this kingdom, the country was in a prosperous state, and the poor got support partly from the funds belonging to each poor district (with the help of contingent revenues allowed by law, such as fines, &c.), and partly from the charity of individuals. At the introduction of the new system, it was natural to direct one's attention to the possible injurious effects of a public arrangement, which made it a compulsory duty for each citizen to contribute (according to the judgment of authorities appointed for the purpose) all that the needy members of the state seemed to require: inasmuch as the sluggard, the spendthrift and the profligate might thereby find opportunity to support themselves at the expense of the industrious and frugal. But, on the other hand, we must recollect, that we do not get rid of these evils by leaving the needy to depend on the charity of their fellow citizens. On the contrary, he who would rather live at the cost of others, than support himself by his own industry and economy, will often find more encouragement to this from the irregular help he expects to obtain from his fellow citizens, without accurate scrutiny into the nature of his want or his behaviour, and without being compelled to work, than from the help given by a public authority, which narrowly investigates his want, has inspection over his conduct, and keeps him under a corresponding discipline. It was considered as good policy, besides, that the state, merely from motives of public safety, should secure to each individual the possibility of getting the first wants of nature supplied without having recourse to crime. But if this object was to be attained, then must the support of the poor be built on a more certain basis than the funds belonging to each place's poor chest, or occasional revenues assigned without any acknowledged proportion to what is really necessary for the support of the poor (including also the charity of private individuals), could afford. And as, moreover, begging (which, wherever the support of the poor is not secured by public arrangement, seems excusable on the ground of the insufficiency of the means for protecting the needy from want) is attended with so many inconveniences, and burdens for the inhabitants, and is besides such a fruitful source of moral corruption, it was considered advantageous, even for that part of the community which did not stand in need of help, that by means of a public establishment for charity such annoyances should be got rid of.

In reference to the circumstance that the provisionment of the poor in this country is not made a general state affair, nor supplied direct from the public treasury, but on the contrary is treated as a parish concern, managed by a local authority, and at the charge of individual parishes; it is to be observed, that in the existing laws this method has been and is still considered as the only genuine way in which a poor system can be managed. A judgment of the wants of individuals, or an inspection of their conduct, could by no means be intrusted to a general state authority, but can only be executed with any certainty by a local authority. But supposing the right to support to be adjudged by a local authority, and the support itself to be paid out of the public purse; in this case the local authority, and the community in nearest connexion with it, would find it their interest to deal out support with the greatest profusion, by which means the inconveniences inseparable from every system of public charity would be greatly increased. But when each parish has to take care of its own poor, the persons appointed to decide on petitions for support, have the greatest inducement to observe economy, and rigidly to attend to every thing that can diminish the public burden; both because, as members of the community, they cannot escape from paying their share, and because of the relation in which they stand to the other contributors, which would draw upon them the general ill-will of their fellow parishioners, if they followed a different line of conduct. It is very true that the method by parishes has also its inconveniences, partly this, that a particular portion of a country may, from accidental circumstances, be burdened with a much heavier poor-tax than other and wealthier portions; also that there arises a temptation to chicanery with a view to throwing the support of poor persons on other parishes, whereby occasion is perpetually given to quarrels which may be both difficult and tedious to decide. But these inconveniences are, however, of less importance than such as would take place, if the support of the poor were made a national affair. By means of fixed rules for the poor administration, and by a proper arrangement for obtaining information as to every one residing in a district, it will seldom happen that there will be any uncertainty, as to the poor district from which any individual is entitled to receive support; and the decision of any disputes that might arise as to this, can (as we see is really the case here) be managed in such a way, that no very great expense, and seldom any great delay need be occasioned. On the other hand, in particular cases, where a parish may be burdened with poor persons that do not properly belong to it, but who on account of accidental residence there, and because no other parish can be assigned, have got upon its poor funds; or where very extraordinary circumstances render it impossible for a parish to raise the necessary funds for the poor; in these cases such a parish may receive assistance either from the general public purse, or from other parishes. This has been already arranged for country districts, by the establishing of bailiwick poor chests, which have certain special revenues assigned them, (for example, the greater number of fines, a small due on the sale of fixed property, or auctions of moveables,) and whose duty it is to give assistance to the poor chests of particular parishes in cases similar to the above-mentioned. In what manner, under particular circumstances, the support of an individual poor person shall be furnished by the whole country or town parishes of a bailiwick, is already noticed at page 304.

In Copenhagen the management of the poor concerns is certainly less parochial than in other places, but the amount of the annual poor-tax is fixed also for the metropolis every year by a royal resolution; previous to the fixing of which the magistracy and the 32 town deputies have to give their report on the subject, which is afterwards, by the chancery, laid before his Majesty.

For the rest, the compulsory method of supporting the poor introduced into Denmark of late years, in conformity with the principles above explained, has uniformly elicited complaints, and anxiety about the continually progressive increase of the burden of a poor-tax. Experience shows, however, that the burden of the poor-tax has not, on the whole, been uniformly increasing. During the period in which such an anxiety most showed itself, the chancery repeatedly suggested to the poor directors the necessity of practising economy and exact scrutiny in the distribution of public charity; and these suggestions, together with their acquired experience, have contributed to this, that the parish authorities have more and more exerted themselves to combine the strictest economy with their attention to the wants of the poor.

If we reduce the poor-tax in Copenhagen to species dollars, according to the course of exchange in each year at the time it was regulated, it will be found to have amounted, in

Respecting these sums, however, it must be remarked that they have always formed only the supplement, which, in order to meet current expenses, it was found necessary to add to the other resources of the poor fund, so that a difference in these resources has necessarily affected the amount of the sums to be contributed. But the different proportion which has existed between silver money and the paper money of the country, in which last the poor-tax has for the most part been imposed, and the expenses contracted, has also had a very considerable influence on the differences which the preceding Table exhibits. In the first years of the above-mentioned, the exchange, being still much against paper money, occasioned that the amount of the tax in species dollars was less than it ought to be. In subsequent years, particularly in 1818, the rapidity with which the paper money exchange improved occasioned an increase of the silver amount of the poor-tax, the more so from this circumstance, that the managers of the poor fund, as already mentioned, have hitherto been always obliged to use the contributions of each succeeding year to cover the deficiency of the former year, and this had occasioned the contracting of debt in paper money. In the year 1821, and some succeeding years, it was the low price of grain, and of the other necessities of life, which occasioned the great diminution in the amount of the poor-tax, both from the number of the needy being diminished, and from their support costing less. No doubt the price of these articles rose again at the close of the year 1826; but as, according to what has been already remarked, this could have no influence on the regulation of the tax for 1826, it was therefore not increased in 1827. But as the poor fund had by this means contracted debt, it became so much the more necessary in the following years to fix the poor-tax higher, in order that, by degrees, the debt contracted for these past years might also be liquidated.

The number of those who have received support from the poor fund of the metropolis, including those who have only received medical aid, or other temporary assistance, has in later years amounted to 6,800. This makes about one-seventeenth of the population, which amounts to upwards of 112,000. In proportion to this population the poor-tax of 1833 has amounted to about three-fourths of a species dollar per head.

In the country towns and country districts the poor-tax is, of course, more or less burdensome in proportion to the number of the poor, the general wealth of the inhabitants, the nature of the management, and the amount of resources which each place's poor fund may possess independent of the equalizing tax. Accordingly, in the country districts, the poor contributions, consisting partly in money and partly in articles of use, (when these last are brought into money, and the whole amount distributed over the hartkorn,) have, in the year 1832, shown a very different amount per hartkorn acre. (N. B. It is here to be remarked that, for the purpose of proportioning the taxes, the lands are estimated according to hartkorn acres in proportion to their value, so that, according to quality, there may go more or fewer acres of land to a hartkorn acre; and that, taking the average proportion, we may consider that a farm, estimated at two hartkorn acres, when there is not much debt on it, can yield a peasant family a frugal support.) In six bailiwicks the poor-tax in the said year has amounted to upwards of a rigsbank dollar, or half species dollar, per hartkorn acre. In four bailiwicks the tax has been under two-thirds of a rigsbank dollar, or one-third of a species dollar. In the remaining bailiwicks, on the other hand, the poor-tax has amounted to more than one-third, and less than one-half species dollar, per hartkorn acre, approaching in some bailiwicks nearer to the former amount, and in others to the latter.

For similar reasons, in the various country towns of Denmark, the poor-tax, when distributed equally over the whole of the inhabitants, has shown very different results. Thus, in some towns, it has amounted to one-half species dollar, in others under one-fourth species dollar per head; in some few it has been much less, viz. only one-sixth species dollar, and even lower.

There remains still to be mentioned, that bailiwick poor chests have been established for all the country poor districts of a bailiwick, having special revenues assigned to them; their object being chiefly, in as far as their means go, to assist individual parishes; when, for example, a parish, which is unable to bear any extraordinary burden, is accidentally charged with an expense, which may be very high in proportion to its circumstances, as, for instance, with the wardenship or cure of lunatics. These general bailiwick poor chests have also to pay to the deaf and dumb institution at Copenhagen for the board and attendance of all deaf and dumb patients belonging to the bailiwick*, in so far as their parents may not be able to make this payment; for it is considered unreasonable to burden with such expenses that particular parish to which such a patient might properly belong.

Mon séjour en Dannemarc m'a offert toutes les facilités possibles, pour visiter à loisir et observer avec soin les institutions destinées à secourir l'indigent, l'orphelin et l'infirme. Vivement pénétré des soins paternels prodigués dans ces établissemens, je n'ai pu résister au désir d'en tracer une légère esquisse. Ne connoissant pas à fond l'organisation intérieure d'autres contrées, je ne puis former de comparaisons entr'elles et le Dannemarc : l'idée, que je me suis faite, cependant du degré de perfection que des établissemens de bienfaisance peuvent atteindre, s'est trouvée assez réalisée dans ceux de ce pays : L'ordre, la propreté dans le régime domestique ; l'intégrité, la justice des administrateurs, sont les points principaux sur lesquels j'ai dirigé mon attention ; rarement ai-je éprouvé des impressions désagréables à cet égard : ce n'est point d'après une seule visite que j'ose énoncer ainsi mon opinion, un séjour de sept ans m'a offert bien des occasions de m'assurer, si la sensation agréable que j'avois éprouvée en parcourant pour la première fois ces asiles de piété ne s'effaceroit pas après un examen plus rigoureux. Je puis dire avec une véritable satisfaction que je n'ai été que rarement trompé dans mon attente. Il n'est point dit que tous les établissemens soient au même degré de prospérité ; mais les travaux assidus du gouvernement et des particuliers pour les y faire parvenir tous également sont éminemment utiles et dignes d'éloges. Il ne faut pas oublier non plus que le Dannemarc est un pays de peu d'étendue, et que des institutions qui ne seroient de nulle conséquence pour de grands empires sont fort importantes pour ce royaume. Cette contrée possède néanmoins un nombre si considérable d'hôpitaux, d'écoles et d'autres fondations bienfaisantes, que je n'ai pu citer ici que les principaux de crainte que cet écrit ne devint d'une étendue trop fatigante.

L'administration des pauvres, dont il est d'abord parlé dans cet aperçu, est sous certains rapports un modèle par les soins qu'elle donne aux indigens. Ils sont tous sous l'inspection immédiate des directeurs de cette administration, qui leur tendent une main secourable pour les tirer de la misère, et qui empêchent d'un autre côté, que l'oisiveté ne se glisse parmi les malheureux en les obligeant à des travaux qui ne dépassent pas leurs forces, et qui leur facilitent les moyens de gagner honnêtement leur vie. Plusieurs écoles, hôpitaux pour le pauvres, dépendent aussi des directeurs de l'administration. Il est facile de concevoir que les établissemens destinés à la plus basse classe du peuple ne peuvent présenter un tableau agréable à un œil délicat. Mais la persuasion de leur utilité réelle doit faire oublier l'aspect peu flatteur de leurs habitans. Les hôpitaux en Dannemarc méritent toute leur réputation. C'est de cette école que sortent tant d'excellens médecins, célèbres par leurs connoissances et leurs écrits. Ces établissemens sont dans un tel état de prospérité, que le peuple n'a point pour eux cette répugnance, que ces maisons lui inspirent dans d'autres pays, et qu'il n'est pas même rare de voir des personnes des classes plus relevées de la société s'y établir, lorsqu'elles n'ont pas la commodité de se faire soigner chez elles. Il en est de même de la maison d'accouchement.

Les principales sociétés particulières de bienfaisance datent avant la guerre si désastreuse pour le Dannemarc ; des pertes énormes ont mis des bornes forcées à la libéralité de bien des patriotes ; malgré cela, il est commun de voir des particuliers léguer des parts considérables de leur fortune pour le bien des pauvres.

Le gouvernement s'empresse d'encourager les réunions d'hommes sensibles aux maux de leurs semblables, et se félicite, que des associations quelquefois très nombreuses n'aient jamais pour but que des œuvres bienfaisantes. Le roi, la reine, et plusieurs membres de la famille royale participent personnellement à l'assistance donnée aux indigens. La reine surtout le considère comme un de ses premiers devoirs, et donne par là l'exemple le plus beau que ses sujets puissent suivre.

ADMINISTRATION GENERALE DES PAUVRES.

Le soin des pauvres a depuis long-tems occupé la législation Danoise. Le code de Chrétien V, publié en 1685, ordonna, qu'il fut fondé dans chaque ville un hôpital pour les malades et les infirmes ; plusieurs amendes y sont assignées au profit des pauvres ; on dit qu'il y avoit à cette époque dans chaque commune, des citoyens respectables qui se faisoient un devoir d'assister les ecclésiastiques dans la distribution des aumônes.

Il paroît que la loi relative à la fondation des hôpitaux ne fut pas observée très exactement, quoiqu'il en soit, il parut en 1708 une ordonnance remarquable, qui organisa les soins donnés aux pauvres dans les villes et dans la campagne. Il y est dit que dans chaque province le grand bailli et l'évêque seront directeurs de l'administration, et que les détails seront confiés aux magistrats, juges, pasteurs, et citoyens respectables de chaque ville et de chaque village. Quoique toutes les paroisses aient ainsi leur administration particulière, il y aura cependant des dépenses, qui seront faites par la direction, dans le chef lieu du bailliage.

Trois ans de résidence, non interrompue dans une commune, y donne droit à l'assistance. Les indigens, qui n'y ont pas séjourné pendant cet espace de tems, seront renvoyés dans le lieu où ils ont précédemment vécu, ou dans celui de leur naissance. Il est défendu de s'opposer à l'établissement d'un individu, sous prétexte qu'il pourroit tomber à charge à la commune. Ce renvoi ne peut avoir lieu que lorsqu'il est dans le cas de recevoir de l'assistance avant le terme fixé de trois ans. D'autres ordonnances indiquent les secours qui sont accordés dans ce cas, et la manière dont le remboursement doit s'opérer lorsqu'une commune a été obligée d'accorder des secours à un membre d'une autre.

La capitale n'a jamais été soumise à la direction des baillis et de l'évêque de Séelande ; elle a une direction particulière, qui exerceoit une certaine inspection sur les administrations dans dans les bailliages de Séelande; mais je n'ai pu découvrir, jusqu'à quel point s'étendoit cette autorité. L'ordonnance susmentionnée, de 1708, est extrêmement sage; elle marque au juste les limites qu'il faut mettre aux secours distribués, et donne des règles pour distinguer l'indigence provenant du malheur, de la misère produite par le vice.

Cet ordre de choses subsista long-tems; mais la population ayant augmenté, et par conséquent le nombre des pauvres, des circonstances malheureuses empêchèrent l'accroissement proportionné des sommes destinées à leur assistance, et produisit en 1771 un changement dans l'administration, qui fut confiée à trois personnes d'une intégrité et d'un mérite reconnus. Ils avoient les mêmes pouvoirs que l'ancienne direction, mais ils furent restreints à la ville de Copenhague. Il sembloit que l'administration générale ne dut rien perdre en passant dans leurs mains, mais il n'en fut pas de même des détails, qui après avoir été concentrés en un seul point, furent alors divisés entre les différents districts de la ville, qui avoit une commission composée de pasteurs et d'autres dignitaires des districts. Ces commissions n'étoient en aucun rapport entr'elles. Chacune recevoit ses contributions, et en disposoit à son gré; ce mode d'administration subsista pendant 10 ans, durant lesquels l'établissement s'endetta considérablement, ce qui ne fut imputé ni à la direction, ni aux inspecteurs; mais au vice primitif de l'organisation qui n'avoit mis aucune union dans les opérations; aussi le changement arrivé en 1781, tomba uniquement sur les directeurs en chef qui furent supprimés, et l'administration générale fut confiée aux magistrats. Les commissions spéciales furent conservées avec la seule différence qu'on augmenta le nombre des inspecteurs des pauvres de chaque district. Il faut observer cependant que la maison des orphelins et celle de correction à Copenhague, qui étoient soumises à la direction de 1771, ne passèrent point en 1781 aux magistrats, mais furent soumises à des directions particulières.

Un rescrit fixa à 16,000 roubles la somme que les commissions des districts pouvoient attendre de la caisse générale, somme qui ne pouvoit être excédée que dans des cas extraordinaires et avec l'approbation du Roi.

Peu d'années après cette époque Hambourg forma un nouvel établissement pour les pauvres, exemple qui fut suivi à Copenhague. Des ordonnances très détaillées établirent une direction de 24 personnes composée d'employés de la ville et du gouvernement, réunis à des citoyens notables; ce corps avoit une autorité suprême, et étoit divisé en cinq comités d'assistance, d'instruction, d'industrie, de santé et de police. Les grands établissemens, tels que l'hôpital général, ceux de St. Jean et de Warton, étoient soumis à l'inspection d'un comité composé de cinq membres pris dans chacun des comités. Enfin leurs chefs formèrent une direction particulière pour les finances. Par la même ordonnance les établissemens de charité pour les invalides, les veuves et orphelins des militaires, et ceux des églises reformées et catholiques, furent tous réunis à cette direction. On créa 120 curateurs pour l'assister dans ses fonctions, sans qu'ils eussent cependant voix dans le comité général.

Quelque parfait que ce système parut être, dix-sept ans d'expérience en ont montré les nombreux inconvéniens. Il existoit dans les comités chargés des différentes branches, une désunion qui nuisoit à la marche générale; de plus, l'assemblée générale de la direction étoit rarement complète; le comité des finances et celui de l'assistance, se saisirent peu à peu de tout le maniement des affaires. Enfin, en 1815, on simplifia l'administration générale, qui fut de nouveau confiée à trois personnes, et l'ancienne direction ne subsista que pour être consultée dans des cas particuliers. Les directeurs s'adressent directement au Roi.

Les revenus annuels des sommes destinées aux pauvres se montoient à 3,600,000 roubles. Chaque établissement a ses revenus et ses comptes particuliers. Les malheurs des tems, la guerre et des vices d'administration augmentèrent le nombre des nécessiteux et par conséquent les dépenses; on contracta des dettes très considérables. Le Roi ordonna alors, que les revenus de la direction seroient augmentés par des taxes directes et indirectes sur la ville. Ses revenus indépendamment de cette nouvelle ressource proviennent encore d'une petite part dans la taxe foncière, et dans les droits d'un pour cent sur les appointemens des employés civils hors de Copenhague; du quart du produit des droits du port; d'une petite part de ceux du timbre sur les cartes à jouer; d'un quart pour cent de tous biens fonds situés sous la juridiction de la ville, qui se vendent sous main, on en vente publique; de toutes les marchandises qui se vendent de la même manière; de 5,000 roubles de la lotterie royale; d'une redevance sur les spectacles, de quelques amendes, enfin des dons gratuits, qui ne sont plus fort considérables.

La direction est assistée, comme je l'ai déjà dit, par des curateurs choisis dans la haute bourgeoisie qui veillent sans rétribution au soulagement des pauvres; leur nombre est de 64 autant qu'il y a maintenant de quartiers dans la ville. Leurs fonctions sont d'examiner la situation des pauvres qui s'adressent à eux, d'en faire le rapport à la direction, de surveiller ceux qui ont part à l'assistance, en général, de faire observer les arrêtés qui émanent de cette autorité.

Indépendamment des secours accordés, on fait des distributions de soupe et de pain dans les hôpitaux, les maisons de travail et les écoles de charité. Le nombre des enfans, dont la direction prenoit soin, s'étant monté, il y a quelques années jusqu'à 900, et les fonds ne pouvant suffire à leur entretien, on ne reçoit actuellement au nombre des pensionnaires que les orphelins de père ou de mère, ou ceux qui sont exposés par la mauvaise conduite de leurs parens. On fait deux fois par an des distributions de linge et d'habits aux autres enfans, et en donne plus particulièrement à ceux qui fréquentent les écoles publiques de charité. Comme il y a à Copenhague deux époques fixes dans l'année pour changer de logement, on fait alors des distributions d'argent, qui ne sont jamais assez considérables pour payer les loyers en entier, mais qui en acquittent cependant une grande partie.

DENMARK.

Un principe dont on ne s'écarte pas, c'est d'accorder l'assistance avec ménagement à moins que des circonstances extraordinaires ne nécessitent de plus grands dons. Les secours sont particulièrement accordés aux vieillards, aux infirmes, aux malades, ainsi qu'aux veuves et aux familles que le nombre de leurs enfans met hors d'état de subvenir à leurs besoins.

La direction exige aussi que chaque individu qu'elle assiste, travaille autant que son âge et ses forces le lui permettent; ceux qui ne trouvent point d'occupation, sont placés dans les hôpitaux et maisons de travail. Enfin l'assistance qu'on donne en ville n'est jamais suffisante pour en vivre uniquement, arrangement très sage, qui prévient l'oisiveté. Chaque district de la ville a un médecin, payé par la direction, qui soigne gratis les malades indigens. Les remèdes leur sont de même délivrés sans aucun payement.

Dans les duchés de Holstein et Schleswick, les villes d'Eckernförde, de Schleswick, d'Altona et de Kiel se distinguent par leur administration des pauvres établie sur le même pied que celle de Copenhague.

HOPITAUX DEPENDANS DE L'ADMINISTRATION DES PAUVRES:

1. Hôpital Général.

L'hôpital général de Copenhague fut fondé en 1768. Ses réglemens portent qu'il sera non seulement l'asile des malades, mais encore celui des vieillards et des infirmes. Des abus s'étant introduits dans cet établissement, on exclut ceux qui pouvoient encore gagner leur vie, et on remplaça les secours d'argent qu'on y avoit donné jusqu'alors par des distributions de denrées. On construisit ensuite divers bâtimens, afin de séparer les malades d'avec les infirmes. Cette séparation s'étendit même sur les personnes des deux sexes, qui n'eurent plus de communication ensemble. Le jardin, où ils prennent l'air, fut également divisé.

Les réglemens concernant l'ordre, la propreté et la nourriture des malades, ont aussi été perfectionnés, de sorte que, par ces diverses améliorations, l'hôpital est successivement parvenu au point de perfection où il se trouve maintenant. La situation à peu de distance du port, facilite l'usage des bains de mer. Il y a 384 lits pour les malades.

Toutes espèces de maladies y sont admises, ainsi que les blessures, pourvu qu'elles ne soient pas incurables. Les maladies honteuses sont traitées à l'hôpital général dans un local séparé. Le gouvernement a un soin extrême d'en arrêter la propagation, en soumettant les femmes privilégiées à des visites domiciliaires, et en les obligeant de se rendre à l'hôpital pour la moindre indisposition sous des peines sévères, si elles contreviennent à cet ordre. Cependant toutes les personnes attaquées de ce mal ne sont point réunies dans le même appartement, le malheur ayant des droits, qu'on ne confond point avec le libertinage.

Chaque appartement a une femme chargée de soigner les malades, une autre a la surintendance du linge et de la lessive.

Il y a une grande différence dans l'étendue des chambres; mais l'ordre et la propreté y règnent également; dans aucune le nombre des malades n'est assez considérable pour y corrompre l'air.

Il seroit à désirer que les bâtimens destinés aux invalides fussent dans le même état, mais leur nombre et le manque de moyens ne le permettent pas.

L'inspecteur et deux employés sont chargés de la surveillance; ils tiennent les livres, et rendent compte chaque semaine à la direction des affaires relatives à l'hôpital; c'est-à-dire, celles qui n'ont aucun rapport avec la médecine, confiée entièrement aux médecins et chirurgiens en chefs, qui ont sept aides ou candidats, dont quelques uns sans gage assistent au traitement des malades, pour se perfectionner dans leur art. On reçoit aussi à l'hôpital général des personnes, qui pour un prix modique s'y font soigner, particulièrement les domestiques et les apprentifs, dont les maîtres doivent payer l'entretien pendant leur maladie. Pour être reçu gratis dans cet hôpital il a fallu jusqu'ici l'attestat du médecin qui avoit soigné le malade et celui du médecin du quartier, pour certifier l'impossibilité où se trouvoit le malade de payer son entretien. Mais cet arrangement ayant entraîné beaucoup d'abus, l'administration générale chargea les médecins des quartiers de soigner gratis les pauvres de leur district, et si leur envoi à l'hôpital devenoit nécessaire de les munir de papiers, qui désignoient leur état et leur maladie.

Lorsque les médecins de l'hôpital sont persuadés qu'un mal est incurable, ils renvoient la personne qui en est attaquée à ses parens en lui donnant les secours nécessaires, ou la font transporter dans l'hôpital des incurables, où enfin on la reçoit dans la classe des invalides, dont le nombre se monte à près de 600; 180 hommes et 420 femmes y compris les infirmes, les vieillards, &c. Ceux qui abusent de la permission qu'ils ont de sortir le Dimanche, soit pour mendier ou pour s'enivrer, sont punis par la réclusion.

Chaque personne reçoit pour son diner du manger chaud à proportion de son appétit et une livre de pain. Leur linge est blanchi à l'hôpital, et ils reçoivent chaque semaine quelque argent de poche. Des donations particulières ont augmenté ces distributions, qui sont surtout adjugée à ceux qui se distinguent par leur bonne conduite. Deux vastes chambres chauffées en hiver sont destinées au travail; on file dans l'une le lin et dans l'autre la laine. Ceux qui travaillent reçoivent un salaire proportionné à l'ouvrage qu'ils font.

L'hôpital possède dans le Docteur Wendt, un homme distingué par ses connoissances et par l'intérêt particulier qu'il met à l'établissement qu'il dirige. Un père ne pourroit être plus plus soigneux et plus patient avec ses enfans qu'il ne l'est avec ses malades. Très sévère pour tout ce qui regarde l'ordre et la propreté, il règne cependant dans ses paroles et ses actions une bonté qui ne se dément pas.

Les revenus de l'hôpital général se montent à près d'un million de roubles, somme qui s'augmentera sûrement par l'excellente administration des directeurs.

2. Hôpital des Foux à Bistrupgaard près de Roskilde.

L'hôpital des foux, jadis celui de St. Jean, étoit dans son origine très misérable. Plusieurs particuliers firent des donations pour améliorer son état; la plus considérable fut celle de Claude Rosset. Aussi son nom fut-il associé à celui de l'hôpital. Dans son origine on n'y traitoit que des maladies incurables. L'expédition des Anglois contre Copenhague en 1807 pensa ruiner cet établissement de fond en comble. L'hôpital se trouvant placé alors immédiatement sous le canon de la ville, il fallut solliciter auprès des Anglois la permission de le vider; mais ils n'eurent pas l'humanité d'accorder une trêve assez longue pour le faire avec ordre, et il est inoui, tout ce que les malheureux qui l'habitoient eurent à souffrir par cette précipitation. Peu d'instans après son évacuation, l'hôpital, qui venoit d'être récemment remonté à neuf en linge et en lits, fut pillé par les Anglois. Les bâtimens souffrirent beaucoup sans être détruits. Après que l'ennemi se fut retiré on ramena les malades; mais ils s'y trouvèrent privés de toutes les aisances qu'ils y avoient auparavant, et les malheurs du tems ne permirent pas de réparer sitôt les pertes essayées. L'ordonnance, qui fit étendre les fortifications de la ville, engagea la direction de l'hôpital à chercher sans délai un autre emplacement; elle fit alors l'acquisition d'une terre nommée Bistrupgaard, située près de Roskilde, de 800 arpens d'étendue. On en afferma 450, dont les revenus payés en denrées sont consommés par l'hôpital, plusieurs portions de terre distribuées aux employés forment une partie de leurs gages, et de plus petites portions sont destinées à l'entretien des ouvriers de la ferme; 80 arpens sont cultivés pour le compte de l'hôpital, et 90 sont destinés à la culture du lin, ayant les bâtimens et les machines nécessaires pour le préparer. On y forme des élèves qui puissent répandre en Dannemarc cette branche d'industrie trop négligée. Il est à regretter que cet établissement soit si loin de la capitale.

L'hôpital est divisé présentement en deux parties; l'une destinée aux foux incurables, l'autre aux invalides.

L'édifice qui renferme les foux, est situé aussi avantageusement qu'on peut le désirer, placé sur une hauteur; sa porte d'un côté sur la ville de Roskilde et son antique cathédrale, et de l'autre sur un golphe du Cattegat, qui s'étend jusque près de la hauteur où ses nombreuses sinuosités entre des collines couvertes de beaux bois de hêtres, offrent un point de vue aussi pittoresque qu'on peut l'attendre, dans un pays où l'on ne connoit point les grands tableaux qu'offrent la Suisse et l'Italie.

Un bâtiment à plusieurs étages est placé au centre. Sa plus grande chambre est destinée à ceux, dont la folie peut, sans danger, permettre la réunion. Les deux ailes de ce bâtiment sont destinées, l'une aux foux, qui demandent une rigide surveillance, et l'autre à l'infirmerie. Les larges fossés de l'ancien château forment une sureté suffisante pour ne pas craindre que les premiers s'échappent, et leur laisse la liberté de respirer l'air. Un jardin situé au pied de la colline sert de lieu de récréation. On évite soigneusement tous les noms qui pourroient rappeler aux foux leur malheureuse situation; ainsi le grand bâtiment s'appelle le château, et la chambre commune le sallon, et ainsi de suite. A l'extérieur des fossés se trouve l'ancienne ferme dont les nouveaux bâtimens qui y sont joints forment un quarré. D'un côté sont les logemens de l'intendant et du médecin, un autre côté est destiné aux cuisines, boulangerie, brasserie, et blanchisserie, ainsi qu'aux magasins nécessaires; une autre partie est occupée par les invalides, et près de là est l'église. Ceux qu'on reçoit de préférence, doivent malgré quelques défauts de corps ou d'esprit avoir assez de force et de facilité pour le travail; par exemple, des personnes attaquées d'épilepsie, des aveugles, des imbéciles, qui ne peuvent être rangés dans la classe des foux; et on complète le nombre par des vieillards et des infirmes. Il s'en suit de là que dans leur nombre il en est peu qui peuvent être employés aux travaux de la campagne ou de la maison, les autres sont occupés au tricotage, ou à quelque métier de tisserand; les aveugles sont employés à faire des paniers, et c'est un aveugle qui enseigne cet ouvrage aux autres. Les artisans âgés exercent leurs métiers selon leurs forces pour l'usage de la maison ou des autres établissemens soumis à l'institut des pauvres.

La situation à la campagne fait, que la nourriture est meilleure à Bistrupgaard qu'à l'hôpital général.

Une grande partie des foux y est d'ailleurs aux fraix, de leurs parens ou de la commune à laquelle ils appartiennent. Leur nombre est actuellement de 73, et celui des invalides et incurables de 274.

Malgré les fonds considérables que possède l'hôpital, ils ne pourroient suffire à son entretien, si l'institut général des pauvres n'y subvenoit. Les employés sont un intendant et son secrétaire, chargés de la tenue des comptes, de l'administration des terres, et de la surveillance de la maison, un médecin en chef et ses aides, et un pasteur. Parmi les serviteurs de la maison, il y a plusieurs gardes malades des deux sexes, dont le nombre augmente selon la quantité de malades. La manière de les traiter tous, sans exception, est entièrement paternelle.

L'hôpital de Warton occupe un rang distingué parmi les fondations pieuses de Copenhague. On ignore l'origine du nom qu'il porte, quelques personnes le font dériver du mot Allemand wartrn, parceque cet établissement étoit si recherché, qu'il falloit attendre très long-tems, avant que d'y être admis. Il s'appelloit originairement l'hôpital du St. Esprit.

Cette fondation est presque aussi ancienne que la maison régnante. Chrétien 1, à son retour de la terre sainte, en posa la base, en fondant un hôpital pour les infirmes. Les Rois, ses successeurs, dôtèrent cet établissement de plusieurs fonds de terre; ces libéralités permirent de l'étendre au delà de ses limites primitives. En 1585, Pierre Oxe, ministre des finances sous Frédéric 2, légua à Warton des revenus assignés sur des terres, dont les héritiers étoient tenus à fournir constamment aux fraix de 8 places dans l'hôpital. Plusieurs particuliers imitèrent cet exemple, en donnant des revenus ou des capitaux, se réservant le droit ainsi que leurs descendants de nommer eux-mêmes le nombre des places d'après la somme qu'ils avoient léguée.

Les directeurs de cette fondation augmentèrent ces revenus par une sage administration, si bien, que vers la fin du 17^{me} siècle, Chrétien 4 associa 4 petits hôpitaux aux fraix de celui-ci, savoir, ceux de l'isle de Möen, de Ringsted, de Nestved et de Calloundborg. Tous les documens et archives de cette fondation ayant été brûlés dans les incendies de 1795 et de 1807, il est impossible de donner des renseignemens exacts sur son état primitif. Warton n'est point un hôpital consacré aux malades, mais destiné aux vieillards et aux infirmes. Les ordonnances de Chrétien 4, portent qu'on n'y recevroit que les bourgeois de Copenhague, leurs femmes et leurs enfans, qui auroient payés les taxes de la ville. Dans les derniers tems on y a admis des domestiques, qui pendant de longues années avoient fidèlement servi leurs maîtres. Cet établissement est donc un asyle pour des marchands, des ouvriers et leurs familles, réduits à l'indigence, et est en même-tems la récompense de longs et zélés services. Les militaires et leurs veuves en sont exclus. Les maladies contagieuses, la démence, ainsi que toute personne saine, ou en état de gagner sa vie, le sont de même. Il y a actuellement 406 lits, dont 70 pour les hommes, le reste pour les femmes. La direction de l'institut général des pauvres à Copenhague a le droit de nommer à 200 de ces places; 30 sont réservées au choix des communes dont les 4 hôpitaux incorporés à Warton dépendent. Du tems de Chrétien 4 on étoit logé, chauffé et nourri aux fraix de cet établissement, la table étoit même très bonne, et les employés n'en avoient pas d'autre. Les malheurs des tems forcèrent à un changement, et au lieu de nourriture on donna 2 roubles, 8 cop. par semaine.

Les chambres de cet hôpital sont vastes. Il y a de plus de grandes salles chauffées constamment en hiver, où ceux qui veulent travailler se réunissent; mais ils n'y sont pas forcés, ils jouissent d'une entière liberté, et peuvent sortir quand ils veulent.

On porte tous les matins à chaque individu de l'eau chaude, pour faire son thé. On entretient constamment un feu dans la cuisine pour ceux qui veulent s'en servir.

Enfin il y a des femmes qui lavent à des jours marqués, et à un prix fixé par la direction.

L'hôpital a son église où les Dimanches et jours de fête on célèbre deux fois le service divin; de plus, tous les soirs à 7 heure on se rassemble dans la plus grande salle pour faire la prière accompagnée de chant.

L'infirmerie se trouve dans une maison attenante à l'église, où dans 4 chambres très propres sont 33 lits. Le médecin du district y soigne les malades gratis, et les médicamens sont aussi fournis gratis par la pharmacie de l'hôpital général.

Les principaux employés de la maison sont, l'inspecteur, le pasteur et le marguillier. Chaque dortoir a une femme préposée pour veiller à l'ordre et à la propreté. Les infirmes ont 3 gardes malades. Il y a de plus un portier et des hommes pour les gros ouvrages de la maison. Ceux qui y entrent, doivent y apporter tout ce qu'ils possèdent; l'hôpital est leur unique héritier, et ces petites successions qui reviennent souvent ne laissent pas de produire un revenu.

On peut évaluer actuellement les revenus annuels de la maison à près de 42 mille roubles.

4. Hôpital d'Abel Catherine.

L'hôpital d'Abel Catherine se distingue dans le nombre des hôpitaux de Copenhague; il reçut son nom de sa fondatrice Abel Catherine Worten, grande maîtresse, près de la Reine Sophie Amelie. Elle le fonda en 1675, pour des femmes pauvres et infirmes, qui n'avoient d'autres moyens d'existence que la charité publique. Leur nombre est fixé à 23, et on choisit avec soin celles qui y sont admises: ce choix se dirige principalement sur des femmes, qui ayant vécu dans une certaine aisance, se trouvent réduites à la misère, sans qu'elles aient à se la reprocher.

Elles ont en entrant dans ce refuge une espèce d'indépendance, vu qu'elles s'entretiennent elles-mêmes. Chaque femme a sa chambre, une petite cuisine et un emplacement pour le bois, et un jardin en commun. Comme les statuts n'ont point désigné de servante, elles ont la permission d'en prendre une, approuvée par la direction. La fondatrice a assigné à chaque femme reçue à cet hôpital trois roubles par semaine. Les revenus se tiroient d'une terre située en Jutlande, qui a été vendue, et dont l'argent a été placé aux intérêts. L'administration de cette maison ne coute presque rien. Son inspecteur tient les comptes et un employé y est logé pour maintenir l'ordre. La maison a une chapelle, et le pasteur de l'hôpital général y célèbre le service divin.

Quant aux médicamens et au médecin, c'est sur le même pied qu'à l'hôpital de Warton.

L'admission à cet établissement est si recherchée, que chaque vacance a un grand nombre d'aspirantes.

AUTRES HÔPITAUX A COPENHAGUE ET DANS LE PAYS :

1. Hôpital de Frédéric à Copenhague.

Cet hôpital doit sa fondation au Roi Frédéric 5, en 1756. Il est situé dans une des rues les plus apparentes de la capitale, forme 6 corps de logis, et renferme 8 cours assez spacieuses. Celle du milieu, plantée d'arbres, est un espèce de jardin, où les convalescents peuvent prendre l'air. Ces corps de logis sont réunis par des bâtimens de communication, qui renferment les logemens des employés de l'hôpital. Il est à regretter, que le terrain sur lequel cette maison de santé est construit soit très humide, à cause du voisinage de la mer.

L'hôpital n'avoit pas même de caves; et ce n'est que dans les dernières années, qu'on s'est occupé à grands frais d'en creuser, surtout sous les chambres destinées aux malades.

Son acte de fondation déclare, que le but de cet établissement est de venir au secours des malades indigents, qui ne reçoivent aucun aide des institutions publiques, et particulières de charité. Il en exclut cependant ceux atteints de maladies incurables ou honteuses; ainsi que les enfans au-dessous de 7 ans, excepté que le genre de leur maladie exige quelque opération chirurgicale. Plus tard cet établissement reçut des malades à raison de certains payemens, qui furent fixés à 8 roubles par semaine dans les chambres publiques, et à 10 dans une chambre particulière, tous les frais compris.

L'acte de fondation porte que l'hôpital recevra 300 malades. Il est naturel que leur nombre dépende surtout des saisons et des épidémies. De ces malades il y en a 180 au compte de l'hôpital; 40 des legs; et le reste paye son entretien.

Le personnel de l'hôpital consiste, en ce moment, en un médecin et un chirurgien en chef, un médecin et chirurgien de réserve, 4 candidats dans chacune de ces deux parties, un apothicaire, un inspecteur de bains, un économiste.

Il est d'ailleurs permis aux jeunes étudiants en médecine et en chirurgie, de visiter journellement l'hôpital, afin d'y perfectionner leurs connoissances. Le médecin en chef visite les malades chaque matin à une heure fixe, accompagné des candidats et des étudiants. On examine, pendant cette visite, les changemens survenus, depuis la veille, dans l'état des malades. Le médecin en chef dicte alors aux candidats les remèdes et la diète que chacun d'eux doit suivre; on l'inscrit ensuite dans le journal. Les candidats profitent de ce moment, pour examiner les malades avec soin, afin de juger des progrès de la maladie; et le médecin tâche encore de rendre cette visite plus instructive, en leur faisant faire des remarques intéressantes. Comme l'inspection du médecin, avec 180 malades, est très fatigante, et qu'il seroit difficile de la soutenir plus de deux heures de tems, on conçoit que le médecin ne peut s'arrêter à expliquer chaque maladie aux jeunes étudiants; mais ce désavantage est compensé par la diversité des malades, et par l'application suivie de presque tous les élèves en médecine. Ils ont un exemple d'assiduité à suivre dans celui que leur présente le chef actuel, le Professeur Herholdt. Savant physiologiste, son coup d'œil exercé, lui fait découvrir la nature des maladies; physionomiste éclairé, celles de l'ame lui sont rarement cachées. Profond dans toutes les parties de la médecine, il ne néglige point les autres sciences. Il réunit enfin à cette érudition étendue le caractère le plus franc et le plus aimable qui excite la confiance de ceux qui le consultent, qualité précieuse dans un homme de l'art, qui doit toujours tacher d'éloigner l'attention du malade de ses maux.

Comme les médecins en chef des hôpitaux ont du tems de reste, et que ce sont les meilleurs médecins de la ville, ils peuvent pratiquer en ville sans que leur absence soit préjudiciable à l'hôpital. Un médecin de réserve remplit les fonctions du docteur en chef pendant son absence; les candidats font aussi à tour de rôle l'inspection. Ils doivent de plus examiner, chaque semaine, les malades qui veulent entrer à l'hôpital, pour s'assurer s'ils n'ont aucune des maladies qui d'après les réglemens leur font refuser l'admission. Le plus ancien des candidats fait, chaque semaine et chaque mois, des listes sur le nombre des malades, et l'âge de ceux qui viennent s'établir à l'hôpital.

Le savant médecin Callisen dit, dans son excellent ouvrage, intitulé, Remarques sur Copenhague, " que l'étendue des chambres des malades, leur hauteur, la propreté qui règne dans toutes les parties de l'établissement, les soins paternels qu'on leur prodigue, ne laissent presque rien à désirer." Je puis assurer qu'il n'en a pas trop dit, ayant reconnu ces vérités dans les fréquentes visites que j'y ai faites.

Cependant le zèle du Docteur Herholdt, et les soins de la direction actuelle de l'hôpital, ont encore amélioré son état. L'hôpital fournit ses malades de linge; mais ils peuvent se servir du leur. Le linge des lits est renouvelé très souvent; les chambres sont lavées une fois par semaine, et sont pourvues de ventilateurs. La nourriture est plus ou moins choisie, selon la qualité du malade et les habitudes qu'il peut avoir prises, elle est toujours parfaitement apprêtée et très abondante. Si le médecin demande pour ses malades quelques mets ou quelques vins rares et coûteux, l'économiste les lui délivre aussitôt, et l'inscrit dans un livre particulier. Chaque chambre a une ou deux gardes malades pour le jour, et une autre pour la nuit.

 DENMARK.

Avant que le Professeur Herholdt fut mis à la tête de l'hôpital, on plaçoit, sans distinction, les malades dans les chambres où il se trouvoient des lits vacants, de sorte que, souvent des personnes atteintes de fièvre putride, (maladie très commune et très dangereuse en Dannemarc,) se trouvoient placées à côté d'autres, qui souffrant de quelque mal chronique, couroient le risque d'être atteintes de cette fièvre. Le professeur s'est empressé de mettre fin à des inconveniens si fâcheux; des chambres séparées furent destinées aux fièvres putrides; et il changea, avec le plus grand succès, la méthode de les traiter. On considéroit auparavant cette fièvre comme asthénique; on tâchoit donc d'éloigner du malade le moindre souffle d'air; on le tenoit chaudement; on lui donnoit enfin les remèdes les plus fortifiants. Ce traitement ne faisoit qu'augmenter la mortalité occasionnée par cette maladie; et on en donnoit le caractère à des fièvres, qui, sans cela, ne seroient jamais devenues putride. Rendu attentif à ce mal, et goûtant une méthode toute contraire proposée par des médecins Anglois, Herholdt introduisit il y a trois ans dans son hôpital un système tout nouveau. Les rideaux furent enlevés des lits comme ne servant qu'à y entretenir le mauvais air; les malades couchés sur des matelats durs, n'ont que des couvertures minces; les fenêtres sont ouvertes été et hiver, à fin d'entretenir un courant d'air continu. Les remèdes sont entièrement rafraichissans; on emploie les sang-sues dans le commencement de la maladie, et les compresses d'eau froide et de vinaigre sur la tête et l'estomac pendant la durée du mal. La liste de mortalité prouve combien cette méthode est excellente, puisqu'il ne meurt qu'un malade sur 30, au lieu d'un sur 12, ou même 1 sur 8 qui mourroit auparavant. La contagion est si peu à craindre, vu la pureté de l'air, que j'ai souvent examiné les malades de très près, sans courir le moindre danger. Je ne puis passer sous silence un phénomène presque inconcevable, que j'ai vu à l'hôpital de Frédéric, quoique ce recit sorte de mon sujet: c'est une fille juive de nation, nommée Rachel Hertz, du corps de laquelle, Herholdt, après des opérations répétées, a extrait près de 400 aiguilles. La première se montra au commencement de l'année 1819. Cette malheureuse fille est âgée de 31 ans; et sa vie, depuis l'âge de 15, n'a été qu'une suite de souffrances. Elle-même, sa famille, tous, en un mot, ignorent comment ce nombre presque incroyable d'aiguilles est entré dans son corps; mais ce qui est indubitable c'est, qu'elles en ont été tirées. Le témoignage du Docteur Herholdt suffiroit déjà pour le croire; mais la plupart des médecins de Copenhague, plusieurs médecins étrangers qui ont été présent à quelques-unes de ces opérations, et qui en ont faites eux-mêmes, confirment assez cet événement extraordinaire. Avant qu'on eut connoissance des aiguilles, cette fille étoit sujette à des attaques les plus cruelles de crampes et à des évanouissemens de plusieurs jours. Herholdt ne put trouver d'autres moyens d'arrêter les douleurs, que d'intercepter avec la main l'entrée de l'air dans la bouche et les narines, au point de lui faire perdre la respiration. Je l'ai vu employer ce procédé avec le plus grand succès, afin de faire cesser les convulsions qui lui prennent encore chaque jour; elle est encore attaquée de l'hydropisie et du diabète.

Il y a un an qu'elle n'a pas joui un instant d'un sommeil naturel, car on ne peut nommer sommeil l'évanouissement convulsif où elle tombe pendant plusieurs heures de la journée. Quel spectacle déchirant que de voir cet être malheureux, le bras paralysé, et presque toutes les parties de son corps couvertes de profondes cicatrices; les yeux hagards, pousser des cris affreux, se débattre avec le seul bras qu'elle peut mouvoir, et présenter le tableau des plus horribles souffrances. Loin de murmurer contre une existence aussi misérable, Rachel Hertz montre un courage et une résignation à toute épreuve. La providence qui a accumulé sur elle tant de maux, lui fait en revanche trouver des consolations dans les qualités surprenantes de l'esprit et de l'âme dont elle est douée. Sa mémoire est si grande, qu'elle recite sans faute une pièce de vers, ou un discours, qu'on lui aura lu quelques jours auparavant. Il y a six mois qu'elle a commencé à apprendre seule le Latin, et a déjà fait de tels progrès dans cette langue, qu'elle lit Senèque, Cicéron, comme s'ils étoient écrits dans sa langue naturelle, et qu'elle écrit chaque jour l'histoire de sa maladie, dans un Latin, non seulement correct, mais encore élégant. Lorsque ses douleurs diminuent ou cessent, son humeur peut même prendre une teinte de gaieté, et c'est l'espoir de guérison qui l'occupe alors. Herholdt a écrit l'histoire de Rachel Hertz, et il est bien probable que l'on considérera un jour ce récit comme fabuleux.

L'hôpital de Frédéric est l'établissement le plus riche dans ce genre, et ses revenus s'augmentent encore par la bienfaisance des particuliers. Il reçoit dans le cours d'une année 2,100 malades dont à peu près $\frac{2}{3}$ sont à ses frais.

La partie chirurgicale de cet établissement est sur le même pied que la médicinale. Ce qu'il y a surtout de bien organisé, c'est, que chaque blessé a un candidat en chirurgie pour le soigner, qui le visite plusieurs fois par jour. Des lits sont toujours prêts pour des blessés, qu'on apporte subitement à l'hôpital. Le chirurgien en chef actuel, le Professeur Witthusen, ne se distingue pas seulement comme opérateur habile, mais encore comme excellent médecin. Il est, indépendamment de cela, le premier oculiste du Dannemarc, et déploie dans ses opérations une tranquillité et un sang froid imperturbable; les cas, les accidens les plus imprévus, ne peuvent le sortir de son calme, ni lui faire perdre sa présence d'esprit. Le seul reproche qu'on pourroit lui faire, c'est, qu'étant chirurgien en chef d'un hôpital qui doit servir à former de jeunes médecins et chirurgiens, il ne permet pas de faire la moindre opération aux candidats, ses élèves, et de cette manière, ils ne peuvent pas acquérir l'habileté pratique nécessaire à leur art.

2. Maison d'Accouchement.

Il n'est aucun des établissemens de bienfaisance de Copenhague, qui puisse être comparé à la maison d'accouchement, tant pour son administration, que pour son utilité. Elle doit son état florissant surtout à la Reine Julie Marie. Le règne de Frédéric 5 fut la première époque, où une institution pareille prit naissance en Dannemarc, afin de prévenir le crime dont les nouveaux nés pouvoient être victimes innocentes.

La maison d'accouchement recevoit alors, comme maintenant sous le sceau du secret, les femmes qui s'y rendoient, et si ce mystère facilite d'un côté le vice, il ôte aussi à la honte la tentation du crime.

On y avoit réuni anciennement une maison pour les enfans trouvés : un berceau posé dans le mur du bâtiment étoit destiné à les recevoir, dès qu'on y en plaçoit un, trois cloches sonnoient à l'instant et annoncoient l'arrivée du nouvel habitant de la maison ; mais des abus énormes s'introduisirent, au point que des cargaisons d'enfans arrivoient de Suède, et étoient posés les uns après les autres dans le berceau bienfaisant. Cet ordre de choses ne put naturellement subsister long-tems.

La Reine Marie Julie acheta une maison, la fit affranchir de tout impôt, et nomma une commission, pour lui donner la meilleure organisation possible. Il fut décidé d'après ce nouvel arrangement que la maison recevroit 50 femmes en couches, dont 30 seraient soignées aux fraix de l'établissement, et 20 à leurs propres dépens. Les femmes qui y tombent malades des suites de leurs couches, sont transportées à l'hôpital de Frédéric, ou à quelque autre maison de santé, sans avoir besoin de se nommer ; elles y sont soignées gratis, ou à raison d'un paiement modique selon leurs moyens.

Douze femmes des provinces sont logées dans la maison, et défrayées de tout, pour apprendre le métier de sage femme, du reste cette instruction est ouverte à chaque femme qui veut en profiter ; mais elle doit payer alors annuellement une petite somme.

Un médecin, deux chirurgiens et deux candidats en médecine sont logés et chauffés dans la maison.

Un bâtiment pour recevoir les enfans, que les femmes laissent à la maison d'accouchement, fut ajouté ; les nouveaux nés y restent, jusqu'à ce qu'ils puissent être transportés à la campagne. Des nourrices, aux gages de l'établissement, sont toujours prêtes à recevoir les enfans ; plusieurs d'entre-elles en allaitent deux à la fois, lorsque les nourrissons sont en grand nombre.

La maison d'accouchement se compose de 3 bâtimens spacieux, de belle apparence, parfaitement entretenus, des corridors de communication sont pratiqués partout. Plusieurs jardins appartenant aux inspecteurs, aux sages femmes, des cours spacieuses ne contribuent pas peu à entretenir la pureté de l'air. Les chambres sont blanchies chaque année et lavées une fois la semaine. Si cet institut a de la célébrité non seulement en Dannemarc, mais dans d'autres pays, si un nombre considérable d'étrangers, étudiants en médecine, viennent y faire leurs études, il le doit surtout à la réputation distinguée que se sont acquises les deux Saxtorph, père et fils, par leurs connoissances étendues, et leurs savants écrits sur ce sujet. Le dernier est maintenant chef de l'établissement et déploie journellement son habileté dans les cures les plus difficiles. Les leçons de cet homme distingué et l'exercice continuel que les candidats trouvent à l'institut, sont la cause de l'état florissant dans lequel cet art est en Dannemarc. Chaque médecin, qui veut avoir un emploi dans ce royaume, doit prouver qu'il a passé à la maison d'accouchement le tems marqué par les ordonnances.

Les personnes destinées à devenir sage femmes sont, à peu près, au nombre de 30, dont 12 entretenues aux fraix du gouvernement, et les autres par des seigneurs du pays, ou quelque ville ou village. L'accoucheur en chef leur enseigne la théorie de l'art, et la sage femme en chef la pratique ; avant de quitter l'établissement elles sont soumises à un examen très exact.

3°. Vingt femmes non mariées qui payent 7, 14, 19, 28 roubles par semaine d'après leurs moyens. Celles qui payent 7 roubles, sont trois ou quatre dans une même chambre, et ne sont reçues que peu de tems avant leurs couches ; aucune n'a besoin de se faire connoître ; elles doivent nourrir elles-mêmes leur enfans.

Celles qui payent les autres sommes, ont une ou deux chambres et même plusieurs à leur disposition, ne sont soignées que par la sage femme et l'accoucheur en chef, elles entrent dans la maison plusieurs semaines avant leurs couches, ne se nomment point, et y restent jusqu'à leur entière guérison ; leurs enfans sont donnés aussitôt après leur naissance à des nourrices de la maison. L'accouchée, qui ne veut pas emporter son enfant, peut payer une fois pour toutes 75 roubles, et l'y laisser.

Les mères reçoivent en partant des numeros et autres signes qu'on fait porter à l'enfant, et peuvent venir le réclamer quand elles veulent, en payant ce que l'enfant a coûté jusqu'à cette époque.

Aucune femme atteinte de maladie honteuse ou contagieuse ne peut être reçue; des exceptions pour le premier cas, se font dans des circonstances extraordinaires. Chaque femme doit apporter une layette pour son enfant, et doit l'augmenter lorsqu'elle l'abandonne à l'institut.

Quant à ce qui concerne l'établissement pour les enfans qui sont laissés dans la maison d'accouchement, il y a une inspectrice pour les nourrices; elle tient compte des enfans qui sont reçus, inscrit leurs noms de batême, numeros, signes distinctifs, et autres moyens de les connoître, dans un livre destiné à cet usage. Les dépenses sont réglées par une autre inspectrice.

Les nouveaux nés, soignés auparavant par les candidats seuls, le sont maintenant par l'accoucheur de réserve, le Professeur Bang, homme d'un talent reconnu dans la partie de la médecine qui régarde les maladies d'enfans.

Chaque employé, quelqu'il soit de la maison d'accouchement, doit prêter serment entre les mains du directeur, qu'il ne tâchera jamais de découvrir qui sont les personnes admises, et que, si un hasard le lui dévoile, il n'en fera jamais part à qui que ce soit, en un mot, qu'il évitera scrupuleusement de donner la moindre indication sur leur personne. Chaque employé, en entrant au service, réçoit des instructions, qu'il doit suivre ponctuellement.

La sage femme en chef doit recevoir les femmes encientes qui entrent, leurs indiquer leurs places, les examiner, et veiller à ce que les nouveaux nés soient baptisés; à ce qu'il y ait un nombre suffisant de nourrices, et qu'elles soient saines.

Les portiers doivent faire une extrême attention aux personnes qui entrent et sortent, annoncer aussitôt à la sage femme l'arrivée des femmes encientes qui viennent dans la maison (il est naturel que la plupart préfèrent venir dans la nuit, afin d'être sûres de n'être pas reconnues); cet emploi n'est donné qu'à des gens de confiance.

Il y a encore des inspecteurs, qui ne s'occupent que des détails économiques.

3. Hôpital des Matelots.

Cet hôpital a été établi en 1806; il est destiné aux matelots et ouvriers qui travaillent journellement aux chantiers. Ces gens vivoient avant l'année sus-mentionnée, dispersés dans la ville, ce qui rendoit les visites très difficiles aux chirurgiens de la marine. Les ouvriers furent alors réunis, le gouvernement fit construire un quartier séparé dans la ville, qui, pour ainsi dire forme une bourgade à part, les maisons y ont même une forme particulière. Ce quartier a pour commandant un officer de marine; son devoir est de veiller à la propreté et au bon ordre intérieur et extérieur. Il faut avouer que ces soins n'ont pas été perdus; c'est le quartier le mieux entretenu de la ville. Le bâtiment de l'hôpital est bien construit, peut recevoir 300 malades, et est fourni de tout l'inventaire nécessaire. On y reçoit des malades gratis, il y a des chambres séparées pour les femmes et enfans. Vis-à-vis du corps de logis est un autre bâtiment destiné aux convalescens, un grand jardin est ouvert à ceux qui osent prendre l'air. Le peu de malades qui meurent prouve les soins excellens qui leur sont prodigués. Depuis 1806 jusqu'en 1823, il n'en est mort que 6 ou 7 sur 100. L'hôpital forme 2 divisions, qui ont chacun leur médecin en chef. Les médicamens sont délivrés gratis. Comme l'hôpital général de la marine, dont il va être question n'est point ouvert, il y a encore une centaine de lits vacans pour les matelots de la flotte, qui reviennent de quelque expédition, et pour les matelots malades, que des vaisseaux étrangers sont obligés de mettre à terre. Il n'est point nécessaire de parler ici en particulier de la manière dont les malades sont soignés, puisqu'elle est presque la même dans toutes les maisons de santé en Dannemarc; ordre, propreté, soins paternels se retrouvent partout, il n'est point d'hôpital quelque mal doté qu'il soit, qui laisse paroître de la négligence dans le traitement. Des administrateurs sages et intègres savent régler la dépense sur les revenus. Ils connoissent l'influence que les object extérieurs ont souvent sur l'esprit des souffrans, évitent par conséquent ce qui peut frapper leur imagination ou leurs sens d'une manière désagréable. Les opérations chirurgicales se font autant que possible dans un appartement séparé, et on tâche de cacher les encoisses du mourant aux yeux de ses voisins.

4. Hôpital Général de la Marine.

Cet hôpital est le plus considérable et le plus ancien dans la capitale, il date encore du tems de Chrétien 5, il étoit destiné anciennement aux blessés, malades, et invalides de la flotte. Il peut recevoir actuellement jusqu'à 900 malades. Il n'est ouvert qu'en tems de guerre, d'épidémie ou dans d'autres circonstances extraordinaires, comme par exemple pour les malades de navires alliés, lorsqu'ils sont en trop grand nombre pour trouver place dans les autres hôpitaux. On peut nommer cet établissement un hôpital de réserve. Toutes les personnes qui doivent y être employées y logent; médecins, chirurgiens, gardes malades; chambres, lits, tout est prêt. On ne peut assez admirer ici la sage prévoyance du gouvernement, qui non content de soulager selon ses moyens les maux présens, songe encore à ceux à venir.

Des revenus très considérables sont assignés à cet hôpital entr'autres sur le Lombard, ils permettent même de faire des pensions aux veuves d'officiers de marine indigens.

5. Hôpital Général de la Garnison de Copenhague.

Avant l'année 1800 chaque régiment en garnison à Copenhague avoit un hôpital particulier. Les médecins de ces petits lazarets fournissoient médicamens, bandages, enfin tout ce qui étoit nécessaire aux malades, sur une certaine somme qu'on leur donnoit annuellement. Il est évident que nombre d'abus naissoient de cet arrangement. Le roi actuel y a mis fin, après la dernière guerre avec les Anglois; il fit construire un hôpital général pour toute la garnison; 700 soldats peuvent y être reçus; il y a des appartemens séparés pour les officiers, qui veulent s'y faire soigner, et un bâtiment isolé pour les femmes et enfans des soldats. L'usage d'une aile de la maison pour les convalescents est aussi introduit dans cet hôpital; des jardins, des cours spacieuses s'y trouvent également. Les chambres sont divisées entre les 11 régimens qui composent la garnison de Copenhague. Ces régimens ne formant qu'un corps de 10,000 hommes, le nombre de 700 que l'hôpital peut recevoir est plus que suffisant. Dans des cas extraordinaires le grand Hôpital de la Marine serviroit de supplément. Onze chirurgiens logent à l'hôpital de la garnison, qui est de plus visité chaque jour par les médecins et chirurgiens en chef. Les officiers sont soignés gratis aussi bien que les soldats, et ne payent que les vins et les mets plus recherchés qu'ils desirent; ils ont même un jardin séparé. Les médicamens sont donnés au compte du gouvernement par une pharmacie, nommée celle de la garnison.

Indépendamment des hôpitaux de la capitale, la Sélande en possède 6 principaux, dont le plus remarquable est l'hôpital d'Elseneur, autrement appelé Hôpital du Sund.

La situation d'Elseneur sur la côte, et le passage presque continuel de vaisseaux pendant la navigation, amenoit souvent des malades dans ces parages, qu'on transportoit faute d'hôpital chez les particuliers qui consentoient à les recevoir. Le directeur de la douane de cette ville communiqua aux habitans le projet de fonder un établissement pour y recevoir à un prix modique, non seulement les malades que les vaisseaux de toutes nations y laissoient, mais encore ceux de la ville. Le plan fut proposé au roi, qui l'approuva et assigna des fonds nécessaires pour l'exécuter. L'hôpital peut contenir maintenant jusqu'à 100 malades. Trois appartemens sont destinés aux personnes d'un rang supérieur.

Le bâtiment n'a pas assez d'étendue pour tous les employés puissent y loger; il présente cependant tous les moyens de guérison, tels que bains, machines à électriser, appareils de chirurgie, &c. La direction de cet établissement est composée d'un supérieur, nommé par le gouvernement, de 2 magistrats, de 2 bourgeois, et de 2 employés de la douane de la ville, enfin des médecins de l'hôpital.

La capitale de Lalande et celle de Fionie ont chacune un hôpital assez étendu.

La Jutlande en possède 9 très considérables, sans compter l'infirmierie qui se trouve dans chaque petite ville. Tous ces établissemens suivent les mêmes règles que ceux de Copenhague, et si leur cercle d'activité est plus resserré, leur état florissant ne le cède pas à celui des hôpitaux de la capitale.

HOPITAUX DANS LES DUCHES :

Hôpital des Foux à Schlesvig.

La maison des foux établie dans les environs de la ville de Schlesvig ne date que de l'année 1820, et surpasse déjà les établissemens de ce genre dans la royaume de Dannemarck et dans plusieurs pays voisins. On a choisi la contrée la plus riante pour y construire une maison, qui répondit entièrement à l'usage qu'on en vouloit faire. On y a veilli autant à l'agrément qu'à l'utilité des êtres malheureux qu'elle alloit renfermer. Des jardins, des galeries couvertes, des établissemens de bains, des ateliers de menuiserie, de tisserand, etc. sont placés autour du corps de logis. Les habitations des hommes sont entièrement séparées de celles des femmes. Les foux des deux sexes cependant dont le dérangement de raison n'a rien de dangereux, dinent et se promènent ensemble. On a soin de réunir ceux, dont l'éducation est à peu près égale, afin qu'ils puissent s'offrir mutuellement quelque distraction par la lecture, la conversation ou différens jeux. Les incurables ainsi que les enragés sont entièrement isolés, des chambres particulières sont destinées à chacun de ces derniers; là se trouvent rassemblées toutes les précautions qu'exige leur malheureux état. Il y a maintenant près de 100 aliénés, dont 26 sont des personnes de bonne naissance. L'entretien de ces malades est entièrement aux fraix de l'hôpital, ainsi que les remèdes. Les employés sont payés par le gouvernement. Les avantages que les foux peuvent se procurer lorsqu'ils ont de la fortune est d'avoir de plus vastes appartemens, des meubles plus commodes, une cuisine plus recherchée, enfin tout ce qui peut satisfaire leur fantaisie, sans faire tort à leur santé. Les directeurs de l'hôpital sont d'une sévérité très louable sur le compte des lectures. Lettres, livres, qui sont adressés aux malades doivent passer par leurs mains, et ne sont remis à leur adresse, qu'après qu'ils l'auront jugé convenable. Les foux de l'établissement qui existoit à Glückstadt ont été transféré à l'hôpital près de Schlesvig, et prouvent par les progrès étonnans qui se sont opérés dans leur guérison combien ce dernier établissement est préférable. Hambourg y a aussi envoyé plusieurs aliénés. Le gouvernement a consacré des sommes considérables au profit de l'hôpital; ses autres revenus consistent dans le rapport des terres qui en dépendent, dans le produit de plusieurs amendes qui lui sont assignés, et dans celui de dons gratuits que des citoyens charitables se sont empressés d'y apporter. Le médecin et directeur en chef de l'établissement est le

Professeur Nissen, homme de talens, qui s'est entièrement voué à cette partie de la médecine; il est d'une patience à toute épreuve, et regarde comme principe de guérison de gagner l'affection et la confiance des malades par la bonté, et de n'employer des moyens sévères qu'à la dernière extrémité.

Hôpital de Kiel.

Quoique cet établissement n'existe que depuis peu d'années, et que ses fonds soient très modiques, il a cependant fait des pas rapides vers son perfectionnement, par l'empressement que les citoyens de Kiel ont mis à le doter. Le gouvernement s'est chargé de sa direction, et en a augmenté les revenus. Les apothicaires de cette ville ont surtout contribué à soutenir l'établissement dans son origine, en délivrant pendant quelque tems les médicamens gratis. Ceux qui sont admis dans cet hôpital sont divisés en six classes.

La 1^e. sont les gens les plus pauvres, qui pendant leur séjour à l'hôpital, sont entièrement aux fraix de cet établissement.

2^e. Les moins indigens, qui peuvent payer par jour 6 cop. ou plus.

3^e. Les domestiques et garçons ouvriers, qui sont à l'hôpital aux fraix de leurs maitres, qui ne payent cependant que les médicamens et le médecin, la reste étant gratis.

4^e. Ceux qui peuvent s'entretenir eux mêmes. Ils ont une chambre particulière, payent leurs remèdes et leur nourriture.

5^e. Des personnes plus riches, qui louent par semaine des chambres garnies, ont leur propre médecin, leur domestique, etc.

6^e. Les femmes qui viennent accoucher à l'établissement; on fait avec chacune d'elles un accord particulier, suivant ce qu'elles exigent.

L'hôpital d'Altona se compte parmi les établissemens les plus importants de ce genre dans les Duchés. Sa fondation date de l'an 1760. Ses revenus sont considérables, ses bâtimens et ses jardins fort étendus. Tous les établissemens en Dannemarc possèdent des jardins, avantage considérable pour la salubrité de l'air, pour l'exercice des convalescents, sans oublier de bonheur qu'ils éprouvent de quitter, ne fût-ce que pour quelques instans, le théâtre de leurs maux.

INOCULATION VACCINE :

Société pour leur Propagation.

La petite vérole a fait dans les tems reculés les plus affreux ravages en Dannemarc. Lorsque cette maladie fut apportée pour la première fois en Islande par un vaisseau Danois, dans le commencement du 18 siècle, 20,000 personnes en devinrent les victimes; et transportée dans le Groenlande en 1734, elle enleva près des 2/3 de la population.

L'inoculation avoit enseigné à diminuer ce mal. On en fit le premier essai en 1754; puis une commission fut érigée pour en propager l'usage dans tout le royaume. La découverte de la vaccine vint enfin détruire ce fléau. Les médecins Danois s'empressèrent d'admettre cette nouvelle méthode, dont ils n'avoient aucune idée; quoiqu'on eut des découvertes faites en Holstein avant que Jenner publia la sienne. On fit venir de Londres de la matière propre à l'inoculation, et le 6 Juillet 1800 le premier enfant fut vacciné à Copenhague. Le Professeur Herholdt proposa à ses collègues de former une société pour la propagation de la vaccine; proposition qui fut aussitôt agréée. Une commission royale nommée dans le même but institua un établissement de vaccine, où tous les enfans quelconques sont vaccinés gratis à de certaines heures du jour.

Une ordonnance royale porte, que de crainte que la petite vérole ne reparaisse dans le pays, aucun enfant ne sera reçu à la confirmation, ne pourra être admis à aucun institut, école, fabrique, manufacture, et il ne recevra aucun secours des établissemens publics, s'il n'a pas eu la petite vérole ou s'il n'a pas été vacciné.

Pour recevoir la bénédiction nuptiale et entrer au service du pays, il faut également prouver qu'on a eu cette maladie, ou se faire vacciner à l'instant.

Si le mal se déclare dans quelque endroit, le malade est aussitôt séparé de tout le monde, et les mesures les plus sévères sont prises pour en arrêter la propagation.

Chaque père de famille est obligé, sous peine d'emprisonnement au pain et à l'eau pendant un mois, de déclarer aussitôt à la police si la petite vérole s'est montrée dans sa maison.

Les rapports de la commission prouvent que 343,167 personnes ont été vaccinés jusqu'en 1817.

Deux instituts de vaccine furent établis, l'un à Kiel, l'autre à Altona; le nombre des personnes vaccinés dans les Duchés a été :

En 1812	-	-	-	-	-	-	de 56,956
1813	-	-	-	-	-	-	8,193
1814	-	-	-	-	-	-	9,961

Médecins.

Le gouvernement entretient depuis le commencement de ce siècle des médecins dans les différentes provinces du royaume, afin de surveiller les établissemens de médecine qui se trouvent dans chacune d'elles. Ces médecins habitent les villes principales de chaque bailliage. Ils ont plusieurs aides qu'on nomme chirurgiens de districts. Il y en a 14 en Sélande, Sélande, 1 à Bornholm, 2 à Falster, 1 en Langeland, 25 en Jutlande, et 34 dans les Duchés. Ces chirurgiens ainsi distribués dans le pays pratiquent dans leurs districts, sous la direction cependant du médecin du bailliage.

DENMARK.

Pharmacies.

Il y a 8 pharmacies à Copenhague, et 1 dans ses fauxbourgs ; chaque ville du royaume en possède. Les apothicaires sont examinés publiquement ; il leur est enjoint, sous des peines sévères, de ne jamais délivrer des poisons, émétiques, et autres remèdes dangereux, sans ordonnance du médecin, qui doit y marquer la date du jour, le nom du malade. Les pharmacies sont visitées de tems à autres par les autorités ; les apothicaires qui se trouvent avoir vendu des médecines au dessus de la taxe, sont punis selon rigueur des lois.

Bains.

Les bains, ce premier moyen de santé, manquent presque entièrement à Copenhague, quoique la mer atteigne ses murs, il n'y a aucun arrangement décent pour s'y baigner. Il n'y a aucun bain dans la ville à l'usage du peuple, de sorte que ce n'est que l'été qu'il peut en jouir, le Sund offrant le plus beau bassin d'eau ; cependant les Danois sont excellents nageurs. Depuis mon séjour à Copenhague une maison de bain a été établie par un particulier de cette ville ; les chambres sont au nombre de 8, une partie pour les hommes, et les autres pour les femmes ; l'arrangement en est décent, mais le bain est à si haut prix que peu de personnes peuvent en jouir.

Apenrade et Kiel sont sous ce rapport plus avancés que la capitale. Ces villes ont de très bons arrangements pour les bains de mer.

Quarantaine.

La navigation et le commerce des Danois ont nécessité l'institution d'établissements de quarantaine. Ce pays en a bien éprouvé l'importance et la nécessité, ayant été visité depuis 1340 par 18 des plus affreuses épidémies. Pendant celle de 1529 il mourut dans la capitale plus de 400 personnes par jour. Ce ne fut pourtant qu'en 1771 que l'on prit des mesures sérieuses pour prévenir toute contagion. Il existe maintenant une commission de santé et une direction de quarantaine.

La maison de quarantaine est fort bien située ; elle est placée sur une batterie près du port, qui forme une isle.

Etablissements pour sauver les Noyés.

On avoit souvent proposé en Dannemarc de former des établissemens pour rappeler à la vie des noyés ou autres personnes crues mortes. On présenta plusieurs plans à cet effet, mais en 1796 parut l'ouvrage du Docteur Herholdt et de son ami Rafn, intitulé, "Essai Historique sur les Etablissements pour sauver des Noyés, et explication des meilleurs Moyens de les rappeler à la Vie." Cet ouvrage détermina enfin à former des établissemens pareils en Dannemarc. Ce livre, écrit avec toute la chaleur que l'importance d'un pareil sujet exigeoit, reveilla l'attention générale, et porta des personnes à former une société, pour mettre en exécution les moyens indiqués dans le livre. Le Gouvernement s'empressa de s'unir à cette association bienfaisante ; des prix furent destinés pour ceux qui réussiroient à rappeler des noyés à la vie d'après les moyens enseignés. Indépendamment de cela, on forma des établissemens publics qui prospérèrent jusqu'en 1807, que le siège de Copenhague les détruisit. Ils furent de nouveau constitués quelques années après et sur un meilleur pied. Il en existe maintenant 11, pourvus de tous les instrumens nécessaires, surtout près des lacs et canaux, que les suicides choisissent ordinairement pour se noyer ; je ne sais si c'est la profondeur de l'eau, ou l'imitation, qui les engagent à choisir ces endroits, je ne puis le décider, mais le fait n'en est pas moins véritable, et il est triste d'avouer, que Copenhague est la ville après Londres où il se commet le plus de suicides de tous les genres. L'indifférence avec laquelle le bas peuple considère le crime de s'ôter la vie, prouve assez qu'il n'est pas de considération qui puisse le rétenir, lorsqu'il en prend la résolution.

Le zèle de la société de Copenhague a été imité dans les principales villes de Fionie et de la Jutlande, ainsi que dans les Duchés.

Les soins du Gouvernement s'étendirent sur les enfans qu'on supposoit ne pas jouir de la vie à leur naissance, et qui la perdoient véritablement par l'ignorance des sage femmes. Un rescrit ordonna à celles-ci de présenter tout enfant né mort à des personnes désignées pour cet effet. Le collège de santé fit paraître un ouvrage écrit dans un style populaire, afin d'enseigner les expédiens pour faire revivre les nouveaux nés, privés en apparence de la vie.

ECOLES DE CHARITE DEPENDANTES DE L'ADMINISTRATION GENERALE DES PAUVRES.

Si antérieurement le Dannemarc s'est trouvé en retard sous le rapport de l'instruction publique, il a fait depuis 40 ans des progrès si rapides, qu'il ne le cède à aucun autre pays ; on peut même assurer qu'il en existe peu où les moyens d'instruction gratuite soient aussi nombreux et aussi bien appliqués. Mes recherches sur ce qu'ils étoient dans les tems antérieurs, m'ont donné peu de lumière à cet égard ; il paroît même que cette branche d'ad-ministration occupoit très peu les autorités. Les premières écoles de charité furent au nombre de 4, elles s'augmentèrent successivement avec des améliorations, enfin en 1814 on établit une direction générale pour toutes les écoles, gratuites ou non gratuites, qui se bornent aux connoissances élémentaires. Il fut ordonné, que la fréquentation des écoles de charité seroit obligatoire, qu'aucun enfant ne pourroit être admis à l'instruction religieuse qui précède la confirmation, sans prouver qu'il sait lire, écrire et calculer. De plus il fut enjoint à chaque individu, sans distinction de rang ni de fortune, de déclarer à la direction, quels sont les moyens d'instruction publique ou particulière qu'il emploie pour ses enfans. Cette direction doit se faire donner cette déclaration deux fois par an par chaque propriétaire de maison, pour tous les enfans au dessus de 6 ans qui y demeurent. Ces mesures ont nécessité l'établissement d'un plus grand nombre d'écoles. Quelques unes ne s'ouvrent que le soir, afin que les familles à l'entretien desquelles les enfans contribuent par leur travail, puissent conserver cette ressource. Les écoles de charité les plus marquantes sont au nombre de 9, et comme j'ai déjà dit, sous l'inspection de la direction générale des pauvres. Mais les autres appartiennent à chaque église, et ont été fondées par des particuliers ou des sociétés, et sont dirigées par une commission composée de pasteurs et de laïques. Elles sont toutes établies sur le même pied, ainsi leurs différents résultats ne peuvent tenir qu'à l'influence des maîtres ou maîtresses qui les dirigent. Toutes sont à la fois des écoles d'instruction élémentaire et de travail. On y enseigne la lecture, l'écriture, le calcul, l'histoire sainte et le chant sacré. On y joint pour ceux qui se distinguent par leur intelligence, la connoissance de l'histoire et de la géographie de leur pays. On s'applique en général à leur enseigner à écrire correctement leur langue, et même à former leur style. Trois heures par jour sont employées à l'étude, le reste du tems est consacré au travail, afin qu'ils en prennent le goût et qu'ils se préparent à des occupations utiles. Il est plus difficile d'atteindre ce but avec les garçons, parceque leur âge ne permettant pas de les occuper du métier auquel ils doivent se vouer; on les emploie donc à tricoter et à filer de la laine ou du coton, ils sont aussi envoyés aux heures du travail chez des manufacturiers, qui leur confient des travaux appropriés à leur force.

La durée de l'école est de 7 ou 8 heures en hiver jusqu'à 11, et l'après midi depuis 1 heure jusqu'à 7. Une moitié des enfans reçoit l'instruction le matin, et l'autre l'après dinée. Ils se partagent en classes, et celles-ci en deux sections, qui ont 25 enfans chacune. Il n'y a qu'un maître pour chaque section, de sorte qu'il instruit 25 enfans le matin et 25 autres le soir.

On enseigne la gymnastique dans une des écoles de garçons, et ils se livrent 3 fois la semaine à la natation. Ils sont soumis à une surveillance exacte pour la propreté, sous l'inspection d'une femme au service de l'école.

Dans presque toutes les écoles de charité on fournit le diner aux enfans; cette faveur s'accorde particulièrement aux plus pauvres. C'est le genre de secours qu'on donne le plus volontiers, parceque ce bienfait est véritablement au profit des enfans sur la santé desquels il a une grande influence. Aussi est il rare de voir à Copenhague des enfans dont le visage annonce le besoin, la plupart ont l'extérieur d'une santé florissante. On peut évaluer le nombre de ceux qui mangent aux écoles, au tiers de la totalité des écoliers. Tout ce que les enfans gagnent par leur travail entre dans la caisse de l'école, qui leur fournit des habits pour le montant de leur gain, et souvent au delà. On fait chaque année un examen de ce, qu'ils ont appris, et on montre un échantillon de leurs ouvrages; ceux qui se sont distingués tant par leur application que par leur conduite, reçoivent des prix; il y en a 2 pour chaque classe.

Tous ces soins seroient infailliblement perdus si on abandonnait cette jeunesse à elle même après la confirmation; époque où elle quitte l'école. L'expérience a fait voir qu'il falloit étendre au delà de ce terme la surveillance. A la sortie de l'école, un des employés de cette administration a soin de placer les garçons en apprentissage, suivant le métier qu'ils choisissent. Il stipule les conditions, dont la première doit être, que le maître nourrisse et entretienne l'apprentif; on ne dispute pas sur quelques années de plus d'apprentissage, ou qu'il est toujours avantageux à l'élève de n'être pas trop tôt abandonné à lui même. Le contract se fait au nom de la direction; comme tutrice du jeune homme, elle surveille et protège ses intérêts dans le cas que le maître ne tienne pas les engagements qu'il a contractés.

La même méthode est suivie pour les filles; à leur sortie de l'école on les oblige d'entrer en service. La personne munie des pouvoirs de la direction, veille à ce qu'elles soient reçues dans des familles honnêtes. Ceux qui les prennent, doivent s'adresser, en cas de mécontentement, à la direction pour les renvoyer. Les filles ne peuvent changer de service sans la permission de ses supérieurs; surveillance d'autant plus avantageuse, qu'elle donne un appui à cette jeunesse, et un recours aux maîtres s'ils ont des plaintes à porter; cela rend les domestiques attentifs à ne pas en être l'objet, ainsi que des punitions qui sont du ressort de la direction, lorsqu'il n'est pas question de fautes graves. Depuis que cette exacte surveillance existe, les plaintes ont été rares. Les garçons ne se sont point adonnés à la fainéantise et aux vices qui en résultent, ni les filles à une mauvaise conduite, comme il arrivoit malheureusement autrefois.

Ecoles du Dimanche.

En 1800 une société de citoyens de Copenhague projetta d'établir dans cette ville des écoles pour la classe des artisans, dont l'éducation avoit été négligée. Afin qu'il n'y eut aucun obstacle à leur intention, ils choisirent le Dimanche, où les ouvriers, libres de leurs travaux, travaux, peuvent disposer de leur tems. Ils résolurent 1^o de les instruire des lois qui concernent les gens de metier, et des devoirs que des apprentifs ont à observer envers leurs maitres; de leur enseigner à écrire, à calculer, à tenir des livres de compte, avec l'orthographe et le style épistolaire. Ces écoles se formèrent par les soins et les dons de ces citoyens: cette source de bienfaits n'ayant pas tari, ces établissemens existent encore affermis par le tems et par la persuasion de leur utilité.

Ces écoles furent divisées de la manière suivante; les 1^{res} pour les maitres de metiers, les 2^{des} pour les garçons ouvriers et les 3^e pour les apprentis, d'autres pour ceux qui n'appartiennent point à la classe des metiers.

Les maitres et les ouvriers qui desirent être instruits dans leurs écoles respectives payent tous les semestres une somme fort modique pour y être admis; les apprentifs ont non seulement l'instruction gratuite, mais encore les livres, le papier, et tous les objets qui leur sont nécessaires. Le nombre des écoles s'est augmenté par la foule des aspirans de manière qu'il y en a une dans chaque quartier de la ville, et les dons s'étant multipliés, la société a pu former 2 nouvelles écoles, où l'on enseigne dans l'une le dessein et l'architecture, et dans l'autre la géographie et l'histoire du pays. Ceux qui se distinguent dans les autres études, peuvent y être admis. Un grand mobile d'émulation pour les apprentifs écoliers n'est point négligé; c'est celui des examens publiques, où les prix, médailles de différentes grandeurs se distribuent en présence de la cour dans l'église de Frédéric. L'administration de toutes les écoles du Dimanche appartient à la société fondatrice; chaque membre a ses fonctions. A leur tête est un directeur général, qui doit être un ecclésiastique.

Chaque école d'apprentifs a 4 inspecteurs assistés de 12 intendants; les premiers ont la direction de l'école, et les derniers celle des classes. Les écoles de maitres ouvriers n'ont que 3 inspecteurs. C'est dans la réunion de l'assemblée générale des membres de la société que l'on choisit le directeur, les inspecteurs, les intendants, le secrétaire de la société et le teneur de livre. C'est là qu'elle admet de nouveaux membres, qu'ils déterminent le nombre des prix, la paye des maitres, recueillent les contributions volontaires, et publient la marche de leurs opérations, les comptes rendus appellent sur ces écoles l'intérêt du public, par la connoissance qu'on lui en donne.

Le nombre des maitres se règle sur celui des écoliers, de manière que chacun n'en ait pas plus de 10 à enseigner à la fois. Les maitres sont obligés de tenir un journal des progrès ou de la négligence des écoliers apprentifs; mais ils ne peuvent leur infliger aucune punition. Cependant si quelqu'un d'entr'eux fait preuve de paresse ou de mauvaises mœurs, on en avertit le maitre ouvrier chez lequel il est placé, et s'il y a récidive pour la troisième fois, il est chassé de l'école.

Les revenus des écoles du Dimanche ont d'abord consisté dans les dons gratuits de ceux qui favorisoient ces établissemens. Ces dons surpassèrent les besoins; alors on forma un fonds qui assure la durée de ces institutions. On peut y ajouter le revenu des modiques rétributions que payent les maitres et les garçons ouvriers.

Le tems de l'école est dans l'après midi de 4 à 7 heure, comme le service divin se célèbre à 2, ainsi que le matin les écoliers peuvent remplir leurs devoirs de piété.

Le zèle de cette société s'étendit jusque sur cette classe avilie par le crime, qui habitent les maisons de correction, dans l'espoir de sauver quelques uns de ces malheureux, qu'une première faute a placé dans ce séjour; on decida en 1804 que les détenus auroient des leçons d'arithmétique, d'écriture, et celles d'une morale adaptée à leurs idées et à leur situation. La société ne borna pas là ses soins, elle employa une donation de 4,000 roubles à fournir un fonds, dont les revenus seroient employés aux premiers besoins des prisonniers, lorsque le tems de leur réclusion seroit échu, qu'ils pussent chercher des moyens honnêtes d'existence, et que la misère ne les jettera pas de nouveau dans le crime.

Maison d'Education pour les Métiers.

Cet établissement fut fondé en 1753, par le roi Frédéric 5, et destiné à former des apprentifs pour les manufactures, les métiers et les autres professions. Cette maison a de tous tems été renommée par le soin qu'elle donne à l'éducation de ses élèves, et par les ouvriers, vraiment distingués, qu'elle a formé. Ses revenus lui permettoient d'entretenir et d'élever jusqu'à 200 enfans; mais après la guerre si désastreuse pour le Dannemarc, cet établissement, qui avoit essuyé des pertes immenses, fut obligé de se réduire à plus de la moitié de ses élèves. Ceux qui s'y trouvent maintenant n'ont rien perdu par ce changement; au contraire, leur nombre étant plus petit, la surveillance n'en est que plus exacte.

Les enfans sont entièrement entretenus par l'établissement; ils couchent dans des chambres bien acrées à une assez grande distance les uns des autres. Ils ont journellement 3 heures destinées aux études, 3 au travail, et 2 au chant et au dessin, ou à la gymnastique. La maison accorde un logement à un mécanicien et à un maitre tourneur, qui a en même tems une manufacture de boîtes, dont il fournit toutes les apothicaireries du pays. Ces maitres doivent en revanche enseigner leur art aux enfans; ce n'est que le Dimanche qu'on permet à ces derniers de sortir; les autres jours il leur faut une permission particulier. Lorsqu'ils sortent de l'établissement pour être confirmés, on les habille à neuf, et on les met aussitôt en apprentissage. Ils restent soumis à l'inspection de la maison jusqu'à leur 24^{me} année accomplie.

Les revenus de la maison consistent, outre les intérêts de 200,000 roubles, en une part considérable sur la lotterie royale, en une collecte qui se fait le premier jour de l'an dans tout le pays. L'établissement avoit jadis une chapelle et un pasteur à ses fraix; mais ces dépenses dépassant les moyens actuels, les enfans sont menés à l'église de l'hôpital général, dont le prêtre leur enseigne la religion.

Maisons de Travail.

Ces établissemens ne datent que d'une trentaine d'années, ils ne sont dus qu'à l'exemple que Hambourg donna. Il y en a actuellement 6 à Copenhague, elles portent le nom des districts auxquels elles appartiennent. Le but de ces maisons est de donner de l'ouvrage à ceux qui ne peuvent s'en procurer, ou qui manquent de local commode, ou encore, qui n'ont pas les moyens de se chauffer en hiver. Il est facile de concevoir qu'il n'y a que les plus pauvres individus qui profitent de ces institutions, qui ne laissent pas d'apporter quelque gêne, puisque les personnes qui y travaillent sont inspectées de près, afin qu'il ne se passe aucun désordre.

Plusieurs de ces maisons reçoivent des femmes âgées, qui ont journellement une portion de soupe et une livre de pain. On exige qu'elles apportent tout leur avoir dans la maison; l'établissement en hérite comme à Wartou. Elles ne doivent pas non plus travailler en ville, mais elles le font dans la maison, entièrement pour leur propre compte. Leur nombre se monte jusqu'à 80 dans quelques maisons.

La direction permet aux femmes qui viennent s'y occuper dans la journée d'amener ceux de leurs enfans trop jeunes pour aller à l'école.

Le travail qui se fait dans ces maisons consiste principalement dans la filature du lin, du chanvre, du coton, et de la laine. On préfère, cependant, se procurer de l'ouvrage de la part des fabricants ou des particuliers. On tâche aussi de stipuler le plus haut salaire possible; et l'on paye aux ouvriers ce que la maison reçoit, sauf une très petite retenue pour le chauffage, la lumière, et l'usage des outils. Quelques fois-même celui qui donne l'ouvrage paye cette bonification extraordinaire.

Un inspecteur est préposé à chacun de ces établissemens. Il y loge, et doit entretenir l'ordre, surveiller l'ouvrage, être responsable des outils, et tenir les comptes de la maison. Dans chaque salle de travail une des femmes qui habitent l'établissement a l'inspection sur les ouvrières.

La plupart de ces maisons ont été fondées par la libéralité des habitans des divers districts, quelques personnes leur ont fait des legs très considérables. La direction générale des pauvres supplée du reste aux dépenses, lorsqu'elles s'élèvent trop haut.

AUTRES ÉTABLISSEMENS DE BIENFAISANCE :

Institut des Aveugles.

Cet établissement doit sa fondation à une société de particuliers, dont le sort des aveugles fixa l'attention. Elle résolut d'établir un institut, projet que le Roi approuva. Cette fondation fut effectuée en 1811, et reçut le nom d'Institut Royal.

On commença par le nombre de 12 aveugles, choisis parmi les indigens qui étoient entretenus par des aumônes publiques. Le but fut d'en faire des citoyens utiles, de leur enseigner des arts et des métiers, de cultiver l'esprit de ceux qui annonçoient du génie ou des talens supérieurs. Ils furent donc recueillis dans un local, choisi par la société, et entretenus à ses fraix. Le Roi, voulant contribuer au succès de cet établissement, lui assigna un plus vaste local, où la société put admettre 12 autres de ces malheureux, qui reçurent l'instruction gratis, mais durent s'entretenir eux mêmes, les fonds de la société n'y suffisant pas. Le plus remarquable dans cet institut c'est que des maîtres distingués des professeurs y donnent toutes leurs leçons gratuites. La méthode de Mr. Haüy n'est pas entièrement suivie dans la manière d'enseigner; l'instruction verbale y domine.

Quant aux ouvrages de mains, une femme aux gages de l'institut leur enseigne à tricoter, filer, etc. Un maître vannier leur enseigne aussi son métier gratis. La vente des paniers et celle des petits ouvrages en carton, fabriqués par les aveugles, forment un petit revenu, qui est distribué entr'eux.

Institut des Sourds et Muets à Copenhague.

Dans l'année 1809 le roi ordonna la fondation d'un institut pour les sourds et muets sur les plans déjà connus; différens métiers et ouvrages y furent enseignés; cet établissement prospéroit les premières années, et il en est sorti des citoyens utiles. Son directeur, le Professeur Castberg, homme à talent, vient de terminer volontairement sa vie, de là la négligence introduite dans cet institut, qui dans ce moment ne satisfait ni la curiosité ni l'humanité; les enfans y sont mal tenus, et toute la maison annonce le plus grand désordre. Il est probable qu'un nouveau chef suivra mieux les intentions bienfaisantes du roi, en observant les sages réglemens faits pour cette maison. Il existe encore un institut pour les sourds et muets à Schlesvig, sous la direction du Professeur Pfingsten; le nombre de ses élèves est trop peu considérable pour que cet établissement puisse être d'une importance majeure pour le pays; il est cependant en meilleur état que celui de Copenhague.

SOCIÉTÉS DE BIENFAISANCE :

1. Société d'Assistance Réunie.

La société d'assistance réunie est un établissement aussi important qu'étendu. Elle fut fondée en 1788; son but est de faire des avances à des hommes industriels et appliqués, qui, par le manque d'argent ou de matériaux, ne peuvent continuer à gagner leur vie avec l'art ou le métier qu'ils professent, et qui seroient en danger d'être entièrement ruinés si on ne venoit à leur secours. On n'en refuse pas même à des employés qui reçoivent quelque paye du gouvernement, mais cependant on donne assez ordinairement la préférence à des artistes, fabricans, ouvriers qui n'ont d'autres moyens d'existence que le produit de leur travail.

travail. On vient surtout au secours de ceux que l'âge ou les infirmités ont affaiblis, et qui ont des enfans en bas âge. On accorde enfin de l'assistance aux veuves des pensionnaires de la société, mais elles doivent être dans la misère et faire preuve de bonne conduite.

Il a été stipulé que les avances depuis 10 jusqu'à 100 roubles se feroient sans exiger d'intérêt ou de caution; mais pour recevoir un prêt de 100 jusqu'à 400 roubles, il faut payer des intérêts légaux et fournir caution. Les pensions que la société fait ne doivent pas dépasser 100 roubles par an. Les membres de cette société si respectables sont dispersés dans tout le pays, et leur nombre est si grand, qu'ils choisissent 96 d'entr'eux pour les représenter; leurs opérations sont cencées faites par toute la société. Elle est divisée pour cet effet en différentes classes, qui choisissent d'après les réglemens, 8 représentans pour la noblesse, 8 pour les employés du gouvernement, 8 pour la marine, 8 pour le militaire, 8 pour le clergé, 8 pour les gens de lettres, 8 pour les artistes, 16 pour les négocians, marchands, fabriquans, 16 pour les maitres en metier, et 8 pour la nation Juive. L'exécution des arrêtés de la société est confiée à un comité de 3 membres. Il faut remarquer qu'il existe en Dannemarc une grande tolérance pour la nation Juive; elle jouit des mêmes privilèges que les autres citoyens, elle professe publiquement son culte, et plusieurs voies lui sont ouvertes pour parvenir à des emplois honorables. Il est facile de concevoir l'avantage qui resulte de cette conduite. Les Juifs n'ont point en Dannemarc les vices et défauts qui les caractérisent ordinairement, et qui portent les autres nations à les tenir toujours éloignés. On évite même de leur donner le nom de Juifs, et dans les actes publics on les appelle Les confesseurs de la loi Mosaique. Il n'y a, il est vrai, que les Juifs domiciliés en Dannemarc et qui ont reçu le droit de bourgeoisie, qui jouissent de ces privilèges; ceux des autres pays et qui viennent en Dannemarc, ne peuvent y demeurer plus de quinze jours, excepté qu'ils ne veulent y acheter le droit de bourgeoisie et s'y établir; permission qui ne s'accorde pas facilement.

Le nombre des membres de la société se monte à plus de 1,400, et celui des pensionnaires à guère plus de 150. Il y a des membres surnumméraires qui payent annuellement une rédevance plus considerable que les membres ordinaires. Les revenus de la société consistent dans les intérêts d'un capital de 400,000 roubles.

2. Société nommée Die Schwesterliche wohlthätige Gesellschaft.

La société de bienfaisance nommée Die Schwesterliche wohlthätige Gesellschaft, a été fondée le jour des noces du roi actuel, le 31 Juin 1790; elle est composée d'un très grand nombre de demoiselles, qui contribuent annuellement à l'entretien d'une maison d'éducation à l'usage des pauvres filles de bourgeois. Les membres de la société se sont partagés en classes; chaque classe renferme 30 personnes, sous la protection desquelles il n'y a qu'un seul enfant de placé, son éducation achevée, et après sa confirmation, les 30 protectrices cherchent des moyens d'existence à cette jeune fille, soit en la plaçant chez leurs parens ou chez leurs connoissances. Cette réunion de soins en assure de constans à l'élève, si bien que pendant tout le cours de sa vie elle peut trouver des ressources contre le malheur. Si durant son éducation l'enfant vient à mourir, les 30 bienfaitrices proposent chacune une remplaçante, et le sort decide en suite quel sera l'enfant qui obtiendra la place. Les revenus du cet établissement consistent dans la contribution annuelle des membres, et dans une donation qu'elles font le jour de leur mariage; enfin des secours accordés par la famille royale et par plusieurs particuliers, ce qui suffit pour payer les frais de l'établissement, et de l'entretien des enfans, dont le nombre n'a jamais dépassé celui de trente.

3. Société pour soutenir des Jeunes Filles Pauvres.

En 1793 il se forma une société à Copenhague pour soutenir quelques filles pauvres, qui nées dans un état d'aisance, se trouvent reduites au besoin par quelque malheur. La société ne put donner la première année que 100 roubles par an à ses protégées, en leur facilitant les moyens de subvenir à leur existence; mais la société étant devenue plus riche, elle a augmenté cette somme, et en cas de maladie elle se charge même entièrement de ses pensionnaires, jusqu'à leur parfaite guérison. Les parentes des membres de la société sont reçues de droit, pourvu qu'elles aient les conditions requises. Des particuliers bienfaisants se sont empressés d'encourager cette société par des dons et des legs considerables.

4. La Société Bienfaisante des Dames à Copenhague.

Une société de dames se forma en 1816, sous la direction de la reine, pour différens projets de bienfaisance. La société nomma 12 inspecteurs et un secrétaire. Les premiers travaux furent l'établissement d'une école pour former des servants et pour étendre l'industrie domestique. La société résolut en suite de faire chaque année, au jour de naissance de la reine, des distributions de prix pour les servantes de Copenhague, qui avoient servi pendant plusieurs années dans la même maison avec fidélité, zèle et intelligence. Les prix sont des sommes d'argent, dont la valeur augmente par le nombre d'années que les servantes ont servi. Celles qui ont passé 35 à 40 ans dans une maison reçoivent un prix de 100 roubles, et une pension égale à cette somme. Les fonds de la société ayant augmentés au point qu'il reste chaque année une somme considerable, la société prête cet argent à des artisans dans l'indigence, ou qui ont besoin d'avance pour s'établir. Les débiteurs doivent donner des cautions et payer des intérêts modérés, jusqu'à ce qu'ils puissent acquitter leur dette. Cette société a encore donné des sommes considerables à l'institut des aveugles et à la maison d'accouchement.

5. La société de bienfaisance à Kiel, nommée Gesellschaft freiwilliger Armenfreunde, se distingue par l'union de ses membres, et par le mérite de ses directeurs, qui ont su acquérir à leur société une confiance et une considération générale, par la publicité qu'ils donnent à toutes leurs démarches, et par l'activité avec laquelle ils viennent au secours de l'indigent.

DONATIONS.

La principale institution de ce genre est celle de la Princesse Charlotte Amilie, fille de Frédéric 4, qui assigna par son testament des fonds sur lesquels on devoit donner des pensions aux filles pauvres de toutes les classes.

La Princesse divisa ces pensions en 5 classes: dans la 1^{re} sont admises les filles nobles du Dannemarc, et celles des familles nobles étrangères dont les parens ont été ou sont encore au service de ce pays. Chaque pensionnaire reçoit annuellement, depuis l'âge

De 5 jusqu'à 10 ans, 100 roubles.
 De 10 jusqu'à 15 ans, 200 —
 De 15 jusqu'à 20 ans, 300 —
 Et depuis l'âge de 20, 400 —

La pensionnaire conserve la jouissance de cette somme pendant sa vie, à moins qu'elle ne se marie, ou qu'elle ne soit pourvu d'une place à la cour, ou dans un convent, ou enfin qu'elle ne fasse un héritage dont les revenus dépassent sa pension.

2. Dans la 2^d classe sont comprises les filles des employés civils, militaires ou ecclésiastiques; elles reçoivent une pension, depuis l'âge

De 5 ans jusqu'à 10, de 50 roubles.
 De 10 — — — 15 — 100 —
 De 15 — — — 20 — 150 —
 Et depuis cet âge — 200 —

Qu'elles conservent avec les mêmes clauses que dans la première classe.

3. La 3^{me} classe comprend les filles de bourgeois Danois ou de familles établies dans le pays; leurs revenus sont, depuis l'âge de 5 ans jusqu'à 10, de 50 roubles.

Après ce terme elle ne jouit plus de sa pension jusqu'à l'âge de 40, ou si elle n'est pas mariée et qu'elle soit dans l'indigence, elle reçoit 100 roubles par an.

4. On reçoit dans la 4^{me} classe les filles les plus pauvres. On les place dans des maisons d'éducation, où l'on paye 50 roubles par an depuis l'âge de 5 jusqu'à 18.

5. Cette classe comprend les filles du rang le plus inférieur, à qui l'on donne 25 roubles par an depuis l'âge de 5 jusqu'à 18 ans, afin de leur faciliter les moyens de fréquenter les écoles.

Un capital de plus de 300,000 roubles, formé par des legs de particuliers, est destiné en Sélande à doter un certain nombre de filles pauvres, dont la conduite a mérité ce bienfait.

Les Duchés ont aussi des capitaux destinés à cet usage, surtout pour la dotation des jeunes paysannes.

COUVENTS DE DAMES ET DE DEMOISELLES.

Le Dannemarc contient un grand nombre d'institutions sous le nom de Couvents. Il y en a pour les veuves et les demoiselles nobles, et bourgeoises; leurs statuts sont différens les uns des autres. Pour être inscrite en qualité d'aspirante dans les couvents nobles, il faut payer une somme, mais les veuves et les bourgeoises ne sont pas appelées à rien payer. Ces retraites ont été fondées par des membres de la famille royal, et par un grand nombre de particuliers. Quelques couvents nobles donnent aux dames qui en sont membres le droit de porter une décoration à l'épaule gauche, et à leur supérieure un grand cordon avec une étoile, et dans un autre toutes les dames ont le cordon et l'étoile; les supérieurs ont des prérogatives à la cour.

Quelques uns de ces couvents donnent la table, le logement et des revenus; plusieurs n'accordent que ces derniers, avec le logement.

Lorsqu'une demoiselle, membre d'un couvent noble, se marie, elle perd sa décoration et son revenu, qui passe à la plus ancienne aspirante. Les parens font inscrire leurs filles de bonne heure sur la liste des prétendantes.

A Copenhague les couvents de Harboe et de Petersen sont destinés à recevoir 12 veuves et 20 filles de pasteurs; les dernières doivent avoir 30 ans pour y être reçues; l'établissement les loge, et accorde à chacune d'elles ainsi qu'aux veuves près de 400 roubles par an; leur supérieure en a 550.

En Sélande il y a 4 couvents de demoiselles nobles; ceux de Walløe, de Wemmeltofte, de Gissenfeldt et de Roskilde. Le nombre des couventuelles ne dépasse pas celui de 20 dans chaque établissement. Ils ont tous une supérieure; ses revenus sont plus considérables que ceux des demoiselles; la somme de la pension varie suivant les divers couvents.

La supérieure de Gissenfeldt doit toujours être une demoiselle de la famille des comtes Danneskjold, dont un des ancêtres a fondé le couvent. Ceux de Walløe et de Roskilde sont les seuls en Sélande, où l'étendue des bâtimens permette de loger toutes les pensionnaires; elles ne sont point obligées d'y résider, et peuvent avec leur pension rester au sein de de leur famille; elles ont la même permission dans les autres couvents. Pour entrer à Wemmeltofte et à Gissenfeldt on paye 1,000 roubles.

Odense, capitale de la Fionie, a un couvent de demoiselles nobles sur le même pied que celui de Gissenfeldt en Sélande.

La Jutlande possède aussi plusieurs couvents, entr'autres ceux de Störinggaard, pour 12 demoiselles nobles avec leur supérieure, et d'Estvadgaard pour 12 veuves nobles. Ces deux établissemens assignent un revenu annuel à leurs couventuelles, et les defrayent de tout, lorsqu'elles y résident. Le couvent de Bienzen est destiné à des veuves de bourgeois.

Près de Schlesvig est un couvent nommé St. Jean. Les couventuelles n'y sont qu'au nombre de 10; ce couvent a été bâti, comme on le suppose, l'an 1194, et appartenait à des Bénédictins. Les documens les plus anciens qui concernent ce couvent remontent jusqu'à l'an 1250. Il a le droit de se choisir un directeur dans la noblesse de Schlesvig, et a la juridiction civile et criminelle sur les paysans de son territoire, ainsi que la patronat d'une église. Ses revenus sont fort considérables.

Le duché de Holstein a 3 couvents nobles; celui de Preetz, le plus riche de tous en terre; il y a 32 couventuelles et 40 demoiselles expectantes; il y a un prieur et une prieure; celui d'Izehoe a 19 demoiselles et autant d'expectantes; d'Uetersin, le moins bien doté, n'a que 14 demoiselles.

Je m'arrêterai ici, craignant d'avoir déjà dépassé les bornes que je m'étais prescrites. Je n'ai point parlé des autres écoles, tant publiques que particulières, dans le pays des Lombards, et de quelques institutions dont le but est sans doute bienfaisant, mais ne se rattache pas au sujet que je viens de traiter, où il n'est surtout question que des secours pour la classe pauvre de la nation. Il ne me reste plus qu'à appeler l'indulgence du lecteur sur cet écrit; s'il n'y trouve pas l'intérêt qu'il peut attendre de la nature de l'ouvrage, qu'il veuille au moins le juger avec moins de sévérité en croyant à l'assurance que je puis lui donner, que j'ai puisé ces observations dans les sources les moins douteuses, et que j'ai évité avec scrupule tout ce qui ne serait pas de la plus exacte vérité.

RUSSIA.

LETTER from J. D. Bligh, Esq., to Lord Viscount Palmerston.

My Lord,

St. Petersburg, 8th October 1833.

SINCE I had the honour of receiving Mr. Backhouse's circular, dated 12th August, directing me, by your Lordship's order, to procure and transmit to the Foreign Office, information respecting the legal provision in this country for the maintenance of the poor, and of the working and effect of the laws which have that object in view, I have not omitted to use my utmost endeavours to collect the required information, which I shall endeavour to condense in an intelligible shape in the present despatch.

I must, however, premise, that in a territory of such vast extent as the Russian Empire, of which the capital is situated at one of the extremities, and governed as it is, as to the point under consideration, by the regulations which obtained in the various countries composing it prior to their union under one sceptre, it will be almost impossible for me to give satisfactory answers to that portion of your Lordship's inquiry, touching the amount of the funds set apart for charitable purposes; of the regulations for the maintenance of the poor in those parts of the empire where any are supposed to be in operation; and of their effect upon the comfort, character and condition of the inhabitants.

In order to place before you in as clear a manner as I am able, the result of my inquiries upon this subject, I shall detail in order the substance of the laws which provide, in the different divisions of the Russian empire, for the maintenance of the poor, as well as of the usages which in some instances compensate for the absence of positive legal enactments.

As far as regards those parts of the empire which may most properly be called Russia, it will not be necessary for me to detain your Lordship long, since in them (where in fact by far the greatest portion of the population is to be found), the peasantry, being in a state of slavery, the lords of the soil are induced more by their own interest, than compelled by law, to take care that its cultivators, upon whom their means of deriving advantage from their estates depend, are not entirely without the means of subsistence.

Consequently in cases of scarcity, the landed proprietors frequently feel themselves under the necessity (in order to prevent their estates from being depopulated), of expending large sums, for the purpose of supplying their serfs with provisions from more favoured districts. There is no doubt, however, (of which they must be well aware) that in case of their forgetting so far the dictates of humanity and of self-interest, as to refuse this assistance to the suffering peasantry, the strong hand of a despotic government would compel them to afford it.

The only cases, therefore, of real misery, which are likely to arise, are, when soldiers, who having outlived their 25 years service, and all the hardships of a Russian military life, fail in getting employment from the government as watchmen in the towns, or in other subordinate situations, and returning to their villages, find themselves unsuited by long disuse to agricultural pursuits, disowned by the landed proprietors, from whom their military service has emancipated them, and by their relations and former acquaintances, who have forgotten them.

I am led to understand, that in all well-regulated properties, in order to provide for the contingencies of bad seasons, the peasants are obliged to bring, to a magazine established by the proprietor, a certain portion of their crops, to which they may have recourse in case of need.

In the estates belonging to the government, which are already enormous, and which are every day increasing, in consequence of the constant foreclosing of the mortgages by which so many of the nobility held their estates under the crown, more special enactments are in vigour; inasmuch as in them, all serfs incapable of work are supported by their relations, and those whose relations are too poor to afford them assistance, are taken into what may be termed poor-houses, which are huts, one for males, the other for females, built in the neighbourhood of the church, at the expense of the section or parish, which is also bound to furnish the inmates with fuel, food and clothing.

The parish must, moreover, establish hospitals for the sick, for the support of which, besides boxes for receiving alms, at the church and in the hospitals themselves, all fines levied in the parish are to be applied.

The clergy are compelled to provide for the poor of their class, according to an ordinance, regulating the revenues set apart for this object, and enacting rules for the distribution of private bequests and charities.

In Courland, Esthonia and Livonia, the parish (or community) are bound to provide for the destitute to the utmost of their means, which means are to be derived from the common funds; funds; from bequests, or from any charitable or poor fund which may exist; and in Esthonia, from the reserve magazines of corn, which, more regularly than in Russia, are kept full by contributions from every peasant.

When those are inadequate, a levy is made on the community, which is fixed by the elders and confirmed by the district authorities; and when this rate is levied, the landowners or farmers contribute in proportion to the cultivation and works they carry on, or to the amount of rent they pay; and the labourers according to the wages they receive.

The overseers consist of the elder of the village, (who is annually elected by the peasantry) and two assistants, one of whom is chosen from the class of landholders or farmers, and the other from the labourers, and who are confirmed by the district police. One of these assistants has to give quarterly detailed accounts to the district authorities, and the elder, on quitting office, renders a full account to the community.

Those who will not work voluntarily, may be delivered over to any individual, and compelled to work for their own support, at the discretion of the elder and his assistants.

Those poor who are found absent from home, are placed in the hands of the police, and transferred to their own parishes.

All public begging is forbid by very strict regulations.

In the external districts of the Siberian Kirghese, which are for the most part peopled by wandering tribes, the authorities are bound to prevent, by every means in their power, any individual of the people committed to their charge from suffering want, or remaining without superintendence or assistance, in case of their being in distress.

For this purpose, they are above all things enjoined to discountenance idleness, and are expected to employ all beggars or trampers in the public establishments, such as hospitals, schools, &c., or to hand them over as labourers to the stationary Kirghese.

The sick, aged and insane are taken charge of by the authorities, and placed under the care of the community; for which purpose, from five to ten waggons belonging to the Government must be in constant readiness in each district, in order to convey medical assistance where required. Certain sums are appropriated for the care of the poor, for the care of the sick, and for the instruction of the ignorant, and in every district, according to the existing regulations, a hospital ought to be built for the reception of from 150 to 200 sick, for which buildings, plans and estimates, together with the account of the means existing on the spot for establishing them, must be submitted to the Government for approval and confirmation; and until these buildings are ready, the hospitals are established in separate waggons.

All the charitable offerings of the Kirghese are received by the district authorities, and as they consist for the most part of cattle, they are employed, as far as necessary, for the service of the charitable institutions; the surplus is sold, and the proceeds, together with any donations in money, go towards the support of those establishments; when voluntary contributions are not sufficient for that purpose, the district authorities give in an estimate of the quantity of cattle of all sorts required to make up the deficiency, and according to their estimate, when confirmed by the general Government, the number of cattle required in each place is sent from the general annual levy made for the service of the Government.

In the Polish Provinces incorporated with the empire, as the state of the population is similar to that of Russia Proper, the proprietors in like manner, in cases of need, supply their peasantry with the means of existence; under ordinary circumstances, however, the portions of land allotted to them for cultivation, which afford them not only subsistence, but the means of paying a fixed annual sum to their lords, and the permission which is granted to them of cutting wood in the forests for building and fuel, obviate the necessity of their receiving this aid.

The same system existed in the Duchy of Warsaw prior to 1806, and every beggar and vagabond was then sent to the place of his birth, where, as there was not a sufficiency of hands for the cultivation of the soil, he was sure to find employment, or to be taken care of by his master, whilst there were enough public establishments for charity to support the poor in the towns belonging to the Government, and those, who by age, sickness, or natural deformities, were unable to work.

But when the establishment of a regular code proclaimed all the inhabitants of that part of Poland equal in the eye of the law, the relations of the proprietor and the peasant were entirely changed; and the former having no power of detaining the latter upon his lands, except for debt legally recognised, was no longer obliged to support them.

So great and sudden a change in the social state of the country soon caused great embarrassment to the Government, who being apprehensive of again altering a system which involved the interests of the landed proprietors, the only influential class in the country, for a long time eluded the consideration of the question, by augmenting the charitable institutions; but at length the progressive expense of this system compelled the Minister of Finance to refuse all further aid to uphold it, and by an arbitrary enactment, recourse was had to the former plan of passing the poor to the places of their birth. As this arrangement is only considered as provisional, and as the population has not hitherto more than sufficed for the purpose of agriculture, and the manufactories which were established prior to the late insurrection, it has not been much complained of, though the necessity for some more precise and positive regulations respecting the poor is generally acknowledged.

In Finland, there are no laws in force for the support of the indigent, nor any charitable establishments, except in some of the towns. In the country districts it is expected that reserve magazines of corn should be kept in every parish, but I cannot ascertain that the adoption of this precautionary measure is imperative upon the landed proprietors and peasantry.

The Government receives the capitation-tax there in kind; the proceeds of which are placed in magazines for the use of the military quartered in the country; and in case of scarcity, they give back a portion of it to the grower of the corn, on condition of receiving in a more favourable season the same quantity with a small addition as interest.

I fear, that in the foregoing details, I shall have given little or no information, relative to the means of supporting the poor, which can be found practically applicable to any state of society where the population is more dense and in a more advanced state of civilization, than that which is to be found under the Russian sway, but I have endeavoured to comply with your Lordship's wishes, by laying before you all that I have been able to collect on the subject.

I have, &c.

ANSWERS to the Queries circulated by the Poor Law Commissioners amongst His Britannic Majesty's Consuls.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—The frugality of the Russian peasants and their manner of living, the few wants they have, and their peculiar situation in regard to the proprietors of the soil, precludes the possibility of begging being so general in Russia as is the case in many countries of Europe. He considers himself well fed, if he has his rye-bread, buck-wheat, and sour cabbage soup well seasoned with salt, and with a lump of fat or hog's lard boiled in it by way of relish. The simplicity of his food and clothing enables him to produce every article of one as well as of the other at home, with very few exceptions. A Russian peasant's family endeavour to keep together as long as they conveniently can, as the more hands they have in the household the richer they are likely to become. It is not uncommon (especially among the crown peasants) to see four or five married sons keeping house together; but the nobility, finding it their interest to have as many families as possible paying for their vassalage, separate a married peasant from his parents as soon as it can be conveniently done. An able-bodied man, as a beggar, is seldom seen; in the first place, because those belonging to the estates of the nobility are well looked after and kept to their work, and among the crown peasants, if one is discovered begging, or does not attend to his household as he ought, he is given as a recruit upon the first opportunity. This is the case respecting the inhabitants of the country and small towns, but in the two capitals beggars are occasionally seen. In the country, indeed, as long as a peasant has health and strength to cultivate the ground allotted to him, he never becomes a beggar; but occasionally, though very rarely, an aged person or a cripple is forced by his master to beg, in which case he receives from his master a passport for a year, and goes where he pleases in search of his livelihood. If, however, a person of this description is discovered begging, it is the express duty of the country police to send him back to his master, who is forced to provide for him. No peasant can leave his village without a passport, and no proprietor will give one (except perhaps in the above case) unless he hears that the man he gives it to is not only capable of supporting himself during the time it is valid, but also that he can bring back a certain sum of money (termed obrok) which is the annual payment of the peasant to his master, when not employed in his immediate service or in the cultivation of his estate. No proprietor likes to give a passport to a man upon whom he cannot depend for the regular payment of the obrok, because by making him work at home he runs no risk of losing it. This keeps the idly-disposed at home, and prevents them from strolling about in search of subsistence and becoming public nuisances. Another reason why it is the interest of proprietors to keep such subjects at home is, that he is answerable to the Government for the capitation and other taxes levied on the peasantry. Another preventive against begging in Russia, is the facility with which a proprietor can get rid of his good-for-nothing and troublesome peasants, as it depends entirely upon his will and pleasure to give any one of his peasants as a recruit, the moral qualities of recruits not being inquired into, if their physical correspond with the official instructions upon that head, and should such a subject be unfit for the military service, he will be received, without any inquiry, on the simple declaration of his master, as a colonist for Siberia, his travelling expenses, which are very trifling, being defrayed by the proprietor.

the extreme hospitality of the peasants themselves, who consider it a religious duty never to allow any one to call in vain upon their charity when asked in Christ's name, and assistance is never so required without a piece of bread being instantly given. It is the duty of the peasants as well as of the police to take up all vagrants, and the chiefs of the different villages (called golova the head, or starosta the elder) are answerable to the police that they do not sojourn in their villages, and moreover, must instantly arrest them and deliver them to the next police station or prison, whence they are called up for examination, are required to declare their names, their birth-place, and to what class they belong. As soon as the vagrant declares this, he is immediately sent back, under escort, from one station to another, to the estate, town, village, or corporation to which he belongs. Should he, however, at his examination, not choose to declare his name, or give any account of himself (which very often happens), it then becomes the duty of the government office to publish a complete description of the individual three times in the St. Petersburg and Moscow papers, calling on any one who may have a claim to him, or be able to give any information regarding him, to communicate with the authorities within a given time, after which any claim ceases to be valid, and the vagrant, if fit for it, is enlisted as a soldier, or is sent off to Siberia, where the Government provide him with a house, land, and every thing necessary for husbandry, and where he is likely to do well. No provision is made by the Government to relieve those who are passing through the country on their return to their homes, except in the hospitals in the provincial towns, and it is seldom that the labourers who visit the two capitals during the summer months, in immense numbers, want assistance, except in case of sickness; the greatest part of them travel on foot during April and October, in a company termed an artell, of which they chose the elder starosta, and entrust to him the management of their travelling expenses. Other workmen contract to work for a certain time at a certain price, in which case they generally travel at the contractor's expense. Other labourers, principally from Lithuania and White Russia, are let out 400 or 500 at a time by their proprietors, to work for the whole summer, at so much a head. They are engaged principally by those contractors, who sometimes let them to others at a profit. These labourers travel at the expense of their proprietor or of the contractor, according as it is stipulated in the contract. These labourers, who for the most part are employed in digging canals, making roads, are the worst off of any, as the contractors frequently engage with Government to bring a given number to feed them during the whole time the contract lasts, and consequently they are often kept on very short allowance.

The travelling labourers from Russia Proper generally make their own conditions, and receive the sum contracted for themselves, whilst the others never touch a copeck. In case of any of these workmen being taken ill on the road, his companions leave him as much as they think sufficient to bring him on to the place of his destination, and should this not be enough, he is in no danger of starvation, as every peasant will give him black bread and a night's lodging. The charitable feelings, therefore, of the peasantry and the cheapness of food, would for the present render any regulations made by Government of little use, and, did they exist, the rapacity of the petty authorities would nullify them.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—It is only in extraordinary cases that any, except the military, can be billeted or quartered on the peasantry or householders.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Convicts and others travelling to Siberia, are generally lodged in prisons built for that purpose.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c. and in which they are set to work?—In both the capitals and in most of the seats of provincial government, there are houses of industry established by Government.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—In most of the monasteries and other religious institutions there are a few mendicants who come habitually for their pittance, and who are rarely sent away without some mark of charity. Many monasteries have a stipulated sum set apart to be distributed, either weekly, monthly or yearly, amongst the poor and destitute, but the arrangements on this score are so different, varying according to the donations and bequests, that it would be impossible, without getting an insight into the regulations of every monastery, to give an exact answer to the question.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—The destitute belonging to the middle classes have a right to apply to the corporations they belong to for assistance, which corporations have regulations pointing out the qualifications which entitle applicants to demand it.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—In ordinary times Government does not trouble itself about procuring work for the poor, but under circumstances such as the famine of the

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.

RUSSIA.

present year, numbers have been employed in public works in the southern provinces. Except when afflicted by such calamities as the above-mentioned, no one, in a country so thinly peopled as Russia, who seeks for work with a good will, need be long in finding it.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—The only instance which has come to my knowledge of food, clothing and fuel being distributed to the poor in Russia, except by private charity, is by a society of English and Germans in St. Petersburg.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—The above-mentioned society has also established a school for poor children. Every parish in every town has a school, which is open to children of all classes. These are under the direction of the clergyman, and the children are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, without being either clothed or fed.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Fathers and mothers must provide for their children.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—The Government on no occasion assists any one with loans, unless they have good security to give, therefore the destitute of course derive no advantage of this sort.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5. There are no almshouses for their reception, nor any compulsory regulations for their support by their families.

SICK.

1. There are no district institutions for their reception.

2. There are no regulations for affording surgical and medical relief to the poor in their own houses.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There are public hospitals in some of the principal towns.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There are some private establishments for affording aid to lying-in women in the capital, but no public.

5. I cannot ascertain that there are any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. There are no regulations in Russia Proper for the support of illegitimate children; but the landed proprietors, being interested in the increase of the population, take care of them. In Finland and in the German provinces, the fathers give annually a certain quantity of corn for their support.

2. Relatives of fathers and mothers are in no way compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—Illegitimate children are not supported at the public expense, except in foundling hospitals.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

	Orphans.	Foundlings.	Deserted Children, whose Parents are known.
4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?	- - When relations decline, upon the death of parents, to take charge of children, they are taken under the protection of the orphan courts, which in the government towns consist of the mayor, two of the magistrates, and two of the elders. In the capital, a first guild merchant presides. The court takes charge of the education of the orphans, and appoints trustees to administer any property they may possess.	- - There are hospitals for their reception in the two capitals, and in some towns, the facility of gaining admission to which is such, and the rules by which they are governed so defective, as to have led to abuses, which it is in contemplation to prevent by new regulations, but nothing has yet been settled on this point. Foundlings are kept there till they are adults, and then frequently employed in Government manufactories, but no compulsion can be used, as they are free.	- - There are no establishments for their reception, nor are there any regulations for providing for them; but, if serfs, the proprietor must support them.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Or boarded with individuals?	- - There are no regulations for billeting or quartering orphans on householders or on individuals.	- - Foundlings are sent into the country to be nursed, where they are kept till the age of five, at a rate fixed and paid by the hospital, whose principal revenue is from the monopoly of playing cards.
7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?	- - Upon the death of parents, the nearest relations become the natural guardians of the children, unless otherwise directed by will; but they are in no way compelled to support them.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—None for cripples. There is a hospital for deaf and dumb at St. Petersburg. There is an institution for the blind in the capitals, supported partly by the Government and partly by private subscriptions.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?—Not at all.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—No regulations nor compulsion.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—There are no establishments for the reception of idiots. In the capitals and in some of the principal towns there are establishments for the reception of lunatics.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?—They are not billeted or quartered on householders, or boarded with individuals.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—If serfs, the proprietor is compelled to support them; but there is no compulsion on relatives to do so.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effects,

1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality?—The obligation of the proprietor to support his peasantry naturally operates against their industry and frugality.

3d, On the age at which they marry?—This depends wholly on the proprietor.

4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—None; but the abundance of food keeps families united as long as the proprietor allows it.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The condition of the labourer is more eligible than that of those who are kept in the few almshouses existing in the great towns.

LABOURERS, &c.

Foreign
Communications.

RUSSIA.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—The pay of labourers varies in different parts of Russia. In Georgia, it is 35 copecks; in Poltava and Tobolsk, 36 to 50; Bialystock, Voronesk, Grodno, Ekaterienostoff, Yenesesk, Irkoutsk, Kieff, Kursk, Minsk, Mohileff, Nishney Novogorod, Penra, Orenbourg, Perwn, Kasan, Saratoff, Simbirsk, Slobodonkrainsk, Chernegoff, 51 to 80; Don Cossack territory, Vologda, Volhynia, Karan, Kalouga, Kostroma, Orel, Podolia, Crimea, 80 copecks to 1 ruble; Bessarabia, Caucasus, Courland, Livonia, Moscow, Smolensk, 1 r. to 1 r. 20 c.; Astrachan, Wilna, Witepsk, Novogorod, Olonetz, Iver Pteskoff, 1 r. 20 c. to 1 r. 53 c.; St. Petersburg, 1 r. 54 c. Thus the lowest average is 35 copecks (about $3\frac{1}{2}d.$), the highest, 1 r. 54 c. (about 1 s. 3 d.) per diem. The pay for a man and horse in Georgia is 75 copecks (about $7\frac{1}{2}d.$); in Bialystock, is 75 c. to 1 r. 50 c.; Don Cossacks, is 1 r. 50 c. to 2 r.; Astrachan, is 2 r. to 3 r.; St. Petersburg, 3 r. 27 c.; Courland, 3 r. 48 c. (about 2 s. 11 d.), being the highest average.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is not general, but is occasionally resorted to.—Vide Vagrants, No. 2.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—Land being principally cultivated by peasants belonging to the proprietor, who are not paid in money, and who pay their obrok to him for the land they occupy in labour, there is no means of putting a price upon the worth of their labour; especially, as has been shown in answer No. 1, the price of labour, when an equivalent for it is given in money, varies so much in different parts of Russia.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—As a Russian peasant grows almost every thing necessary for the consumption of his family, and spends little or nothing for manufactures, it is almost impossible to give anything like a satisfactory answer to this question. Their wants being very few, their expenditure is very slight; a small sum is generally given by each peasant to the priest, but nothing fixed.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Women and children assist in field labour, either in cultivating the portion of land attached by their master to their cottages, for which they pay obrok, or for the landed proprietors, if they pay non obrok.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Vide Answer 4.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—Vide Answer 4.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Yes; on rye-bread, buck-wheat and sour cabbage soup well seasoned with salt, and occasionally with a little lard.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Generally speaking, not, especially in the country districts; and there is little inducement to lay by, as the proprietor takes care of the peasantry. In favourable localities, such as the neighbourhood of towns, some savings may be effected by the sober and industrious.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—The average quantity of land allowed by a proprietor to his slave is 15 acres.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—As the labourers are almost all slaves, they have no habitations which they can call their own property.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—For the same reason they pay nothing in the shape of rent for their habitations, and cannot sell them.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—The labourers pay no rent for the lands they occupy.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—On 48,000,000, the number of inhabitants in European Russia, the deaths in 1831 were 1,851,730, or 1 in $25\frac{92}{100}$.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—The births in 1831 were 2,054,200, or 1 to every $23\frac{36}{100}$ persons.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—In 1831, 363,111 couples were married, or 1 marriage among every 132 persons, or 66 couple.

17. The average number of children to a marriage? 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—No data exist for answering these queries.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year? 20. Before the end of their 10th year? 21. Before the end of their 18th year?—The total deaths in 1831 of persons of the Greek church, were 823,608 males; of whom there died,

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—It is the interest of the proprietor of serfs that they should marry early; and even in cases where he does not interfere, or the peasants are free, the facility of procuring food encourages early marriages.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—It is so much the interest of the proprietors to increase the population of their estates, that marriages generally take place amongst the peasantry as early as possible.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—From marriages taking place so early, very little opportunity is given to the unmarried to save. The married have not much inducement to save, as their masters are bound to support them.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Some employ their savings in cultivating more land than the portion usually allotted to their slaves by the landed proprietors, upon agreeing to pay an augmented obrok; in building a better sort of house than those usually inhabited by the peasantry; many in the interior hoard their money.

In the St. Catherine's Institution, 300 young ladies are educated at the expense of the government, at the rate of 40 copecks per day for their food, which consists of a cup of milk and a small loaf of white bread every morning for breakfast; dinner, of a soup and three other dishes; milk in the evening, with a white loaf; and a supper of three dishes.

The whole annual expenses of the establishment, including dress, medical attendance, repairs of the building, &c. amount to 276,645,42 $\frac{3}{4}$ roubles.

The principal committee is in St. Petersburg; there are subordinate committees in 20 different governments of the Russian empire, who send their annual reports to the St. Petersburg committee, as the president is president of all the committees, and the governor-general or governors act for him, with the title of vice-president.

In almost all those governments there are also committees of ladies, who attend to the female prisoners.

The following are the principal five rules on which the committee act, as confirmed by the late Emperor Alexander, in the year 1819.

1. Constant inspection.
2. Classification according to their crimes.
3. To attend that they should be instructed in religion and morality.
4. Constant employment.
5. Solitary confinement for the refractory.

The prison society in Russia is under the immediate protection of the Emperor, who appoints the president.

Every one who contributes annually for the support of the society is called a member, and every one who contributes a certain sum is called the benefactor. From the members of the society the committee is formed in the following manner; three of the candidates' names are by the president presented to the Emperor, out of which one is confirmed by his Imperial Majesty, as a member of the committee. The committee consists of the president, four or five vice-presidents, 12 or more directors, in which number is included the treasurer, who is also a member of all the sections of the committee, of which there are the following eight, consisting each from three to five members:

1. The

1. The feeding and clothing of the prisoners while in confinement, as also to attend that they are properly looked after in sickness.
2. The attending to alterations and repairs of the prison, firing and lighting, &c.
3. The attending to the labour of the prisoners, that they never want employment.
4. The attending to the morals of the prisoners.
5. The attending to the proper clothing of the criminals who are sent into exile to Siberia.
6. To attend to the feeding of the prisoners in the police office, and the 13 quarters of the city.
7. To attend to all donations in clothing, food, &c. for the prisoners, as for the liberation of debtors.
8. The attending to the male and female hospitals in the prison, and the preparing the medicines for the sick. This section consists of medical men.

In the following manner both the male and female prisoners are divided in the prison of St. Petersburg:

1. Debtors.
2. Juvenile offenders.
3. Noblemen.
4. Criminals under trial.
5. Tried prisoners, either sentenced to be exiled to Siberia or to the government they originally came from.
6. Great criminals and murderers. They are never permitted to leave their wards, are never employed otherwise than when one amongst them can read, to hear him read a chapter out of the New Testament daily.

These rules are adhered to as nearly as possible in all the prisons, where there are prison committees.

In the town prison of St. Petersburg the committee have one consulting physician; one steward, who is also inspector of the hospital; one schoolmaster; ten wardmen, (they are taken from the under officers of the guards, who have served their time, with good certificates); one baker, also an under officer of the guards.

The treasurer receives annually from the government treasury, for the purpose of feeding the prisoners in the town prison, the police-office, and the 13 quarters of the town, from 7,075,000 to 7,080,000 *, as also for clothing the prisoners sent into exile, from 7,010,000 to 7,015,000 *; from the Town-hall, for keeping the town prison in repair, &c. &c. paying the officers and invalids attached to the prison their salaries, &c. &c. from 7,050,000 to 7,055,000 *. The annual subscriptions are about 7,012,000 *, which is employed in keeping president's chancery, and the Treasury Office, as also for keeping the chancery of the ladies' committee. All these regulations are followed up by the other committees, in proportion to their means.

The following rules are observed on the immediate entrance of a prisoner into the prison office, both with male and female prisoners:

1. They are immediately conducted to their separate baths, well washed, and then dressed in their prison dress.
2. Their clothes are deposited according to their names in drawers alphabetically marked.
3. Any effects the prisoner brings with him are taken from him and sealed up with the prison seal and his own, and deposited in the prison office; when the prisoner is released they are all returned to him; if he is sent into exile, or to his government, they are forwarded to the government office, and safely returned to him.
4. When he returns to the prison office from the bath he is conducted to the ward allotted to the crime he is charged with.

OF DEBTORS.

The creditor must feed the debtor all the time he keeps him in prison, at the rate of 25 copecks (2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.) a day, which he pays for a month in advance to the steward. If the creditor neglects to bring the money within seven days the debtor is discharged.

The debtor is not forced to work as the other prisoners; and also they dress in their own clothes; when in want, then the committee give them clothing.

The voluntary contributions to release debtors are considerable; last year they amounted to upwards of 7,035,000 *, which sum enabled the committee to discharge the debts of 92 debtors, confined for 7,052,327 *, besides giving small sums to assist those who were found worthy of help.

In the government pay are the following officers and attendants belonging to the town prison: the keeper, his assistant, one chaplain, two clerks, one doctor, one apothecary, three barber-surgeons, four attendants on the sick, under officers of the guards (discharged from the army), three invalid under officers, 36 invalids.

The above are all lodged in the prison.

A captain's guard, of 77 men, mount guard daily. The committee allow them while on duty provisions from the prison kitchen.

ARCHANGEL.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Poor persons beg from house to house in towns and villages; and it is calculated that of a population of 18,000 in this place there are 250 men, women and children supported by this accidental charity.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—No, not established.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no houses of industry for other than persons confined for crime or debt; in both the latter cases they are made to cut wood and draw water for the use of the prison.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—There are no religious institutions for relieving the poor generally; the employés of the church are supported by that establishment in monasteries.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—In no degree.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—No work is provided.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—No distribution is made.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved, by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—Children are educated gratis; if they are the sons of soldiers they are fed, clothed and educated in government military schools; for daughters of soldiers there is no provision.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food, or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—The law does not enforce this.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—They are not assisted by loans.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—There is one house here, supported by the town council, which gives subsistence to about 30 persons; but the relief is given at the option of the mayor of the town, and as his charity is not controlled by government, the fate of applications for relief depends upon the character of the person holding the office. There is a house supported by private contribution, containing about 20 persons. The expenses for food, &c. are as follows: 9 o'clock, a. m. breakfast, bread and a sort of beer made of rye-meal, called kvas; 2 o'clock, p. m., dinner of fresh fish, bread and kvas; 7 o'clock p. m., supper of bread, kvas, and the water in which the fish for dinner has been boiled; which amount to about 10s. sterling per person per month. They are given clothes and bedding, which cost about 2 l. sterling per annum. Medicine and medical attendance are given if required.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—Not afforded.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals; 4. Or quartered or billeted on the householders?—Not so boarded, quartered or billeted.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Not enforced by law.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—There are no hospitals for sick poor. There are two hospitals for those in the service of government, one for sick sailors, another for soldiers.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—No relief is afforded but in time of the existence of any epidemic; but there is a town or district surgeon, who prescribes for the poor, but no medicine is given.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—None.

Archangel.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There was formerly a lying-in hospital here, but government found the expense so great as to oblige them to close it.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—None.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—On the father, if he be known, and present: if unknown or absent, on the mother. The effect of this law, and the absence of foundling hospitals, except in the capital, is seen in the number of cases of infanticide in this empire, and in the practice which poor women pursue of taking medicines to procure abortion.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—To none.
3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—To none.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception? 5. Or billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Or boarded with individuals?—To None.—Foundlings. There is an hospital here, supported by the interest of 20,000 roubles (900 l.), the profit on the sale of cards by government, in this town, and the fines levied on persons whose chimnies take fire. Here children are supported whose parents are not known, and who are left not near any house. When they become old enough to work, they give half their earnings to this institution for the term of their lives. There are at present no children and no adults who have been brought up by it, although it maintains a manager and some clerks or writers. By the laws of this empire, if a child be left at a person's door or on his premises, and the mother be not known, the person on whose premises the foundling is left is bound to support it.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

No provision made for them.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—There is one establishment here in which both idiots and lunatics are confined, but in separate apartments; it is under the control of government, and contains about 30 persons, male and female. The expenses and dietary are the same as in the almshouse of this town, (for a description of which, see preceding page,) except that in a lunatic asylum more attendants are necessary.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals? 4. Or are their relatives compelled to support them?—Not at all.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

- 1st. On the industry of the labourers? 2d. On their frugality? 3d. On the age at which they marry? 4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—These questions are grounded on the supposition that houses exist here for the relief of poor persons; no reply, therefore, can be given to them with any sure correctness. So far as appearances go, the peasants in the immediate neighbourhood of Archangel are too industrious, and their subsistence too cheap, to allow them to seek relief by charity, instead of working. Even in the more distant provinces, where the peasants are the property of private individuals, and their poverty great, they do not to any extent seek for charitable relief.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—Agricultural, 6d. per diem, without food, in winter, 8d. per diem in summer; artisans, 8d. per diem in winter, 10d. per diem in summer. These wages are often doubled.
2. Is piece-work general?—So nearly universal, that there is a class of men (called contractors) who undertake any kind of work.
3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—£. 18. to 30 l. per annum.
4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—£. 15. to 20 l. per annum.

5. Is

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Women are employed at home in spinning and weaving, or by merchants in cleaning flax and tow; children are not employed.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—From 10 l. to 15 l. per annum.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—From 30 l. to 40 l. and 45 l.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—Decidedly, yes. Their food consists of fish, rye bread, gruel, kvas; occasionally meat and turnips; a great deal of tea is also drank by the peasants of this neighbourhood.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Taking the average earnings at 35 l., expenditure, including clothes, 25 l., they would lay by 10 l.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—Half an acre to an acre.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—In the country labourers build their own habitations; in towns they hire houses; from no particular class of persons.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—£.2. to 3 l. per annum rent; price 20 l. to 30 l.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Land appertains always to the crown in this district; the crown receives about 1 l. 10 s. per acre for grass and arable land.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The average of five years, 1 in 25. This is a high average; the result of the number of deaths by cholera in 1831, when the deaths were 1 in 10; excluding this year, the deaths are 1 in 45.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—The average of five years, 1 in 24.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The average of five years, 1 in 100.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Three or four.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—Illegitimate, 34 in 1,160 births.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—49 deaths in 823, or 1 in 16 $\frac{8}{10}$.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—410 in 823, or one-half within a fraction.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—448 in 823, or 1 in 1 $\frac{83}{100}$.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Males, 32; females, 30; average of 253 marriages.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Marriages are delayed by a very great degree of immorality prevailing in this district, and by the chance of the man being taken for a recruit by government.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—So far as my observation has gone, the Russian labourer does not save; if the surplus of his earnings is not carried to the spirit-shops, it is generally laid out in dress for his wife and daughters, or some showy piece of household furniture, or in a horse.

COURLAND.

Courland.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Mendicity by vagrants is strongly forbidden, and does not prevail to any extent.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—There is no relief afforded to such persons; government usually sets natives at public work, if they are unfit to be enrolled as soldiers, and strangers are transported over the Russian frontiers.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—There are no laws and regulations existent to that end.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Individuals may board them, according to their feelings of charity. By legal regulations no one is compelled to do so.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—Neither here nor in the vicinity are any district houses of industry established as yet; however, a plan to found such an institution is contemplated on. At Mitau, the chief city of Courland, there are several establishments to such purposes in existence, as to my knowledge.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—There are none existent.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—Every one here is obliged to procure work for himself by the best means in his own power.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—In consequence of a short population, persons are never at a loss for work, especially in agricultural employments.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—Every one here is obliged to provide himself with the commodities and necessities required, in the best manner possible.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Legal regulations to that end are not existent; the relatives assist them, according to their feelings of compassion and their means, with the necessities they stand in need of.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—Assistance by loans is not afforded.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—For the reception of such individuals there are almshouses established in every town of more or less extent. The community contributes for the maintenance of these institutions, and is, besides, compelled to provide for those rendered impotent through age.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—The community as well as the relatives afford assistance to them by as much as possibly can be done. The almshouses furnish a number of such individuals with bread.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals? 4. Or quartered or billeted on the householders? 5. Or are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—This is entirely left to the compassion or voluntary charity of individuals or relatives; legal regulations to that end are not existent.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—For the reception of the sick there are infirmaries established, both in towns as well as in the country, and they are maintained by the community in towns and by the proprietors of estates in the country.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—According to the requisiteness of the physicians afficiated to that purpose*.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—They receive the required commodities and necessities at the infirmaries above alluded to. In towns, by a public fund raised to that end from the community, and in the country, by means of the proprietors of estates.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—Assistance is given to them at home by their relatives; public establishments to that purpose are not existent, except at Mitau, the capital of Courland, although of no great extent.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are no other modes of affording assistance to the sick.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—By legal regulation, the support of illegitimate children falls wholly upon the fathers, who are compelled to provide for them till they reach the age of 15 years. In many instances, however, the father composes such matters at once with the mother, by paying to her a certain sum of money, once for all, in presence of the court of magistrates.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—No legal regulations to that end are existent.

3. To

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—Illegitimate children are supported at the public expense only when orphans.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—In Mitau and Libau only are establishments for the reception of a certain number of orphans. In inland towns, and in the country, they must be supported by their relatives.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—Orphans are never billeted or quartered on householders by any legal regulation.

6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Orphans are boarded in the orphan-houses; individuals are not compelled to do it.

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Compassion and charity induce relatives, in most cases, to take charge of them; by legal regulations, no one is forced to do so.

Foundlings.—Proper establishments for their reception are not yet founded in this duchy. Foundlings are generally taken up into almshouses, and supported until they reach an age which enables them to provide for their subsistence themselves.

Deserted Children, whose Parents are known.—Instances of children deserting from their parents are scarcely known of with us here; and if such were to happen, they would instantly be conducted to their respective homes.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

Public establishments or institutions for the reception of such unfortunate persons are not anywhere else existing in this duchy but at Mitau, although yet first arising; the whole country contributes to the maintenance of them.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

An establishment for the reception of such lamentable persons is going to be founded at Mitau. For the first their support falls upon the charge of their parents, relatives, or other charitable individuals.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—Several of the establishments and institutions alluded to not being in existence, and some of them just on the point of arising, it is thus out of my power to state their effects.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The condition of an able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, is always better in comparison with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. The latter, on the whole, prefers his situation as idler, and to live continually at public expense.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The common agriculturist or peasant in this duchy is never paid with ready cash for his labour, but receives from the proprietors of estates a piece of cultivated land, the produce of which in grain, hay, &c. supplies him and his family with the needful subsistence. The skilled artisan may earn about 90 to 120 copecks silver, or 3s. to 4s. sterling; the unskilled, 45 to 60 copecks silver, or 1s. 6d. to 2s.; and the common labourer, 30 copecks silver, or 1s. per diem in summer, and a few pence less in winter, without provision.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is not general, but occurs chiefly in mercantile employments.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—An average labourer, thus employed, may earn in the course of a year, for to maintain his household, from 100 to 120 silver roubles, or 17l. to 20l. sterling.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—In this respect I am only able to state, that the common labourer in the country, in order to pay the like annual expenditures, fully expends again of what he earned; the industrious labourer in towns, however, has still a chance of saving something after all.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Both women, as well as children, are never at a loss for work. In the country they meet with agriculture, in towns with mercantile employments.

6. What can women, and children, under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, harvest, and how employed?—Women may earn 105 copecks silver, or 3 s. 6 d. sterling in summer, and 75 copecks silver, or 2 s. 6 d. sterling, in winter. Children under 16, 90 copecks silver, or 3 s. in summer, and 60 copecks silver, or 2 s. in winter, per week, by employment in trade and husbandry.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—They may expect to earn from 180 to 210 silver roubles, or 30 l. to 35 l. sterling in a year.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—They can subsist on the aggregate earnings; in most cases, however, but needy, on bread, potatoes, salted fish, and seldom beef.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Very seldom they lay by anything; if they are very industrious and economical, they may save from 24 to 36 silver roubles, or 4 l. to 6 l. sterling, in a year.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—The average quantity of land annexed to a single labourer's habitation is from eight to nine acres.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—It is the landholder or nobleman in the country, and the tradesman and the more opulent labourer in towns.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—The rent of labourers' habitations is from 24 to 48 silver roubles, or 4 l. to 8 l. sterling, per year; and the price on sale from 300 to 420 silver roubles, or 50 l. to 70 l. sterling, in towns.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Land is never let to labourers in this duchy.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The proportion, in healthy times, is 35 out of 1,000, or 1 in $28\frac{5}{10}$.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—The proportion is 38 out of 1,000, or 1 in $26\frac{3}{10}$.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The proportion is 10 out of 1,000, or 1 in 100.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—The average number of children to a marriage is four.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—The proportion is, of 15 legitimate, three illegitimate births, in towns, or 1 in 3; in the country by far less, say 1 in 20.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—One dies out of eight.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—One dies out of 14.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—One dies out of 25.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—The average age of marriage of males is 26, of females 20.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Marriages are delayed in consequence of unpaid taxes to government and town, of protestation against a marriage, of difference in religion, confession.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—This is not well to be ascertained; married people, there is no doubt, will save sooner something than unmarried.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Most people of the lower class put their savings into the here established saving-bank, on interest. Some, living in towns, invest their savings by purchasing habitations.

INFORMATION relative to the DIETARIES, &c. which I have been able to procure of Prisons, Workhouses, Almshouses and Orphan-houses, in this Duchy.

For dieting prisoners in Courland, government has stipulated $6\frac{1}{4}$ copecks silver, or $2\frac{1}{2}$ d. per diem only; at the workhouse in Mitau the correctioners are boarded for 10 copecks silver, or 4 d. per diem. The expenditure for the support of about 200 individuals, a third part of whom is permanently living at the almshouse of this place, and the remainder assisted at their homes with bread and other necessities by the said institution, comes to about 2,400 silver roubles, or 400 l. sterling, per year. The poor living at the almshouses and infirmaries get as much meat and drink as needfully is required, and without exact prescription; weights and measures, therefore, are not to be stated correctly, neither what changes are proposed in the laws or institutions respecting relief in this country: we anticipate all hopes for the best in future.

The support, say boarding, clothing, schooling, &c. &c. of 28 orphans at the orphan-house of this place, incurs the expenditure of about 6,000 silver roubles, or 1,000 l. sterling, per year. This institution here was founded many years ago by the testamentary will of two rich old bachelors. These late benefactors devised a fund of about 150,000 silver roubles, or 25,000 l. sterling, for the foundation of the said orphan-house. The orphans taken up in this institution are to be of civil descent.

LETTER from Lord Howard de Walden to Sir George Shee, Bart.

Sir,

Stockholm, October 25th, 1833.

I AM sorry I have not hitherto been able to obtain such information, in answer to Mr. Backhouse's circular despatch of the 12th August, as appeared to meet the instructions of Lord Palmerston.

I enclose the only printed documents which exist relating to the treatment of the poor.

With a view to obtain a correct idea of the system in practice respecting the maintenance of the poor, I had an interview with Mr. Hartmansdorff, the Secretary of State for Ecclesiastical Affairs.

I have since drawn up a memorandum, recapitulating briefly the general system, and which Mr. Hartmansdorff has undertaken to correct, if erroneous on any point. He has also been good enough to promise that he would add any additional information which might occur to him as likely to elucidate the practical operation of the poor regulations in this country.

I have, &c.

SWEDEN.

HIS Majesty's Gracious Ordinance respecting the Duty to maintain such Persons as may have removed from one Parish into another, and may afterwards have become disabled, and are unable to provide for themselves.—Issued at Gothenburg, the 5th of December 1788.

WE, Gustavus, by the grace of God, King of Sweden and of the Goths and Vandals, &c. &c. &c., Heir to Norway and Duke of Schlessvig Hollstein, &c. &c., make known: That whereas We, in consequence of an humble inquiry and representation made to Us, on what principle the disputes which are stated now frequently to occur between parishes should be decided, respecting the duty to maintain such persons as may have removed from one parish to another, and who afterwards have become disabled, and are unable to provide for themselves, have ascertained that no certain principle for the decision of such disputes are to be found in the regulations already published in respect to this matter; and We therefore have thought it necessary that some enactment on this subject should be made for the information and guidance of the public; We have, after hearing the statements of the parties concerned in the matter, taken this question into consideration; and although it might at the first view appear that the parish which has derived the greatest advantage from the pauper, while able to work, should be bound to provide for his or her maintenance when they shall be rendered incapable of earning their own livelihood, yet as this principle, besides the difficulty of correctly ascertaining it, would form a subject for constant disputes, and require a longer time for decision, to the great injury of the pauper, We have graciously decided, that the parish wherein the pauper has possessed a tenement, or where the pauper may last have been rated as a lodger or as a servant, shall be liable to his or her maintenance when no longer able to support themselves by labour. But as it has also been proved by experience that an infirm person, an unskilful and an indolent servant, or any other person who may have parted with, or else may no longer be able to manage his allotment, frequently, upon receiving his clergyman's certificate as to his conduct, removes to what parish he pleases, where he either can obtain a small house or become a lodger, upon payment of a small rent, or by assisting the owner of the soil with his labour, and that the latter, when he no longer finds it his interest to retain him, discharges him, and he then becomes a burthen to the parish generally, although only one person may possibly have derived any advantage from a person thus circumstanced; We have further considered it both necessary and equitable, that every parish on observing the abovementioned duty, shall at the same time possess the right to prevent any lodger from obtaining a settlement in the parish, or any old or unfit person from being accepted as a servant, until the case shall have been submitted to the decision of a general vestry, and the consent of the parishioners has been obtained for the purpose.

As the inhabitants of a parish will thus have an opportunity of giving their opinion whether the applicant should be allowed to settle in the parish, they will only have to blame themselves if they receive from other parishes such persons as may in time become a burthen to them; and consequently it must also on the other hand appear evident to every one how necessary it is that they should so conduct themselves in their native places, or where they have spent the time of their youth and labour, that, when overtaken by old age, they may expect to receive the care and support of their parish.

To which all whom it may concern have obediently to conform themselves. In further testimony whereof, We have hereunto set our hand and confirmed the same with Our royal seal. Gothenburg, the 5th December 1788.

KONGL. MAJ:TS Nådiga Förordning Om Allmänna Arbetsställen för Swea- och Götha-Riken, samt Stor-Förstendömet Finland.—Gifwen Carlsruhe Slott den 27 Februarii 1804.

Wi, Gustaf Adolph, med Guds Nåde, Sweriges, Göthes och Wendes Konung, &c. &c. &c. Arfwinge til Dannemark och Norrige, Hertig til Schlesswig Hollstein, &c. &c. Göre weterligt: At då befordrandet af Wåre trogne Undersåtares säkerhet til Personer och Egendom utgör et hufwudsakeligt föremål för Wåre omsorger, hafwe Wi ej utan bekymmer erfarit, huruledes denna säkerhet ofta störes genom Personer, hwilka, dels af lattsinnighet, wanart och lättja försaka de medel, som tillåtné åro, för at winna en nödtorftig bergning samt blifwa nyttige medlemmar af samhället, dels ock redan för begångne brott straffade och från deras häckten lösgifne, sällan kunna eller wilja förskaffa sig loflige näringsfång, utan lika med de förre stryka landet ikring och betunga Allmänheten med tiggerier, eller ofreda med nya brott och wåldsambheter. För at, å ena sidan, befordra ofwanberörde wigtiga föremål, den allmänna säkerheten, och å andra sidan, förmå dem, som missbruka sin frihet, at blifwa gagnelige och bereda deras förbättring, hafwe Wi nu til en början föranstaltat om stiftande af sådane Arbetsinrättningar för Swea och Götha Rike i Carlsrona, och för Finland å Sveaborg, der syslölöse och wanartige Personer, utan at, som förut skedt, sammanblandas med Missdådaren eller dem, hwilka för begångne brott til fästningsarbete blifwit dömda, kunna under den uppsigt, som för deras förwarande och tilsynen wid arbetet pröfwas nödig, syslosättas emot et derföre afpassadt och til deras nödtorttiga utkomst erforderligt underhåll.

Med tillämpning af dessa grunder, warder derföre härigenom stadgadt, som följer:

S. 1. Til dessa Inrättningar, hwilka komma at bära namn af Allmänna Arbetsställen, åga Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete i Stockholm och Wåre Befallningshafwande i Lånen tilstånd at på obestämd tid dömma:

1°. Sådane Personer, hwilka för första eller andra resan stöld blifwit straffade, eller ock för andre brott på wiss tid warit dömda til Fåstnings-arbete, men efter utståndit straff eller arbetstidens utgång, icke kunna upgifwa något lofligt näringsfång, hwarmed de troligen blifwa i stånd sig försörja, eller anskaffa en pålitelig man, som dem i tjenst antager och swarar derföre, at de icke genom kringstrykande falla det allmänna till last.

2°. Lösdrifware eller Landstrykare, hwarmed förstås så beskaffade Personer, hwilka upräknas i 15. s. af Wår den 7 April 1802 utfärdade Nådiga Wårfnings-Stadga, såsom ock kringstrykande Tatarer och Zigenare, hwilka, enligt Wårt Nådiga Bref til Landshöfdingarne af den 17 November 1772 äro förfallne til Fåstnings-arbete, samt emot Wårt den 18 April 1781 utfärdade och i Commerce-Collegii Kungörelse den 22 Februarii 1802 förnyade förbud, ej med Pass böra förses.

4°. De hwilka blifwit, wid påföljd af straff, förbudne at til wissa Städer eller Orter återkomma, men sådant icke hörsamma.

5°. De utur tjenst skiljde Drängar, Betjenter eller Soldater, hwilka nämnas i 1. 2. 3. och 5. Momenten af Wårfnings-Stadgan, och icke wid skeende efterfrågningar, sedan den i desse Momenter för en hwar utsatte tid förflutit, gitta upgifwa för sig någon säker tilgängelig tjenst eller annat lofligt näringsfång.

6°. Svensk Handwerks-Gesäll som, utan at åga laga förfall eller bewisligt hinder, icke inom fjorton dagar efter ankomst til Stad, inställer sig til arbete hos Måstare.

7°. Handwerks-Gesäller som, oaktadt föregångne twänne warningar, första gången af Alderman och Bisittare i Embetet, och andra gången af Magistrat, wisa antingen sådan ostadighet och sturskhet, at någon Måstare dem til arbete icke wil antaga, eller af låttja och liderlig lefnad sig från arbete afhålla.

8°. Utrikes ifrån inkommande Öfwerlöpare som icke, inom tolf dagar, antaga tjenst eller annat laga näringsfång, samt icke utlefwereras böra.

9°. Extraordinarie Waktbetjente wid Allmänna eller Stadens Werk, samt lika beskaffade Betjente och Beslagskarlar wid Tullar, Wågar, med flere dylike ställen, som annat näringsfång icke hafwa, men under loppet af sex weckor sig från tjenstgöring, utan laga förfall eller erhållit tilstånd, undanhållit.

S. 2. De i föregående s. uppräknade Personer, hwilka til krigstjenst äro dugelige och icke förverkat rättigheten at tjena Oss och Kronan, i egenskap af Krigsmän, böra ej til Allmänna Arbets inrättningen afsändas, utan skal med dem efter Wårfnings-Stadgan förfaras; ågande likwål de Fåstningsfångar, hwilka omtalas uti 1. Mom i samma s. och ej begått andre brott, än at de til Krigstjenst få antagas, sielfwe wälja, antingen de wilja i slik tjenst ingå eller til Allmänna Arbetsinrättningen försändas.

S. 3. Til dessa allmänna Arbetsställen få icke försändas andre än sådane Personer, som höra til Mankonet, samt äro arbetsföre, och kunna således icke der emottagas, hwarken utgamle eller orkeslöse, eller de hwilka med obotelige kroppsskador och sådane bräckligheter, hwarigenom de sättas utur stånd at arbete förrätta, finnas behäftade.

S. 4. På det ändamålet för denna Wår författning må kunna winnas, och Wåre Befallningshafwande sättas i tilfälle at efterlefnaden deraf befordra, åligger det Presterskapet at fullgöra hwad genom Wårt Nådiga Circulaire til samtelige Consistorierne af den 7 April 1802 är förordnadt, men i synnerhet skal det tilkomma wederbörande Krono-och Stads-Betiente samt Magistrater, at, wid answer, noga efterspana och skyndsammeligen hos Wår Befallningshafwande anmäla sådane Personer, hwilka, efter hwad ofwanberördt är, finnas förfallne til allmänt arbete: ågande Landshöfdingarne at, om Krono-eller Stads-Betjente häruti wisa försummehet, dem derföre nåpsa eller tiltala låta, på sätt 1. cap. 7. s. Utsöknings-Balken förmår, åfwensom de, hwilka beträdas at hysa löst folk, utan at sådant hos wederbörande tilkänna gifwa, skola böta Sex Riksdaler Tretiotwå Skillingar, angifwarens ensak.

S. 5. Enär sådane Personer, hwilka häröfwan uppräknade blifwit, eller andre hwilka med dem jämföras kunna, anträffas i Stad eller på Landet inom det Lån, dit de kunna anses höra, utan at wara på annat ställe boende eller egenteligen wistande, åger Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete och Wåre Befallningshafwande at, utan vidare omgång, förordna om deras afsändande til Allmänna Arbetsstället; men derest den Person, hwarom fråga i detta afseende upkommer, hör til annat Lån och således af tillfällige handlinger eller såsom kringstrykande kommit dit, der han träffas, bör han derstädes i förwar tagas, samt under rättelse om förhållandet och de omständigheter, som kunna utrönte warda, meddelas den af Wåre Befallningshafwande, til hwars Lån Karlen skal höra, hwarefter samme Wår Befallningshafwande skyndesammeligen afgifwer sådant swar, at deraf pröfwas kan, antingen den fasttagne bör försändas til Allmänna Arbetsstället, eller til den ort, dit han hör, eller ock kan kan på fri fot ställas. Om den häktade Personen uppgifwit orätt ställe, dit han höra skulle, warde han, sedan slikt utrönt är, genast försänd til Allmänna Arbetsstället.

S. 6. Då någon Person åläggas af Wårt-Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete eller Wår Befallningshafwande at til Allmänna Arbetsstället försändas, skal skrifteligt beslut derom författas samt Protocoll hållas, hwaruti uptages den i fråga warande Personens lefnads-omständigheter, så widt de utrönas kunnat, om han för brott warit anklagad eller dömd, hwad straff han undergått, för hwilka laster och oarter han egenteligen gjort sig känd, om han lårt något handtwerk, med mera.

S. 7. Til dessa Personers afsändande til Allmänna Arbetsstället består Skjuts efter samma grund och ordning som för Fångar är faststald; Och bör härwid i akttagas, å ena sidan, at desse Personer, så widt omständigheterna tillåta, icke härunder fångslas på enahanda sätt som wanlige Fångar, men ock å den andra, at alla utvägar til rymning förekommas; ågande Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete och Wåre Befallningshafwande at föreskrifwa, huru och på hwad sätt, en sådan Person bör under transporten förwaras, hwilket i den öppna förpassningen, som wid afsändandet medskickas, skal införas.

S. 8. Wid ankomsten til Allmänna Arbetsstället aflemnas Arbetskarlen, derest å samma ort är Landshöfdingesäte, til Wår Befallningshafwande, som sedan öfwerlemnar honom til Commendanten. Finnes ej Landshöfdingesäte å den ort, der Allmänna Arbetsstället är belågit, aflemnas Arbetskarlen genast til Commendanten; Och skal med Arbetskarlen afsändas det Protocoll och beslut, som i 6. s. omförmåles, hwilket uti Fångpasset anteknas. Detta Protocoll och beslut, som jemte Arbetskarlen aflemnas, förwaras sedan af Commendanten. Har den til arbete dömda penningar eller klådes-persedlar och andra mindre tilhörigheter, utöfwer hwad han på en gång behöfwer nyttja, så skola de förre uti bref öfwersändas til Wår Befallningshafwande på det ställe, der Arbetsinrättningen är belågen, och på klådes-persedlarne, eller hwad det annars wara må, förteckning uprättas och uti Fångpasset införas, på det de under tilbörlig wård kunna wid framkomsten aflemnas.

S. 9. Då någon Person, på sätt här ofwanföre finnes stadgadt; blifwit ålagd at til Allmänna Arbetsstället afsändas och dit ankommit, kan han ej sedermera derifrån förr lösgifwas, än med tillförlitelig säkerhet blifwit utrönt och styrkt, at han erhållit tjenst eller lofligt näringsfång, så at orsaken til hans ditsändande uphört. Dock bör han icke utlemnas förrän halft år förflutit från det han til Allmänna Arbetsinrättningen ankommit, så wida ej synnerliga omständigheter skulle dertil föranleda. Har han under arbetstiden gjort sig utmärkt för wanart eller lättja, bör han, oaktadt erhållit försvar eller näringsfång, icke lösgifwas, förrän han sit lefwerne förbåttrat. Pröfningsrätten, huruwida han må lösgifwas eller ej, tilkommer Wår Befallningshafwande i det Lån, der Allmänna Arbetsinrättningen är belågen; ågande Commendanten at hos nyssnämde Wår Befallningshafwande anmäla alla de frågor som upstå om tilfälle för någon allmän Arbetskarls lösgifwande. Men enär allmän Arbetskarl begär at på annor ort måtte skrifwas om utvägar för honom, at blifwa antingen i tjenst antagen, eller winna tilfälle til bergning och utkomst, bör Commendanten lemna honom et sådant biträde, samt del af det swar eller uplysning som inkommer.

Rymmer allmän Arbetskarl, erhåller hwar och en som en sådan Rymmare fasttager och på behörigt ställe aflemnar, en belöning af En Riksdaler Tretiotwå Skillingar som genast utbetalas af den Wår Befallningshafwande, i hwars Lån Arbetskarlen ertappas.

HIS Majesty's Gracious Ordinance respecting the establishment of Public Working Institutions for the Kingdoms of Svea and Gotha, and for the Grand Duchy of Finland.—Issued at the Palace of Carlsruhe, the 27th of February 1804.

WE, Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden and of the Goths and Vandals, &c. &c. &c., Heir to Denmark and Norway, Duke of Schlessvig Hollstein, &c. &c., make known: Whereas the promoting of the security of our faithful subjects, both in their persons and property, forms a principal object for Our solicitude, it is with regret We have observed the manner in which this security has frequently been disturbed by persons who, partly from levity, vice and indolence, relinquish the opportunities afforded them of obtaining the necessary means of subsistence, and of becoming useful members of society; partly also by those who, in consequence of the crimes they have committed, have been punished and released from the prisons, and who are seldom able or willing to procure the lawful means of support, but, in a similar way as the former, stroll about the country and burthen the public by begging or disturbing the public peace by fresh crimes and outrages. In order on the one hand to promote the above-mentioned important object, namely, the public security, and on the other hand, to compel those who abuse their liberty to become useful and provide for their improvement, We have now, as a beginning, adopted measures for the establishment of such working institutions at Carlsrona, for the kingdoms of Svea and Gotha, and at Sveaborg for Finland, where the unemployed and persons of vicious habits may be employed, under such superintendence as may be deemed necessary for their safe custody and for the due performance of their work, and where they may obtain suitable and necessary means of support, without being mixed, as heretofore, with felons or with such persons who, in consequence of the crimes they have committed, may have been adjudged to fortress labour.

In furtherance of these objects, it is therefore hereby enacted as follows:

S. 1. To these institutions, which shall bear the name of public working places, the department exercising the functions of Our chief stadtholder at Stockholm and Our lords-lieutenants of counties, shall have the right to adjudge the following classes for an indefinite period, namely:

1st. Such persons who, either for the first or second time, may have been punished for theft, or else those that may for other crimes have been adjudged to fortress labour, but after having undergone their punishments, or the time of their labour having expired, are unable to state any lawful occupation by which they might probably be able to support themselves, or who cannot produce a responsible person who is willing to take them into his service, and who will undertake that they shall not become burthensome to the public by strolling about the country.

2d. Vagabonds or vagrants, by which is to be understood such description of persons as are enumerated in the 15th paragraph of Our gracious Ordinance of the 7th of April 1802, for regulating the impress service, as also strolling gipsies and mountebanks, which persons are, by Our gracious letter addressed to the lords-lieutenants of counties, of the 17th November 1772, liable to fortress labour, and who by Our Ordinance of the 18th of April 1781, and the renewed notification of the Board of Trade of the 22d of February 1802, are prohibited from being furnished with passports.

3d. Such soldiers as may, in conformity with the 11th chapter of the articles of war of the year 1798, have been struck off the regimental muster-rolls. It is however to be observed, that the commander of the regiment must in such case make a written report to the office of the chief stadtholder or Our lords-lieutenants, respecting such a circumstance, and the cause that has led to the same.

4th. Such persons who, on pain of punishment, may have been prohibited from revisiting certain towns or places, but notwithstanding are found disobeying the orders given them.

5th. Such labourers, servants or soldiers as may have been discharged from their services, who are mentioned in the 1st, 2d, 3d and 5th section of the ordinance for regulating the impress service, who upon being questioned, and after the time fixed for each person by these sections shall have expired, shall be unable to assign for themselves some certain and immediate employment or other lawful means of support.

6th. All Swedish journeymen mechanics who shall not without legal cause, or from other proved circumstances, have been prevented, but have neglected to apply to a master for employment within 14 days after his arrival at any town.

7th. Journeymen mechanics, who after receiving two warnings, first from the alderman and assistants of his trade, and the second time from a magistrate, shall either exhibit such unsteadiness of conduct or impertinence that no master will take them into his employ, or who, from leading a dissolute life or from laziness, shall absent themselves from work.

8th. Emigrants arriving from abroad, who shall not within 12 days enter into service or into any other lawful pursuit, and who shall not be liable to be delivered up.

9th. Extra watchmen, either at the public or town institutions, and officers and seizing-officers at the public tollgates, at the public scales, or similar places equally circumstanced, having no other means of support, but who shall, for a period of six weeks, and without legal cause or without permission, have absented themselves from their employment.

S. 2. Such of the persons enumerated in the preceding paragraph who may be fit for the army, and who have not forfeited their right to serve Us and the Crown in capacity of soldiers, shall not be sent to the public working institution, but they shall be proceeded with as pointed out in the regulations for the impress service. The description of fortress prisoners mentioned in the first section of the same paragraph, and who shall not have committed any greater crime than that they may enter the military service, shall however possess the right to make their election, whether they wish to enter such service or to be sent to the public working institution.

S. 3. To these public working places no other persons shall be sent but those of the male sex and such as are fit for work, and consequently no very old or infirm person, or any person who may be found to be attacked with such incurable diseases or other bodily defects as may render them incapable of performing their work.

S. 4. In order that the object of this Our Ordinance may be carried into effect, and Our lords-lieutenants be enabled to enforce the observance of its provisions, it shall be the duty of the clergy to fulfil the provisions ordered in Our gracious circular addressed to all the consistory courts of the 7th of April 1802; but especially it shall be the duty of the Crown and town officers and magistrates concerned, under pain of responsibility, to discover and report without loss of time to Our lords-lieutenants, all such persons who, as above stated, may have rendered themselves liable to the performance of public labour; and in the event of the Crown and town officers showing any neglect in this respect, Our lords-lieutenants shall have the right to punish or prosecute them for such neglect, in manner pointed out in the 7th paragraph of the 1st chapter of the Act regulating executions; and likewise such persons as shall be found to harbour persons of loose character, without making the same known to the proper authorities, shall be fined six rix-dollars, 32 skilings, to go to the informer.

S. 5. When such persons as are here above enumerated, or others who can be compared with them, shall be found either in towns or country places within the county to which they may be considered as belonging, without having any residence or really living at any other place, Our department for executing the office of chief stadtholder and Our lords-lieutenants shall, without any further process, give orders for their being sent to the public working place; but when a person, respecting whom any doubts may arise, shall belong to another county, and who may consequently, from casual circumstances or as a vagrant, have arrived there, he must be taken into custody on the spot, and information be given of the nature of the case and such circumstances as can be ascertained, to such of Our lord-lieutenant to whose county the man may belong; after which Our said lord-lieutenant shall, without loss of time, return such an answer that it may be ascertained by the same whether the person apprehended shall be sent to the public working place or forwarded to the place to which he may belong, or else be set at liberty. Should it be found that the person thus apprehended has given a false account of his place of abode, he shall, on discovery being made, be sent forthwith to the public working place.

S. 6. When any person shall, by Our department for executing the office of chief stadtholder or Our lords-lieutenants, be adjudged to be sent to the public working place, a decision in writing respecting the case shall be drawn up and a protocol kept, in which shall be stated the circumstances attending the life and conduct of the person in question, as far as the same may be ascertained, or whether he has been accused of any crime, and has been sentenced for the same, what degree of punishment he may have undergone, for what vices and misconduct he may in reality have made himself conspicuous and known, and whether he has been taught any trade or business, and so forth.

S. 7. Travelling expenses for sending these persons to the public working place, shall be allowed in the same order and ratio as are enacted for prisoners; and it is hereby to be observed on the one hand, that these persons, as far as circumstances will permit, shall not be secured in the same manner as common prisoners, but on the other hand, in a manner so as to prevent all means of escape, Our department of chief stadtholder and Our lords-lieutenants having the power to give directions how and in what manner such a person shall be secured during his transport, and which shall be inserted in the open passport that shall be sent with him on his departure.

S. 8. On the arrival at the public work place, the workman shall, where there is a lord-lieutenant appointed, be delivered to such lord-lieutenant, who shall afterwards deliver him to the commandant. Should there be no lord-lieutenant appointed in the district where the public work place is situated, the workman shall be immediately delivered over to the commandant; and the protocol and decision mentioned in the 6th paragraph, shall be sent with the workman, and which shall be noted down in the prison passport. This protocol and decision, which must be delivered together with the workman, shall afterwards be kept in the custody of the commandant. Should the person sentenced to work be in possession of money, wearing apparel, or other trifling property, beyond what he may require for present use, the former shall be forwarded to Our lord-lieutenant at the place where the work institution is situated, and of the wearing apparel or any other articles he may be possessed of, an inventory shall be taken and inserted in the prison passport, in order that these articles may be placed under proper care, to be delivered on his arrival.

S. 9. When any person, in the manner here above enacted, shall have been sentenced to be sent to the public work place and shall have arrived there, he cannot afterwards be released from such place, until it shall have been ascertained with perfect certainty that he has obtained employment as a servant or any other lawful means of support, by which the cause of his being sent to such a place shall have ceased. Nevertheless he must not be delivered over until a half-year shall have expired from the time of his arrival at the public work institution, unless some special circumstances should render it advisable.

Should

Should he, during the period allotted to him for work, have rendered himself conspicuous for loose conduct and idleness, he shall, notwithstanding he may have obtained protection or the means of support, not be liberated until he shall have amended his conduct. The power of determining whether he ought to be released or not, shall be vested in Our lord-lieutenant in the county where the work institution is situated; it being the duty of the commandant to report to Our said lord-lieutenant all such questions as may arise on occasions of a public workman being liberated. But when a public workman shall desire that letters may be written to other places on his behalf, with a view to find out means for him either to be taken into service, or to find an opportunity for his support and maintenance, it shall be the duty of the commandant to render him such assistance, and to communicate to him the nature of the answer or information that may be received.

Should a public workman abscond, any person who shall apprehend such runaway person and deliver him at the proper place, shall receive a reward of one rix-dollar and 32 skillings, which shall be immediately paid by Our lord-lieutenant of the county wherein the workman may be apprehended.

S. 10. Appeals against the decisions of Our lords-lieutenants, when any person shall have been sentenced to be sent to the public work institution, or on questions arising, whether those already sentenced shall be liberated from such a place, may be made to Us in Our department of judicial review, within the same time as is prescribed with respect to cases of impressment in the 57th paragraph of the ordinance for regulating the impress service of the year 1802, which appeal shall either be inserted in the sentence, or be made known to the person sentenced; and in such cases, Our gracious determination shall be received, before the person sentenced can be sent off or liberated, it being the duty of Our lords-lieutenants or commandants, when they shall be requested, to receive and forward similar appeals to our said department of judicial review.

S. 11. In consequence of what has here above been enacted, it shall be the duty of all the commandants of the fortresses in the kingdom now to make an immediate report, each to Our lord-lieutenant in the county where the fortress may be situated, of such prisoners whose prescribed time of labour may have expired, with such an account of them as may afford requisite informations in order that Our lords-lieutenants may afterwards give directions how and in what manner such persons shall be further disposed of. The same measures shall likewise afterwards be adopted by the commandants with respect to other prisoners that may for a definite period have been sentenced to fortress labour, and this so early that Our lord-lieutenant's answer to such reports may arrive before the expiration of the term fixed for the labour of the prisoners.

S. 12. As regards these working places in other respects in each district, and what ought to be observed in the internal government of the same, We have made separate gracious enactments; and this Our gracious Ordinance shall be read once a year in all the churches of the kingdom, on the Sunday next preceding the usual time for giving notice of quitting service, and Our lords-lieutenants shall see that the same is strictly carried into effect; to which all whom it may concern have obediently to conform themselves. In further testimony whereof, We have hereunto set our hand and confirmed the same with Our royal seal. The palace of Carlsruhe, the 27th of February 1804.

HIS Majesty's Gracious Ordinance respecting the general Duty to contribute to the Care and Support of the Poor.—Given at the Palace of Stockholm, the 14th of February 1811.

WE, Charles, by the Grace of God, King of Sweden and of the Goths and Vandals, &c. &c. &c.; Heir to Norway, Duke of Schlessvig Hollstein, &c. &c.; make known: Whereas the States of the kingdom, assembled at the Diet at Stockholm, have, by a humble address of the 24th of November 1809, humbly submitted to Us, that We might be graciously pleased to order the appointment of a committee, which, after having obtained the necessary information respecting the existing institutions for the care of the poor in the kingdom, ought, before the commencement of the next ordinary diet, to draw up and prepare a project for the management of the poor, to be made general for the whole of the kingdom, and adapted to the local nature and necessity of each separate district, and the States of the kingdom have at the same time humbly requested that We might in the mean time be graciously pleased to adopt such provisional measures as might be deemed necessary and advantageous; We have, as well in consideration hereof as in respect to what the States of the kingdom have by subsequent humble addresses with the same view represented, as also with regard to what has passed on separate questions respecting the maintenance of the poor, considered it necessary, in furtherance of the useful and benevolent objects aimed at by the States of the kingdom, by their proposition made at the extraordinary diet held at Örebro the 31st of August 1810, graciously to take the humble opinion of the States of the kingdom, how far it may be considered the duty of every person who may not himself be in want of assistance from others, to support the poor, whether aged people or children, and also how far, as a consequence hereof, the resolutions which may be adopted by inhabitants of towns or by country parishes by plurality of votes, respecting the imposition of rates for the maintenance of the poor, after the same shall have been submitted to and approved by Us, should not be considered binding on those who, notwithstanding public notice having been made, have been absent, or else have dissented from the resolutions, or on those who may afterwards have removed into the town or the parish; whereby it seemed very necessary to observe, on the one hand, that no excessive burthen ought to be imposed upon any person against his will, but on the other hand that no person ought to be exempted from a duty which Christianity, humanity and social obligations render sacred and imperative.

In reply hereto, the States of the kingdom have, by letter of the 17th of October last year, humbly represented, that the propositions thus made by Us for the maintenance of the poor, and the manner of determining the rates necessary for the purpose, are not only in accordance with the now existing general laws on the subject, but also consonant with the undeniable demands of social order; and the States of the kingdom have the more readily approved and accepted of these propositions, as by the resolutions that will be adopted in consequence thereof by each town or parish in the country respecting the rates to be raised raised for the maintenance of the poor having to be submitted and confirmed by us, it must appear that all fear of an unequal and partial assessment of the rates will be removed, and that in the mean time the voluntary agreements formerly entered into at the parish vestries for the maintenance of the poor shall serve as a guide. The States of the kingdom have, however, thought it right, for the sake of greater facility, that it should be expressly stated, that the majority of votes on the above-mentioned resolutions being adopted, should be reckoned according to the usual mode of voting on such questions in each place.

We have been graciously pleased hereby to make publicly known what has thus been proposed, approved and adopted by us and the States of the kingdom, in order that the same may serve as a principle and guide for deciding the separate questions that may arise in towns and country parishes respecting the maintenance of the poor, until the general ordinance on this subject desired by the States of the kingdom at the next ensuing ordinary Diet can be enacted.

The agreements that may in the mean time be entered into in towns or parishes, we will, after due deliberation, always be graciously inclined to confirm; and we are hereby desirous of encouraging our faithful subjects to enter into such agreements in such places where they may still be wanting, with this gracious observation, that it is not only necessary to take care of those that are in real want of assistance and support, but equally important also to endeavour to prevent begging and pauperism, by proper care being taken to open channels for industry and merit.

And we shall always with gracious satisfaction view all measures which may be adopted in furtherance of such an object: to which all whom it may concern have obediently to conform themselves. In further testimony, we have hereunto set our own hand, and confirmed the same with our Royal seal.—The Palace of Stockholm, the 14th of February 1811.

KONGL. Maj:ts Nådiga Förrådning, Angående Sysslolöse och wanartige personers insättande och hållande till arbete å de allmänna Arbets-Inrättningarne i Carlsrona och Wadstena.—Gifwen Stockholms Slott den 31 Augusti 1819.

Wi Carl Johan, med Guds Nåde, Sweriges, Norriges, Göthes och Wendes Konung, Göre weterligt: att då Wi funnit, att hwad hitintills blifwit stadgadt, angående sysslolöse och wanartige personers hållande till allmänt arbete, fordrar rättelse, och Wi jämte den förut i Carlsrona warande allmänna arbetsanstalt, nu låtit i Wadstena en annan inrätta; så hafwe Wi funnit godt, att med upphåfwande af Förrådningen den 27 Februarii 1804 om allmänna arbetsställen, samt hwad genom Kongl. Brefwet den 24 December 1805 blifwit föreskrifwit, jämte öfrige i detta ämne utkomne Författningar och föreskrifter, som emot denna Wår Nådiga Förrådning i någon mohn äro stridande, härmedelst i Nåder stadga och förordna följande.

S. 1. Till allmän Arbets-Inrättning åga Wåre Befallningshafwande, ware sig Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embetet i Stockholm eller Landshöfdingarne i Lånen, att på obestämd tid döma 1^o Lösdrifware, då de beswåra allmänheten med Tiggeri, och utrymme till deras intagande saknas i särskildt arbetshus, som i Lånet kan wara inrättadt; och 2^o sådane personer, hwilka undergått bestraffning för tjufnad och äro såsom Lösdrifware att anse.

S. 2. Lösdrifware är den, som icke ingått i allmän tjänst eller icke innehafwer landtbruk, årstjänst, annat stadigt arbete eller wist tillåtet näringsfång eller icke af egne tillgångar eller genom andras wårddnad bergning eller uppehälle njuter; eller icke å landet är gift, mantalskrifwen och boende å wist ställe, där han årligen sig försörjer; eller icke förrättar tjänst hos den husbonde, som honom i mantal skrifwa låtit.

S. 3. De Soldater, hwilka jämnlit 11. cap. 7, s. af 1798 års Krigs-Articlar blifwit från Regementets Rullor utstrukne och till arbete å fästning förfallne äro, skola i stället till allmän Arbets-Inrättning afföras.

S. 4. Ej må till desse allmänna Arbets-Inrättningar såndas den, som för ålder, obotlig sjukdom eller kroppsskada är till arbete oförmögen; ej eller Qwinna.

S. 5. Innan någon må till Arbets-Inrättning dömas, skall lämpelig tid honom föreläggas, att sjelf förskaffa sig tjänst eller lagligt näringsfång. Har personen warit för tjufnad straffad; åge Wår Befallningshafwande, att efter omständigheterna pröfwa, om han under tiden må ställas på fri fot eller i fångsligt förwar förblifwa.

S. 6. Anträffas någon, hwilken såsom Lösdrifware anses må, utom det Lån, hwartill han hör; meddele Wår Befallningshafwande i orten, där Karlen häktad blifwit, den af Wåre Befallningshafwande, till hwars Lån Karlen förmenes höra, underrättelse om förhållandet och de omständigheter, som utrönas kunnat. Wår sistbemålde Befallningshafwande afgifwe därefter skyndsammast sådant swar, att därpå pröfwas kan, om den häktade bör försändas till allmän Arbets-Inrättning eller till den ort, dit han hör, eller ock på fri fot ställas.

S. 7. Då någon till allmän Arbets-Inrättning dömes, skall skrifteligt Utslag därom författas. Protocollet, som angående sådan person föres, innehålle hans ålder och utseende, så ock hans lefnads-omständigheter, så widt de utrönas kunnat; om han för brott warit anklagad eller dömd; hwad straff han undergått; för hwilka laster eller oarter han egentligen gjort sig känd; om han lårt något handtwerk; med mera, som till upplysning om personen lända kan.

S. 8. Den till Arbets-Inrättning dömde skall af Wår Befallningshafwande förpassas till Landshöfdingen i den ort, där arbetsstället är beläget, eller, om Landshöfdingesåte där ej finnes, till Commendanten; Och innehålle den Förpassning jämwäl Karlens namn, ålder och utseende, så ock en noggrann förteckning på de kläder och andra tillhörigheter, som han medförer. Protocoll och Utslaget öfwer den dömde skola öfwersändas till Wår Befallningshafwande i det Lån, där arbetsstället beläget är; Åger Karlen penningar, skola de ock sagde Handlingar åtfölja.

S. 9. Till arbetsfänges afsändande består skjuts efter samma grund och ordning, som för andra fångar fastställt är; och må arbetsfänge icke fångslas swårare, än omständigheterna owilkorligen fordra, Pröfningen af Förpassningsåttet tillkommer Wår Befallningshafwande och sätte han det i Förpassningen ut.

S. 10. Wid ankomsten till Arbetsstället aflämnas Arbetskarlen och de tillhörigheter, honom medföljt, till Wår Befallningshafwande eller Commendanten, efter thy i Förpassningen förskrifwes; och låte Wår Befallningshafwande, enär Karlen till honom förpassad warit, denne, jämte hans tillhörigheter, till Commendanten öfwerlämna. Det till Wår Befallningshafwande öfwersände Protocoll och Utslag, angående Arbetskarlen, warde ock Commendanten tillståldt.

S. 11. Åstundar Jordbrukare eller annan i orten boende person att begagna Arbetskarl till arbete, som wid Inrättningen ej kan verkställas; anmäle hos Commendanten huru lång tid och till hwad arbete, han will Karlen använda. Finnes den person, hwilken anmält sig om Fångens utbekommande, åga utwäg till sysselsättning för honom och hafwa gjort sig så känd, att Fången kan honom anförtros, samt har Arbetskarl uppfört sig så pålitligt, att han må på fri fot wara, utsatte Commendanten den dagspenning, som skålig wara kan; och, der den andra will den erlåggas, warde Karlen utlämnad. Ej skall dock Commendanten tillåta, att någon ifrån Inrättningen uttages till arbete, som menligt är; ej eller må dagspenning betingas till mindre, än hwad Karlen kunnat förtjena, om han wid Inrättningen qwar warit, der Karlen ej sjelf samtycker, att för mindre dagspenning arbeta.

S. 12. Den, som Arbetskarl uttager, på sätt i 11. s. sågs, sware för hans fortkomst till det ställe, där arbetet förrättas skall och för hans åter-inställande, då arbetstiden ute är; ware ock skyldig, att utom den dagspenning, som betingad är efter thy i foregående s. sågs, honom med förswarlig föda och underhåll förse från den dag, han uttages till dess han återställes. Under arbetstiden åge den, som Karlen begagnar, öfwer honom Husbonderätt efter Lag. Tager Arbetskarl flykten under det han så ute är; gifwe den, som honom uttagit, det genast Commendanten tillkänna; och foga han anstalt, att lysning utfärdad warder, som i 21. s. sågs. Har han, som Karlen uttog, genom underlåten tillsyn eller annorledes bewisligen och med uppsåt främjat Arbetskarlens flykt, gälde kostnaden till hans efterspaning och återskaffande.

S. 13. Då Arbetskarl, som utewarit på arbete, til Inrättningen återställes, gifwe den, som honom begagnat, bewis huru han sig förhållit; aflämne ock till Commendanten hwad i dagspenning för hela arbetstiden upplupit, för att såsom bespard arbetsförtjenst karlen till godo komma; dock må derwid afdragas hwad för karlen under den tid, han til enskildt arbete är utlämnad, kan til nödige kläders anskaffande erfordras.

S. 14. Om alt hwad den har att iakttaga, som Arbetskarl til arbete begagna will, efter hwad nu stadgadt är, meddele Commendanten honom underrättelse innan karlen uttages.

S. 15. Gitter Arbetskarl förete bewis af säker person, att denne will taga honom i tjänst eller förse honom med stadigt arbete, eller anmäler sig sådan person, att eljest sörja för hans bergning; ware karlen berättigad, att på fri fot komma. Commendanten gifwe dårom rapport till Wår Befallningshafwande; och förordne han om karlens skyndesamma lösgifwande samt förpasse honom till behörig ort.

S. 16. Har Arbetskarl, sedan han till Arbets-Inrättningen ankom, genom arbete, arf, gåfwa eller testamente förwärfwat penningar till et belopp af Tretiotre Riksdaler 16 Skillingar Banco, och har han, under de Tre sista månaderna, gjort sig för flit och ordning i sitt upförande känd; då skall Wår Befallningshafwande honom på fri fot sätta och med Afskeds-bewis förse. I detta bewis warde hans förhållande under arbetstiden noga utsatt.

S. 17. Commendantens skyldighet ware, att lämna hwem det begår, upplysning om Arbetskarls förhållande under den tid, han wid Inrättningen warit. Han skall ock, när Arbetskarl begår, att till annan ort måtte skrifwas om utwägar för honom, att blifwa i tjänst antagen, eller att eljest winna tillfälle till bergning och utkomst, lämna karlen ett sådant biträde samt del af det swar eller upplysning, som inkommer.

S. 18. At Arbetskarl, som genom flit och pålitligt uppförande sig utmärkt, må meddelas tillåtelse, at på wiss tid och till wiss ort ifrån Inrättningen bortgå, för att höra sig om efter tjänst eller näringsfång. Commendanten gifwe då Arbetskarlen bewis öfwer hans uppförande och Wår Befallningshafwande utfärde för honom pass samt kungöre Wår Befallningshafwande, i den ort, dit karlen sig begifwer, att han utsläppt är, på det tillsyn öfwer hans uppförande må kunna hafwas. Får han tjänst eller näringsfång; anmäle det hos närmaste Kronobetjent i orten; och foga denne anstalt, att Commendanten warder derom underrättad: Får han ej tjänst eller näringsfång; ware skyldig, att åter inställa sig wid Arbets-Inrättningen, då permissionstiden ute är. Kommer han ej, rapportere Commendanten det till Wår Befallningshafwande.

S. 19. Då Arbetskarl ifrån Inrättningen alldeles lösgifwes, skola hans behållna arbetsförtjenst, hwad han eljest under arbetstiden kan hafwa förwärfwat, så ock de kläder och andre tillhörigheter, dem han medfört, till honom utlämnas.

S. 20. Utlämnas Arbetskarl, efter thy i 11. s. sågs, till wiss man, att arbeta utom Inrättningen

Inrättningen; eller tillåtes honom, att på viss tid utgå, för att höra sig om efter tjänst eller näringsfång; så skola hans medförde kläder honom tillställas; och warde i sednare fallet, tillika så mycket af hans behållning till honom utlämnadt, som för hans behof tarfwas kan, medan han borta är.

S. 21. Rymmer Arbetskarl från Inrättningen; eller blifwer den ute, som med tillstånd bortgått, men sig inom viss tid wid Inrättningen åter inställa bordt, efter thy i. 18. s. sågs; låte Wår Befallningshafwande efter honom lysa, och erhålle den, som honom fasttager och på behörigt ställe aflåmnar, en belöning af Sex Riksdaler 32 Skillingar, som genast utbetalas af Wår Befallningshafwande i det Lån, hwarest Arbetskarlen ertappas; Och warde denna utgift ersatt af karlens behållning eller tillgångar, om sådane finnas.

S. 22. Åtnöjes någon ej med Wår Befallningshafwandes Utslag, derigenom han till Arbets-Inrättning dömd, eller hans begäran om lösgifwande derifrån wågrad, blifwit; åge att deröfwer hos Oss anföra underdåniga Beswår, hwilka i Wår Justitiå Revisions Expedition skola ingifwas: ifrån Stockholms Stad å Femtonde dagen: ifrån Upsala, Stockholms, Westmanlands, Södermanlands, Örebro och Gefleborgs Lån, på Tjugonde dagen: ifrån Östergöthlands, Kopparbergs, Jämtlands och Wester Norrlands Lån, på Tjugufemte dagen: ifrån Jönköpings, Kronobergs, Calmare, Blekinge, Christianstads, Malmöhus, Hallands, Götheborgs och Bohus, Elfsborgs, Skaraborgs, Wermelands, Westerbottens och Norrbottens Lån, på Trettionde och ifrån Gottland på Fyrattondefemte dagen: alltid före klockan Tolf på dagen, den dag oråknad, då Parten af Utslaget bewislig del fått. Inträffar tid å Söndag eller Helgedag; ingifwas Beswåren å nästa Söcknedag.

S. 23. Hånwisning till Beswårs anförande skall i Utslaget införas och den dömde kungöras; och åligge Wåre Befallningshafwande eller Commendanterne, att, då de därom anlitas, Beswåren emottaga och till Wår Justitiå Revisions Expedition insända.

S. 24. Den till arbete dömd må ej till Arbets-Inrättning afföras, innan Wi hans Beswår i Nåder pröfwat.

S. 25. Hwad i öfrigt Styrelsen öfwer de allmänna Arbets-Inrättningarne, Arbetskarlarnes sysslosättning, underhåll och behandling med mera angår; därom hafwe Wi särskilt i Nåder förordnat.

Denna Wår Nådiga Förordning kommer att med den 1 sta nästkommande October warda gällande. Det alle, som wederbör, hafwe sig hörsammeligen att efterrätta. Till yttermera wisso hafwe Wi detta med Egen Hand underskrifwit och med Wårt Kongl. Sigill bekräfta låtit.—Stockholms Slott den 31 Augusti 1819.

(Translation.)

HIS Majesty's gracious Ordinance respecting the detention of unemployed Persons, and Persons of loose character, and the keeping them at Work in the Public Working Institutions at Carlsrona and Wadstena.—Given at the Palace of Stockholm the 31st of August 1819.

WE CHARLES JOHN, by the Grace of God King of Sweden and of the Goths and Vandals, make known: Whereas we have found, that the enactments hitherto made respecting the keeping of unemployed persons, and persons of loose habits, to public work, require amendment; and we have now, in addition to the public working institution formerly established at Carlsrona, caused another similar institution to be established at Wadstena; we have thought it proper to annul the ordinance of the 27th of February 1804, respecting public working institutions, and all the provisions prescribed by the Royal Letter of the 24th of December 1805, as well as all other ordinances and enactments on this subject which may in any degree be contrary to the provisions contained in this Our Royal Ordinance, and do hereby graciously enact and order as follows: that,

S. 1. The officers holding our commission, whether it be the officer executing the office of chief stadtholder at Stockholm, or the lords-lieutenants of counties, shall have the power to sentence to a public working institution, for an indefinite period, 1st, vagrants who burthen the public by begging; and when there shall be want of room for their reception, in any separate working house that may be established in the county; and 2dly, such persons as have undergone punishment for theft, and who are to be considered as vagrants.

S. 2. A vagrant is that person who shall not have entered into the public service, or who does not possess land, is not in yearly service, has no regular work, or some certain lawful occupation, and who does not derive his maintenance and support either from his own means, or through the care of others; or who is not married in a country place, not rated, and resident at any certain place where he honestly supports himself, or who does not serve with the master who shall have caused him to be rated.

S. 3. Such soldiers who, in conformity with the 7th paragraph of the 11th chapter of the articles of war of the year 1798, shall have been struck off the regimental muster-rolls, and are liable to perform labour on a fortress, shall now instead thereof be sent to the public work institution.

S. 4. No person shall be sent to the public work institutions who from age, incurable illness, and bodily injuries, shall be rendered incapable to work; nor females.

S. 5. Before any person shall be sentenced to the work institution, a suitable time shall be allowed him to procure himself employment as a servant, or any other lawful means of subsistence. Should the person have been punished for theft, our lords-lieutenants shall have the power to decide according to circumstances, whether the person shall during the time be suffered to be at large, or be kept in custody.

S. 6. Should any person, who may be considered as a vagrant, be found out of the county to which he belongs, then our lord-lieutenant of that county where the man has been taken in custody, shall forward information to our lord-lieutenant of the county to which the man may be supposed to belong, as to the nature of the case, and such circumstances as may have been ascertained; our last-mentioned lord-lieutenant shall thereupon speedily return such an answer, that it may thereby be ascertained whether the man in custody ought to be sent to a public work institution, or to the place where he belongs, or else be suffered to go at large.

S. 7. When any person is sentenced to a public work institution, a decision in writing respecting the case shall be drawn up. The protocol that shall be kept respecting such a person, shall contain his age, a description of his person, and also of the circumstances of his mode of life, so far as they can be ascertained; whether he has been accused of any crime, or sentenced; what kind of punishment he has undergone; for what vices or vicious habits he has made himself especially known; whether he has learnt any business, with other particulars that can afford a knowledge of the person.

S. 8. The person sentenced to a public work institution shall be passed by the officer holding our commission to the lord-lieutenant of the district where the working place is situated, or if there should be no resident governor, to the commandant; and this pass shall also contain the man's name, his age, with a description of his person, as also an exact inventory of his wearing apparel and other articles belonging to him, which he may carry with him. The protocol and decree respecting the person sentenced shall be forwarded to our lord-lieutenant in the county where the work-place is situated; if the man is possessed of money, such money shall be sent with the said documents.

S. 9. For the conveyance of the work-prisoner, travelling expenses shall be allowed in the same manner and rate as are enacted for other prisoners; and a work-prisoner shall not be secured in a more severe manner than circumstances may unavoidably require. The mode of passing the prisoner shall be determined by our lord-lieutenant, a description of which mode shall be inserted in the passport.

S. 10. On arriving at the work-place, the workman shall, together with the effects that accompany him, be delivered over to our lord-lieutenant or the commandant, as may be directed in the passport; and in case the man shall have been passed direct to our lord-lieutenant, the latter shall deliver him, together with his effects, to the commandant. The protocol and sentence forwarded to our lord-lieutenant respecting the workman shall also be delivered over to the commandant.

S. 11. Should any farmer or other person resident in the district be desirous to employ the labourer at any work which cannot be performed at the institution, such person shall state to the commandant for how long a time, and at what description of work, he wishes to employ the man. Should the person who may apply to hire the prisoner be found to have the means of employing him, and that his character is such that the prisoner may safely be entrusted to him, and the labourer has conducted himself so trustworthy that he may be set at large, the commandant shall then fix such wages as may be reasonable; and if the person consents to pay the same, the man shall be delivered over to him. The commandant shall, however, not suffer any person to be taken out of the institution to be placed at any work that may be considered injurious, nor shall less wages be agreed upon than those the man might have earned had he continued at the institution, provided the man himself shall not consent to work for less wages.

S. 12. The person who may take out a labourer from the institution in the manner mentioned in the 11th paragraph, shall be responsible for his travelling expenses to the place where the work is to be performed, and for his return to the institution when the term of labour shall have expired; and shall also, besides the wages agreed upon in the manner mentioned in the preceding paragraph, be bound to provide him with proper food and maintenance from the day he is taken out to the day he is returned to the institution. During the term of labour, the person who employs the man shall possess the authority of master, as prescribed by law. Should the labourer abscond while he is thus absent from the institution, the person who may have taken him out shall immediately communicate such circumstance to the commandant, and he shall adopt measures for public notice being given, as mentioned in the 21st paragraph. Should it be proved that the person who took out the man has neglected to take proper care of him, and has with design caused his escape, he shall pay all the expenses incurred in pursuing and reapprehending him.

S. 13. When the labourer who has been out at work is returned to the institution, the person who has employed him shall give a certificate how he has conducted himself; he shall also deliver to the commandant the wages that may be due to the man for the whole time of labour, to go to the credit of the man, as earnings saved; from this amount shall, however, be deducted, the money required for the procuring of necessary clothing for the man during the time he is hired out for private labour.

S. 14. The commandant shall give to the person who is desirous of employing the man, every information as to the particulars he has to observe by virtue of this enactment, before the man is delivered over to him.

S. 15. Should the labourer be able to produce a certificate from a responsible person, that such person is willing to take him into service, and provide him with constant work, or should such person offer himself in any other way to take care of his maintenance and support, support, the man shall be entitled to go at large. The commandant shall make a report on such case to our lord-lieutenant, and the latter shall give orders for the man's release, without loss of time, granting him a passport for his place of destination.

S. 16. Should the labourer, after his arrival at the institution, either by means of his labour, inheritance, gift or by will, have acquired money to the amount of 30 rix dollars and 16 skillings banco, and he shall during the last three months have been observed to be industrious and orderly in his conduct, then our lord-lieutenant shall provide him with a certificate of his discharge. In this certificate his conduct during the time of his labour shall be particularly expressed.

S. 17. It shall be the duty of the commandant to give to whomsoever may desire it, an account of any labourer's conduct during the time he has been at the institution; he shall also, when a labourer may desire that letters may be written to other places, with a view to find means for his being accepted into service, or in any other manner find an opportunity for gaining his maintenance and support, grant the man such an assistance, and communicate to him the nature of the answer and information that may be received.

S. 18. Permission may be granted to a labourer who has distinguished himself for industry, and who may be deemed worthy of trust, to leave the institution for a certain time for a place that may be fixed upon, in order to look out for employment or other maintenance. The commandant shall in such case give the labourer a certificate as to his conduct, and our lord-lieutenant shall issue a passport for him, and at the same time make known to our lord-lieutenant in the district to which the man is proceeding, that he has been allowed to leave the institution, in order that superintendence may be had over the man's conduct. Should he succeed to obtain service, or other means for his maintenance, he shall report such circumstance to the nearest crown-bailiff in the neighbourhood, and this latter shall take measures to inform the commandant thereof; should he not succeed in obtaining employment or other means for his maintenance, he shall be bound to return to the institution when his leave of absence shall have expired; should he neglect to return, the commandant shall report the circumstance to our lord-lieutenant.

S. 19. When a labourer is entirely released from the institution, the surplus of his earnings, and what other property he may have acquired during his time of labour, as also the wearing apparel and other articles that he brought with him into the institution, shall be delivered up to him.

S. 20. Should a labourer be hired out in the manner stated in the 11th paragraph, by any person to perform work out of the institution, or he be permitted to go out for a limited time to look out for employment or for other means of support, the wearing apparel that he brought in with him shall be restored to him; and in the latter case likewise, so much of his earnings saved shall be given to him as may satisfy his wants while he is absent.

S. 21. If a labourer shall abscond from the institution, or one who may have left on leave of absence, but does not make his appearance at the institution at the time fixed for his return in the manner stated in the 18th paragraph, our lord-lieutenant shall cause such man to be advertised; and any person who shall apprehend him, and deliver him into safe custody, shall receive a reward of six rix dollars and 30 skillings, which shall be immediately paid by our lord-lieutenant in the county where the man is apprehended; and this charge shall be defrayed out of the man's earnings or resources, should he possess any.

S. 22. Should any person be dissatisfied with our lord-lieutenant's sentence, whereby he has been adjudged to be sent to the public-work institution, or upon his request to be released from the same, being refused, he shall have the right to make his humble appeal to us; such appeal to be delivered into our court of Judicial Review: from the city of Stockholm, on the 15th day; from the provinces of Upsal, Stockholm, Westmanland, Sodermanland, Orebro and Gefleborg, on the 20th day; from the provinces of Oster Gothland, Kopparberg, Jamtland and West Norrland, on the 25th day; from the provinces of Jonkoping, Kronoberg, Calmar, Blekenge, Chrestianstad, Malmohus, Halland, Gotheborg and Bohus, Elfsborg, Skaraborg, Wermeland, Westerbotten and Norrbotten, on the 30th, and from Gothland on the 45th day; in all cases before 12 o'clock in the day, not reckoning the day it can be proved the sentence was communicated to the party; if the period appointed falls on a Sunday or a holiday, the appeals shall be delivered in on the next succeeding working-day.

S. 23. Reference for appeal being made shall be inserted in the judgment, and be communicated to the person who may have received sentence; and it shall be the duty of our lords-lieutenants and the commandants, when required to do so, to receive the appeals, and forward them to our court of judicial review.

S. 24. The person sentenced to labour shall not be forwarded to a public work institution before we shall graciously have considered and decided upon his appeal.

S. 25. As in other respects regards the government of the public work institutions, the occupation of the workmen, their maintenance and treatment, and other matters, we have graciously made separate enactments.

This our gracious ordinance shall be put in force and take effect on the 1st of October next ensuing, which all whom it may concern have obediently to conform themselves. In further testimony, we have subscribed this with our own hand, and caused the same to be confirmed with our royal seal.—The Palace of Stockholm, the 31st of August 1819.

Gifwen Stockholms Slott den 29 Junii 1833.

Vi Carl Johan, med Guds Nåde, Sweriges, Norriges, Göthes och Wendes Konung, göre weterligt: att Wi, efter inhämtade utlåtanden ifrån Vårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete i Stockholm och Våre Befallningshafwande i Landsorterne, samt med fästadt afseende å Rikets Ständers wid sistförflutne Riksdag i underdånighet gjorda hemställan, funnit nödigt, att, med uphåfwande af hwad hittills finnes stadgadt, angående behandlingen af sysslolöse och wanartade personer af bägge könen, i Nåder förordna som följer:

S. 1. Hwar och en, som icke ingått uti Vår och Kronans eller annan allmän tjänst, eller idkar med behörigt tillstånd fria konster eller studier, eller handel, fabriksrörelse, handtwerk, sjöfart eller annat lagligt näringsfång, jord- eller bergsbruk, antingen såsom ägare, arrendator eller brukare, eller bewisligen af föräldrar, anhörige eller andre personer underhålles, eller, enligt Församlingens uti Stocknestämman yttrade omdöme, är känd såsom den der årligen sig försörjer, antingen genom egna medel, eller genom arbete eller annan loflig sysselsättning, eller af allmän barmhertighets-anstalt njuter wård och understöd, ware pligtig att antaga sådan tjänst hos husbönder å Landet eller i Ståderne, som gällande Legohjonstadga samt Handels- Fabriks- och Handtwerks-Reglementen föreskrifwa. Den som tjänst ej erhålla kan eller underlåter att dermed sig förse, ställe borgen af en eller flera personer, med wedershåftighets-intyg af Pastor i Församlingen, eller i Stad af Magistrat samt å Landet af Kronofogde, ej mindre för egna och, om det är gift man, hans hustrus och hemmawarande barns utskylder för påföljande året, ån ock för utgifwandet af böter och den ersättning, som böra utgå, i fall samma person under ett år derefter, eller till dess han eller hon dessförinnan kommer i något af ofwansagde förhållanden, begår olofligt tillgrepp eller annan förbrytelse, hwaraf allmän säkerhet störes; dock att löftesmans ansvarighet för böter och ersättning icke öfwerstiger Femtio Riksdaler Banco. Sådan borgen skall, jemte upgift af de slags arbeten, hwarmed personen i fråga will till dess bergning sig sysselsätta, wanligen aflemnas wid mantalsskrifningen i den ort, der samma person har sitt hemwist, men kan personen jemwål affordras, närhelst deremellan fråga om laga förswar upstår; och bör borgen förnyas eller dylik anskaffas wid hwarje mantalsskrifning, så länge förhållandet med personen gör denna säkerhet erforderlig; kommandes den Tjensteman, som löftesskriften emottager, att densamma, i Stockholm till Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embetet, och i Landsorterne till Vår Befallningshafwande i Lånet skyndesammeligen insända.

Blifwer, i följd af ådömda böter och ersättning, löftesman sökt för omnämnde borgen, och dess belopp räcker till ersättningen, men ej till böterna, gånge den förra fullt ut och böterna warde, efter i Lag och Författningar stadgade grunder, till annan bestraffning förwandlade. Är beloppet otillräckligt till full ersättnings gäldande, blifwe det deladt, så långt det räcker, emellan de till ersättning berättigade, i mon af hwarderas fordran.

S. 2. Förswarslös person kallas den, hwilken ej befinnes i något af de förhållanden, som i 1. s. beskrifwas, och ej heller för sig ställt sådan borgen, som der omförmåles.

Under benämningen wanartad förstås i denna Författning person, som blifwit dömd och straffad för bedrägligt eller årerörigt förhållande, eller tjufnad, eller inbrott i afsigt att stjäla, åfwen ock den, hwilken, tilltalad för hwad brott som helst af gröfre art, antingen blifwit dertill saker fälld, eller, i brist af full bewisning, likwål funnits om brottet i den mån beswårad, att saken är åt framtiden lemnad.

Wanartad ware ej berättigad, att med den i 1. s. omnämnde borgen freda sig från skyldigheten att antaga årstjänst, utan så år, att Vår Befallningshafwande, efter inhämtande af erforderlige uplysningar och Församlingens hörande, pröfwar skåligt att sådant må kunna honom tillåtas.

S. 3. Den, som förswarslös person hos sig inhyser, åligge att densamma, enligt Tjenstehjonsstadgans föreskrift, wid der förelagdt answer, angifwa, i Stockholm, innan nästa dag tillåndalöper, hos Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embetet i Policeårender, och utom Stockholm, så snart ske kan, i Ståderne, hos Policekammare eller Magistrat, och å Landet hos wederbörande Kronofogde eller Lånsman. Är den förswarslöse weterligen wanartad, bör sådant tillika anmärkas. Policekammare, Magistrat, Kronofogde eller Lånsman, som sådan anmälan emottager, bör derom underrätta Vår Befallningshafwande i Lånet. Har tjenstehjon obehörigen öfwergifwit årstjänst eller annan stadig sysselsättning, och will husbonde det ej behålla, eller år det i wederbörig ordning för felaktigt förhållande utur tjänst wråkt, ware husbonde, eller den i hans ställe satt år, skyldig att, så fort sig göra låter, hos Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embetet eller Vår Befallningshafwande förhållandet anmäla. Will husbonde utom Stockholm håldre göra sådan anmälan, i Stad, hos Policekammare eller Magistrat, och å Landet hos Kronofogde eller Lånsman, hafwe dertill lof; och åligge sedan den, hos hwilken så beskaffad anmälan sker, att det tillkännagifna förhållandet hos Vår Befallningshafwande inberätta. Hwad om förswarslösa personers efterspanande samt deras angifwande wid och efter mantalsskrifningarne särskildt föreskrifwet år, blifwe åfwen hådanefter till laga werkan gällande.

S. 4. Våre Befallningshafwande åga, när förswarslös person hos dem angifwes, att, wid anställande förhör, eller genom infordrade uplysningar, om det beqwämligare ske kan, noga söka utreda, så wäl personens egenskaper och fråjd, som orsakerne till dess förswarslöshet, och derefter med sådan person widtaga de åtgärder, som denna Författning bjuder. Är sådan person okänd och wågrar uppgifwa namn, födelseort och lefnads omständigheter, omständigheter, eller betrådes den, att hårutinnan hafwa osann upgift gjort, och kan rätta förhållandet ej genast utredas, warde försänd till allmän corrections-inrättning, att der i enskildt rum förwaras och, så widt sig göra låter, till sysselsättning hållas, intilldess personen tillförlitligen känd blifwer, i hwilket fall underrättelse derom genast skall meddelas wederbörande Wår Befallningshafwande, som då åger att vidare om personen förordna.

S. 5. Förekommer person, hwilken fört oförwitelig wandel, men blifwit förswarslös, icke genom ostadighet eller felaktigt förhållande, utan af orsaker, som ej skäligen kunna den till last föras, och saknas utwäg att sådan person till laga sysselsättning och näringsfång genast förhjelpa, eller till erhållande deraf säker anvisning meddela, samt gitter den samma icke ställa sådan borgen, som i 1. s. sågs, åge Wår Befallningshafwande, att, med afseende å årstiden, som för hand år, samt nästintråffande flyttningstids längre eller kortare aflågsenhet, förelägga den således förswarslöse wiss, efter omständigheterna lämpad, tillräcklig tid, beräknad antigen till den flyttning som förestår, eller, om den år närmare än behofwet af tid kråfwer, till den som näst derefter intråffar, och meddele, der så omtränger, Wår Befallningshafwande sådan person erforderligt pass att afgå till den ort inom eller utom Lånet, hwarest den tror sig kunna tjenst eller arbete till sitt uppehälle ernå. Å sådant pass, inrättadt efter den föreskrift 8. s. af Wår Nådiga Kungörelse den 18 Maji 1824 innehåller, skall finnas passinnehafwarens egenhändige namnteckning, om den kan skrifwa, eller i annat fall korrt anmärkning derom, jemte tryckt underrättelse, angående hwad innehafwaren för obehindrad fortkomst bör iakttaga, samt den påföljd underlåtenheten deraf medförer, hwilka underrättelser böra för den förpassade uprepas. De pass, som hår omtalas, böra ställas till upwisande hos Policekammare, om sådan finnes uti den Stad, dit den tjenstlöse åstundar att sig begifwa, eller hos Wår Befallningshafwande, om Lånsstyrelsen der har sitt säte, men i annat fall hos Borgmästaren eller Magistrats-Secreteraren, samt å Landet hos Kronofogden eller Lånsmanen i orten; och skall den således förpassade skyndesammelig till bestämd ort sig begifwa och genast efter ankomsten anmäla sig hos den i passet anwista Embetsmyndighet eller Tjensteman, samt derförutan hos wederbörande Församlings Pastor, till hwilken jemwål alltid ifrån nyssagde Embetsmyndighet eller Tjensteman, straxt sedan den förpassade ankommit, underrättelse derom afgår; börande bemålte Tjenstemån åfwen ofördröjeligen hos Wår Befallningshafwande den förswarslöses ankomst tillkännagifwa. Får personen ej inom en månad efter ankomsten utwäg till sin bergning, och har under tiden emot dess upförande ej warit att påminna, tage anteckning derom å sitt medhafwande pass, af wederbörande förutnämnde Embetsmyndigheter eller Tjenstemån, och åge rätt att begifwa sig till annan bestämd ort inom samma Lån, hwarom påskrift å passet meddelas bör. I hwarje Stad eller Socken inom Lånet, dit sådan person sedermera ankommer, iakttaga såwål denne, som på stället warande Embets- och Tjenstemån, hwad redan i denna s. stadgadt år. Finner den sökande ej någorstådes i Lånet årstjenst eller laga näringsfång, inom den i passet förelagde tid, och har den sin frihet ej missbrukat, anmäla sig, sedan wederbörande om förhållandet lemnat intyg å passet, så fort ske kan, hos Wår Befallningshafwande i det Lån, der den sysslolöse då wistas, och ware personen berättigad att förlängd tid erhålla, samt att i sådant afseende med nytt pass till bestämd ort blifwa försedd. Policekammare, Borgmästare, Magistrats Secreterare, Kronofogde eller Lånsman inberätte skyndesammelig till Wår Befallningshafwande hwad af dem i ofwännämnde afseenden blifwit åtgjort.

S. 6. Tjenstehjon eller annan förswarslös person, som egenwilligt öfvergifwit tjenst eller stadigt näringsfång och för sådant eller annat felaktigt förhållande blifwit lagligen utur tjenst wråkt, eller icke förrättar tjenst hos husbonde, som låtit personen hos sig mantalsskrifwas, eller såsom en följd af omständigheter, hwilka böra den förswarslöse sjelf tillräknas, kommit i saknad af laglig utwäg till sin försörjning, men icke år såsom wanartad att anse, ware pligtig att, i Stad inom fjorton dagar, och å Landet inom dubbelt så lång tid, med laglig sysselsättning sig förse. Brister den förswarslöse deri och kan den icke heller, med bestämd upgift om sitt hemwist, anskaffa den i 1. s. omförmålte borgen, må uppå Wår Befallningshafwandes pröfning bero, huruwida någon ytterligare bestämd tid kan så beskaffad person lemnas, till beredande af utwäg för sin bergning. Får den sådan tid, må personen, på sätt redan sagdt år, förpassas till wiss ort inom Lånet, der den tror sig kunna laga sysselsättning för sig anskaffa. Ware dock ej derföre fri från det answer, som husbonde eller allmän åklagare åger att, efter lag, i hwarje särskildt fall yrka.

S. 7. Förswarslös person, som icke mera än en gång år för enkel stöld straffad, bör af Wår Befallningshafwande föreläggas tid och meddelas pass, såsom i 6 s. föreskrifwas, att på fri fot söka tjenst eller laga förswar, der ej sådane särskilta förhållanden med personen intråffa, att dess qwarhållande i häckte, under den förelagda tiden, pröfwas wara för allmän säkerhet nödwändigt.

S. 8. Har sådan person, som, efter hwad uti 5. s. förmåles, erhållit förnyadt rådrum till förswars anskaffande, ändock förblifwit utan årstjenst eller annat laga näringsfång, och will den ej vidare annorstådes söka försörjning, eller har den öfwertrådt föreskrift, som i pass warit gifwen, och önskar mansperson ej håldre ingå i tjenst wid indeldt Regemente, Båtsmanshåll eller wårfwad Trupp, eller saknar han dertill erforderlige egenskaper, eller han ändock, efter af Wår Befallningshafwande, med bifogande af karlens beskrifning samt behöriga Prest- och Läkarebetyg, hos wederbörande Chefsembete skedd anmälan, icke till krigstjenst antages, må personen försändas till sysselsättning wid allmänt arbete, som i orten förhafwes, eller arbets-inrättning inom Lånet, intilldess annat tillfälle till bergning sig yppar; åge dock, enår uppsägningsdag intråffar, frihet intill nästa flyttningstid, att söka sig laga förswar hos den hans arbete inom Lånet kan behöfwa, under skyldighet att, om det ej erhålles, sig åter wid det allmänna arbetsstället infinna. Är allmänt arbete icke å orten att tillgå, eller finnes ej Lånet tillhörig arbets-inrättning, eller kan derstädes, för brist på nödigt utrymme, personen ej emottagas, warde förwist till allmän corrections-inrättning, för att der, utan sammanblandning med wanartade eller för brott straffade personer, förblifwa, intilldess utwäg till laga näringsfång för honom eller henne sig yppar, och med rättighet att, om dessförinnan upsägningsdag inträffar, åtnjuta den här förut nämnda frihet.

S. 9. De i 6. s. omförmålte tjenstehjon eller andra personer, som antingen icke ansetts böra åtnjuta förlängd tid, till anskaffande af laga näringsfång, eller, sådant oaktadt, icke kunnat dermed sig förse, ware förfallne till arbete, man wid Pionniercorps i Riket, och qwinna wid allmän corrections-inrättning. Är mansperson till Pionnier oduglig, warde i stället wid allmän corrections-inrättning anställd.

S. 10. Har sådan förswarslös, som i 7. s. nämnes, ej inom förelagd tid årstjenst eller laga näringsfång sig förskaffat, förfares med honom eller henne som i 9. s. är stadgad.

S. 11. Är förswarslös person förpassad, att söka sig tjenst eller arbete, och antråffas å annan wäg eller ort än den, hwarå passet lyder, eller är den i passet förelagda tid förfluten, warde insänd till Wår Befallningshafwande i det Lån, hwarest personen anhålles. Denne Wår Befallningshafwande pröfwe då omständigheterna, samt återsände personen till det Lån, dit den hörer, eller förfare med densamma efter de i 8., 9. eller 10. s. s. stadgade grunder.

S. 12. Frisk och arbetsför person, som utan pass eller wederbörligt tillstånd kringstryker, eller allmänheten med bettlande beswårar, warde genast gripen och öfwerlemnad, i Stockholm till Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete, och i Landsorterne till den af Wåre Befallningshafwande, inom hwars Lån den antråffas, och åge Wår Befallningshafwande, att, efter inhämtade underrättelser, till utredande af personens fråjd och lefnadsomständigheter, med densamma widtaga den åtgärd, som wederbör. Är personen ej wanartad, förpassas då till sin hemort, med föreläggande att inom en månad efter ditkomsten wara med laga förswar försedd. Försittes denna tid, eller underlåtes passets skyndesamma upwisande för behörig Tjensteman, wid ankomsten till hemorten, ware den förswarslöse underkastad skyldighet, man att tjena wid Pionniercorps, och qwinna att hållas till arbete wid allmän corrections-inrättning. Med wanartad person förhållas som i 13. s. stadgas. De af Bruks- och Manufacturägare utsände uphandlings- eller försäljningsmän, som utöfwer förelagd tid begagna erhållna pass, dem missbruka, eller begifwa sig till ort, hwarå passet ej lyder, warde, om de sakna annat förswar än nyssberörde updrag, förfallne till tjenstgöring wid Pionniercorps eller, om de åro wanartade, till arbete wid allmän corrections-inrättning.

S. 13. Person, som i högre grad än i 7. s. sågs, är wanartad och saknar laglig utwäg till sin bergning, warde öfwerlemnad, i Stockholm till Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete i Policeårender, och i Landsorterne till Wår Befallningshafwande i Lånet. Gitter sådan person genast upgifwa wålkånd och till tjenstehjons antagande behörig husbonde, som will densamma i tjenst hos sig antaga, samt om dess upförande sig wårda, aflemne husbonde till Wår Befallningshafwande skriftelig förbindelse, ej allenast att sådan wård iakttaga, utan ock att låta personen, om den ej förut i mantal antecknad är, hos sig skattskrifwas, samt att, i afseende på upsägning och afflyttning, såsom om tjenstehjon i allmänhet stadgad är, med personen förfara och, i händelse den tjensten förlöper, sådant ofördröjeligen hos Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete i Stockholm, Policekammare eller Magistrat i andra Städer eller närmaste Kronobetjent å Landet anmäla; och warde, efter det så beskaffad förbindelse blifwit afgifwen, personen genast till husbonde aflemnad, eller på hans bekostnad hos honom inställd. Wisar icke sådan wanartad sig åga utwäg till årstjenst eller annat laga näringsfång, och finnas ej de särskilda omständigheter, i afseende på förhållandet med personen, inträffa, att Wår Befallningshafwande pröfwar densamma kunna utan åfventyr på fri fot lemnas, antingen emot den uti 1. s. beskrifne borgen, eller på korrt tid, för att söka förskaffa sig laga förswar, eller afwiker från husbonde sådan person, sedan han i tjenst antagen blifwit, eller anmäler, på sätt Tjenstehjonstadgan föreskrifwer, husbonde laga skål, hwarföre han personen ej behålla will, då skall den wara förfallen att genast afsändas till allmän corrections-inrättning, att der till sedlighet och arbete hållas; och bör i de fall, som nyss nämnde åro, efter derom af husbonde, i Stad hos Policekammare eller Magistrat, och å Landet hos Kronofodge eller Lånsman, gjord anmälan, den wanartade personen, om den på fri fot wistas, genast i förwar tagas, eller, om den begifwit sig på flykten, efterspanas och wid ertappandet hos Wår Befallningshafwande inställas, för att, till undergående af här stadgad behandling, warda befordrad.

S. 14. Förswarslös, som till sin person tillförlitligen känd är och, ehwad den kallas wanartad eller icke, för bristande näringsfång blifwit skyldig ansedd att afsändas till arbetsanstalt eller allmän corrections-inrättning, ware, enär laga näringsfång för personen yppas eller årstjenst hos wålkånd och behörig husbonde densamma erbjudes, i allmänhet berättigad att deraf sig begagna, under det willkor, i afseende på wanartads antagande i tjenst, som 13. s. bestämmer, ehwad tillfället till näringsfång eller tjenst yppas före eller efter afsändandet eller under wistelsen å arbets- eller corrections-inrättningen; men skulle förswarslös person, som till tjenst eller arbete utbegäres, wid inrättningen hafwa ådagalagt särdeles okynne och så wåldsamma eller brottsliga anlag, att dess personliga frihet kan anses wådlig för allmän säkerhet, åge inrättningens föreståndare, att, så länge anledningen emot personens frigifwande fortfar, wågra dess utlemnande till tjenst eller arbete, med mindre mindre den blifwande husbonden hos föreståndaren ställer borgen för böter och ersättning, hwilka möjligen kunna komma att den utrequirerade personen ådömas, i följd af olofligt tillgrepp eller annan allmänna säkerheten störande förbrytelse, under ett år derefter, med iakttagande för denna borgen, så till belopp och villkor, som underskrift och wederbåfthighets-intyg, hwad i 1. s. om borgen blifwit föreskrifwet, dock utan skyldighet till borgens förnyelse. Öfwer föreståndarens åtgärd i sagde fall må försvarslös, åfwensom den, hwilken honom utbegärt, kunna klagan föra hos Styrelsen öfwer fångelser och arbetsinrättningar, som då pröfwar förhållandet och gifwer skrifteligt utslag derom, med hänwisning för den med beslutet missnöjde, att hos Oss i underdånighet sig beswåra och beswårsskriften å tid, som i 23. s. stadgas, aflemna till nämnde föreståndare, som densamma afskickar till Styrelsen, hwilken derefter skriften, jemte eget utlåtande, skyndesammeligen till Oss i underdånighet insänder.

I hwad fall som helst, må person, hwilken, för inom arbets eller corrections-inrättning begången förbrytelse, der blifwit uti särskildt fångelserum insatt, ej derifrån frigifwas, förrän personens, uti inrättningens fastställda Reglemente, för förbrytelsen bestämda arresttid tillåndalupit.

S. 15. Rymmer den, som till Pionniercorps anwist blifwit, förr än han dit ankommit, warde belagd med hälften af det straff, som finnes stadgadt för rymning ifrån corpsen. Föröfwar sådan person brott, som ej å lif går, och anses han i sistnämnde fall ej kunna i tjenst wid Pionniercorps antagas, ware, sedan han för brottet sitt straff undergått, förfallen att wid allmän corrections-inrättning i Riket sysselsättas. Rymmer den, som till allmän corrections-inrättning blifwit förwisad, efter det den till inrättningen ankommit, warde, efter ertappandet, nåpsad, på sätt som i det för inrättningen faststälde Reglemente finnes stadgadt. Har densamma under tiden föröfwat brott, som ej å lif går eller med listidsarbete belagdt år, ware ock, efter derföre undergången bestraffning, till corrections-inrättning försänd, så wida icke laga försvar eller näringsfång för honom år att tillgå.

S. 16. Åstundar pålitlig och wålkånd person, boende i orten der allmän corrections-inrättning år belågen, att begagna correctionister till arbete, som inom inrättningen ej kan verkställas, och har han tillgång att arbetet riktigt godtgöra samt arbetarne behörigen wårda, må Styrelsen öfwer fångelser och arbets inrättningar tillåta, att, på längre eller kortare bestämd tid, till honom utlemnas en eller flere för beskedligt upförande kände correctionister, hwilka dertill åro willige. Genom Styrelsens försorg upgöras då med requirenten sådana villkor, att de correctionister, som utlemnas, komma i åtnjutande af minst lika underhåll, med det de inom inrättningen erhålla, och att menligt arbete icke kan dem åläggas; ågande requirenten öfwer dessa arbetare, under den tid de hos honom förblifwa, husbonderätt och answar efter lag. Rymmer någon af dem, bör requirenten genast derom underrätta föreståndaren för corrections-inrättningen och jemwål, genom Kronobetjeningen, foga anstalt om den rymdes efterlysning. Har requirenten bewisligen i någor måtto främjat rymningen, gälde han kostnaden för efterspanandet.

Correctionist, som på omförmåldte sätt blifwit till arbete uttagen, warde, wid arbetstidens slut, till inrättningen återlemnad och medföre dit, öfwer sitt upförande, bewis af requirenten, hwilken för dess forslande till och ifrån corrections-inrättningen answarar.

S. 17. Styrelsen öfwer fångelser och arbets-inrättningar i Riket bör söka förskaffa årstjenst eller annat lagligt näringsfång åt de wid corrections-inrättning befintliga correctionister, som ådagalägga godt och påliteligt upförande. Nämnde Styrelse må åfwen åga frihet att dem till hemorten eller annan ort förpassa, för att, inom wiss förelagd tid, särdeles de tider på året, då tjenstehjon wanligen städjas, tjenst sig betinga, eller annat lagligt näringsfång sig bereda; hwarom wederbörande Wår Befallningshafwande bör af Styrelsen underrättas, på det personen må till corrections-inrättningen warda återförd, i fall han wid den föreskrifna tidens slut sysslolös befinnes.

S. 18. Hwar, som någon till arbete wid Pionniercorps, arbetsanstalt eller allmän corrections-inrättning dömd, men å flyende fot stadd person griper och dit eller till närmaste Kronobetjent aflemnar, erhålle derföre belöning af Sex Riksdaler 32 sk. Banco, för hwarje sålunda aflemnad person, hwilken belöning af Wår Befallningshafwande i det Lån, der personen ertappas, genast emot behörigt qwitto utbetalas, och warde denna utgift ersatt af personens tillgångar eller arbetsförtjenst, om sådana finnas.

S. 19. Ej må till Pionniercorps dömas annan, än frisk och arbetsför person, och ej till allmän corrections-inrättning någon, som för obotlig sjukdom, kroppsligheten, ålderdomsbräcklighet eller sinnesförvirring år till kroppsarbete oskicklig. Skulle detta oakadt, sådan person till allmän corrections-inrättning ankomma, bör den genast återskickas till den Embetsmyndighet, som personen ditsändt, för vidare förordnande efter gällande Författningar.

S. 20. Har försvarslös person minderårigt barn att wårda och hindras af omsorg för det, wid bristande tillgång å andra näringsmedel, att förskaffa sig årstjenst, eller skall sådan person till Pionniercorps, arbetsanstalt eller corrections-inrättning afföras, och finnes då, att barn saknar anhörig, som år i tillfälle att det till upfostran emottaga, wiss Församling ej heller åläggas kan, att om sådant barn draga försorg, samt allmän eller enskild barnhus-inrättning icke lemnar utwäg till barnets försörjning, åge Wåre Befallningshafwande, att, med Presterskaps och Kyrkoråds biträde, söka tjenliga fosterföräldrar, hwilka, emot åtnjutande af de förmåner, Tjenstehjonsstadgan erbjuder, eller, om ej annorlunda ske kan, emot lämpligt understöd årligen, till det belopp, som Wårt Seraphimer-Ordens-Gille-wanligen består eller stora Barnhuset i Stockholm, wid minderåriga barns uttingande till upfostran, i mån af barnens olika ålder, utfåster, barnen emottaga och christeligen upfostra, och wilje

Wi, om utbetalning af sådane medel samt hwad i afseende derå vidare iakttagas bör, särskildt i Nåder förordna.

S. 21. Soldat, hwilken, ifrån Regementets rullor utstruken, är, jemlikt 11. cap. 7. s. Krigs-Artiklarne, till fästning förfallen, skall till Wår Befallningshafwande öfwerlemnas, att, utan afseende på arbetstillfällen, som för karlen yppas, afsändas till Pionniercorps att der tjena från tre till sex år.

S. 22. Då, utom hwad i nästföregående s. nämnes, fråga upkommer, huruwida förswarslös person gjort sig förfallen, att till Pionniercorps eller allmän corrections-inrättning afsändas, warde, så å Landet som i Stad, med undantag af de Städer, der Policekammare är inrättad, den församling, der personen senast varit mantalsskrifwen och bosatt, så skyndsamt som ske kan, i Sockneståmma hörd, angående personens förhållande, samt huruwida tillfälle är för dess användande till stadig sysselsättning hos pålitelig husbonde inom Församlingen. Behörigen justeradt protocoll deröfwer, innehållande hwad om personens fråjd och lefnadsomständigheter kunnigt är, bör till Wår Befallningshafwande fordarsamligen insändas, samt personen derstädes till förhör inställas. Policekammare i de Städer, der sådane finnas, drage der försorg om slike uplysningars infordrande, och warde personen derstädes förhörd. Wåre Befallningshafwande eller Policekamrarne låte i sitt protocoll uptagas: personens ålder, beskaffenheten af dess kroppsställning och utseende, helsotillstånd, grundadt, på behörig Läkares deröfwer infordrade yttrande, som ordagrant i protocollet införas bör, personens lefnadsomständigheter, om och för hwad brott den varit anklagad och dömd, hwad straff den undergått, för hwilka laster och oarter den egenteligen gjort sig känd, om och hwad handtwerk eller arbete den lärt och kan utöfwa, samt hwad i öfrigt af Sockneståmmo-protocoll eller personens egna uppgifter kan till närmare uplysning inhämtas. Sedan pröfwe Wår Befallningshafwande eller Policekamraren omständigheterna, afkunne beslut och gifwe, i händelse, efter hwad stadgadt är, personen anses till allmänt arbete skyldig, skrifteligt utslag, med skålen dertill, och låte innan tredje dagen, den oräknad då utslaget afkunnades, detsamma, med åtecknad fulständig hänvisning till beswårs anförande, personen bewisligen tillställas. Sådan förswarslös person, som icke är wanartad, ware på fri fot, så länge dess förvisande till Pionniercorps eller allmän corrections-inrättning icke är genom Wår Befallningshafwandes eller Policekamraren utslag bestämdt; men huruwida, då personen med utslaget ej åtnöjes, en sådan frihet än längre, eller intilldess sluteligt utslag faller, må kunna förtiara, samt om och i hwad måtto wanartade personer, sedan fråga upstått om deras försändande till corrections-inrättning, må tillåtas att längre eller kortare tid på fri fot wistas, derom äge förbemålte Embetsmyndigheter, att, efter omständigheterna, wid hwarje tillfälle särskildt förordna.

Will annan person, som saken rör, eller den förswarslöse, ehuru icke till arbete dömd, öfwer beslutet klaga, ware åfwen berättigad att utslaget, med åtecknad hänvisning till beswårs anförande, skyndesammeligen utbekomma.

Hwad i denna Författning Wåre Befallningshafwande till iakttagande föreskrifwes, lände Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete i Stockholm och Policekammare i andra Städer till efterrättelse; dock utan rubbning af de, angående sättet att söka ändring i Policekamraren beslut, gällande föreskrifter.

S. 23. Den, som ändring i Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embetes eller Wår Befallningshafwandes utslag, rörande förswarslös person, söka will, ware skyldig att, innan klockan tolt på åttonde dagen, efter af utslaget erhållen del, den oräknad, då delgifwandet skedde, sina till Oss ställda underdåniga beswår hos Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete eller Wår Befallningshafwande, som utslaget meddelt, behörigen ingifwa, eller, om den klagande häcktad är, genom den, som bewakningen omhänder har, ingifwa låta. Tarfwar den utur häcktet klagande biträde till beswårens författande, foge Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete eller Wår Befallningshafwande anstalt, att han det erhåller. Försitter till allmänt arbete skyldig ansedd person föreskrifwen laga tid till beswårs anförande, eller åtnöjes med beslutet, gånge, efter förloppet af berörde tid, detsamma till verkställighet. Blifwa åter beswår i rättan tid ingifna, åligge Wårt Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embete eller Wår Befallningshafwande, att samma beswår, beledsagade af wederbörandes förklaring, om den tarfwas, samt till målet hörande handlingar och eget utlåtande, innefattande alla nödiga uplysningar, så fort ske kan, till Wår Justitie-Revisions-Expedition insända; och må, i sådant fall, hufwudsaklig verkställighet af öfwerklagadt utslag ej följa, innan beswåren blifwit af Oss pröfwade, samt Wårt Nådiga beslut till orten ankommit. Dock kommer den, som i häckte är eller af Öfwer-Ståthållare-Embetet eller Wår Befallningshafwande pröfwas dertill skyldig, att under tiden i häckett förblifwa.

S. 24. Person, hwilken till Pionniercorps, arbetsanstalt eller corrections-inrättning afföras skall, bör af Wår Befallningshafwande förpassas till den ort, som blifwit bestämd, och personens namn, ålder och utseende, jemte noggrann förteckning å kläder eller andra tillhörigheter, dem personen medför, i förpassningen utsättas. För sådane persedlars samt förpassningens wård och deras, jemte personens, behöriga aflemnande å den ort, som wederbör, ware den eller de, åt hwilka bewakningen under resan anförtros, hwar för sig ansvarige. Protocollet och utslaget, som personen angå, skola utan allt dröjsmål, med först afgående post, öfwersändas till Chef för Pionniercorps, Commandant eller föreståndare wid arbetsanstalt eller corrections-inrättning, dit personen afföras bör. Äger personen penningar, skola de nysnämnde handlingar bifogas.

S. 25. För förswarslös persons försändande till bestämd arbetsplats bestås skjuts och underhåll, derhåll, efter den grund och det förhållande, som i allmänhet för fångar gällande är; och må sådan person ej hårdare fängslas, än omständigheterna kräfwä. Pröfningen och bestämmandet deraf tillhör Vår Befallningshafwande, som personen afsänder; och gifwes derom i förpassningen bestämmd föreskrift, med rättighet för Fång-gewaldiger, som medföljer, att, om under resan allwarsammare behandling blifwer för personens behöriga wård af nöden, derom gå i författning och låta samma behandling fortfara, intilldess, wid ankomst till nästa Landshöfdingesäte, Vår Befallningshafwande derstädes pröfwat och förordnat huru personen föras bör. Sådan person, som till Pionniercorps, arbetsanstalt eller allmän corrections-inrättning afföres, skall under forsslandet dit, så widt ske kan, skiljas från fångar, som för brott straffade äro, eller, i annat fall, från samtal och gemenskap med dem afhållas.

Denna Vår Nådiga Förordning kommer att med nästinstundande November månads början blifwa gällande och till verkställighet befordras. Skolande Våre Befallningshafwande särskildt underrättas om Pionniercorpsens närwarande station och de ställen i öfrigt, till hwilka sysslolöse personer böra försändas. Det alle, som wederbör, hafwe sig hörsammeligen att efterrätta. Till yttermera wisso hafwe Wi detta med Egen Hand underskrifwit och med Wårt Kongl. Sigill bekräfta låtit.—Stockholms Slott den 29 Junii 1833.

Given at the Palace of Stockholm, the 19th of June 1833.

WE, Charles John, by the Grace of God, King of Sweden and of the Goths and Vandals, make known: That We, after having received the reports of the officer executing the office of Our chief stadtholder at Stockholm and our lords-lieutenants in the provinces, and with a fixed attention to the representations humbly made by the States of the kingdom assembled at the last diet, have found it necessary to annul the enactments hitherto made in respect to the treatment of unemployed and evil-disposed persons of both sexes, and are graciously pleased to order and enact as follows:

S. 1. Every person who has not entered into Our service and that of the crown, or any other public service, and who does not under proper permission pursue the liberal arts or studies, or is not engaged in commerce, manufactures, trade, navigation or any other lawful occupation, or in the cultivation of the soil or mining, either as owner, leaseholder or manager, or cannot be proved to derive his support from parents, relations or other persons, or who, according to the opinion given by the vestry of his parish, is not known as a person who does honestly obtain his livelihood, either by his own means or by labour or by other lawful occupation, or does not derive his maintenance and support from any public charitable institution, shall be bound to accept of such employments from masters in the towns and in the country places as the law now in force for hiring of servants and the regulations for trade, manufactures and handicrafts, prescribes. Any person who cannot obtain employment, or neglects to provide himself with any, shall procure as sureties one or more persons, provided with a certificate from the clergyman of the parish as to their responsibility, or if in a town, from the magistracy, and if in the country, from the crown bailiff, not only for the payment of his own taxes and rates, and if he be a married man, also for those of his wife and children residing at home, but also for the payment of such fines and compensation that will be levied in case the same person during one year afterwards, or until he or she shall before the expiration of this period have been placed in one of the above capacities, shall commit any unlawful acts of violence or other offence, whereby public security may be disturbed; the bondsman's liability for such fines and demands shall however not exceed 50 rix-dollars banco. Such security, together with the description of the work with which the person in question intends to occupy himself for his maintenance, shall usually be delivered at the time the assessments and registrations are made, at the place where he has got his residence; but such person may also be demanded whenever in the interval any question shall arise as to his legal protection; and such bond shall be renewed, or a similar one procured, at each time of assessment and registration, so long as the situation of the person shall render this security necessary; it being the duty of the functionary who may receive this bond to forward the same without delay, if in Stockholm, to the office of Our chief stadtholder, and if in the provinces, to our lord-lieutenant of the district.

Should the bondsman, in consequence of the person being adjudged to pay fines and compensation, be sued for the amount of the above-mentioned bond, and the sum shall be sufficient to cover the compensation, but not the fines, the former shall be paid in full, and the fines shall, according to the principles laid down in law and the enactments, be changed into another mode of punishment. Should the amount be insufficient for the full discharge of the compensation, the sum shall be divided, so far as it may go, between the parties entitled to compensation, in proportion to the amount of each claim.

S. 2. A person is called unprotected who is not found to be of any of the capacities which are described in the first paragraph, and who neither shall have obtained the security for himself, as is therein mentioned.

Under the denomination of evil-disposed persons, mentioned in this enactment, is to be understood a person who has received judgment and been punished for some fraudulent and dishonest conduct, or for theft, or burglary with a view to steal; as also any person who may have been accused of any crime soever of an heinous nature, or has received judgment, or who for want of complete evidence, has however been found so deeply implicated in the crime, that the case has been left for future investigation.

An evil principled person shall not be entitled by means of the security mentioned in the 1st paragraph, to release himself from the obligation to accept of yearly service, unless Our lord-lieutenant, after obtaining requisite information, and hearing the parishioners on the subject, shall judge it reasonable that he may be permitted to do so.

S. 3. Whoever receives into his house an unprotected person, shall, according to the enactment respecting servants, and on pain of the penalty therein mentioned, be bound to report such person; if in Stockholm, at the office of the chief stadtholder for matters relating to police affairs, before the end of the next day, or if out of Stockholm, as early as may be possible; if in other towns, at the police offices or magistracy, and in the country, to the concerned crown bailiff or under bailiffs. Should the unprotected be known to be evil principled, such circumstance should also be mentioned. The police officers, magistracy, crown officers or under bailiff, who may receive such a report, shall give information thereof to Our lord-lieutenant of the district. If servants shall improperly leave their yearly service, or any other constant occupation, and the master is not willing to retain them, or if they are in due form discharged from the service for misconduct, it shall be the duty of their employer, or whoever may be authorized to act in his place, to report the circumstance to the office of chief stadtholder or lord-lieutenant. If a master residing out of Stockholm, should prefer to make such a report to the police office or magistracy in a town, or if in the country, to the crown bailiff or under bailiff, he shall be permitted to do so; and it shall be the duty of the person who may receive such a report to communicate to Our lord-lieutenant the particulars that have thus been received. What is separately enacted respecting the tracing of unprotected persons, and reporting them at the time of making the assessments and afterwards, shall also henceforth remain in full legal force.

S. 4. Our lords-lieutenants shall, when an unprotected person is reported to them, be bound to endeavour exactly to ascertain both the person's qualities and general conduct, and also to discover the causes of his being unprotected, by instituting an examination and by collecting every information respecting him, and shall afterwards adopt such measures with respect to him as are prescribed in this enactment. Should the person be unknown, and he shall refuse to state his name, the place of his birth and circumstances of his life, or should it be ascertained that he has made a false statement in this respect, and the real state of the case cannot be immediately ascertained, he shall be sent to a public correction institution, to be confined there in a separate room, and, as far as may be practicable, to be kept employed until the person shall become really known, in which case information respecting the case shall be immediately forwarded to Our lord-lieutenant, who shall have the power to give further directions as to the disposal of such person.

S. 5. Should any person appear, who has led an irreproachable life, but who has become unprotected, not through an unsteady or reprehensible conduct, but from causes which cannot reasonably be laid to his charge, and there should be no opportunity to assist such a person immediately to any lawful occupation, and the means of support or a sure reference cannot be given him for such a purpose, and he should be unable to give the security which is mentioned in the first paragraph, Our lord-lieutenant shall have the power, with a due regard to the season of the year, and with regard also to the greater and less distance there may be to the next moving time, to grant the person thus unprotected a sufficient time suitable to the circumstances of the case, reckoned either to the moving time that may be at hand, or if the same should be nearer at hand than the want of time requires, in that case, to the next succeeding moving time; and Our lord-lieutenant shall, if it is so required, grant such a person a requisite passport to proceed to such a place, either within or without the county where the person may consider it likely for him to get into service or obtain work for his support. In this passport, which must be made out in conformity with the rules prescribed in Our gracious ordinance of the 18th of May 1824, shall be inserted the personal signature of the bearer of such passport, if he is able to write, or in the contrary case, a short annotation to that effect, together with a printed information respecting the particulars the bearer has to observe, with a view to obtain an unmolested progress, and the consequences that will attend a neglect on his part to comply with the same; which particulars shall be repeated to the person obtaining the passport. The passports, which are here above mentioned, shall stipulate that it is required to exhibit the same at police offices, if there be any in the town, where the person out of employment is desirous of proceeding to, or to Our lord-lieutenant, if the provincial government is established there, but otherwise to the burgomaster or the secretary of the magistracy, and if in the country, to the crown bailiff or under bailiff in the district, and the person who has thus obtained a passport shall proceed, without loss of time, to his place of destination, and immediately on arrival there shall appear before the authorities or functionary, as signed in the passport, and also before the officiating clergyman of the parish, to whom in all cases notice shall be sent from the last-mentioned authorities or functionary immediately on arrival of the person mentioned in the passport, acquainting him with the circumstance; it being also the duty of the said functionaries to acquaint Our lord-lieutenant, without any loss of time, of the arrival of such unprotected person. Should the person not within one month after his arrival find means for his subsistence, and there shall have been nothing to observe against his conduct during that time, such a circumstance shall be inserted in the passport he carries with him, by the proper authorities or functionaries beforementioned, and he shall then be at liberty to proceed to any other place within the same county that may be fixed upon, of which circumstance an endorsement shall be made on the passport. In any other town or parish within the county where such person shall afterwards arrive, both he as well as the authorities and functionaries residing at the place shall observe all what is already enacted in this paragraph. Should the applicant nowhere in the county be able to obtain yearly employment or lawful occupation within the period specified in the passport, and he shall not have abused the liberty granted him, he shall, after the proper authorities have certified on the passport the state of the case, apply as soon as possible to Our lord-lieutenant in that county, where the unemployed person then may be, and the said person shall then be entitled to a prolongation of time, and with this view be furnished with a fresh passport to the place of destination fixed upon. Police officers, burgomasters, secretaries of magistracy, crown bailiffs or under-bailiffs shall be bound to report to Our lords-lieutenants without any delay, all that has been done by them in the above-mentioned respects.

S. 6. Servants or other unprotected persons who have of their own accord relinquished their service or constant employ, and by means of such or other reprehensible conduct have been legally turned out of their employ, or who do not perform service with the master or mistress who has allowed such person to be rated and registered with them, or who, in consequence of circumstances which ought to be ascribed to the unprotected person himself, shall become deprived of their lawful means of support, but who may not be considered as evil-disposed persons, shall be bound to provide themselves with lawful occupations within 14 days, if it be in a town, and within double that number of days if it be in the country. Should the unprotected person not be able to accomplish this, or, on giving a true account of his residence, not be able to procure the sureties mentioned in the 1st paragraph, it shall depend on Our lord-lieutenant how far he may deem it expedient to grant a further extended time, for a limited period, to a person thus circumstanced, in order to procure himself means for his subsistence. If the person should obtain such an extension of time, a passport may be granted to him, in the manner already mentioned, to any specified place within the county where he may consider it likely to obtain some lawful occupation. He shall however not on this account be released from the responsibility which his employer or any public complainant may by law have to urge against him in each separate case.

S. 7. To an unprotected person who shall not have been punished more than once for theft, Our lords-lieutenants shall grant time and passport, as prescribed by the 6th paragraph, with a view that he may, unmolested, endeavour to obtain service or legal protection, unless there shall be some special circumstances with respect to the person that may render his detention in prison during the prescribed period absolutely necessary for the public security.

S. 8. Should any person who, agreeably to what is mentioned in the 5th paragraph, has obtained an extension of time for procuring protection still remain without yearly employment or other lawful means of support, and he should not be willing to try in other places to gain the means of support, or shall have transgressed the orders that may have been given him in the passport; and if such person (being a male person) should not rather prefer to enlist in the service of any raised regiment, or as a sailor in the royal navy or troop of recruits, or he should not possess the requisite qualifications for that purpose, and he should, notwithstanding the representation made by Our lord-lieutenant to the concerned commander-in-chief, with a description of the man, and accompanied with proper clergyman's and doctor's certificates, still not be accepted into the war service, the person shall be sent to be employed on such public works as may be going on in the neighbourhood, or to a work institution within the county, until such time as another opportunity may offer for his maintenance; he shall however be at liberty, when the usual notice-day arrives, and until next moving time, to try to obtain legal protection with any person within the county who may require his services, under the obligation to return to the public work institution in the event of his not succeeding. Should there be no public work to be had in the neighbourhood, or the person cannot, for want of necessary room, be admitted, he shall be sent to a public house of correction, and remain there, without however being mixed with evil-disposed persons or such as may have been punished for crimes committed, until some means may be found for him or her to obtain a lawful maintenance, and with the permission, if the day for giving warnings before that time arrives, to enjoy the liberty here above mentioned.

S. 9. Such servants or other persons mentioned in the 6th paragraph as may either not have been considered to be entitled to an extension of time for procuring lawful maintenance, or who, notwithstanding such permission, have not been able to provide themselves with the same, shall be liable to do work, if a man, at any of the corps of pioneers in the kingdom, and if a woman, at a public house of correction. If the man is unfit for a pioneer, he shall in lieu thereof be sent to a public house of correction.

S. 10. Should such unprotected person as is mentioned in the 7th paragraph not have within the time specified procured himself yearly service, or other lawful maintenance, he or she shall be proceeded with in the manner enacted in the 9th paragraph.

S. 11. If an unprotected person has received a passport for the purpose of obtaining service or labour, and should be discovered on any other road, or at any other place than the one which is stated in the passport, or the time specified in the passport shall have expired, he shall be sent to Our lord-lieutenant in that county where the person may be detained: that Our lord-lieutenant shall then inquire into the circumstances, and send the person back to the county to which he may belong, or proceed with the same according to regulations enacted in the 8th, 9th and 10th paragraphs.

S. 12. A person in health and able to work who may be found strolling about without having a passport or proper permission, or who may burthen the public by begging, shall be immediately taken into custody and delivered over to the office of chief stadtholder, if in Stockholm, or to Our lord-lieutenant, if it be in the country, within whose county the person may be found, Our said lord-lieutenant possessing the power, after obtaining such information as may explain the character and circumstances of the life of the person, to adopt such measures with regard to him as may be deemed proper. Should the person not be evil disposed, a passport shall be granted to him to proceed to his place of abode, with an injunction that he must, within a month after his arrival there, be provided with legal protection. Should this time be exceeded, and the person should neglect to exhibit the passport to the proper authorities on arrival home, such unprotected person shall be bound, if it be a man, to serve in the corps of pioneers, and if a woman, to be kept at labour in a public house of correction. An evil-disposed person is to be proceeded against as prescribed in the 13th paragraph. Persons sent out by proprietors of works and manufactories for the purchase and sale of goods, who may make use of the passports granted to them beyond the stipulated time, or else abuse them or proceed to another place than is mentioned in the passport, shall, if they are not provided with other protection than the above-mentioned agencies, be liable to serve in a pioneer corps; or if they be evil disposed, in that case to labour in a public house of correction.

S. 13. A person who may be in a higher degree evil disposed than is mentioned in the 7th paragraph, and who is in want of the lawful means for his subsistence, shall be delivered over to the office of Our chief stadtholder for affairs of police, if it be in Stockholm, and to Our lord-lieutenant of the county, if it be in country places. If such a person can immediately give up the name of an employer who may be well known and qualified to keep servants, and who is willing to accept such person into service, and take care of his or her conduct, such employer shall deliver in to Our lord-lieutenant a written undertaking that he will not only take care of such person, but also to have him or her rated and registered with him, in the event of such person not being already rated, and that he shall, with regard to such person, observe the enactments made with regard to warnings, removals, and the treatment of servants generally, and in the event of such person deserting the service, to report such a circumstance without any loss of time to the office of chief stadtholder, if at Stockholm, or to the police officers or the magistracy, if in other towns, or to the nearest crown bailiff, if in the country; and when an engagement to the above effect shall have been entered into, the person shall be immediately delivered up to his employer, or be at his expense forwarded to him. Should such an evil-disposed person be proved not to possess the means of procuring himself yearly service, or other lawful means of subsistence, and should not the particular circumstances connected with the situation of the person warrant Our lord-lieutenant in setting such person at large without risk, either upon such security being given as is described in the 1st paragraph, or for a short period to enable such person to procure for himself legal protection, or should such person abscond from his employer after being accepted into such service, or the employer should in manner prescribed in the enactments regarding servants report and adduce legal reasons why he is no longer willing to retain such person in his service, then such person shall be liable to be sent forthwith to a public house of correction, there to be kept to labour and good moral behaviour, and shall in such cases as have been just mentioned, upon a report being made by the employer to that effect to the police-office or the magistracy, if in a town, or to the crown bailiff or under-bailiff, if in the country, the evil-disposed person, if he be at large, be immediately apprehended, or if he has fled, be traced and pursued, and on being apprehended, be brought before Our lord-lieutenant, in order to be forwarded to undergo the punishment here above enacted.

S. 14. An unprotected person whose character is well known, whether he may be considered as evil disposed or not, who for want of necessary means of subsistence has been deemed liable to be sent to a work institution or a public house of correction, shall, when an opportunity offers for him to obtain the lawful means of maintenance, or when yearly service may be offered to him from a well known and duly qualified employer, be generally entitled to avail himself of such opportunities, under the conditions that are enacted in the 13th paragraph with regard to the taking of evil-disposed persons into service, whether such an opportunity for procuring his maintenance, or a situation as servant, shall offer prior to or after his being sent to or during his stay at the work institution or house of correction; but should the person who is required to be taken out of the institution either for service or labour have, while at the institution, exhibited such immorality and such violent and criminal propensities, that his personal liberty may be considered dangerous to the public safety, the superintendent of the institution shall be empowered, so long as the cause for not liberating the person shall exist, to refuse his being hired out for service or work, unless the proposed employer shall give security to the superintendent for the fines and compensation to which the person required to be taken out of the institution may possibly be adjudged, in consequence of any unlawful act or other crime inconsistent with the public safety which he may commit during the space of one year afterwards, observing, on accepting this security, the conditions prescribed in the 1st paragraph respecting bonds, both as regards the amount and conditions as well as the execution of the same, and certificates as to responsibility, without however the liability of renewing the bond. Against the decision of the superintendent in such cases, the unprotected person, or the person who may may require to take him or her out of the institution, shall have the right to complain to the board for the management of prisons and work institutions, which board shall then inquire into the circumstances of the case, and make a written report respecting the same, and the person who may be dissatisfied with the decision shall be recommended to make his humble appeal to Us, and to deliver such appeal to the said superintendent within the period prescribed in the 23d paragraph, who shall forward the same to the said board for the management of prisons and work institutions; after which, the said board shall without delay humbly forward the said appeal to Us, with its own opinion on the case.

In no case whatever shall any person who has committed any crime within the work institution or house of correction, or who may have been sent to a separate prison room, be liberated from such place until the time of confinement for such crime, in conformity with the prescribed regulations of the institution, has expired.

S. 15. Should the person who may have been assigned to a pioneer corps run away before he shall have arrived at the station of such corps, he shall be awarded half of the punishment that is enacted for deserting from such corps: should such a person commit a crime which may not affect his life, and he is in the lastmentioned case considered ineligible to be accepted in the service of the pioneer corps, he shall, after having undergone the punishment awarded for his crime, be liable to be sent to a public house of correction in the kingdom. Should the person run away who has been consigned to a public house of correction, after such person shall have arrived at such an institution, he shall upon being apprehended be punished in the manner prescribed in the regulations enacted for the institution. Should the person during the time of his absence have committed a crime, which may not affect his life or subject him to labour for life, he shall also, after having undergone the punishment awarded to him for the same, be sent to the house of correction, provided a legal protection or maintenance cannot be obtained for him.

S. 16. Should any trustworthy person of well known character, resident in the neighbourhood where the house of correction is situated, be desirous of employing the prisoner at work, which cannot be performed within the limits of the institution, and he possesses the means of regularly paying for the work, and of taking proper care of the labourers, the board for the management of prisons and work institutions may permit one or more prisoners who may have distinguished themselves for propriety of conduct, to be delivered up to such person for as long or as short a period as may be fixed upon. Under the management of the board stipulations shall then be entered into with the requirant, that the prisoners who are to be hired out shall at least enjoy as good a maintenance as they would receive within the institution, and that no injurious work shall be assigned to them; the requirant shall have over these prisoners, while they remain in his service, the authority of a master, and responsibility according to law. Should any of them run away, it shall be the duty of the requirant to give immediate information of such circumstance to the superintendent of the institution, and also, with the assistance of the crown bailiff, adopt measures for the tracing of the runaway person. Should the requirant be proved to have connived in any way at the escape of the person, he shall pay the expenses incurred in the pursuit and apprehension of such person.

A prisoner who may, in the manner here above described, have been taken out for work, shall when the time stipulated for labour shall have expired, be returned to the institution, accompanied with a certificate from the requirant, as to his conduct, who shall be responsible for the payment of the travelling expenses incurred for such person to and from the institution.

S. 17. The board for the management of prisons and work institutions shall endeavour to procure yearly service or other lawful means of maintenance for such prisoners at the house of correction who evince a good and trustworthy conduct; the said board shall also be at liberty to grant them passports for a certain stipulated period to their native or other places, with a view to obtain situations, or to provide means for other lawful maintenance for themselves, especially at those seasons of the year when servants are usually hired, of which circumstance the board shall inform Our lords-lieutenants, in order that the person may be sent back to the house of correction, in case such person should at the expiration of the time limited be found to be out of employ.

S. 18. Any one that shall apprehend a person who may be sentenced to perform work in a pioneer corps, or at a work institution or public house of correction, but who may attempt to make his escape, shall receive a reward of six rix-dollars and 32 skillings banco for each such person delivered up, which reward shall be immediately paid, against a proper receipt, by Our lord-lieutenant in that county where the person may be apprehended, and this charge shall be reimbursed out of the means or earnings for labour of such person, if there be any.

S. 19. No person shall be sentenced to a pioneer corps other than such as are healthy and are able to work; nor any one to the house of correction who from incurable diseases, bodily affliction, infirmities of age, or insanity, may be unfit for manual labour. Should, notwithstanding this, such a person arrive at a public house of correction, such person shall immediately be sent back to the authorities who may have sent him thither, in order to be disposed of according to the existing laws and regulations.

S. 20. Should an unprotected person have a child under age to take care of, and is on account of such care prevented from procuring yearly service, or other means be wanting for the support of such a person, or should such a person be sent to a pioneer corps, work institution, or house of correction, and it should then be ascertained that the child has no relation who is in a situation to receive it, and provide for its support and education, and no certain parish can be compelled to take care of such a child, and public or private institutions for children do not afford the means for the support of such child, Our lords-lieutenants are empowered to endeavour by the assistance of the clergy and churchwardens to find adopted parents for such child, who on being allowed the advantages the enactment respecting servants offer, or, if it cannot otherwise be done, on payment of the amount which the chapter of Our order of Seraphim usually allows, or on the terms granted by the great orphan house at Stockholm, on children under age being placed out for support and education, in proportion to the different ages of the children, would be willing to receive and educate such children in the doctrines of the Christian religion, and as regards the payment of such means, or any other matters which ought to be observed in respect thereof, We will graciously make separate enactments.

S. 21. Any soldier who may have been struck off the regimental muster-rolls, is, according to the 7th paragraph of the 11th chapter of the articles of war, liable to fortress labour, and shall be delivered over to Our lord-lieutenant, who without any consideration as to the opportunities that may offer for the man to procure work, shall send him to a pioneer corps, in order to serve in the same from three to six years.

S. 22. When, independent of what is mentioned in the preceding paragraph, a question shall arise how far an unprotected person may have made himself liable to be sent to a pioneer corps, or a public house of correction, the parish, whether it be in the country, or in a town in which the man last has been rated and resident, shall, with the exception of such towns where police offices are established, be heard in vestry respecting the man's conduct, and also how far there may be an opportunity for his obtaining constant employ with any responsible master or mistress resident in the parish. A duly adjusted protocol which is to be made of the proceedings, containing the particulars that may be known respecting the man's character and his circumstances of life, shall without loss of time be forwarded to Our lord-lieutenant, and the person sent to him for examination. Superintendents of police offices in the towns, where such are established, shall take care to demand similar informations, and have the person examined before them. Our lords-lieutenants or superintendents of police shall cause to be inserted in their protocols the age of the person, the height, and a description of his personal appearance, his state of health, founded on the opinion procured from proper medical men, which must, word for word, be inserted in the protocol, the circumstances of the person's life, and also whether he has been accused and sentenced for any and for what crime, what description of punishment he may have undergone, and for what crimes and malpractices he has especially rendered himself conspicuous, whether he has been taught any and what trade or work, and whether he is able to exercise the same, or any other particulars that can be collected from the protocol of the parish vestry, or the person's own statement, for further information. Our lords-lieutenants, or the superintendents of police, shall afterwards consider the circumstances of the case, and communicate their decision in writing to the person, in the event of his being, according to the enactments made, liable to perform public labour, together with the reasons for such decision, which shall be delivered to him in the presence of witnesses within three days, exclusive of the day on which the decision was made known to him, with ample and circumstantial instructions written thereon for making an appeal. Such unprotected person as may not be considered evil disposed shall be allowed to be at large until such time as the decision of Our lord-lieutenant or superintendents of police for his being sent to a pioneer corps or house of correction shall have been received; but in how far such liberty may, when the person is dissatisfied with the decision, be still further continued, or be extended until the final decision is come to, as also whether and to what degree evil-disposed persons, after a question has arose respecting their being sent to the house of correction, may be permitted to be at large for a shorter or longer period, it shall be in the power of the abovementioned official authorities to settle and determine, according to the nature of each particular case.

If any other person concerned in the matter, or the unprotected person himself, should, although he may not be sentenced to labour, be desirous to complain respecting the decision, they shall be entitled to obtain the decree without delay, with instructions written thereon how to make the appeal.

The orders prescribed in this ordinance for the observance of Our lords-lieutenants shall also serve as a guide for the officer executing the functions of chief stadtholder at Stockholm, and the superintendents of police in other towns, without however disturbing the existing regulations respecting the mode of proceeding in order to obtain an alteration in the decisions made by the superintendents of police.

S. 23. Any person who may be desirous of having the decision of the officer executing the functions of Our chief stadtholder, respecting an unprotected person, revised, shall be bound before 12 o'clock on the eighth day after the decision shall have been communicated to such person, exclusive of the day the communication was made, duly to deliver in their humble appeals, addressed to Us, to the officer executing the functions of Our chief stadtholder or Our lord-lieutenant, who may have communicated the decree, or if the complainant be imprisoned, to the officer having the charge of him. Should the person thus imprisoned be in want of assistance for the purpose of drawing up the appeal, the officer executing the functions of Our chief stadtholder, or lord-lieutenant, shall adopt measures for his receiving the required assistance. Should a person who may have been considered liable to public labour neglect to make his appeal within the time prescribed by law, or be satisfied with the decision respecting him, the same shall, after the expiration of the said time, be carried into effect. Should, on the other hand, the appeals be delivered in within the proper time, it shall be the duty of the officer executing the functions functions of Our chief stadtholder, or Our lords-lieutenants, to deliver in the said appeals as soon as possible to Our court of judicial review, accompanied with the explanations of the parties concerned, if such should be necessary, and also with the requisite documents for the hearing of the case, and with these functionaries' own opinion on the same; and in such a case the decision complained of shall not, in its main objects, be carried into effect until the appeal has been considered by Us, and Our gracious decision has been received at the place. The person who may be imprisoned, or may be considered by the officer executing the functions of chief stadtholder, or our lord-lieutenant, as liable to confinement, shall during the interval remain in custody.

S. 24. To the person who shall be sent to a pioneer corps, work institution, or house of correction, a passport shall be granted by Our lord-lieutenant to the place that may have been fixed upon, and the name of the person, his age, and a description of his person, together with an exact inventory of the wearing apparel or other articles he may carry with him, shall be specified in the passport. The officer or officers to whom the charge of such a person may be confided during the journey, shall have the care of the passport and such wearing apparel, and shall each separately be responsible for the due delivery of the same, as well as of the person himself, at the place appointed. The protocol and the sentence that concern the person, shall without any delay and by the first post be forwarded to the chief of the pioneers, or to the commandant or superintendent at the work institution or house of correction where the person is to be sent. Should the person possess money, such money shall accompany the aforesaid documents.

S. 25. For the transport of unprotected persons to the work place appointed, the same coach hire and support shall be allowed as are fixed for prisoners in general; and such a person shall not be secured in a more severe manner than circumstances may require. The nature and mode of securing the person shall rest with Our lord-lieutenant to determine who may forward the said person, and of which specific instructions shall be given in the passport, with power to the keeper who accompanies the prisoner to adopt measures for a more severe treatment, if such should during the journey be rendered necessary, for duly securing such person, and to continue such new treatment until he shall arrive at the seat of the next provincial government, and Our lord-lieutenant at such place shall have ascertained the state of the case, and have given directions how and in what manner the said person is to be conducted. Such person as may be sent to a pioneer corps, work institution or house of correction, shall, while being conveyed to such a place, be as far as may be possible kept separate from prisoners that may have been punished for crimes, or otherwise be kept from conversation and communication with them.

This Our gracious Ordinance shall be put in force at the commencement of the month of November next ensuing, and be then carried into effect. Our lords-lieutenants shall be separately informed of the present station of the pioneer corps, and generally be made acquainted with the places to which unemployed persons shall be sent. To which all whom it may concern shall obediently conform themselves. In further testimony, We have subscribed this with Our own hand, and caused the same to be confirmed with Our royal seal. The palace of Stockholm, the 29th of June 1833.

CHARLES JOHN. (L. S.)

LETTER from J. A. D. Bloomfield, Esq. to Sir George Shee, Bart.

Stockholm, November 29th, 1833.

LORD Howard de Walden acknowledged, on the 25th October, Mr. Backhouse's circular of the 12th August, requesting information as to the legal provision which exists in Sweden for the support of the poor, and mentioned that he had delivered a memorandum on this subject to M. de Hartmansdorff, the Secretary of State for Ecclesiastical Affairs. I have now the honour to transmit a copy of M. de Hartmansdorff's Memorandum, marked No. 1, and two Tables, marked Nos. 2 and 3; and have drawn up the following observations, containing a further explanation of the different points; which, I trust, will convey all the information required by Lord Palmerston.

The first query of the circular, "What legal provision exists in Sweden for the support and maintenance of the poor," is answered by Enclosure No. 1, which states the mode and sources of the legal provision. It shows that the general system is not unlike that of England, though (vide Paragraphs 8, 10 and 11, in No. 1,) the mode of levying, as well as employing the poor rates, may somewhat vary in the different parishes, according to their respective ability to pay either in money or in kind; if in kind, the poor are billeted for food and lodging on the different householders, or otherwise relieved by them in proportion to the other taxes, contributed by each householder to Government.

The poor establishments are divided into two distinct classes.

The first class consists of foundling and other hospitals, lazarettos and mad-houses. The number of them is adequate to the want. They are built (if not by private endowment) by the State, but their current expenses defrayed by the parish.

The second class comprises all work and correction houses. They are built and maintained, and their expenses are defrayed by the State.

It may here be remarked, that permanent magazines of food, wood, and clothes, to meet particular emergencies, form a part of the provision for the poor.

SWEDEN.

As to the second point of the circular, "The principles on which the provision is founded;" they appear to be, "That the infant, sick, infirm and aged poor (to the exclusion of able-bodied vagrants of both sexes), ought to be educated, relieved and housed at the expense of their fellow citizens, the share contributed by each being regulated by the amount of other taxes paid by him to Government."

The third point of the circular, "The manner in which the provision is administered," is clearly elucidated by Enclosure No. 1, which, after premising that every parish must educate and support its own poor, defines the different sorts of hospitals, almshouses and schools, and the description of poor which are admissible to each. It states the manner in which the Boards for the administration and control of the poor-rates are formed, the objects to which the funds are applied, and the principal heads of the vagrant and mendicity laws. (Vide paragraphs 18, 19, 20, in Enclosure No. 1.)

As to the fourth point of the circular, "The mode of raising, and amount of the provision;" the mode of raising it is clearly detailed in Enclosure No. 1, of which, vide

Par. 4. For madhouses and hospitals for incurables.

Par. 5. For lock hospitals.

Par. 6. For asylums for orphans and the destitute aged.

Par. 7. Public contributions and collections, and certain fines and penalties come in aid of the poor.

P. 370.

As to the amount, it will be seen from Enclosure No. 2 (a Résumé of all the Tables concerning the affairs of the poor throughout Sweden), that during 1829, out of a population of 2,780,132 souls, 65,348 (about $\frac{1}{42}$) required relief; and that the sum employed for this purpose was 960,903 riks dollars (about 73,915*l.* sterling), of which the capital arising from legacies and private endowments, 347,830 riks dollars (about 26,756*l.* sterling) forms a considerable part. During the same year 5,832 children were educating in 807 poor schools distributed over Sweden.

As to the fifth point of the circular, "The practical working and effect of the actual system upon the comfort, character and condition of the people;" it may be remarked, that the bare adequacy of the means of Sweden to provide for the support of the poor, imperatively requires the exclusion of the idle from any share of the poor-rates, but that the system, from its extreme simplicity and facility of supervision, works easily, and is well suited to the state of the country. The number of the poor since its institution has increased in proportion to the population. There is not, however, much appearance of abject poverty throughout the country. Thirst for amusement, want of emulation or industry, are the principal features of the Swedish character. The Swede is patient under privation and suffering; his wants are but few, and can easily be supplied; and his feeling of pride generally prevents him from making an unnecessary demand for parish relief.

Sir George Shee, Bart.,

&c. &c. &c.

I have, &c.

J. A. D. Bloomfield.

Enclosure, No. 1.

1. It is not permitted to go about asking alms, either in town or in the country.
2. Every person who is not in need of assistance is obliged to contribute to the support of indigent old persons, and to the education of poor children.
3. Every parish is bound by law to support its poor, and to maintain an almshouse to receive the aged, sick and infirm.
4. Those who are affected by madness, or incurable diseases, are received at the public hospitals for a moderate sum, payable by their parish. These hospitals are of two kinds; either madhouses maintained by the State or legacies throughout the country, or infirmaries erected for each county by donations and voluntary contributions of the inhabitants.
5. For the cure of venereal diseases hospitals are to be found in each county, supported by a poll-tax of one to five skillings banco ($1\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 2 d.) on each taxable person: infected poor are there received gratis.
6. The destitute aged who do not belong to any parish are received at the hospitals; and destitute children are brought up in the orphan asylums, which are maintained by the State in certain parts of the country.
7. Every parish has a pecuniary fund for the poor, raised and maintained either by voluntary contributions on solemn occasions, such as marriages, baptisms, funerals, &c., or by the produce of certain fines and penalties. These funds cannot be employed for other purposes without the especial permission of the King.
8. Every parish regulates within itself, at meetings of the parishioners, the mode of levying, as well as employing the poor-rates. The resolutions then taken by the voters are considered as fully obligatory, if not contrary to law. They are sometimes submitted to the confirmation of the King.

9. Towns containing several parishes have, in some points, a common management of the affairs of the poor; but every parish has its own almshouse, and is subjected to especial taxes for its maintenance.

10. In default of mutual agreement, the rates are levied, in the country in proportion to the taxed value of the landed estates, (whether they are the property of a landholder, a leaseholder, or a freeholder;) and in towns, commonly in proportion to the contributions levied on houses for other wants of the community. Non-proprietors are commonly assessed for the support of the poor in proportion to the sum paid by them to the government in taxes.

11. The poor, whether received at or only maintained by the poor-houses, are relieved in different ways; partly by allowances in money, victuals, wood, clothes and other things; partly by billeting them, for a certain number of days, on the different landowners; or by placing them as boarders (to the lowest bidders), by whom they are variously employed according to their capacities. In towns they are sometimes sent to the houses of correction.

12. The administration of the poor fund is committed to the clergyman, aided by the churchwardens, or a special committee of governors, called the church-council. They are elected in the country at general meetings, by the landholders among themselves, according to the confidence generally reposed in them; in towns, commonly by the rector of the parish and the board of aldermen. The length of time they remain in this office is not determined by law. In some places the churchwardens are exempted from some common duties, but they usually serve without remuneration.

13. The members of the parish have a vote at the meetings, according to the value of their houses in town, or landed estates in the country. The clergyman is always president.

14. Every poor person is considered as belonging to that parish where he has last held any estate, or where he has been inscribed on the lists of contribution, as tenant, servant or boarder.

15. No infirm person is allowed to take service in a parish, nor any vagrant to settle as cottager or boarder, without the consent of the parishioners.

16. The poor when ill used, as well as the parishioners when too heavily taxed, have their appeal from the decisions of the meetings to the governor of the province, from him to the superior court of assessments, and thence again to the King, if the question concerns a parish in the country. In town the appeal is made from the governor of the province directly to the King.

17. The inspection over the management of the poor funds belongs, in towns, to the governor, the clergy and the board of aldermen; in the country, to the clergy and the governor of the province. The decision of the governor is carried into effect in the country by the bailiffs, serjeants or constables of the district, and in towns by the police.

18. Beggars are seized and brought back by public conveyances to their own parish, upon which the expense of their removal falls.

19. Vagrants are liable to be employed in public works within the province, or pressed into military service in certain corps; or in default of other means of subsistence, obliged to work in the public houses of correction, where, commonly, punished criminals and other infamous persons in want of lawful employment find means of earning their bread.

20. Every one is considered as a vagrant who cannot produce a certificate of service, or an evidence of means of independent livelihood, or a security of 50 riks dollars banco (3*l.* 15*s.* sterling), for a given time, during which he is allowed to procure work or service.

21. The public houses of correction for criminal poor are maintained at the expense of the State.

Appendix (F.)

LETTER from J. A. D. Bloomfield, Esq. to Sir George Shee, Bart.

Stockholm, April 9th, 1834.

IN compliance with Lord Palmerston's instructions conveyed to me in your circular despatch of the 30th November 1833, I have the honour to return enclosed one of the sets of questions, drawn up by the Poor Law Commissioners, relative to the condition of the poor, and to the legal or charitable provisions for their support within the kingdom of Sweden, with the most accurate and comprehensive answers which I have been able to obtain.

I have the honour also to subjoin translations of an extract from M. Forsell's Swedish Statistics, published last year, which relates principally to the condition of the poor; a memorandum detailing the regulations for the support of the poor in the parish of St. Jacob and St. John, in Stockholm; dietary at the southern house of correction, at Stockholm, for males; dietary at the northern house of correction, at Stockholm, for females; and dietary at the city prison, at Stockholm, called "Castenhof."

&c. &c. &c.

I have the honour, &c.
J. A. D. Bloomfield.

Enclosure, No. 1.

VAGRANTS.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—None, except to journeymen tradesmen seeking work, during their apprenticeship, who receive 9 d. per man, in each town, from the trade they belong to, for the purpose of continuing their journey. There are also in some districts landed estates, granted by the Crown, the rents of which are distributed to journeymen tradesmen by the parish clergyman. Persons without passports are arrested, and sent to hard labour, unless they can obtain respectable securities for their good conduct.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

There is no legal provision for this class of persons.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—In most parishes there are alms or workhouses endowed by private individuals, or supported by the parish. The clergyman and vestry alone have the direction of them, and the power of selecting the inmates.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—To the amount of from 1 l. to 2 l. a year; sometimes in money; sometimes in food, fuel or clothing, to the above amount.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—They are only boarded when quartered or billeted.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—In most parishes they are quartered or billeted amongst the parishioners, who take the pauper into their house for a week or a longer time, according to the rate of their assessment for Crown taxes, and at the expiration of the term (always fixed by the clergyman and vestry), the pauper is transferred to another parishioner.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Relatives are not compelled to assist them in a greater degree than the other parishioners are.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—At Stockholm there are two hospitals capable of accommodating 300 patients. At the chief town of each of the 24 districts (or provincial governments) there is an hospital, where from 12 to 24 patients can be received. These hospitals are for all complaints. They are supported principally by grants of land from the Crown, by a capitation tax of 1 d. on each person above the age of 16, and by a portion of fines on penal offences. Each province defrays the expense of its hospital. In large towns, and at forges and sawing establishments, there are generally hospitals, which are supported entirely by private individuals.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—In every province there is a provincial doctor, who is obliged to attend the sick when sent for, and on payment of his travelling expenses alone. In cases of epidemy, the provincial doctor is ordered by the authorities to attend the sick and supply medicines, both gratis.

3. To

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—The provincial and parish hospitals and almshouses supply food, fuel and clothing to the patients whilst there, but not after their departure, and in no case money. The food granted to the inmates of these establishments is so insufficient, that unless they are able to collect from friends or others 3*d.* a day, they can scarcely subsist. The parish establishments are supported by a parish rate.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—The only lying-in hospital is at Stockholm, where about 230 women are annually delivered gratis. It is supported by municipal contributions.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—No other modes exist than those above mentioned.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall ; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers ; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The expense falls partly on the one, partly on the other. When the father acknowledges paternity, the law compels him to contribute according to his means. When a woman swears a child, and the man denies it on oath, the magistrates collect the best evidence they can, and, if appearances are against the man, condemn him, on pain of imprisonment on bread and water, to pay a certain annual sum for the support of the child.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—They are in no case compelled by law.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—There are no express establishments for their reception. They are generally received in those which accommodate the impotent through age.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Or boarded with individuals?—On the same condition as the impotent through age.

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Their relatives are not legally compellable in a greater degree than other parishioners are.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

Cripples are considered as impotent through age, received at the same establishments, and treated in the same way.

The deaf and dumb are for the most part under the same regulations as the impotent through age ; but near Stockholm there is an establishment for the accommodation of 30 or 40 inmates. The expenses of the establishment are defrayed by a grant from the State of 420*l.* a year, by endowments and by voluntary contributions.

The blind are received and treated as impotent through age.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—There are 12 asylums for idiots and lunatics, which contained last year 842 patients. The expenses are mainly defrayed by royal and private endowments. When a parish wishes to send a patient to an asylum, it must pay about 2*l.* 10*s.*, without any ulterior charge on the parish.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?—They are billeted, quartered and boarded with householders, under the same regulations as the impotent through age.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—They are not compelled to support them in a greater degree than other parishioners.

Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The able-bodied self-supporting labourer of the lowest class is in a better condition than the person subsisting on alms or public charity. The destitute able-bodied labourer subsisting on charity is in a worse condition than the self-supporting labourer as to food. The destitute able-bodied labourer, not being supported by the parish, no comparison can be drawn between his condition and that of the self-supporting labourer.

LABOURERS, &c.

Agriculturists.

Artisans.

-- The skilled male labourer can earn between 7d. and 8d. a day; the unskilled between 3d. and 4d.; both without provisions.

-- The carpenter, bricklayer, smith, &c. earns on an average 1 s. 7d. a day, during nine months, without provisions. In winter, in-door labourers nearly the same sum, but out-door labourers nothing.

2. Is piece-work general?

-- It is so far general, that proprietors agree with labourers for an annual sum, for which they engage to perform certain duties and works; and in the neighbourhood of large towns it is not uncommon.

-- It is becoming general.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?

-- About 11 l. a year.

-- Annual expenditure of a labourer and family, about 11 l. The expenditure for schooling, &c. cannot be calculated, but it is exceedingly trifling.

-- In Stockholm, a mechanic is supposed to expend 45 l. a year for himself, wife and four children, and the religious teaching of the latter.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?

-- Women and children are employed in farming and spinning, and weaving at home.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?

-- In summer, a woman can earn 4d. a day; children under 16, 2d. In autumn and winter they spin and weave at home to an uncertain amount, but usually sufficient to supply the family with linen and blankets, and sell some.

-- The wife, 8 l. a year; boy of 14, 4 l. 10 s.; children, of 11 and 8, 2 l.; child of 5, 0.

-- The wife, 5 l. a year; boy of 14, 2 l. 10 s.; children, 11 and 8, 10 s. each; child of 5, 0.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?

-- It could. In the southern provinces, on potatoes and salt fish; in the northern, on porridge and rye bread.

-- It could; on better food than the agriculturists, with coffee, and occasionally fresh meat.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?

-- Very little, if anything.

-- Can lay by from 2 l. to 8 l. a year.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—From one to five acres.
11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The nobility, iron-masters, landed proprietors and farmers.
12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—The rent of a labourer's habitation and a few acres of land is usually paid by work done for the owner of the estate, at the rate of two or three days' labour per week, according to agreement. The price on sale of a free labourer's habitation may be estimated at 20*l*.
13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Sometimes lands are let on condition of work, and a small rent (usually paid in kind.) The quantity, one to fifteen acres. The rent may be calculated at 5*s*. an acre.
14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—Population in 1825 amounted to 2,771,252. Proportion of annual deaths, 1 in 41 $\frac{1}{2}$.
15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—Medium from 1815 to 1830, 1 in 29.
16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—One to 117 $\frac{1}{2}$.
17. The average number of children to a marriage?—From 3 $\frac{6}{10}$ to 4 $\frac{1}{8}$.
18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—In 1749, 1 in 49; from 1775 to 1795, 1 in 27; from 1795 to 1800, 1 in 20; 1800 to 1805, 1 in 17; 1805 to 1810, 1 in 15; 1810 to 1820, 1 in 14; 1820 to 1825, 1 in 13 $\frac{3}{10}$; 1825 to 1830, 1 in 16.
19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—One to 6 $\frac{1}{4}$; legitimate, 1 to 6 $\frac{1}{13}$; illegitimate, 1 to 3 $\frac{15}{17}$.
20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—Not known.
21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—Not known. Thirteen twenty-ninths die before the 16th year.
22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Males, 27. Females, 23.
23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—1st. The clergyman's advice occasionally given not to marry without means to support a family. 2d. Impossibility of a marriage being solemnized by the clergyman without satisfactory evidence that the parties are unmarried. 3d. Consciousness of want of means to support a family, owing to the difficulties of obtaining a livelihood, and to the absence of legal provision for the destitute able-bodied. 4th. The little shame attached in the middle and lower classes to having bastards.
24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—The unmarried, seldom anything. The married are more provident, but extent not to be ascertained.
25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—In savings banks, of which there are 35.

GENERAL REMARKS.

Private charity displays itself, in Sweden, not so much in institutions of any kind, as in frequent voluntary relief to destitute individuals, sometimes in money, but chiefly in food. The collections made every Sunday at the parish churches amount to inconceivably little.

The main defect of the charitable institutions consists in a very imperfect control over the application of their funds, the parish not being accountable for their distribution to any superior authority. This is so much felt, that new regulations are contemplated for bringing parish affairs more under the inspection of a central board. Another great evil is, that each parish manages its affairs quite independently of any other, and frequently in a totally different manner; and there is no mutual inspection among the parishes, which, it is supposed, would check abuses. Again, parishes are not consistent in affording relief; they often receive and treat an able-bodied impostor (who legally has no claim on the parish) as an impotent or sick person, whilst many of the latter description remain unaided. The Swedish artisan is neither so industrious nor so frugal as formerly; he has heard that the destitute able-bodied are, in England, supported by the parish; he claims similar relief, and alleges his expectation of it as an excuse for prodigality or indifference as to saving.

All the prisons are under the superintendence of the prison direction, which apportions to each prison the means destined for it, which are levied by the governors of the respective provinces.

Enclosure, No. 2.

REMARKS on the Poor, the Correction Houses and the Prisons. Extracted from Colonel Forsell's Swedish Statistics, published in December 1833.

THAT the number of the poor has lately increased in a far greater progression than before, is indeed a deplorable truth. Sweden, in that respect, resembles most other countries. To explain satisfactorily the causes of this sudden augmentation, is by no means easy. Economical regulations may have contributed to that effect, and in this country especially, the, perhaps too far extended, principle of personal liberty, and settlements on too small portions of land^(a), may have rather encouraged than counteracted vagrancy^(b); but other causes may have powerfully contributed thereto. The frequent failure in late years of the harvests, must have had a most deplorable influence on the outlay of the working class. To this must be added, that pretensions to the enjoyment of a multitude of the conveniences of life have increased in a far greater proportion than the means of providing for the outlay and subsistence of the working classes, and consequently the limits between those living comfortably and those who struggle against poverty and indigence, are every day growing more and more palpable.

Among the causes of the ruin of many a poor family in Sweden, are to be reckoned the wild beasts, such as bears and wolves. In the year 1827 they killed in the whole country 502 reindeer, 714 horses, 4,025 horned cattle, 28,616 sheep and goats, and 2,755 hogs. Be the causes of the increase of the poor what they may, it is still a cheering circumstance, that the better orders are beginning to regard it as a duty to obtain means of employment for the working classes. Wherever one travels in Sweden, one hears of newly established schools for the children of the peasantry, and of many institutions for promoting the education, industry and support of the lower orders. If that spirit were more general, and if thereby the good-old Swedish law, prescribing a certain portion of land as necessary for the support of a household, were revived, and earnestly acted on, it might be hoped, that the rapid increase of population, far from exciting apprehensions, would rather tend to increase the power, the happiness, and the respectability of the country.

The number of poor in Sweden, in the year 1825, according to the returns of the Tabellary Committee, amounted to no less than 544,064 souls. Consequently, on an average, every fifth person cannot maintain life without assistance from others^(c).

At Stockholm, in the year 1737, the number of poor was 930^(d). In 1825, there were reckoned 15,000 indigent persons. Their support, in 1731, cost 9,000 dollars (daller). In 1825, nearly 500,000 rix-dollars banco were employed in alms, donations and pensions. Perhaps these facts explain why, in Stockholm, every year, about 1,500 individuals more die than are born, although the climate and situation of this capital is by no means insalubrious^(e); for the same may be said of almshouses as is said of foundling hospitals and similar charitable establishments, that the more their number is increased the more they are applied to^(f).

In London, with a population twice that of Paris, between the years 1819 and 1823, 153 foundlings were picked up, and 4,668 bastards were received into its 44 workhouses, and of that number one-third were sustained at the cost of their parents. In Paris, during the same period, no less than 25,277 children were received as foundlings, and all were supported at the expense of the state.

In the little and carefully governed city of Orebro (in Sweden), the number of poor during the year 1780 was no more than 70 or 80 individuals, and in the year 1832 it was 400! In the parish of Nora, in the province of Nerike, the alms given in the year 1814 were 170 rix-dollars, 4 sk., and in 1832, 2,138 rix-dollars, 27 sk. and so on, at many other places in the kingdom. That the case was otherwise in Sweden formerly, is proved by history. Botin, in his History of the Swedish People, says, "that a laborious life, abhor-

(a) The new regulation against vagrancy, published a few months ago, is of a nature to check this disproportion.

(b) In the governor's quinquennial report on Jemtland for 1833, it is said, "Experience has proved the mischief of dividing lands and farms in too small portions, wherefore it is my duty to declare that the regulated minimum is far too little to confer the name of landowner or farmer, especially in this parish." A multitude of poor cottages are rising in this manner, whose possessors have no other means of subsistence than their labour; and should that even nourish them in good years, yet in each year of dearth they are liable to the greatest distress. To entitle the possessor to the name of landowner, an extent of from nine to fifteen Swedish acres is requisite, so that the labourers may draw their subsistence from it. Such a portion of land should feed a horse or a pair of oxen, three or four cows, and five or six sheep or goats. Yet a statute of the 19th December 1827 permits that a landowner may possess only half an acre, if it is situated within three English miles from any town.

(c) To be indigent, and to be totally poor or destitute, is not the same thing. The number of poor in Sweden of this latter kind forms not one seventy-seventh of the whole population.

(d) The real poor, or such as were supported by alms and charity-houses, were in 1830 no more than 1,124. Their subsistence cost 49,752 dollars banco.

(e) The great mortality in Stockholm is very remarkable. During the quinquennium of 1825 to 1830, according to official reports, in the first regiment of guards, 800 strong, 294 died, that is, on an average, every 14th man each year, although the men were in the prime of life; no epidemic existed, and they were in nowise neglected. During the year 1820, no less than 6,648 men, according to the usual reports, were returned sick, that is, every soldier had fallen sick three times in the year. By dissections made in the garrison hospital in Stockholm, it has been observed, that the insides of the bodies of those who had been known to use spirituous liquors to excess, have been so disorganized, that it excited astonishment they could have lived so long. Generally speaking, they did not reach the age of 40.

(f) It seems that the numerous charitable institutions and almshouses in Stockholm, are a reason why there are so many poor. In Stockholm are no less than 83 different boards for affording relief to the poor, and independent one of the other, so that it happens often that a beggar receives alms at three, four or five different places.

rence of idleness and fear of poverty, was the cause why indigent and destitute persons could be found, but no beggars. Each family sustained its destitute and impotent, and would have deemed it a shame to receive support from others."

When the accounts required from the secretary of state for ecclesiastical affairs, regarding the number of and institutions for the poor, shall be reduced to order, and issue from the press, they must impart most important information. By the interesting report on this subject by the of Bishop of Wexio, we learn, that the proportion of the poor to the population is as 1 to 73 in the government of Wexio, and as 1 to 54 in that of Jönköping. The assessed poor-taxes are, on an average, for every farm (hemman), eight kapper corn in the former government, and 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ in the latter. With regard to the institutions for the poor, it is said, the more we give the more is demanded, and instead of the poor-rates being regulated by the want, the want is regulated by the profusion of charities and poor-taxes.

The price of 8 kappar = 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ doll. or
2 s. 5 d.

In the bishopric of Wisby (Island of Gottland), the proportion between the poor and those who can maintain themselves, is far more favourable than in that of Wexio; for in the former only one in 104 inhabitants is indigent, and in 22 parishes there is no common almshouse at all. Among 40,000 individuals, no more than 17 were unable to read.

One of the axioms of political economy is, that if the foresight, prudence and circumspection of the people do not lay restraints on the rapid increase of population, it must be checked by famine, distress, crime and misery. Nothing indeed sounds more natural, than that it is not only allowable, but even commendable, to bring up children to the service of their king and for the defence of their country; but if these children are called into existence without any other support than the immediate aid of Providence, or without the slightest calculation as to a probable capability of feeding and educating them properly, then indeed the merit of those so calling them into existence is very doubtful, for if disease or want of employment arise, penury takes his station at the door, and the poor children must either perish from want and misery, or be a burthen on the parish.

If in new settlements due precautions were taken, population would not indeed increase so rapidly as it now does; but according to all sound political principles, it is far better that the country should be inhabited by a smaller population in easy and comfortable circumstances, than by one so large, that a constant struggle is necessary to nourish it and hold it within the limits of obedience; nor may the day be far distant when the Government will be obliged to use as much caution to repress the rapid increase of population, as it now has employed to provoke it.

Among all the institutions of Sweden, the provincial administration is one of the best imagined and most perfect: its organization is simple, its action rapid and immediate, but it still wants the necessary groundwork on which a provincial government ought to repose. A lawful, mild, sufficient and cheap expedient for counteracting increasing poverty and immorality, an expedient founded on the customs and wants of the people, and thereby the only one applicable (in the opinion of the author) is, that the church-council (kyrkoråd) should be extended into a municipal institution of a nature more exclusively directed to the wants and business of the multitude, than it has hitherto been (s). Under the direction of this municipal institution ought to be placed all affairs concerning the church, the morality of the people, and the hospitals; school establishments, poor institutions, the magazine of the parish, the making up of litigated cases, the sharing of farms, new establishments and settlements, and all such economical matters as may be of general application. To the church-council, in which the curate always presides, every intended marriage ought to be announced, and no public attestation of it ought to be accorded, without the curate or some other member of the church-council previously informing himself minutely whether the means of the parties are sufficient for their immediate support and future existence.

To inculcate from the pulpit, and to foster the morality of the people, is obligatory on the clergy; but it may be asked how it is possible for that order to acquire accurate notions of the state and means of living of the lower classes, in parishes so populous as those of the capital, the parish of Ladugårdsland having more than 14,000 inhabitants, that of St. Catherina, 13,000, Maria, 11,000; or as the parish of Skellefteå in Westerbotten, with 9,570 inhabitants, Leksand, in the province of Delecarlia, with 9,015, &c. By this means a focus would be established where the knowledge of the morality and wants of the people would be concentrated. I think, therefore, that these municipal institutions ought to be placed under the care of the church, and not under that of the police or civil authorities. Both through the governors and the consistories the Government has a way of communicating with these authorities.

If the church-council divided among its members the inspection of the parish, so that every cottage or household, were it ever so wretched, should be visited four times in the year, or oftener if necessary, by the same member of the church-council, who should endeavour to inform himself minutely of the state of the household, and on whose opinion it it should afterwards depend how great a part of the alms ought to be adjudged to each family, such a proceeding would indeed have a wholesome influence on society in general, and especially on the morality of the lower classes. The certainty of receiving visits of a member of the church-council, might perhaps sustain the courage of many a woman struggling with the misfortune of being united with a drunken, idle and depraved husband, and with the poverty and distress consequent thereon. For the little children, who, as the church-council might perceive, were not duly taken care of by their miserable parents, and were not compelled to attend the parish school, another place of refuge might perhaps be procured. The certainty of the lower classes not being left without inspection, has perhaps a more favourable effect on their condition than immediate alms. The bonds of connexion between the higher and lower classes thus established, would certainly be of a mightier influence than the alms given by the rich, by which the rich man, as it were, purchases the freedom from any obligation to think or act further in the affairs of the poor. Were it a regulation, that a member of these parish unions should observe how, for example, every manufacturer or artisan provides for his workmen, or how the landowners treat their peasants and cottagers, such a regulation would certainly have a great moral as well as economical effect. The parishes might thereby, in some degree, be secured against a great abuse of latter times, that of being forced to receive a multitude of labourers or cottagers (stat-torpare), sometimes without the possibility of calculating how they are to be provided for under a change of circumstances; whence it often happens, that they become an additional burthen on the poor institutions of the parish, without the slightest obligation on him who has had their services and encouraged their settlement on his lands, to pay a proportionably greater poor-tax than he paid before he threw them on the parish.

(s) About 40 years ago, a similar institution existed in Stockholm, in the parish of the cathedral, to the great advantage of the parish. A royal ordinance of the 20th February 1742, enacted, that according to the wishes of the States of the realm, there should be elected in every parish, one or more instructed and intelligent men, who were bound to assist the Government with information regarding the economical state of the parish, and to aid their parishioners by their efforts and advice.

It is possible that the author is mistaken in his view of the effect and utility of these municipal institutions, but the project has at least the merit of not being expensive.

England, France and Holland are solicitous about their poor institutions. England, in 1795, adopted the erroneous principle, that every indigent household is entitled to receive from the more wealthy individuals of the parish, what may be wanted for their subsistence. The fallacy of this principle is evident from the fact, that if a wealthy man were to yield up his whole fortune to the poor, reserving for himself barely enough for the necessities of life, there would nevertheless still be found some wretch, to whom it would seem that even a minuter subdivision ought to take place. It is a duty to point out and correct erroneous opinions, which are of so dangerous a tendency. In England, too, it is said, that the poor, far from being grateful for the assistance they receive, are insolent and dissatisfied, thinking that they always receive too little. They have lost all sense of honour, and feel no shame in being a burthen on their fellow-creatures.

As a consequence of the revolution of 1789, the land in France has been divided into portions so small as to be quite inadequate to provide for the most pressing wants of a family. The number of poor is also greatly increasing there, so that the Government has under consideration the establishment of poor colonies on a very considerable scale.

As to Holland, the poor colonies there established since the year 1818, have attracted the attention of all Europe. Many able authors have stated, that these colonies are not only able to support themselves, but even to pay both the interest and capital of their establishment within a period of 16 years. Mr. Gyllenhaal (a Swede) having lately visited them, has proved, that these settlements, though enjoying many hundred thousand florins as annual revenue, both from the state and from many towns and corporations, nevertheless cannot succeed.

Of these, 138 were imprisoned for murder, 143 for assault, 100 for child murder, 317 for drunkenness and bad habits, 147 in commutation of fines, 1,616 for theft and pilfering, and 1,282 for begging and want of securities for good behaviour. If from those imprisoned for theft and confined for want of some one to answer for them, were subtracted 468, who have undergone their punishment, and who ought, consequently, to be referred to those confined for begging and want of security for good conduct, that number would be 2,067, and the remaining 2,031, those who ought to be regarded as the real criminals. This number is the $\frac{1}{1427}$ of the whole nation; but if we compare the greater number, viz. 4,098, with the whole population, about one in 700 are confined in the prisons or correction-houses.

The state of the lower classes is nearly connected with the want of enlarged prisons and correction-houses. The latter establishments, as the invention of modern times, belong to a state of high civilization, and prove at the same time, both how strenuously society is exerting itself to recal to order and industry the idle and mischievous, and its impotence to attain its object. It is too true, that the number of those who have no sense of that honour, for the maintenance of which our ancestors were so solicitous, namely, to be independent of others, and to earn one's livelihood by one's own exertion, is increasing to an alarming extent. This indisputable fact results from bad crops, want of labour, difficulty of paying taxes, or from stupidity, idleness, drunkenness and immorality. If to this be added the annual loss to the state on these institutions, which is by no means inconsiderable, and which must probably increase continually in the same proportion as the institutions, the necessity that every man of honour should seek to alleviate, in this respect, the cares of government, will be evident. In 1816, the transport, maintenance and clothing of prisoners cost 108,225 rix-dollars, and in 1831, 363,539 rix-dollars, according to the report of the state exchequer. The public money appropriated to such purposes is 160,000 rix-dollars. The resolution taken at some parish meetings, that no person within their limits should receive an individual from the house of correction into his service, tends directly to counteract the regulations of the government, and is deserving of blame. Of what use are efforts to establish habits of industry and order, and in many instances, of workmanlike skill, among such persons, if no one will employ them?

He who has taken the pains to observe in what manner the greater part of the common people of Sweden live (that is, the small landowners and cottagers), may safely assert, that they would like to exchange their condition, as to food, cleanliness, order and care of the sick, with that of the correctionists at Stockholm. This is by no means alleged in a censorious spirit; but the author, with every one who informs himself concerning the houses of correction, cannot but do justice to the efforts of their directors, to promote a spirit of order, industry and morality in these institutions. It is however to be wished, that their management may be so ordered, that the expenses may not much exceed their incomes^(h). They were in the year 1830, as follows:

	IN STOCKHOLM.		In NORKO- PING.	In GOTHEN- BOURG.	TOTAL.
	In the Southern Correction house.	In the Northern Correction house.

In

^(h) It was, for example, not until a few months ago (this was written in 1831), that bränvin (whiskey) was withheld from the correctionists, as not only superfluous but even injurious. Let no one however believe that the correctionists are in an enviable situation, for in the southern establishment they work from five o'clock in the morning till eight o'clock in the evening; and in the northern institution, from four o'clock in the morning till eight in the evening, every day, with but few intervals*, both in summer and winter.

The number confined in the southern correction-house was, during the last year, about 1,000, but is now only 800. The number in the whole country in 1831 was 1,831; namely, in the southern correction establishment at Stockholm, 764; in the workhouse of Malmö, 371; in the workhouse of Carlskrona, 194; at Kungsholm, near Carlskrona, 196; in the Admiralty prison in the same town, 49; total, 1,574 men. Of women, there were in the same year, in the northern correction-house in Stockholm, 280; in the correction-house at Norrköping, 90; in that of Gothenbourg, 25; total, 395 women.

In the correction-house at New York, the income was, from the prisoner's labour, 40,545 dollars; the expenses, 36,266; revenue, 4,319 dollars.
By way of comparison, a kind of specification of the costs for the support of our correctionists may not be without interest.
In Stockholm, at the southern correction-house, with 622 prisoners, the expenses for their yearly nourishment (including eight gaolers), amounted to 27,087 rix dollars; their clothing to 9,003; fuel and lighting, 5,303; articles purchased, 229; medical care, 996; several extraordinary expenses, 2,140; payment to those correctionists who had performed full work, 4,004; payment to the civil officers, 4,257; payment to the attendants, 488; payment to the garrison, 4,522; total, 58,033 rix dollars.

That a full-sized man can live throughout the year on 4 sk. 9½ rst. per diem, as in Norrköping, or on 5 sk. 5¼ rst., as in Stockholm, where the food of the correctionists is very good, may indeed excite the surprise of many. Malthus, Say and others regard it is an evil to the working classes, when the portion of food for each individual is at too low a price, because the price of his daily labour is generally thereby depressed, and less adequate to procure for the workman the many commodities besides food which are objects of almost equally pressing necessity.

146⅔ rds. = 11 l.

It appears that the daily sustenance of every correctionist amounts, on an average, to 5½ sk., and when clothing, care and all costs are reckoned together, they amount to a sum of 11¾ sk. daily. The support of a cottager's household, consisting of husband, wife and three children, in the middle part of Sweden, costs yearly about 146⅔ r. d., according to the prices of last year; the husband being occupied during the whole year, and his wife having enough to do with the care of her children, so that neither she nor her husband can calculate on any additional earnings.

In Stockholm, a poor mechanic's household, consisting of husband, wife and 4 children, can hardly be supported on less than 546 r. d. banco annually, as follows:

Bread, meal, salad, potatoes and other vegetables - - -	120
Meat, butter, cheese, herrings and other fish - - -	176
Milk, beer, bränvin (or whiskey) - - - - -	26

Clothes - - - - -	60
Rent and furniture - - - - -	50
Taxes, medicines and sundries - - - - -	24

Hence will be seen that the master of such a family must earn daily, during the whole year, nearly 2 r. d. banco, and consequently no masons, carpenters, smiths, &c. can be included in this class. If the husband, wife or children are sick for any length of time, the state of such a family is far more deplorable than that of the agricultural peasantry of Sweden.

MEMORANDUM, detailing the Regulations for the support of the Poor in the Parish of St. Jacob and St. John, Stockholm.

THE number received in the poor-house of the parish of St. Jacob and John, is at present 166, who enjoy, besides lodging and firing, a monthly support of 1, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 rix-dollars banco for each person, and the sick and infirm receive 32 skillings banco per month in addition thereto. They are to provide themselves with food, which they have an opportunity of doing by a dietary held in the establishment. The person who keeps it enjoys certain advantages, such as free rooms, 11 fathoms of wood, 1 lb. of candles, free use of kitchen utensils belonging to the poor-house, and the compensation of 50 dollars banco annually for the restrictions made in regard to the sale of brandy. On the other hand, this person is bound to supply the poor with food, at the reduced prices of 8 r. d. 1 sk. and 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ skillings banco for each portion.

It is seldom that any person is admitted in the poor-house for life under 60 years of age.

Besides this poor-house, there is another establishment in the parish for the care of the poor, where all poor, sick or infirm persons of whatever age, are temporarily received, and enjoy nursing and attendance till their recovery, or becoming able to support themselves, and are then discharged to make room for others. These persons, to the number of 47, receive in the establishment besides house-room and firing, a monthly support of 32 sk., 1 dollar, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ dollar, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ dollar, up to 2 dollars banco, and are entitled to food at the dietary, at the same reduced prices as the others.

There is a separate hospital for the poor of the parish who have not the means of being attended to at their own homes, into which hospital they are admitted free of expense for medical attendance and medicines. For the rest, all poor of the parish who are sick have the right of applying to a doctor, paid for such purpose by the parish, and they are furnished with needful medicines, and many of them receive a monthly support for rent and fuel.

The persons received into the poor-houses are allowed to keep for themselves what they can earn by work, and for this purpose the parish keeps a workhouse from whence raw materials are delivered for them to take to their own home, or to make up in the workhouse, such as flax, tow, cotton and wool. This workhouse was intended in the beginning only for supporting the poor of the parish, but is now extended to all parishes in the north part of the town. On an average of the last year, 517 persons were monthly at work, and produced in the course of the year 10,272 lb. of linen yarn, 12,602 lb. of tow yarn, 459 lb. of cotton yarn, and 40 lb. of woollen yarn; further, 817 pairs of stockings of wool and cotton.

Besides these manufactures, 140 ells of linen have been woven in the workhouse, and about 200 cwt. of flax hackled.

The payments for the labour herewith, amounted to 4,166 rix-dollars banco. There is always a loss on the sale of these productions, which falls to the charge of the hospital.

REPLIES to the QUERIES of the Poor Law Commissioners.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—The extent of mendicity is not great; there are very few beggars to be seen in Sweden. Persons do apply for relief at the houses of individuals, but notorious mendicity and repeated importunate applications are punishable by law; and the system of passports being strictly enforced, the poor are much confined to their native places.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—There is no such relief.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—In towns, they are not billeted on householders; but in the country, one such person is billeted on each householder in turn for a week: he must bear a certificate from the clergyman; and all destitute able-bodied, of both sexes, when thus provided for, are required to labour.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—They are not boarded with individuals.

3. To

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no district houses of industry.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—There is no assistance given by religious institutions.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves? 6. Or in agriculture or on public works?—No work is thus provided.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—I believe that neither fuel, clothing nor money is in general thus distributed.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—The institutions of Sweden provide gratuitous education for the children of indigent persons; and sometimes a dinner, consisting of broth and bread, as well as, if absolutely necessary, certain articles of clothing. It is asserted, on respectable authority, that there is not one in 1,000 of the common people who cannot at least read. The clergy are the chief instructors. In one or more schools of the freemasons children have been apprenticed. The poor, as a body, are not relieved in this manner.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—The relatives of the destitute are not compelled to assist them.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—They are not assisted by loans.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—In the country, such persons, and all persons unable to support themselves, are billeted on householders, as described, No. 1, "Destitute able-bodied." In some of the cities there are poor-houses, as in Gottenburg, the "General Poor-house," No. 1 & 2, "District Houses," and the "Barrack," or common poor-house. Admission into the first is granted to persons impotent through age, or otherwise objects; they being citizens, widows, or children of citizens, or else servants, of both sexes, born in Gottenburg, having been 12 years in one service. The present number of inmates is 110. Admission into the two district houses is granted to old decayed lightermen, their wives or widows, old female servants, watchmen, porters at the iron wharf, their wives or widows, all of good character. These houses have now 153 inmates. Admission into the barrack is general; in it are 230 inmates, and they are compelled to work for the benefit of the house.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—Relief in money is afforded at the rate of 6*d.* to 4*s.* or 5*s.* per month: except in cases of extreme distress, this relief is only afforded during the severe weather. Bread is also distributed, 6 lbs. per month, made of rye, and in winter a small quantity of fuel. I do not find that clothing is given. The greater proportion of the funds must be expended on out-pensioners, and in the purchase of bread and fuel. I am speaking with reference to Gottenburg, where the levy for the poor in 1833 amounted to banco rix ds. 20,000, or 1,500*l.* sterling, and the population to 17,116.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—They are not thus boarded.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—Not in towns, but in the country they are billeted, as described under No. 1, "Destitute able-bodied."

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Their relations are not compelled to assist them.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—There are no district institutions for the reception of the sick, but there are district doctors, appointed by the crown, who administer gratuitous relief to the poor. The districts in the country are very large, some perhaps equal to such a county as Essex. At Gottenburg there is an hospital, endowed by private charity, into which persons are admitted on payment of 6*d.* per day; the indigent, gratis.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—There appear to be no regulations on the subject; members of the profession afford relief to the poor, gratis.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There are no such institutions.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are no other modes; if a malignant disease prevailed, like the cholera, the government would, no doubt, send medical men to the infected districts. The number of surgeons and physicians is small, and the population being widely spread, I apprehend that many people die annually from want of assistance. Pepper and the common potatoe-brandy are the specifics of the people for all disorders.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The father is obliged to support such children, the rate being according to his circumstances, say from 2s. to 7s. per month, until the child has attained the age of 15.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—They are not compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—They are not supported at the public expense. I apprehend that the mothers are compelled to support bastards, when the fathers are unable. In deciding cases of bastardy, the oath of the man is preferred to that of the woman. He may thus escape the responsibility by the denial of connexion. The pregnancy of a young female in service seldom occasions the loss of her place, nor does it spoil her prospects of marriage. An instance occurred some time ago, and many might be cited, of a young girl having had a child by another, and being afterwards married to a clergyman from the country, who was aware of the circumstance.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception? 5. Or billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Or boarded with individuals? 7. Or are their relatives compelled to support them?—I answer these questions in the negative. Orphans, foundlings and deserted children would be admitted into the poor-house.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception? 2. Or billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals? 4. Or are their relatives compelled to support them?—I answer these questions in the negative. Such objects would be admitted into the poor-house.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

—Common harmless idiots would be admitted into the poor-house. Dangerous lunatics would be confined in a mad-house, of which there is one in the vicinity of Gottenburg.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any and what effect?

1st. On the industry of the labourers? 2d. On their frugality? 3d. On the age at which they marry? 4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives? 5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—No person able to work is likely to prefer the support of the public charitable institutions to an independent subsistence. The allowance of victuals in those institutions is so small, as not to render it an object of desire. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the effects inquired into, under Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, have not been produced. In regard to question No. 5, the condition of the able-bodied self-supporting labourer of the lowest class is, I think, infinitely better than that of him subsisting on alms. The allowance of victuals has been noticed, and the allowance of money to out-pensioners is always insufficient to keep them in any degree of comfort. In the country, the poor billeted on their neighbours are perhaps better off; still (wages and employ being good) they exert themselves to remain independent.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—Able-bodied agricultural male labourers earn at the rate of 6d. to 9d. per day, without provisions, throughout the year. In towns, labourers earn from 10d. to 1s. per day, and good artizans from 1s. 6d. to 2s. per day, without provisions.

2. Is

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is general in the country, but not in towns.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—An average agricultural labourer may expect to earn in a year 153 dollars currency, or about 7*l.* 13*s.* sterling. Farm servants, however, generally reside with their employers, by whom they are fed and clothed. The peasants possess much of the land; but small farmers often hold of the landlord by the tenure of giving day's work. Strictly speaking, there are in Sweden few labourers on the same footing as in England.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—In towns, women are employed in weaving. In the country, in agricultural labour.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—In towns, women may earn, during summer, from 6*s.* to 9*s.*, during winter, from 4*s.* to 6*s.* per week; children under 16, may earn, in harvest, from 2*d.* to 3*d.* per day.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Yes; on the following food, viz. 11 bushels of rye, cost 1*l.* 5*s.*; 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ bushels of barley, 8*s.*; 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ ditto of pease, 5*s.*; 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ ditto of malt, 4*s.*; 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ ditto of potatoes, 3*s.* 2*d.*; 19 lbs. of salt, 1*s.*; 75 lbs. of herrings, 3*s.* 6*d.*; 19 lbs. of butter, 6*s.* 6*d.*; 3 lbs. of hops, 1*s.*; 19 lbs. of stock-fish, 2*s.* 3*d.*; 19 lbs. of pork, 4*s.* 6*d.*; half a cow, 15*s.*; about three pints of sweet milk daily, 15*s.* 2*d.*; and six pints of sour milk, in summer, daily, 6*s.* 6*d.*; 42 bottles of potato-brandy, 8*s.* 3*d.*; lodging and wood, 1*l.* 5*s.*; taxes, 5*s.*; sundries, 10*s.*; wages about 3*l.* 10*s.*, or, in the whole, say 10*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* The above statement applies to a small farmer; reduce it about one-third, and it may apply to a common (married) labourer in the country.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Seldom lay by anything.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—About perhaps an English acre.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The proprietors of the soil.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—In the country they pay no rent; their huts can be but of little value, say from 1*l.* to 2*l.* sterling, though warm and comfortable. In towns the rent would be about 2*s.* per month.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—No.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The average annual proportion by the last census of the quinquennium (1826 to 1830) was about 1 to 40. The same average annual proportion is given in the answers to the succeeding questions, Nos. 15 to 22 inclusive.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—Was about 1 to 30.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—Was as 1 to 131.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Was about 4 $\frac{1}{16}$ th.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—Was as 1 to 16.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—Was as one to five.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—As 1 to 2 $\frac{1}{2}$.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—Not calculated; deaths between the ages of 10 and 15, as 1 to 56.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Married under 20 years 1,819; between 20 and 30, 65,574; between 30 and 40, 22,062; between 40 and 50, 4,307; above 50, 1,623.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Want of means to support a wife, or sometimes want of the clergyman's certificate of the man or woman having duly taken the Sacrament within the year. The clergy, I have no doubt, exert their influence to prevent improvident marriages. A notorious bad character, not being admitted to the Sacrament, of course, cannot marry.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—I cannot answer this question.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Savings are generally kept in a private box, or deposited in the savings' banks. At Gottenburg, the sum of 276,735 rix-dollars banco, or 20,755 £., was in deposit on 31st December 1833. The number of depositors was about 4,000. The bank has been established 12 years.

Wednesday and Saturday.—Dinner: Pickled pork, 2 oz. 15 drs., sirop, 7 ½ drs., some turnips, beer, two pints, wheaten meal, 1 oz., salt, 7 ½ drs.

On Wednesday evening, barley meal, 5 oz. 10 drs.

On Thursday evening, rye meal, 5 oz. 10 drs, with 7 ½ drs. of butter each evening.

IN THE CASTLE AT ELFSBORG.

About 150 inmates, generally the worst description of offenders; such as in England would be transported for life, with hard labour.

Allowance of bread daily, 1 lb. 14 oz., and about 1 d. in money for necessaries. Not compelled to work, but they are allowed to dispose of any articles that they can manufacture.

MEMORANDUM.

The allowance of bread and beer in the poor-house, for decayed citizens (Fattig-huset), is in general more than the inmates consume; they often sell the excess. In the district-houses, Nos. 1 & 2, the allowance is complained of. At present, 15 oz. of excellent wheaten bread may be purchased for 1 ½ d. sterling, and of rye bread for ½ d. sterling. The use of wheaten bread is confined to the higher classes.

I may remark that money payments to the out-door poor form, in Gottenburg, a heavy item of the expenditure. The system of making such payments is, I think, censured by intelligent Swedes from the country, where the poor are billeted on their neighbours. The people, however, are moderate in their habits. Even in Gottenburg, a luxurious commercial place, servants do not eat the same food as families. The wheaten bread, beef and mutton of the dining-room are respected in the kitchen, in which rye bread, fish, milk, and as a treat, coffee, are only to be found.

The poor institutions of Gottenburg, are not of more than about 35 years standing, and some persons are of opinion that they tend to encourage applications and idleness. I am not competent to say. But one effect of public institutions must have been to ascertain the extent of want and misery. Claims are now made on the funds, which, in former days, were unheard of, or, if admitted and relieved by charitable individuals, were probably unrecorded.

The great moral curse of the population throughout Sweden, is the immense distillation of spirit from potatoes. Any man may distil, and an ordinary wine bottle of this coarse spirit does not cost, in Gottenburg, above 2 d. sterling. Measures will be proposed in the diet, now sitting, to restrict this distillation. On the whole, it may be said that the lower classes of Swedes are, generally, well-disposed; accustomed to hardships and a scanty diet, to the authority of masters who may administer corporal punishment, and brought up altogether by the established clergy (dissent not being permitted, or even thought of), they are respectful to their superiors, and convinced of the moral and religious propriety of self-exertion.

I must apologize for not having mentioned the county prison, at Gottenburg, in which the inmates are allowed 2 d. sterling per diem for necessaries.

HAMBURGH.

REPLIES to the QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS.

I. VAGRANTS.

QUESTION 1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer to Q. 1. Mendicity is prevented in Hamburgh by the interference of the police, who are instructed to arrest all beggars. The number of beggars in the streets does not exceed 200 to 300 annually. Begging through the means of petitions, and by personal application at houses, is resorted to, but does not go to a great extent. Parents sometimes employ their children to beg in the streets; but the vigilance of the police prevents this practice from being extensive. In the territory out of Hamburgh mendicity does not prevail to be an object of any notice.

The police restrains mendicity as much as possible. The beggars are taken up, imprisoned, and, according to circumstances, sentenced to the tread-mill or other punishments; and then the foreign ones are sent to their native place. Home beggars, after punishment, are again set free, except some of the miserable ones, who are placed in the poor-house. However, as there is a want of room in our houses of correction, we are often obliged to limit the number of prisoners, as well as the time of their imprisonment; therefore, on account of the shorter time of punishment, these beggars cannot be kept to any work, except the tread-mill, during the time of their arrest. A workhouse, very necessary for us, has been hitherto wanting.

By our Poor Laws no one must give alms to a beggar; but the good nature of the inhabitants of Hamburgh does not adhere strictly enough to this, and thereby they encourage mendicity.

Begging-children are in the same manner arrested and punished. On repeated arrests, they are placed in the poor-house and house of correction, where there are schools established for them.

The fechten (begging) of journeymen (an expression peculiar to this country, signifying a solicitation by journeymen of all trades at the doors for a trifle to help them on their journey) is not so frequent in the town as in the country.

The workhouse and poor-house are supported by the produce of interest of money, collections and contributions from the Treasury.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—Persons travelling for work, passing through Hamburgh, are allowed to remain a short time at the houses frequented by their trades: here they receive some relief, if they require it, and when obliged to proceed, the police assists them with a little travelling money.

When foreign journeymen come to Hamburgh, they must present themselves at their meeting-houses or houses of call, and at the police office, where their travelling books will be inspected, and a stay of a few days will be allowed them to seek for work, during which time they must live in their houses of call only. Should they not in the time prescribed find work, the travelling book is returned to them, and therein noted where they must go, and they must then depart immediately. In some guilds they receive a travelling penny, some of them also from the police. For those totally incapable the guilds provide during the time they are permitted to stay. When foreign journeymen who have had work, have been out of work for a certain period, they must also travel farther. For this reason the houses of call are under the particular control of the guilds and police authorities. By late legal regulations, all servants, male and female, are placed under the control of the police, and the foreign ones who are out of place are, according to circumstances, sent away. To other persons who are without means of subsistence, a short stay is also permitted by the police, if they can give a sufficient reason for their coming here.

Those who are entirely destitute seek their lodgings in the house of call for beggars. When these must again go away, they often receive a viaticum out of the police funds. Otherwise the stay of foreign beggars is prevented as much as possible; they are taken up, punished with imprisonment, and sent to their homes. In these houses of call another class of people has nestled itself, who, as they are natives, cannot be sent away. An attempt has been made to provide them with clothes and work, but with most of them of no lasting effect; comparatively speaking, the cholera has removed but very few of them. As already mentioned, room is wanting for them in the poor-house, and therefore we must leave them in the houses of call for beggars, and suffer them to seek for their support. On the other hand, we are obliged to tolerate these houses of call, as their inhabitants remain pretty much under the inspection of the police, and if any excesses be committed, the search after them is facilitated. The inmates, in some cases, belong to the most abandoned class.

II. DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—Poor are never quartered upon private people; but some of them, when they are compelled to leave their dwellings, and cannot find any others, are received into the workhouse for a short time (I. 1.)

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—With grown-up persons this is not the case.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—Some older ones not yet quite incapable, are received into the work and poor-house, where they are supplied with nourishment, and must work according to their strength; but this only happens after an inquiry by the police.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—Besides the poor-houses, Hamburgh has the Hospital of the Holy Ghost, the Gast Haus, the Hospital of St. Job, the Widow House, Kaland Hospital, and many other institutions, in many of which the people must pay a small sum for admission, or bring furniture with them; besides, they are almost all assigned for old people; few for men, the most of them for women; the relief is for the most part confined to free dwelling; food or pecuniary assistance is given only in a few of them.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—The institution for the poor has the clothing for children, which it distributes, made by the poor, but only a few tailors are thereby employed; whereas it puts several women in active employment, by making shirts and knitting.

6. To what extent, and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—Hamburgh itself has no agriculture; however, about 300 or 400 men are employed at the expense of the city, in making the roads and working on the ramparts, but only citizens; no foreigners.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—To healthy persons of both sexes, and under 60 years, as soon as they stand alone, no assistance is given; if there is more than one child with a woman, or with a widower, or with a man and wife three children or more, and it appears that their earnings are insufficient, a small weekly support is allowed them, particularly in consideration of the children, but commonly for the winter months only, which consists of 2s. 3d. in money, 1s. 3d. in soup tickets. Clothes are not given to grown-up persons, except a few shirts, poor beds and coverlets. In a severe frost turf is distributed. The institution for the poor draws its money from the interest of its capital, some collections, and considerable advances from the Treasury.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—In church schools, and schools founded by wills, 1,500 free scholars are received. Besides this, the institution for the poor causes about 3,200 children from six years of age to their confirmation to be sufficiently instructed in its schools. The girls are also taught knitting and sewing. Most of the children receive clothing; for nourishment the parents themselves must provide; regard being had to the pecuniary support granted them. After the confirmation, the institution assists the parents in placing the children in service and apprenticeship. In the Sunday schools about 400 children receive instruction; but as Hamburgh has few manufactories in which the children are employed, most of them are all the week idle, or carry on a business which is nearly allied to begging. Therefore, with most of them, the instruction is insufficient.

By charitable contributions waste schools have been established (where the children are taken care of during the day, while their parents are out at work from home), and supported by the same. Therein about 300 children from three to six years are received, but the parents must pay a small sum for school-money weekly. Therefore these waste schools are designed more for the children of women, who are thereby enabled to work from home.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Parents, brothers and sisters, and children of the poor are required to render them assistance, and men who have deserted their wives must pay them weekly or monthly aliment; but if a real sense of duty and good-will do not prevail, a promise is seldom to be obtained, as their own poverty and bad way of life render them incapable of doing so. Otherwise the parents are bound to maintain their children, and children their parents.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—There exists here an institution for making private advances in money, which, with a small capital, has done much good. The borrower must rather legitimate himself in regard to his honesty by a security, and must repay the money weekly in small instalments, but without interest.

III. IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—In Hamburgh, the poor-house (I. 1.) and other institutions (II. 4.) mentioned.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—On the part of the poor institution, by weekly pecuniary assistance, and soup tickets; in a severe cold, by a distribution of turf; in clothing, only shirts, straw sacks, and woollen coverlets; for dwelling they must themselves provide.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—There are no regulations for boarding the older people.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—We have nothing to do with quartering or billeting.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Vide II. 9.

IV. SICK.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—We have our general hospital for the sick, which will contain 1,200 patients, the poor gratis; others pay a moderate sum, according to their capacity. Several guilds have their own sick funds, out of which the cure of the sick is paid for to the hospital. The sick residing on the Hamburg territory are also received.

The hospital is supported by the interest of its capital, collections, and advances from the Treasury.

In the Cur-haus (cure-house), a part of the poor-house, which is designed for sick prisoners, other sick are, in some cases, also received.

The Freemasons' Hospital can maintain but few sick; there exist some sick unions. The Jews have rooms for their sick.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?

In the institution for the poor, the tending of the sick forms a considerable branch; physicians and surgeons are appointed; many persons who are otherwise not supported by money, receive free cure, free medicines, bandage, soup for the sick, if necessary, sick money for some weeks, and some few shirts and beds.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?

We consider it our duty to afford this assistance quickly, as by this momentary relief many a one is prevented from becoming poor.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—Married lying-in women incapable of providing for themselves are delivered gratis by the institution for the poor, and receive sick money for four weeks. The unmarried are sent to the delivery-room, which is under the management of the poor-house; after their recovery they must provide for their children themselves.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are some private female societies which provide for lying-in women and sick persons, but their operations are confined.

Several guilds have journeymen's funds, to which every one must contribute, out of which in case of sickness the cure and sick money are paid.

V. CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The fathers as well as the mothers are obliged to support illegitimate children; however, the father seldom acknowledges the child if he has not really the intention to marry the mother; if the father is able, the mother is generally settled with before the justice for a sum of money, and then she alone has to provide for the child.

It often happens, however, that the father does not acknowledge the child, and then the care of it falls upon the mother alone.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—Never, unless by way of an amicable accommodation.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—The Poor Institution provides for illegitimate children when the mother is incapable; however, it follows the principle, that the mother must in every case provide for the child, if she is not very sickly. The assistance afforded consists, (a) in free schooling only; (b) a grant of a weekly support; (c) in taking away the children, who are put out to board in the country; when they are so far grown up, provision is made for their instruction, and afterwards for their confirmation. The children are taken at the earliest age.

The placing them in the country has always proved very beneficial. The children grow up healthy in body and mind, and are almost always employed in agriculture.

Illegitimate children are also received into the Orphan House, but only when they are not foundlings, for a considerable sum of money for board, which is paid at once.

Orphans, Foundlings, or deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—The Orphan House

(a) Provides only for legitimate children of citizens of the city and its territory. If one of the parents is living, it only takes a part of the children, but none of the children to be received must be above ten years of age. No sick child is received.

(b) It must receive foundlings when their parents are not known.

(c) Deserted children are received only when they are legitimate.

The Orphan House is supported by the interest of its capital, some collections, and advances from the Treasury.

The Poor Institution, on the contrary, receives, (a) Orphans, without particular regard to their being legitimate or illegitimate, or their ages; sick children are also taken care of. (b) Foundlings belong to the Orphan House; (c) also deserted children, when the Orphan House will not receive them.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—We have no billeting or quartering of children. Only in particular cases are children children delivered by the Poor Institution to persons in the city, but for a bonification, until they can be ultimately provided for.

6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—The manner of placing the children in the country by the Poor Institution is stated in V. 3. The Orphan House also sends the children into the country till their sixth year.

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Grandfathers and grandmothers must provide for their grandchildren, if they are able.—See V. 2.

VI. CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—
(a) Cripples are received into the general hospital, if there is a probability that their situation can be bettered by medical treatment. If they are found incurable, they are discharged; and if they cannot support themselves, either assistance is afforded them by the Poor Institution, or a provision is made for their reception into the poor-house, or some other institution. Sick crippled children are also placed in the country by the Poor Institution, where, as experience shows, their situation is perceptibly improved, particularly with those who are scrophulous and have crooked legs; however, a few already grown up are left in the country, as they can be supported there at a less expense than in the city.

(b) For deaf and dumb children we have an institution supported by charitable contributions, in which their capacities are called into action as much as possible, and they are enabled to obtain their subsistence. A part of the children lives in the institution. For grown-up ones the Poor Institution provides.

(c) We have also an Asylum for the Blind, founded and supported by charitable contributions. The children therein are taught as much as possible, but they have only instruction, no dwelling and food. The Poor Institution supports some young blind children in the country. For grown-up ones the Poor Institution must provide, if they are otherwise destitute.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—We know nothing of quartering or billeting.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Already answered by VII. 1. a. b. c.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—See V. 2. 7.

VII. IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—
(a) Idiots are received into the General Hospital to attempt their recovery. After their discharge, the Poor Institution assists them, if necessary; they are also in some cases received into the poor-house.

(b) Lunatics are sent to the General Hospital. By the careful treatment of the physicians, they are often so far recovered that they can be returned to their families. The incurable remain in the General Hospital, if the families can afford to pay a moderate sum for their support there.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—We know nothing of billeting and quartering.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—There is no arrangement on the part of a public institution for boarding them. However, there are some private institutions where persons of property can be placed at board, the proprietors of which also endeavour to effect their recovery.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and in what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Vide V. 2.

VIII. EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

1st. On the industry of the labourers? } The active and industrious want no assistance,
2d. On their frugality? } nor do they calculate upon any. Many an unfor-fortunate or thoughtless person is saved from utter ruin; but he who has once given himself up to idleness and drinking, cannot be reformed, even by punishment. The assistance to those who can still earn something is, therefore, as sparing as possible; on the other hand, the Poor Institution is less strict in granting free schooling to the children, and most ready in affording medical assistance and medicine.

3d. On the age at which they marry?—Among the lower classes, marriages before twenty-five or thirty years are seldom, therefore the assistance which it may become necessary to afford is not brought into consideration. The thoughtless unlawful connexions, concubinage, and their consequences, need not, in this question, be mentioned.

4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—The parental feeling appears to be preserved among the well disposed. This is also mostly the case with the children, as the dependence and affection of parents and relations is, by better instruction, increased; but among grown-up children, we often discover that they are not ashamed to suffer their parents to fall upon public charity.

 HAMBURGH.

5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? [See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law Selections.]—The self-supporting labourer must, it is true, work hard for his bread, as living in Hamburg is dear; nevertheless it is not made easier to those who obtain support, as this is limited as much as possible, and he is besides compelled to endeavour to get employment. The situation of the latter is therefore not preferable. The idle beggar, properly speaking, commonly leads a very miserable life, and is accustomed to pass many a day without nourishment; however, he has most difficulty in denying himself spirituous liquors; but it is notorious that he does not fail to enjoy himself if the harvest has been abundant.—The remaining statistical questions, and particularly those relating to agriculture, I am for the most part unable to answer properly.

IX. LABOURERS, &c.

As Hamburg has no agricultural population that can properly be so called, and few artisans, most of the following questions do not apply to the state of Hamburg; those that do apply to it, are answered as accurately as the information to be obtained will allow. The labourers of Hamburg are chiefly in the character of porters, who are employed in the transport and care of merchandize, and whose wages and earnings greatly exceed and admit of no comparison with the wages of agricultural labourers.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—

2. Is piece-work general?—

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—

4. State, as nearly as you can, the annual average expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—

5. Is there any and what employment for women and children?—

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?— $3\frac{5}{8}$ per cent.; Number of deaths, 4,764; population, 130,000.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?— $3\frac{3}{4}$ per cent., exclusive children born dead, amounting,

Born living	-	-	-	4,867
„ dead	-	-	-	315 to about $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—1,721 marriages in population of 130,000, or 1 in $75\frac{5}{10}$.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—3,731 children born in wedlock; about $2\frac{1}{2}$ to a marriage.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?— $4\frac{5}{8}$ to 1.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—770, on a population of 130,000 souls, or 1 in $168\frac{8}{10}$.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their tenth year?—1,707, on a population of 130,000 souls, inclusive of those who died before the end of their first year, or 1 in $76\frac{1}{10}$.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their eighteenth year?—162 between 10 and 20; therefore, total under 20 years, 1,869, or 1 in

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Unknown.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Unknown.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Unknown.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Chiefly in the Savings Bank.

GENERAL HOSPITAL in Hamburgh," page 74.

THE general consumption of victuals is prepared in the kitchen; the dinner hour of the invalids is 12 o'clock; that of the inspectors, who are partly employed in distributing the provisions, is at 2 o'clock, because many dishes are prepared for them which would not suit invalids.

The provision for the invalids is divided into the General Hospital Diet, and the so-named extra provision. Every invalid who gives nothing, or at least very little, for his board, receives the former as soon as the physician thinks it is suitable, as well as all the attendants, nurses, workmen, &c.; the latter every invalid receives as soon as the physician orders it, without reference to board and lodging-money, and other circumstances; besides which, every boarder receives it daily whose board amounts to more than 7 marcs a week. The former (hospital diet) is prepared in cauldrons, and the latter (extra provision) on the hearth in the little kitchen.

The dinner of the usual hospital diet consists of weak broth, with barley or rice, sometimes with potatoes, and of beef and vegetables. The vegetables consist of potatoes, potatoes and carrots, sourcroot, cauliflower, turnips, and different kinds of pulse, such as white beans, yellow pease, grey pease, green pease, with roots; in summer it is varied with fresh vegetables, different according to the season.

If fresh vegetables are cooked, they are done quite plain; but if dried ones are given, potatoes are cooked with them.

The breakfast, which is distributed at 7 in the morning, is meal soup, made of wheaten meal, with some butter; the evening meal, given at 6 o'clock, consists of grits, either oat-meal, barley, or buckwheat, or in one or both cases, warm beer, according to the physician's orders.

The usual beverage of the inhabitants of the hospital is weak brown beer, which is distributed in the morning.

Particular bakers in the city make the bread from wheat flour, for the especial use of the hospital. Several of the workmen receive pure rye bread.

In regard to particular provisions for the invalids, the physicians are certainly bound to prescribe according to the greatest cheapness, but at all events not too limited. To the usual prescriptions of this extra-provision belong, to the dinner, water soup, soups of dried fruit (such as cherries, plums, prunes, apples, bilberries), oat soup, milk, meats, sago with wine or milk, rice balls with wine or milk, veal soup, strong beef soup with or without rice, boiled eggs, boiled fresh-water fish, roasted veal, veal fricassee, potatoes, young fresh vegetables, dried plums, apple sauce, &c. In this case the breakfast consists of warm beer, the same for the evening, or sago, and fruit soups for those severely ill.

The distribution of the provisions and beverage is done in the kitchen, where a bell, placed at the back of the administration's building, assembles the attendants and nurses at particular hours in the day for this purpose. The beverage, as well as the morning and evening meals, are given out by the superintendents in the requisite number of portions; the superintendents are personally present in the kitchen with their servants at the distribution of the dinner, and receive the daily maintenance of the establishment according to their account books.

These account books contain, according to the number of the rooms and of the beds in the same, next to the name of the invalid or other inhabitant of the station, the prescribed diet for the latter; next to the usual hospital diet, the quantity of the portion; next to the extra-provision the special statement of the same. According to this account book, each superintendent takes the division of the eating to each room of his station; from this he makes every evening an extract, which contains the consumption of the hospital diet, according to the portions of different sizes, and an accurate account of the extra-provision given out, as well as the account of the victuals and beverage distributed to the boarders and inspectors. These extracts are laid the following morning, from all the stations, before the hospital physician, for his signature, and then sent to the provisor, who is charged with the care of the economy.

The whole portions consist of $1\frac{1}{2}$ pound of bread, 4 ounces of meat, 1 measure of soup, 1 measure of vegetables; three quarter portions, 18 ounces of bread, 3 ounces of meat, 1 measure of soup, 1 measure of vegetables; half portions, 12 ounces of bread, 2 ounces of meat, 1 measure of soup, 1 measure of vegetables; the quarter portions, 6 ounces of bread, 1 ounce of meat, 1 measure of soup, 1 measure of vegetables. The eight portions, 3 ounces of bread, 1 measure of soup; besides which, 1 measure of meal soup or grits is given each time, morning and evening. The bread and meat are cut into different portions in the kitchen. The daily portion of beer consists in a whole bottle for the attendants and workmen, and a half one for the invalids.

The portion of the particular beverages is each time one jug full, which contains about $1\frac{1}{2}$ bottle. Every attendant and workman receives besides, daily, one-eighth bottle of brandy; if the same is ordered for an invalid, the portion consists of one-sixteenth of a bottle. Wine is only given out at the special order of the physician, in which case the kind of wine to be given, as well as the daily portion, is determined by the physician; the superintendent informs the provisor of the order, and receives the wine from him, and which he himself distributes.

 HAMBURG.

The hospital gives tea, coffee, sugar and butter only to those boarders whose board amounts to the above mentioned sum; cheese is also given at the physician's orders; these several articles are distributed in fixed weekly and monthly quantities. The other invalids are, however, not denied the enjoyment of these things as soon as they are either brought to them by their relations, or that they can procure them by their own means, provided the physician's permission has been obtained.

But in order in this respect to avoid any communication beyond the hospital, there are two little grocers' shops established in the latter, in each wing one; they are situated in the front part of each wing, on the ground floor, with a window looking into the lobby; the stores are procured by the provisor, and the sale is made at the fixed prices of other grocers for the account of the hospital, and the grocers, at the sale of these stores, are obliged to give in an account of them: the following articles are in these shops; coffee, black tea, sugar, butter, tobacco, snuff, pipes, and besides many articles for writing and sewing. With regard to these beverages, hot water is given out at different periods during the day in the kitchen. After every distribution in the kitchen, as well as after the utensils in the rooms have been used, both must be immediately cleaned by the attendants. Those persons, such as the upper cook, men cooks, women cooks, bread cutters, char women, &c., who are appointed to look after the work in the kitchen, have been already mentioned above. The superintendence over these persons is managed by the housekeeper. The different distributions in the kitchen are, according to what has been just quoted, daily, as follows:

Morning	6 o'clock	-	-	-	Tea.
—	7	—	-	-	Meal, soup and warm beer.
Noon	- 12	—	-	-	Dinner for invalids.
Afternoon	2	—	-	-	Dinner for the inspectors.
—	4	—	-	-	Tea.
Evening	6	—	-	-	Grits and warm beer.
—	7	—	-	-	Beverage and tea for invalids.

In the maintenance of about 1,300 persons, the consumption of the General Hospital Diet was daily the following; (from which return the proportion observed in preparing the same will be seen)—

460 portions of warm beer for breakfast, require 44lbs. of wheat and rye bread, 18lbs. of treacle and one cask of beer.

460lbs. of beef and veal which, when cleared from the bones and sinews, gives 1,100 portions; of these 460lbs., 300 lbs. are taken for soup, and 600 portions of strong beef soup boiled from it, which is given at the order of the physician to the invalids, morning, noon and evening; the rest of the meat is roasted.

To 720 portions of the usual hospital soup are added the remains of the meat and bones of the day before, the surperfluous fat of boiled meat, about 2lbs., which is chopped very fine, and 30lbs. of rice or 24lbs. of barley; besides this are added the remains of potatoes and roots of the previous day.

As for the vegetables, 12 sacks of potatoes contain about 1,000 portions, to which are added 16lbs. butter or fat and 6lbs. of salt; if pulse is given at the same time, then only six sacks of potatoes are used.

550 portions fixed for the evening meal, require 70lbs. of grits, 6lbs. of butter, 2lbs. of salt. If barley in milk is given, 80lbs. of barley, and 80 jugs of milk are requisite for 660 portions.

660 portions of buck wheat grits require 86lbs. of grits and 8lbs. of butter; from time to time rice in milk is given at the evening meal, in which case the warm beer is omitted; then 1,200 portions require 180lbs. of rice and 100 jugs of milk.

TRANSLATION.

THE 48th REPORT of the GENERAL INSTITUTION for the POOR, containing an Account of the RECEIPTS and DISBURSEMENTS in the year 1832, with a special Exposition of the Effect of the Institution during that period, published in April 1833.

IN the firm conviction that our General Institution for the Poor which, as it is alone owing to the general interest and co-operation of the whole of our fellow citizens, can only exist with and through the same, the committee have always considered it as their first indispensable duty, to give the greatest publicity to the management thereof intrusted to them. To what extent it has fulfilled the same, the long list of Reports laid before the public, at first in periods of a few months, and afterwards yearly, with a few exceptions, will shew. Not to trouble the public with repeated details, they have for some years confined themselves to accompanying their several accounts with brief explanations, and a statement of the result of their deliberations; but they now find themselves compelled anew, by a special exposition of the efficacy of this Institution in the last year, to give the public a complete view of the whole effect of their operations.

To enable therefore our fellow citizens to form an idea of the number of demands upon our Institution, we shall begin with a list of the number of cases laid before our two

Receiving

Receiving Deputations for poor old paupers and families of children (which assemble every month, and indeed, each of them twice, three or four times), for their decision: That an account of every case here introduced must have been previously received from the competent officer; that, (besides a Report of the Physician for the Poor, and a complete inventory of their effects), all documents which can in any way be produced, relating to the circumstances of the family in question, as also an opinion of the curator and overseer of the district must be added; and, lastly, that in every case it must be made an indispensable condition that the pauper present himself with his whole family before the Receiving Deputation, it is unnecessary to mention. On the decision of this deputation, however, depends, in respect to grown-up paupers, the grant of a fixed weekly support for a longer time, as also a pecuniary assistance for one time, clothing and the delivery of beds; in respect to children, the placing them in the country, and the grant of free instruction and clothing at their confirmation. The remaining numerous branches of our administration, are completely separated therefrom, which, as such, are managed partly by deputations, consisting of several members, partly by particular overseers named for that purpose, and partly by the district overseers and other officers.

Therefore, to obtain a complete view of all the services of our complicated Institution, it will be necessary to look at the three chief objects of the same. Provision for grown up healthy paupers, for children and for sick paupers.

The number of our registered paupers has unfortunately for some years been constantly increasing. We had,

Alarming as this continually increasing burden upon the fund appears, we must not however, as complaints of increasing poverty are heard in almost all countries and cities, look for the cause of it exclusively in the circle of our small state.

One of the chief local causes is, next to the degeneration of our lowest classes during the French occupation, indisputably the immense influx of foreigners without means of subsistence, who are enticed by the brisk traffic of our large city, and who, disappointed in their hopes, commonly, after a few years, become a burden to the general institution for the poor. Notwithstanding the principle not to grant support to foreigners who have not acquired a right to a domicile in Hamburgh is observed by us as strictly as possible, among the 2,846 registered paupers in the beginning of December in last year, there were found 1,395 foreigners, 430 of whom alone were born in the neighbouring State of Hanover and 326 in the Duchy of Holstein. If we add the remark, that here (as in all the following statements) in families, only the head thereof, and indeed where both parents are living, only the husband is taken into consideration, that the female part of our paupers consists almost universally of persons who have formerly been servants, and that by far the greater part of these, as is well known, come to us from other countries, it follows that considerably more than the half of the grown up paupers provided for by us belong to foreign countries. There were among the number mentioned,

From which it is sufficiently shown that helpless old age is the chief object of our support.

That we further extend our care, particularly to individual women and girls, as also to large families of children, appears by the following numbers: among the before-mentioned 2,846 registered paupers there were,

Individual women and girls	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	1,061

The individual women and girls maintain themselves, of course, almost universally by the work of their hands, and therefore we reckoned—

The number of these amounted to	-	-	-	-	-	-

The remaining number consists, with few exceptions, almost entirely of poor mechanics. As a particular calculation of all the individual branches of trade would show no result, we content ourselves with remarking here, that we have again convinced ourselves that three of our trades particularly lay claim to our support. The list of our paupers contained, namely,

Shoemakers	-	-	-	-	-	-	136
Tailors	-	-	-	-	-	-	99
Joiners	-	-	-	-	-	-	53

Besides the weekly support granted by us, the eight oldest of our registered paupers receive, in consequence of a legacy left some years ago by the deceased lady of Senator Schwarz for this purpose, yearly, a sum of 20 marks. This support was received in the year 1832 by five women and three men. The youngest of these was in December 92 years old, the eldest 103½ years old.

Besides this, we are also enabled, by means of the Cathedral Poor Fund given up to our administration in the year 1805, to grant a not inconsiderable yearly pension to some persons who are ashamed to apply for assistance. This fund was at that time placed in our hands by a decree of the Senate, upon condition that the capital should never be touched, but that the interest thereof, after the death of the then beneficed persons, the greatest part of whom received a very small yearly stipend, should be distributed in sums of from 50 to 100 marks to poor persons who were ashamed to apply for support. The individuals who formerly received benefit therefrom have been dead for several years, and now there are ten pensions of 100 marks yearly granted by the deputation appointed by the committee of the poor for the management of this fund.

Nourishing Food.

To enable our poor daily to procure nourishing food for 1 schilling the committee for the poor in the year 1800 raised a considerable sum for erecting a Rumford stove and distributing the soup made therein. The number of these stoves was by degrees increased to four in the city and one in the suburbs St. George. The chief inspection thereof is committed to an overseer, but to each stove is an overseer or curator, who purchases the necessary articles and directs what shall be prepared daily. Each of the cooks provides the fuel himself and is compensated with 8 schillings for 100 portions of soup. For his trouble in cooking the same he receives upon condition of preparing fresh soup—

But if more than one kettle is required, he receives for the second kettle a proportionate compensation. The goodness of the soup is examined daily by one of our curators in turns, who enters his opinion thereon in a protocol attached to each stove.

The preparation of the original Rumford soup we have discontinued for some years, as a food composed of so many ingredients was not liked by our poor. By simplifying the same by the introduction of a change four times in the week, and a stricter inspection, we have succeeded since some years in considerably increasing our sale thereof.

Clothing.

Complete clothing, with only a few exceptions, has been given to grown-up paupers since 1812, we being of opinion (as remarked in one of our former reports) that we could at first limit our expenditure in this respect, while the want of the same is for the greatest part relative, and economy, order and cleanliness are capable of lessening it very much.

Therefore by a resolution made by our Poor Committee in the year 1817, our curators are directed, in order to promote the health and cleanliness of the poor, to take care as much as possible, that each of them has two shirts. Each pauper who has no fit shirt, receives two, he who has one, an additional one.

Two overseers are charged with the purchase of the linen, and the making and marking of the shirts, but the delivery of the same is left to the discretion of the curators and overseers of the particular district.

Beds.

Every one of the paupers who is really in want of a convenient and warm bed, upon the application of the curator and overseer of the district, gets from the receiving deputation, a sack of straw, a bolster and a blanket. Formerly it was the duty of the curators and overseers of the districts, in each particular case, to procure these articles, but since 1830, the care thereof is assigned to one of our overseers.

Our stock of poor beds consisted on the 1st January 1832, of

Formerly as soon as the thermometer was fallen only one degree below the freezing point, a weekly addition of from 4 to 12 schillings was granted to each of our registered paupers, for this purpose, besides the universal increased support; but as these additions in money for the most part failed in their object, a delivery of the firing itself has, since 1830, been introduced in their stead.

The care of this delivery is assigned to a special committee, which contracts yearly for the quantity of turf which may be probably necessary. This is deposited for account, and at the risk of the deliverer, in a warehouse given to him gratis, but he is bound, for a proportionate compensation previously fixed upon, to deliver, by his servants, the necessary quantity of sods, on fixed days and hours, and at appointed places, and distribute the same to our poor, upon production of the turf tickets. He receives payment only for the sods really delivered, the amount of which he must show by the tickets received; for any quantity remaining over, he is paid five per cent. interest. In this manner we exercise the strictest control, without paying any officer for this purpose.

Upon the commencement of the cold, the committee assembles every Friday, to determine whether a distribution of turf be necessary, and how large the same is to be. If it is determined, then the messengers for the poor are immediately provided, together with the weekly money, with the number of turf tickets necessary for each district. These tickets consist of cards, each for 25 sods, which number is expressed thereon in letters and figures, and have, besides the stamp, the mark of the general institution for the poor, and the counter signature of one of the members of the committee. The poor are directed to appear with their cards, precisely on fixed days and hours, at the places appointed for each district, with sacks or baskets. The poor messengers are bound to appear on the appointed days and hours, at the distribution of the turf to the poor of their respective districts, to prevent disorder; at the same time the overseers of districts must arrange with their officers that one of them be always present to inspect the distribution.

The gains acquired by their own industry appear so indisputably to be the most suitable support for paupers capable of working, that it should be as much as possible the only one offered them. After our former establishments for work were, during the French occupation, obliged to be discontinued, we were continually endeavouring to find out some employment for our poor, the exercise of which required no great skill, but at the same time without prejudicing those who had hitherto, without becoming a burden to their fellow citizens, with difficulty supported themselves by their own hands. The consideration of these two indispensable conditions, particularly necessary with us, where the pressure on all kinds of easier gains is so great, especially as our Institution cannot employ the capital intrusted to it in extensive commercial speculations, has hitherto placed insuperable difficulties in our way.

How much the more pleasing, therefore, must be the offer made us in the course of last year by the respectable commercial house of Emanuel & Son, by which both conditions were answered as much as possible. This house agreed, upon condition of delivering the necessary materials and payment of moderate wages, to have woollen stockings and socks knitted by our poor for exportation. We did not hesitate to agree to this immediately, and accordingly a contract was made with this house; in pursuance of which it delivers for a year in advance the necessary quantity of knitting yarn for 2,000 dozen pair of socks, and engages to send socks knitted by our poor beyond sea, or at all events not to sell them at any place within ten miles (German) of Hamburg, and also, as much as it depends upon them, to take care that none of the articles come afterwards to this market. The distribution of this work, which will begin on the 1st June next, as also the inspection over the same, is assigned to our district overseers and officers, and at the same time resolved, in order to procure our poor a better introduction to the same, by the distribution of the support otherwise given them, not to take this into account, but rather to grant those earnings to our registered poor as a clear augmentation.

We cherish the hope that patriotism, as well as the spirit of speculation so active with us, may induce many of our fellow citizens to follow this example, and thus enable our Institution hereafter to give to those who are prevented by the infirmities of age or by sickness, from active occupation, a sufficient pecuniary support, but to direct all the others to support themselves by their own hands. Of those who are capable but will not work, a great number will, to be sure, be found: the only help against this would perhaps be an Institution, under a strict inspection of the police for compelling them to work, the establishment of which, from the undeniably increasing degeneration of our lowest class of people, is sensibly felt from year to year.

In the last year, the employment given to our poor was confined to the making of the clothing presented by us.

For sewing 5,596 shirts at 4 schillings, we paid Ct marks 1,399.

The care of purchasing and making the confirmation clothing was in the year 1832 left to the particular district overseers and officers, therefore we cannot accurately state the gain which thereby accrued to our poor. In the year 1831, when the same was assigned to an overseer, it amounted to—

Dwelling.

To procure for our lower class of people dwelling as good and as cheap as possible, a row of small dwellings was built in the years 1797 and 1799, at the instance of the Committee for the Poor, on the Dammthor Rampart, and without the Steinthor. The first row of these buildings contained 75, the second 97 booths and rooms, each of which is under the care of two overseers. Besides this, we are enabled, by Scheller's will, to afford free dwelling and a small yearly support to 14 poor journeymen masons or their widows, upon a property in the Kurzen Strasse. The administration of this legacy is also committed to two overseers.

Burial.

In regard to this assistance, we have continually to struggle against old prejudices. Still are many of our poor withheld, by the condition for a long time indispensibly attached to the grant of pecuniary support, from claiming our assistance to be buried as paupers. As no abuse is to be apprehended in respect to the application for the same, the officers alone have the power, according to circumstances, to give a free burial to those poor in their districts who till then have not been registered by the institution for a fixed support, and to refer them to the overseer who is charged with the care of the burial of our poor.

PROVISION FOR THE CHILDREN OF OUR POOR.

Also in the last year the Committee saw itself compelled from urgent reasons to exceed considerably the sum formerly fixed for the schools, as also the number of children fixed as a maximum to be received. As long as a general school regulation does not establish a sufficient number of properly conducted public schools, and place the private schools besides in every respect under strict control, and what must always be looked upon as absolutely necessary, a compulsion on the part of the children to go to them, (notwithstanding in Hamburgh, exclusive of those educated in our poor institution and orphan house, and work and poor-house, nearly 1,500 children receive free schooling) from the dearness of the good private schools, as also from the consideration that as it rests with the parents to send their children to school or not, without our interference many children would grow up without any instruction, we shall continually find ourselves compelled to heap exceptions upon exceptions.

The whole of our schools are subordinate to a School Committee, composed of four clergymen, delegated by the government at the desire of the Committee for the Poor, and of five overseers.

The whole territory of the General Institution for the Poor is divided into four school districts: in each of these districts, one of the clergymen has charged himself with the special care of the distribution of the children in the schools, with whom an overseer is joined.

Our schools are partly schools for instruction, partly working schools for the girls: in both of them the children are paid for by the head, according to a tarif fixed by the Poor Committee. According to the original arrangement, there should be in each district three classes of schools for instruction; namely, reading schools, middle schools, and higher schools.

In the first of them, the children were to remain till about their ninth year, in the second till about their twelfth, and in the last, till their confirmation. However, to prevent the disadvantage which may easily arise, from a frequent change of schools, the middle schools and the higher schools are joined, when the personality of the teachers and the locality allow it; however, in such a manner that the children can be instructed according to their capacities, in different classes, partly by the head teacher, and partly by under-teachers under his inspection, whom the head teacher can only appoint by the consent of the competent clergyman previously obtained.

The boys generally frequent the day-schools; the evening schools are frequented by those only who must, during the day, work in manufactories or other places, to assist their parents by their earnings.

The girls are mostly, at first, instructed in the girls' schools in reading and knitting; when they can read, which is generally the case about their ninth year, they go to the day-schools either for half a day, or to the evening schools, while they remain the rest of the time in the knitting school. After the completion of their 11th year, when they have acquired the proper dexterity in knitting, they are placed in the sewing schools, and remain there till confirmation.

The objects of instruction in the schools are, as usual, religion, writing, reckoning (particularly from the head), German language, and also a little history, geography and natural history. Here the children receive then necessary school-books and writing materials. In the work-schools, where the work is for the account of the school-mistresses, who have also to provide the necessary materials, every thing is taught which belongs to knitting and sewing; in the last season of frequenting the sewing schools, also darning and marking. Some girls who have distinguished themselves, after confirmation, receive half a year's instruction in ironing, as a reward for their diligence.

The teachers of the higher schools are bound, during the last season, to accompany the children to be confirmed, every Sunday to church, to hear the noon sermon, and to question them upon it, in order to accustom them to go regularly to church, and to attention to the divine service.

The work-schools were frequented by 1,361 girls.

Every possible care is taken that the children go regularly to school; that they are industrious, and behave well. Each scholar has his testimony-book, which must be filled up every month by the masters and mistresses; and in which, besides the general remarks upon industry and cleanliness, every whole or half day on which the children stay away must be noticed: these testimony-books are shown to the clergymen from time to time, for their perusal; and especially they are informed of every thing which concerns the children. The clergymen hold a meeting in the Stadthouse as often as they find it necessary, but commonly every quarter, in conjunction with the overseer or officer associated to them, and also a second overseer or officer in turns, to inflict punishments: before these the children, for whom the usual school discipline is not sufficient, are summoned, with their parents; the parents, when the fault of their children neglecting school lies with them, are admonished; and upon repetition, when they receive pecuniary assistance, are punished by withholding a part thereof for some weeks. The children are warned, sentenced to corporal punishment in the schools, and upon frequent repetition, till now, delivered over to the police authorities, with the request either to sentence them to an imprisonment for one or a few days, or, upon any great transgressions, to place them in the punishing school of the work and poor-house till their confirmation. But as the measures hitherto taken, and particularly the imprisonment, have had but little and sometimes a bad effect, the Committee for the Poor at the beginning of this year, was obliged to direct the establishment of a particular punishing school, (perhaps more properly called a Reformation School), to which such children are sent, and kept to learning and working for a longer time, from eight o'clock in the morning till eight in the evening, under a strict inspection. The particulars of this establishment will appear in our next Report.

Children under six years receive no schooling; however, the Committee for the Poor has, in the last year, also extended its care to these; it having, with the consent of the Senate, granted to the administration of the Warte Schulen, which have already shed such rich blessings, a capital of 20,000 specie Ct for the purchase of property; however, with the reservation of the power of giving notice for repayment of the same whenever it thinks proper.

Those children who, for want of clothes, either cannot observe a proper cleanliness, or cannot go to school at all, and whose parents, it is shown, are unable to procure them, receive the necessary clothes. The maximum, however, which can be given them yearly, is,—

For boys - - two shirts, 1 jacket, 1 trowsers, 2 pair of stockings, 2 pair of wooden slippers.

For girls - - two shifts, 1 stays, 1 gown or petticoat, 2 pair of stockings, 2 pair of wooden slippers.

Accordingly, in the last year were distributed, to 2,424 children,—

1,740 shirts.	197 gowns.
1,862 shifts.	358 petticoats.
467 jackets.	1,566 pair of stockings.
502 trowsers.	1,548 ditto - wooden slippers.
175 stays.	5 ditto - shoes and boots for cripples.

The procuring of these articles, (which, as before mentioned, with the exception of the wooden slippers, are made entirely by our poor,) is assigned to one of the overseers of the School Committee.

We present those children who have constantly attended our schools, upon their leaving the same, as a last gift, with a more or less complete dress, according to their wants, not only that they may appear properly attired at the Communion Table, but particularly that they may not, by their outward appearance, be prevented getting forward. Therefore, in the last year, 540 shirts were given to 309 children, and for other articles of dress, Ct 2,888.

Besides this, the School Committee has assigned the care of placing the children confirmed out to service to one of its members. This is effected chiefly by four register offices, which, according to agreement, receive no registering money, but 3 Ct for every child placed in service. In this manner, in the last year, 25 boys and 12 girls were put out to service.

Lastly, the School Committee has the administration of a pupil fund. The little which our poor (whose orphan children are entrusted to our care) leave behind, is put out to interest for their benefit, and, with the interest thereon, paid to them when they become of age.

Already for several years, the shares of some former scholars of our Poor Institution, who, after advertisement, had not presented themselves to receive the same, have been given over to the School Committee, that it might, in pressing cases, apply them for the benefit of such of the confirmed, who, as scholars of the Poor Institution, had deserved our favour. Out of this fund, a supply was given them on their being put apprentices to trades, and in the last year, Ct marks 207, were paid for 14 boys.

Orphan children who are not proper objects for the orphan house, as also such who, for particular reasons, must be taken from their parents, are, as is known, universally placed by us in the country, and most of them on the other side of the Elbe, where, as long experience has taught us, they are well taken care of.

The payment of the Board for these children, is according to the following tarif:

For children, till the 3d year: quarterly 15 Ct, and half-yearly 7 Ct 8 schgs, for clothes.

For children, from the 3d till the 8th year inclusive: quarterly 12 Ct for board, and half-yearly 9 Ct for clothes.

Their schooling is paid by the foster parents.

Children of eight years old, till confirmation, must, in summer, earn their board and cloathing themselves. For the winter half year, from Michaelmas to Easter, 24 Ct for board, 9 Ct for clothes, with the schooling and confirmation expenses are paid.

After confirmation, nothing more is paid. In serious illness, the managing overseer must be immediately informed thereof, and, upon agreement made, a reasonable compensation given. In case of death, the expenses of burial are repaid.

The foster parents are, on the other hand, bound to take proper care of the children entrusted to them, and to support and clothe them cleanly according to the manner of the country. They must not overload them with work, and must allow them the proper time to go to school. To have a proper control over them in the latter instance, the schoolmasters are directed at Christmas and Easter, to give testimonies of their having gone regularly to school, of the diligence, conduct and cleanliness of the children for whose schooling the Institution pays. The foster parents cannot immediately send away the children they have once taken charge of, when the same, on account of their age, pay no more their full board, but must keep them till an opportunity offers for placing them elsewhere, or till their confirmation. After the foster children have left school, and been confirmed, they must place them for one year at least with good people, or keep them in their own service, thereby to facilitate their advancement.

The particular inspection over all the children placed out by the Institution on the other side of the Elbe, is committed to a woman living in a village beyond Harburgh. All the foster parents must appear with the children before this woman, every year, on a fixed day, to be examined by the managing overseers. The foster parents, living dispersed on this side of the Elbe, are directed, as no particular inspection can be kept over them, from time to time, when they come to receive their money, to bring the children with them.

PROVISION FOR SICK PAUPERS.

If we examine into the sources of undeserved poverty, we shall find none more fruitful than sickness, which, whenever it attacks the father of a family, from the great expense and the complete interruption it occasions to his business, but too often entirely ruins families who must live by their daily earnings. It is this consideration also which determined the Poor Committee to devote particular attention to this branch of its administration.

A Deputation, consisting of five overseers, is appointed for this purpose. To these are added in each of our six districts, two physicians, one surgeon (in the 6th district, two), and two midwives, with whom in cases of necessity, four are associated out of the number of the physicians for the poor (two for the city, one for St. George, and one for the Stadtdeich); and in each of the five city districts, six apothecaries; and in the 6th district, three apothecaries. From the great extent of some of our districts, it was necessary in this year to associate one assistant physician more to our twelve physicians for the poor.

Although our last year's expenses for the cure and care of the sick poor in their houses, do not quite equal those of 1831, and the extent of our assistance in this regard in the last year was greater than ever, yet it is unnecessary for us to remark that the occasion was most pressing.

The year 1831 had brought us the Asiatic Cholera. The wise measures of our high authorities, and the spirited exertions of many patriotic citizens, tranquilized the minds even of our lower classes; and, therefore, this evil, which had been described to us to be as dreadful as the plague in former centuries, was borne with a quiet resolution, and, by proper arrangements, stopped in its course. Those persons who are here especially called upon to assist the needy,—overseers, curators and physicians for the poor, with many of our fellow-citizens, upon this occasion set the example; and the Poor Committee certainly anticipated the general wish by dispensing with less strictness than usual, in an extraordinary time, when sickness and stoppage of business spread great misery, the benefits which flow to our sick poor through the General Institution.

When, therefore, in the beginning of 1832 this evil by degrees disappeared, the Poor Committee felt it to be its duty to discontinue its almost unbounded assistance. It resolved, therefore, on the 9th February:

- 1st. That such sick who receive 6 marks and above, weekly, from the sick club should only have the assistance of the physician but not free medicine.
- 2d. That in reference to the first article of their instructions, the physicians for the poor should be requested not to prescribe free medicine for the account of the General Institution, where, from the situation of those asking the same, it did not appear necessary.

A few weeks afterwards the most serious cases of sickness accumulated anew, especially among the lowest classes, and the demands for free medical aid increased in an unknown degree. And the Poor Committee yielded, and they were obliged to do so: strict economy would, under such circumstances, have been unjustifiable, and certainly, as the result proved, no assistance could be more to the purpose and more effectual than that afforded by the Institution.

However, it is sometimes necessary to make exceptions, when such persons, namely, which often happens, have already several children, who would be quite deserted if the mother were taken by the Police to the Poor Room, to which place they cannot take any children.
We have still to remark, that an inquiry by the competent Curator and Poor Physician, the Overseer of the district, and the managing Overseer of the Deputation for the cure of sick paupers, must be previously made.
For granting sick-money, (which is not here stated, because it is applied for by the Overseer of the district direct from the fund, it amounted in the last year to 4,800. 4 schillings), a Committee composed of the managing Overseer of the Deputation for the cure of sick paupers, another Overseer, two Curators and a Poor Physician, assemble every week, before which a statement by a competent Curator of every individual case and the opinion of the Overseer of the district must be laid.

BREMEN.

ANSWERS to the QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS, by G. E. Papendick, Esq.
His Britannic Majesty's Vice-Consul.

QUESTION 1. To what extent, and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer to Q. 1. Mendicity cannot be said to prevail to any great extent in the town and district of Bremen, since relief is regularly afforded to the poor inhabitants by their respective parishes; but if they are detected begging, such relief is withheld and they are sent to the workhouse. The most common practice of beggary is by poor children, who are sent out by their parents under pretence of selling brick-dust, matches, &c., or seeking rags and bones; by journeying apprentices who may be passing through the town, and by vagabonds.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—On detecting such journeying apprentices or vagabonds begging, they are sent to the workhouse, until the police furnish them with passports to their homes, when they are delivered over to the police on the Hanoverian frontier: if totally destitute, they receive an alms from the police, of 12 to 18 groats, or 9 d. sterling.

II. DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There exists but one poor-house in Bremen, in which the destitute able-bodied are received, to the number of 220, lodged, fed and clothed, for which they are bound to work, for the benefit of the Institution, as far as they are able.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—This is done, but in a very limited degree, at the public expense, as those who have trades come under the care and superintendence of their respective guilds, whose duty and credit it is to prevent any of their fraternity coming upon the parish, and who can easily afford the means of providing them with work. Females, on application to the poor-house, may receive hemp and flax for spinning, and are remunerated accordingly.

6. To what extent, and under what regulations is work provided for such persons, in agriculture or on public works?—No such provision is customary here.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—Those who are registered in the poor-house list, and thus come under the superintendence and control of the parish officers, receive as long as they may require assistance,—1. A small monthly allowance in money. 2. Clothing for themselves and their families. 3. If necessary, bedding. 4. In the winter, during severe frost, fuel.

attention to the developement of their minds, by which they acquire that self-confidence that stimulates exertion, and that proper spirit of independence that keeps them above want, whilst by religious instruction they are impressed with a sense of the duties and advantages of good moral conduct through life. It has ever been the prevailing opinion in this Republic, that the principal duty of the State towards bettering the condition of its poorer classes, rests upon a due regard to this school discipline, and that it tends in its practice to prevent the frequent recurrence of application for relief in the same family; the descendants of which, without such control, would habitually and irrecoverably become, in their turn, dependants upon public charity. When such children have arrived at the age of 14 or 15 years, after having been taught reading, writing, arithmetic and any other acquirement consistent with their situation, books and other materials being furnished them by the poor-house, gratis; they are, after confirmation, generally put out to service, and thus prevented from returning to the idle habits of their parents. Girls are, in like manner, often provided for. They are taught reading, writing, knitting and needlework.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—By law, the grandfathers and grandmothers, and parents are bound to feed and provide for their children and grand-children if they are able, or vice versa.

10. To what extent, and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—No such loans are granted by the State; it sometimes happens in private societies, of which there are many in this town; such as the Ladies' Societies for private charities, the Union Society and others.

III. IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions, for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—They are, the poor-house as before-mentioned, the houses for the reception of poor widows and superannuated females, and the Society for affording subsistence and support to the superannuated masters of merchant vessels and their families in Bremen, and at Vegesack.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—It is only in the poor-house that relief of all kinds is afforded. In most other establishments, it is partially afforded in lodging, or in small occasional gifts of money.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—4. or quartered or billeted on the householders?—Householders, who may make it their business to receive poor inmates, do not exist here. In some few instances, where it may be particularly required, the parish officers induce families to receive a helpless or sick person as inmate for a small gratuity. Peasants' families in the country are mostly chosen for such purposes; who (except clothing, which is granted by the poor-house), furnish every other necessary, for the monthly sum of from two to three dollars, or 10 s. 6 d. sterling.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—This duty, as has been before-mentioned, rests mutually upon the ascendants and descendants of families only.

IV. SICK.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—The sick, whose condition or whose illness being infectious does not allow them to be nursed in their own homes, are admitted, upon a certificate of the parish officer, into the public hospital and cured, free of all expense.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There is an establishment for affording soups and other aliments to the sick, maintained by testamentary bequests and voluntary contributions. Clothing and other necessities are sometimes granted the sick, at the request of the physician, from the poor-house.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There exist no other modes of affording public assistance to the sick. The above-mentioned are found to be sufficient.

V. CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall ; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers ; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations ?—If the father of an illegitimate child can be traced, and has the means, he is bound by law in the annual payment of 16 dollars, circa 55s. sterling, for its support, until it shall have attained its fifteenth year. In other respects the mother must find the needful to the extent she is able.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards ?—The grandfather and grandmother, or parents of the mother of a bastard, are also bound, if necessary, to its support. The ascendants of the father are not liable.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense ?—If the parents of illegitimate children, or the parents of the mother are incapable of supporting them, they come under the care of the poor-house. If in the country, they are provided for out of the funds there collected for such purpose. But in such cases the mothers of illegitimate children, upon a repetition of the offence, are sent to the house of correction, there bound to work for the benefit of their offspring, and to mend their conduct.

Orphans, Foundlings, or deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception ?

ORPHANS.

Legitimate children, whose parents or whose father is dead, are received in the orphan asylum, there educated and provided for.

FOUNDLINGS.

Foundlings and illegitimate are supported only out of the poor-house funds, and generally boarded with individuals in the country.

Deserted Children, whose Parents are known.

See the above.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders ?—6. or boarded with individuals ?

Refer to the foregoing.

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them ?

With regard to what has been before said, as to the duties of ascendants and descendants, the same regulation exists here, in as far as it is applicable.

VI. CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

CRIPPLES and the BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception ?

Unless already supported by the poor-house, there is no separate establishment for them in Bremen.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders ?—3. or boarded individuals ?

If they cannot get into the poor-house, they are generally sent into the country, and maintained out of the funds of the poor-house by individuals, at from 2½ to 3½ dollars per month, circa 12s. sterling, independently of clothing.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them ?

According to the before-mentioned regulation, as regards the duties of ascendants and descendants.

DEAF and DUMB.

There is an institution in which the poor deaf and dumb are educated and maintained at the public expense.

VII. IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception ?—For Lunatics a separate establishment is maintained, contiguous to the hospital, and under the care and attendance of its physicians.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders ?—There are two private madhouses in the country also, in which, among others, the poorer patients are maintained out of the funds of the poor-house.

3. To

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—This takes place only with idiots or harmless patients, who are boarded with individuals in the country at the expense of the poor-house.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—As before-mentioned, by the ascendants or descendants, as the case may be.

VIII. EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

1st. On the industry of the labourers?—The industry of the poor labourers maintained by the foregoing institutions is seldom much promoted, their poverty and dependance arising solely from their idle habits, since in Bremen, which is not over-populated, every man who can or who is willing to work, is sure of sufficient opportunities for employment.

2d. On their frugality?—Is not determinable.

3d. On the age at which they marry?—Early marriages are not generally complained of. The poor seldom marry under 25 years of age, and where they are unable to prove a sufficient maintenance, means are sought to prevent them.

4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—The institutions have in so far an influence on the mutual dependence of families, by affording to the parents the free education of their children, and by separating the children from their parents the moment any abuse of such indulgence is detected, as in the case of begging, loitering, &c.

5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The condition of a person subsisting on alms or public charity is generally considered less comfortable or eligible, at least every allowable contrivance is adopted that shall render it so, to that of an able-bodied and self-supporting labourer, even of the lowest class, whereby the latter may not be tempted to throw himself upon the public. Among other means resorted to, the clothing distributed at the poor-house is of a peculiar cast and colour, which prevents an application for it, unless from absolute necessity.

IX. LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—In the country, during summer, 24 groats or 1 s. sterling per diem. During winter, 18 gr. or 9d. per diem, out of which he must procure his own provisions. In town about 25 per cent. higher.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work, with very few exceptions, is never paid for. Tradespeople are even expressly forbidden to pay workmen by the piece, but they may hire them for the week. Their earnings in that case are generally from 1½ to 2½ dollars, or 8 s. 6d. sterling.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—In the country an average labourer's earnings may be estimated at from 100 to 125 dollars per annum. In town, from 100 to 150 dollars, or 25 l. sterling per annum.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—As an average estimate of the expenditure of the working classes, the following only can be given: For their dwelling from 12 to 18 dollars, or 3 l. sterling per annum. The expense for provisions would depend upon the number of heads in a family, and, in the same proportion, the expense for clothing. Direct taxes they never pay, with the exception of four per cent. on the amount of their rent. Their children can be educated, as before said, free of expense; nor have they any church expenses, but it is left to their own free will to fee their clergyman at a christening or marriage ceremony. A labourer, earning 25 l. a year, can support a wife and three children.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—For females, spinning, knitting and sewing; for children, employment in the tobacco manufactories. In the country, service in the houses of the wealthier peasants.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Women earn per day, in the country, during summer, 12 gr. or 6d.; during winter, 8 gr. or 4d.; in harvest time somewhat more. In town, by spinning or knitting, about 4d. per diem. Children from 12 to 16 years of age, in the tobacco manufactories, from 48 gr. to one dollar, or 3 s. 6d. sterling per week.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—May be estimated by the foregoing.

BREMEN.

8. & 9. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food; could it lay by any thing, and how much?—If the father's earnings average per diem 24 gr. or 1 s., the mother's 6 gr. or 3 d., and two children, together 12 gr. or 6 d., with two more children too young to work, such a family of six persons, unless afflicted by sickness or other disasters, can very well support itself. They can subsist upon potatoes, beans, buckwheat or grits and rye-bread, and twice a week upon meat or bacon. In the country, the average earnings of such a family may be estimated at about one-third less, and it can lay by annually from five to ten dollars, or 35 s. sterling.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—By law, every habitation in the country let to a labourer, must have half a morgen circa, one-third or one-fourth of an acre, annexed to it, upon which he may grow his vegetables, &c.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—In the country, the wealthier owners of estates; in town, chiefly builders.

12. The rent of Labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—In the country, a labourer's habitation rents from 12 to 15 dollars, or 50 s. sterling; in town, from 12 to 24 dollars, or 4 l. sterling. The price on sale is ascertainable by estimating the amount of rent as at five per cent. of the capital.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Not known to be the practice here.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—To the town and district of Bremen, containing a population of 56,000 souls, the proportion of annual deaths is from 1,300, or 1 in 43, to 1,400, or 1 in 40.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—The proportion of annual births from 1,500, or 1 in 37, to 1,700, or 1 in 33.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The proportion of annual marriages from 450 to 500 couple.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—About four children.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—Out of 1,500 to 1,700 births, from 125 to 150 illegitimate.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—About 350.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their tenth year?—About 165.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—Not ascertainable.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Males, between 25 and 30; females, between 20 and 25 years.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Want of a sufficiency for house-keeping.

24. Extent to which, 1st. the unmarried; 2d. the married, save?—Not ascertainable.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—In the saving bank; the accounts and proceedings of which are from time to time advertised in the public papers.

ANSWERS to the QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS, by Wm. Lewis Behnes, Esq.
His Britannic Majesty's Vice-Consul.

I. VAGRANTS.

QUESTIONS 1. & 2. To what extent, and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country? Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—Answer. Begging is strictly forbidden, and every person found begging is taken up by the beadle and police officers, and conveyed to the cloister or workhouse, where a reward of 8*d.* is paid for every beggar so taken up. Real mendicity, that is to say begging, as a profession, does not exist here. The principal form in which it is seen is with journeymen artisans, and little children. The former are forced by the rules of their craft to wander, as it is called, for a certain number of years, from town to town in search of work, in order to learn the various modes of working at their trade. Being thus compelled to travel, not allowed to remain more than a certain number of days at a place, unless immediately employed, these journeymen are of course reduced to great straits, and obliged to beg at all the houses they pass; they are mostly relieved with a trifle, with great willingness, even by the poorest classes, who look forward to their own children being in the same situation. If found begging here, they are taken to our workhouse like other beggars, but if their wander-book (which is their passport) is found in order, and nothing that is written in it indicates them to be lazy vagrants, they receive a good meal, and are dismissed with a warning to proceed on their journey directly. This wandering and asking aid is called fighting their way through, and not begging, nor are these journeymen looked upon in the light of beggars. The children mentioned above are generally sent out by their parents to sell matches, brick-dust, &c., and when taken up are threatened with detention there, and their parents' names are handed to the poor-overseer of their district, in order that they may be compelled to send their children to the poor-schools, and assisted if really in distress. By these means street-begging is effectually kept under.

II. DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—2. or boarded with individuals?—No such thing is known here.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—No other institution of this kind exists here but the work and poorhouse, called the Cloister, into which, however, none are admitted but persons totally incapable of contributing to their own support, whether from drunkenness or other incapacitating causes.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—As above stated, no relief of this kind is afforded to able-bodied men; their families, if considered destitute, may perhaps obtain the relief afforded by the poor-board to the poor generally, by means of portions of cheap food daily during the five winter months, and four times a week during the other part of the year. About 230,000 such portions are distributed annually, and bread to the value of about 60*l.* Fuel is distributed during the severer part of the winter, but money is rarely given, and only in extreme cases, never exceeding one mark, or about 14*d.* sterling a week, to the same party. Clothing forms no part of the relief afforded. In Lubec these various kinds of relief are partaken of by about 850 persons annually.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—Not only are all the children of the poor admitted into the poor-schools for instruction gratis, but when relief is afforded by the poor-board, it is on the positive condition that they shall send their children to such schools. Neither food, clothing nor any further provision is afforded them, in these schools, excepting in a very few extreme cases, in which the maintenance of very young children is undertaken by the poor-board. The number of children in our poor-schools averages about 300.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Excepting in regard to parents, who are obliged to provide for their infant children, no relative can be compelled to assist his needy relations.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—This practice is not known here.

III. IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—All persons coming fully under this head, and destitute of means for their maintenance, are taken into the poor-house of this place, and there entirely provided for; but this even the poorest persons exert their utmost to prevent, no one being desirous of going there.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—Where partial aid can enable them to maintain themselves, they are assisted by the poor-board, as stated in the Answer to No. 7, under the head of "Destitute Able-bodied;" when their entire maintenance is requisite, they must go to the above-mentioned poor-house. The number maintained in the poor and workhouse of this place (here called the Cloister) averages about 300 to 350 persons.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—4. or quartered or billeted on the householders?—5. and are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Not at all.

IV. SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—No district institutions exist; those persons whose illness or circumstances render it necessary, are taken to the poor-house, where they are taken care of in a separate portion of the building, appropriated to the purpose of a sick ward till their recovery, and then discharged.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—A sick ward has been established at the poor-house for the reception of such poor sick persons as cannot be properly attended to at home, and the patients taken in there receive all the requisite medicines, food, fuel, &c. but no money. The number annually received there averages from 200 to 250. No other institution of the kind exists, and the only aid otherwise afforded is from the sick-commission mentioned under No. 2.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are no other modes of affording public assistance to the sick. Whatever may be done further is the result of private charity.

V. CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The father is bound to support his illegitimate child entirely if he has the means. With poor persons the allowance they are compelled to make make to the mother is of course often so small as to impose upon the latter a portion of the burden.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—No relative can be compelled to assist in their maintenance.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—Illegitimate children, where the father has no means, or is absent, and the mother is unable to support them, are taken care of and maintained by a branch of the Poor Board specially appointed for that purpose. The mothers are sent to the lying-in-house mentioned under No. 4 of the preceding division, and the children are put out to board at the expense of the Board, till the completion of their fourth year, when the mothers must take the further charge of them, or they must go into the poor-house, where they are consequently brought up at the public expense, that establishment being supported by the government.

LUBECK.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

	O R P H A N S.	Foundlings and Deserted Children.
4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?	A most excellent orphan-house, possessing considerable funds, arising from legacies and donations, and aided by charitable contributions and collections; maintains, clothes and educates about 150 legitimate orphans, without the aid of the state; and the children brought up there enjoy such credit in regard to morals and education, that, when old enough they are eagerly taken into the employ by such trades and families as require persons of their age.	Foundlings and deserted children are provided for by the Poor Board till the completion of their fourth year, and must then go into the poor-house, where there are generally about 200 such children.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on Householders?	Not at all.	There is no other way of providing for them, nor can any other relatives but the parents be compelled to support them.
6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?	Only during their earliest infancy; say till the completion of their fourth year.	They are all boarded with individuals till the end of their fourth year, the poor-house not taking them in, till after they are four years old.
7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?	Not at all, with the exception of their parents.

VI. CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—No special establishments exist for either of these classes, but as far as they evidently require aid, they receive assistance like other poor persons from the poor-board, or must go to the poor-house.

VII. IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—Idiots and lunatics are both received into an establishment for the purpose, supported by legacies, charitable contributions, and the money received for patients able to pay. Their average number is about 30, and the expense about 15 l. per person.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—3. or boarded with individuals?—4. and are their relatives compelled to support them?—Not at all.

LUBECK.

VIII. EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

1st. On the industry of the labourers; 2d. on their frugality?—The effect of our management of the poor is certainly neither unfavourable to their industry, nor to their frugality, since the partial relief given is never so plentiful, or of such a kind, as to make them relax in their own exertions for an independent maintenance; and the aversion to going to the workhouse is so great as to make every one exert his utmost to avoid it.

3d. On the age at which they marry; 4th. on the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—There are no means here of arriving at any conclusive judgment on these heads. Very young marriages seldom or ever take place among the poor, and we have no barometer by which to ascertain the state of their affections. Generally speaking they may be assumed to be as strong here as elsewhere, and to be very little influenced by our poor regulations.

5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? [See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts."]—The condition of the labouring classes living on their own earnings is considered by themselves to be far superior to that of the paupers maintained in our poor-house. The partial assistance afforded by the poor-board is chiefly directed towards aiding those who are not devoid of honest pride, and have some feelings of independence left, who consequently earn their own maintenance as far as they can, and are thus assisted in their endeavours to support themselves and keep out of the workhouse. The aid they receive is proportioned to their age and families, and is mostly granted to females; it is gratefully received, and no idea exists of ever thinking it a right. As a rule no persons fully able to work can receive assistance, they are therefore forced to seek out employment, and may be generally presumed to succeed. If they get but a moderate portion of work, very trifling earnings place them in a situation much more eligible, than that of the pauper maintained in the poor-house.

You are also requested to read the accompanying Volume, published by the English Poor Law Commissioners, and to state the existence of any similar mal-administration of the Charitable Funds of the country in which you reside, and what are its effects?—There are no such abuses known here as those detailed in the volume sent herewith.

IX. LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The usual pay of an able working man or general labourer, not belonging to any particular trade, is about 14*d.* sterling per day without food, that is to say in the town or its immediate vicinity. Agricultural and garden labourers receive but 9*d.* per day in summer, and 7*d.* in winter; at harvest time they may perhaps get 1*s.* sterling per day. The journeymen of the different trades all receive more, but scarcely any two alike; the highest receive about 14*s.* sterling per week, and the lowest 7*s.* without board; when they are boarded and lodged they receive from 2*s.* 4*d.* to 4*s.* per week, if constantly employed. Trades that employ their men only in summer pay proportionally higher.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is very frequent in particular trades, but not generally customary. In agriculture it is very frequent, and threshing and ditching is done almost exclusively so.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A mere labourer, or man of all work, might, with full employ, earn about 18*l.* per annum. A journeyman, taking the average of the trades at 2*s.* per day, and the year at 300 days, might earn 30*l.* per annum; agricultural labourers cannot earn more than about 12*l.* per annum.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Women find employment as washerwomen, char-women, &c. to a small extent, but as we have no large manufactories or trades that occupy any considerable number, there is a surplus of female hands, that try to earn money by spinning or other means. Children are seldom employed here. In the country women find some employment during the harvest, but children none.

6. What

6. What can women and children, under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—In the town women that are employed earn 7*d.* a day, and in one or two small card and tobacco manufactories, where a few children are employed, they earn from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* per week, according to their age. During the harvest the women earn 7*d.* a day in the country, but at other times nothing, excepting in a few market gardens round the town, where they find employment at that rate, at other times also. Children are not used in any agricultural labour.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years, respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—Supposing the woman to be employed 50 weeks at 7*d.* per day, and four children at the medium of the above rates, say 2*s.* 2*d.* per week, they might earn together about 30*l.* annually. But it is not at all likely that they should be all constantly employed, even in the town, and in the country the wife could not earn more than 14*s.* at harvest time, at least by agricultural labour, and the children nothing.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Certainly they could, and even comfortably, on the usual food of the poorer classes here, namely, coarse rye bread, potatoes boiled with a little bacon, fat or dripping, milk, porridge made of peas, grits or peeled barley, herrings or other cheap fish, a little butter and lard, but very seldom meat; their greatest luxury is a cup of coffee in the morning. The country labourer generally fattens a pig of about 140 lb. with the barley he gets by threshing, and thus obtains more bacon and lard.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—Such a family as the above, earning, the husband 18*l.* and the wife and children 30*l.* might lay by one-third of their income, say about 16*l.*; but such earnings cannot be calculated upon, and are very rare with the wife and children. A journeyman earning 30*l.* a year, might lay by about 10*l.* annually, if of a saving disposition, and yet maintain a wife and two or three children.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—From 40 to 60 square poles, called potatoe ground.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The owner of the farm, large or small, on which he works.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations and price on sale?—The rent of such dwellings, including potatoe ground, is estimated at from 25*s.* to 35*s.* per annum; and the value on sale from 12*l.* to 27*l.*, according to the quantity of land, situation and circumstances.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Not usual, excepting sometimes near the town, when perhaps a small piece may be rented from one who has hired a larger portion. The rent is then generally about 5*s.* per 60 square poles.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—In 1828, the population amounted to about 40,000 souls, and on an average of the 10 years from 1819 to 1828, both inclusive, the deaths amounted to about 700 annually, consequently $1\frac{2}{3}$ to every 100 souls.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—In the same period the births averaged about 750 annually, consequently $1\frac{7}{8}$ to every 100 souls.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The marriages in that period averaged 225 annually, consequently $\frac{9}{16}$ per cent.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—According to the above statement of 750 births to 225 marriages, $3\frac{1}{3}$ to a marriage, including the illegitimate children; the legitimate children averaged 600 annually, or $2\frac{11}{16}$ to each marriage.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—In the 10 years above-mentioned, of the 750 average annual births, about 140 were illegitimate, consequently about $18\frac{2}{3}$ per cent.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—About one in seven, or 14 per cent. died before the end of their first year.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—About 1 to $3\frac{3}{4}$ or $26\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—About 1 to $3\frac{5}{16}$ or 30 per cent.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Not to be ascertained, but certainly a much more advanced age than in England.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Marriages among the poor are delayed by the necessity a man is under, first, of previously proving that he is in a regular employ, work or profession that will enable him to maintain a wife; and secondly, of becoming a burgher and equipping himself in the uniform of the burgher guard, which, together, may cost him nearly 4*l.*

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Not to be ascertained, but that many of the poorer classes do save may be safely deduced, from the fact of the great number of small sums, say from 10*s.* to 10*l.* invested in the saving bank of this place, most of which doubtless come from servants and hard-working people.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—There are no means of ascertaining, but the probability is, that they are all invested in the above-mentioned saving bank.

The preceding questions have been answered with all the accuracy attainable; but the minute division of the various heads and questions has tended much to enhance the difficulty of procuring exact information, and renders that now given less authentic than it might otherwise have been. Upon the whole, the statement transmitted last year will afford a much more complete and general view of the subject, than the answers to these questions can convey, and is somewhat more to be relied on.

H. B. M.'s Vice-Consul.

The food given by our poor board to the indigent is likewise sold to the working classes, for one penny a portion, and is so well liked, that many hard working people go there and dine for their penny, or fetch it to their homes. It consists of the following ingredients and quantities, for 800 portions of porridge :

Peeled Barley-porridge.	Grit-porridge.	Peas-porridge.
180 lb. of peeled barley.	190 lb. of grits.	8 bushels of dried yellow (split) peas.
13 - flour.	19 - flour.	10 lb. of bacon, lard or dripping.
130 leeks.	12 - butter.	3½ - butter.
30 heads of celery.	16 - salt.	4 - onions.
16 lb. of salt.		17 - salt.
12 - butter.		30 - pea-meal.

The weekly allowance in the orphan house for 150 children, is—

1,280 lbs. of coarse rye bread.	13 lb. of lard or bacon fat.
18 - flour.	16 bushels of potatoes.
38 - butter.	1 peck of salt.
7 - treacle.	2 barrels of table-beer.
28 - peeled barley.	156 lb. of beef.
48 - barley-grits.	10 - pork.
2 pecks of dried yellow peas.	92 gallons of milk.

The total cost is about 8*l.* 15*s.* or 14*d.* per child. The annual cost for provisions averages about 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* per child, and for clothing about 1*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* per child.

The allowance in our poor and workhouse for every individual, is—

British Vice-Consul.

I. VAGRANTS.

QUESTION 1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer to Q. 1. Vagrants, mendicants and vagabonds are arrested by the police when found; the number may be about 400 to 450 per annum. If foreigners, they are sent out of the country.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—To journeymen who are travelling, 2*d.* is allowed in the towns; and, if they stay the night, 6*d.* In the country they put up with the peasants, who give them board and lodging; but their passports must be regular, or they are subject to arrest, and are sent back to the place to which they belong.

II. DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—2. or boarded with individuals?—Not at all.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are only in some of the larger towns houses of industry to receive them; but these places are very deficient, and hardly any work is provided for such individuals, excepting spinning, or other work performed by females.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—Not at all.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—Not at all.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—When public works are constructing, roads for instance, such persons are sent thither. In the larger towns, destitute able-bodied are employed in preference at public works. In the country, the owner of an estate must provide work for the inhabitants belonging to it.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families, at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—Generally no fuel, clothing or money is distributed to such persons. Sometimes private associations are formed to provide the poor with fuel at a cheaper rate when the winter is very cold. In the country, every one who gets a dwelling receives as much fuel as is absolutely necessary.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—They are not relieved in this way. In towns, the children of the poor are instructed gratis in charity schools. In the country, the schoolmaster is likewise obliged to instruct them gratis, on their producing a certificate from the clergyman or the magistrate.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Grand-parents and parents, their legitimate grand-children and children; and, vice versa, children, their parents and grand-parents. Illegitimate children are to be kept by both the parents; and the residence of the mother, not the father, decides.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—Not at all.

III. IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—There are no such alms-houses.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—In the towns they receive some money, on which, with the greatest economy, they can exist. In the country a dwelling is provided for them, with some fuel, some corn, and a little piece of land.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—This is seldom the case.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—Never.

Appendix (F.)

IV. SICK.

Foreign
Communications.
MECKLENBURGH.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—In the greater towns there are such houses, but of a very deficient quality; in the country there is nothing of the kind.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—Every place, district or town must provide for its sick, and procure them surgical and medical relief, which hardly in any instance is ever omitted.
3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—No such institutions exist.
4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—In some of the towns there are hospitals where such women may be sent to, but it is not very general.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—None.

V. CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The parents jointly.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—Not at all.
3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—They are brought up at the public expense when both the parents are entirely destitute.

Orphans, Foundlings or Deserted Children.

Orphans are brought up at the public expense, boarded with some person in the same place or town.

Foundlings and Deserted Children.—No specific regulations exist in this respect; but foundlings and deserted children are very rare.

VI. CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—None.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—3. or boarded with individuals?—Not at all.
4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Legitimate, ascendants and descendants; illegitimate, father and mother.

VII. IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—There are two mad-houses under control of the government, and that of the magistrates at Rostock.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—3. or boarded with individuals?—Not at all.
4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Legitimate, ascendants and descendants; illegitimate, father and mother.

VIII. EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

1st. On the industry of the Labourers?—2d. on their frugality?—3d. on the age at which they marry?—4th. on the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—The imperfection of the foregoing institutions afford no opportunity of answering these questions.

IX. LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—An expert journeyman may gain in the towns 7s. to 10s. 6d. per week, and free boarding; in the country about two-thirds. The day-labourer in the towns from 5s. 3d. to 7s. per week; in the country, 3s. 6d. per week, a dwelling, garden, and pasture for a cow and two sheep, in summer, and provender in winter.
2. Is piece-work general?—Not general; but when adopted, is more profitable to the labourer.
3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—It is supposed that this

this question applies only to day-labourers. In the towns the highest price is 16*d.* per diem, and if a man is diligent and frugal, his family not too large, and his wife assisting him, he may lay by 3*l.* 10*s.* per annum. In the country the women perform certain services in return for their dwelling, fuel, garden, fodder, &c., and may earn about 35*s.* ready money extra. The husband receives for threshing as much corn as will give him bread the whole year; and prices of corn have little influence on his prosperity, only in so far as he may be able now and then to sell a bushel or two. In the summer he is paid at the rate of one dollar a week, and sometimes something extra. He can lay by 40*s.* to 50*s.* inclusive of what his wife earns. If he happens to live near a forest and a town he may lay by more.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—Cannot be stated accurately.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—In the country, children are made useful very early; in the summer they are wanted.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Children about ten years can earn two dollars per week. In winter they go to school. In the towns they find little employment.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—Enough to live upon very decently, in their way.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Yes; on good sound food, and occasionally meat.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—Such a family can lay by from five to 15 dollars a year.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—According to the quality of the land, from one-third to half an acre.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The proprietor of the estate.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—Service performed by the women. The houses are not sold.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Only what is annexed to his cottage. See Question 10.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The population of Mecklenburgh is 460,500; deaths 9,900 in 1833.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—Births, 17,049 in 1833. Quere, if correct.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—Annual marriages 3,727.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Four children, on an average.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—Nine to one.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—Not known.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—One-fourth before the 14th year.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—Not known.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—The man generally 25 to 30; the woman not much younger; as both must first gain by service enough to establish themselves.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Conscription in the 22d year, and military service for six years; besides, the parties must have a dwelling, without which a clergyman is not permitted to marry them.

24. Extent to which, 1st. the unmarried; 2d. the married, save?—Unknown.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—In the saving banks; but persons prefer boarding to putting out money to interest.

Mecklenburgh, 5 April 1834.

Some OBSERVATIONS intended as elucidations to the ANSWERS to the POOR LAW QUESTIONS as regards Mecklenburgh.

IN Mecklenburgh the general principle is, that every place shall provide for its own poor, either separately or in common with others; and it must be observed,

1st. With respect to the Crown lands which are divided into districts, and every district, comprising several estates, has to provide for its destitutes.

2d. Every town must do the same, but no town is divided into districts.

3d. Every estate in the country which is the free property of a private person has the same obligation. A person buying a free estate becomes the lord of the manor, and has the right of jurisdiction, but then he is liable to provide for the destitute; hence the right of jurisdiction carries with it the liability to provide for the poor.

If a person buys an estate which is not free property but copyhold, he has not the right of jurisdiction, it rests with the lord of the manor, on whom therefore, and not on the copyholder, the obligation to provide for the poor falls.

Appendix (F.)

Foreign

MECKLENBURGH.

To fix what persons belong to an estate or place, the following principles are laid down.

- 1st. Every one who is settled having fire and hearth.
- 2d. Every descendant belongs to the place where the last of his parents died, provided the parent was settled in that place with fire and hearth. If not,
- 3d. Such persons belong to their native place.
- 4th. Persons not settled with fire and hearth, for instance, servants belong to the place or district where they have served for 15 successive years.

The right to belong to any place, is—

- 1st. By express declaration.
- 2d. By two years residence, but only in regard to those who are settled with fire and hearth, and not with respect to their children who continue to belong to their native place, if no other place in which they have acquired a settlement can be found.

Persons not belonging to a fixed place are considered homeless, and become chargeable on the place where they may have met with an accident or fallen ill. If such persons cannot earn their living, when they are found begging or going about as vagrants, they are arrested by the police, and brought to the nearest place of jurisdiction; and if no place to which they may belong can be found out they are sent to the workhouse, where they are detained for some time, afterwards clothed in so far as it is absolutely necessary, and then sent away to seek work, of which there is no want in Mecklenburgh, if people are willing and able to do it.

The natives of this country are seldom or never homeless.

If a servant or a homeless person meets with an accident or falls ill, the magistrate of the place where it happens is obliged to provide for the person, and has a legal claim for the disbursements on the place to which the person belongs. If such a place cannot be found out, then of course no restitution can be had. Every inhabitant is obliged to pay certain poor rates, with the exception of military men, up to a certain rank, students, clerks in counting-houses and shops, assistant artisans and servants.

When the Crown lands are let, there is always a clause in the contract, to regulate what the farmer, the dairy farmer, the smith and the shepherd are to give. A day labourer pays 8*d.* yearly. The inhabitants of higher situation and public officers pay voluntarily. They ought to pay one per cent. of their income. If any one pays too little, the overseers of the poor rates can oblige him to pay more. The overseers are chosen by the inhabitants of the district.

In the towns all inhabitants pay a voluntary subscription; it ought to be one per cent. of their income. If they pay too little, the overseers can demand more. The overseers are chosen by the magistrate.

With respect to estates belonging to private individuals, the subsistence of the poor falls entirely to the charge of the proprietor, who is entitled to levy a trifling tax from all the inhabitants of the estate, equal to a simple contribution amounting to 8*d.* for a day labourer per annum, and 4*d.* for a maid servant. Few proprietors, however, levy such a tax.

Every one has a legal claim to assistance, and there is to be distinguished—

- 1st. Able-bodied persons. Work and a dwelling must be provided for them, the former at the usual rate, in order not to render them quite destitute, if through chicane, work should be denied to them.
- 2d. People, impotent through age, must perform such work as they are capable of, and so much must be given to them, that they can live upon it, besides a dwelling and fuel.

A father of a family 50 years old cannot be turned out of his dwelling.

LETTER from R. Abercrombie, Esq. to J. Backhouse, Esq.

Appendix (F.)

Sir,

Berlin, September 11, 1833.

Foreign
Communications.

PRUSSIA.

IN reply to your circular despatch of the 12th August, I have now the honour to transmit the following information relative to the Administration of the Relief for the Poor in Prussia.

Throughout the whole kingdom of Prussia, the funds for the maintenance and support of the poor are raised from private charity. No law exists enabling either the government of the country, or the subordinate provincial regencies, to raise funds explicitly appropriated for the provision of the poor, and it is only when private charity does not suffice for the exigencies of the moment, that the government, or the regency, advance money for that purpose. But to enable them to do so, the amount must be taken from those funds which had been destined for other purposes, such as, for improvements in paving, lighting, or for the public buildings of a town, or for the construction of roads, or other public works.

In Prussia, each town, and each commune, is obliged to take charge of the poor that may happen to reside within them; and consequently there is no passing from one parish to another, or refusal to maintain an individual because he belongs to another parish.

In each town there is a deputation (called Armen-direction) or society for the poor, who undertake the collection and distribution of funds raised by charity. In small towns, of under 3,500 inhabitants, exclusive of military, this society is composed of the burgomaster, together with the town deputies (forming the town senate) and burghers chosen from the various quarters of the town.

In large and middle-sized towns, including from 3,500 to 10,000 inhabitants, exclusive of military, to the afore-mentioned individuals is always added the Syndic (or town accomptant), and if necessary, another magistrate. Clergymen and doctors are likewise included in the society, and where the police of the place has a separate jurisdiction from the magistrate, the president of the police has always a seat as a member of the society.

Under this armen-direction the care of the poor is confided to different sub-committees formed of the burghers, and for this purpose the town is divided into poor districts (or armenbezirke). In small and middle-sized towns, these districts are again divided into sub-districts, containing not above 1,000, or less than 400 souls. In large towns the sub-districts are to comprise not above 1,500, or less than 1,000 souls; and in these last towns several sub-districts may, if requisite, be united into one poor district or armenbezirke.

From each armenbezirke must be elected one or more of the town deputies, or burghers, according to necessity, for the management of the affairs of the poor; and it is also required that at least one of those elected should be a member of the society for the poor (or armen-direction), and these individuals are required to find out and verify the condition of the poor of their own district.

The direction of the affairs of the poor is therefore, as thus established, confided entirely to the burghers of the town, and the provision of the funds rests upon the charity and benevolence of the inhabitants.

As regards hospitals and public charities, one or more of the members of the armen-direction undertake to watch that the funds are expended according to the provisions made by the founders.

In the villages, the direction of the funds for the poor is confided to the mayor (or schültze), assisted by individuals chosen for that purpose from amongst the principal inhabitants of the commune.

This body is accountable to the councillor of the district (or land rath), who is in like manner under the jurisdiction of the provincial regency, and the whole is under the inspection of the 1st section of the Home Department.

I have now specified the authorities who control the maintenance for the poor, and who are likewise charged with the care of administering to their wants.

As regards the manner of obtaining the necessary funds, every thing is done by donations and private charity. Each house proprietor, each inhabitant of a floor or apartment, is in his turn visited by some of the members of the sub-committee of the armenbezirke, who, in return for the donation, delivers a receipt for the amount.

The donations from residents are generally monthly, and vary in amount according to the number of individuals in the family, or to the feelings of generosity of the donor. No rate or calculated fixed table exists, regulating the sum to be given by each individual or head of a family.

PRUSSIA.

Each town being governed by its own particular laws and customs with regard to the management of its poor, and each from accidental circumstances differing from its neighbour, it is impossible to particularize any other general principle that is followed, than the establishments of the armen-direction, and of the sub-committees; which detailed information I have extracted as above from the Städte Ordnung, or town laws, as revised in 1831.

With regard to the claims of the poor, every poor person has a right to claim relief from the town or commune in which he lives. If he is not a citizen of the place where he seeks relief, he cannot be admitted into the hospitals or establishments set apart for those specific cases; he however obtains assistance from other funds, but his situation is not quite as comfortable as those who are admitted into the hospitals.

Physical incapacity is the only excuse received for not working for the benefit of the charity, during the period that an individual is receiving assistance from the armen-direction.

Such are the general principles which are at present applied to the relief of the poor throughout the kingdom of Prussia.

As an example of the nature of the amount of income, and of the expenditure for the relief of the poor, I transmit a detailed account of the income and expenditure for the years 1822, 1823, 1824 and 1825, for the town of Berlin alone.

It is to be remarked, that according to the census of 1829, the inhabitants of Berlin, (inclusive of the garrison, 16,000 men,) amount to 240,000 souls, and that the largest expenditure during those four years, namely, in 1825, is 232,869 dollars; deducting, therefore, the 16,000 soldiers who do not receive relief from the charity, 232,869 dollars were expended for 224,000 souls, leaving more than a dollar a head upon the whole population.

I have likewise the honour to transmit herewith a printed copy of "The Report of the concerns of the Poor of the town of Berlin, for the year 1833," as an example of the manner in which these principles are put into action as regards this capital, in the hope that it may render my explanation more clear and explicit. At page 454 of the translation, s. 23, the amount of relief which can be given to one family by a resolution of the committee, is fixed at five dollars, or nearly 15s. sterling; but in urgent cases, three dollars, or nearly 9s. sterling, may be advanced immediately, with the consent of two other members in addition to the member proposing.

At page 457, s. 68, the regulations respecting medicinal baths are laid down.

At page 464, from s. 167 to 181, are different regulations fixing the epochs at which collections are to be made in the churches, and for calling monthly meetings of the members of the armen commission.

I also transmit an account of the number of patients relieved by public charity in the years 1824 & 1825; the number of bandages, &c. in the years 1822, 1823, 1824 and 1825; and the number of medicinal baths taken during those years.

As regards the practical working of this system, I have no hesitation in affirming, that it is found universally to succeed, that the effect upon the comfort, character, and condition of the inhabitants, is first, to afford speedy and sufficient means of relief when necessary; that it prevents in a great degree false applications, inasmuch as that the districts being small, the really needy are more easily discovered; and secondly, that as no tax is fixed for the maintenance of the poor, it renders all classes more willing and anxious to assist, according to their respective means, in sustaining the funds required for the support of the poor.

As regards the provision for illegitimate children, the laws of Prussia are most severe. The oath of the mother that an individual is the father of her child, is sufficient to enforce the provisions of the law, which require, that a stated sum shall be paid for what is denominated the pains of labour, and which is calculated to defray the expenses entailed by the delivery, and that besides a fixed sum shall be paid monthly until the child has arrived at a sufficient age to be able to procure its own living.

No person can be forced to marry a woman in consequence of pregnancy, unless a document is produced, containing a promise of marriage in distinct terms, or that such a promise has been given before witnesses; but the system above alluded to of adjudging sums for the pains of labour and maintenance of the child, is applicable to all classes, and fixed scales are established which can be enforced, from the nobles inclusive down to persons of light and disreputable character.

I have, &c.

J. Backhouse, Esq.

Enclosure No. 2.

PRUSSIA.

Berlin.

Das hiesige städtische Armenwesen umfasst nicht allein die allgemeine Armenpflege, sondern auch folgende milde Anstalten und Stiftungen, als : das grosse Friedrichs-Waisenhaus, das Neue Hospital, das Arbeitshaus nebst Hospital, das Dorotheen-, Koppensche und Splett-haus-Hospital, die Frei-Schulen und mehrere Legaten-Stiftungen.

Die obere Leitung des Armenwesens steht der Armen-Direktion zu. Als deren Unter-behörden besorgen nach §. 179 c. der Städteordnung vom 19. November 1808 die Armen-Kommissionen die Lokal-Armen-Verwaltung in den einzelnen Armenbezirken. Neben diesen Lokalbehörden stehen die Administrationen der vorgenannten Institute, die Frei-schul-Inspektion und die Vorstände der errichteten Kommunal-Armenschulen.

Die innere Einrichtung der Armen-Kommissionen ist im Wesentlichen folgende :

1. Jede Armen-Kommission besteht aus einem Vorsteher und aus einer, der Grösse des von ihr zu verwaltenden Bezirks und der Zahl der darin befindlichen Bedürftigen, entsprechenden Anzahl von Mitgliedern, die von der Stadtverordneten-Versammlung gewählt, und vom Magistrat bestätigt werden.
2. Der Vorsteher wird von sämmtlichen Mitgliedern aus ihrer Mitte nach Mehrheit der Stimmen gewählt, und bei der Armen-Direktion zur Bestätigung in Vorschlag gebracht.
3. Die Wahl desselben muss alle 2 Jahr erneuert werden.
4. Es kann die neue Wahl auch auf den ausscheidenden Vorsteher fallen ; doch muss dessen Bestätigung bei der Armen-Direktion von neuem in Antrag gebracht werden.
5. Die Einführung eines neuen Vorstehers erfolgt im Namen und Auftrag der Armen-Direktion.
6. Dem neu eintretenden Vorsteher sind von dem abgehenden folgende Gegenstände zu übergeben, als :
 - a. das Kassenbuch, dessen Revision die Armen-Direktion zu jeder Zeit sich vorbehält ;
 - b. die Liquidation der laufenden Almosen und die Liquidation der Pflegegeld-Empfänger ;
 - c. das Journal der nicht in baarem Gelde bestehenden Unterstützungen ;
 - d. das Journal der neu eingehenden Sachen ;
 - e. das Heberegister ; dieses mit der Nachricht, bis wie weit nach demselben die Kollektengelder eingegangen und nach den produzierten Quittungen der Haupt-Armekasse an dieselbe abgeliefert worden sind ; auch, was etwa auf's Neue eingezogen worden sei ;
 - f. der eiserne Geldbestand ;
 - g. die etwa noch nicht ausgezahlten Waisen-Kost- und Pflege gelder, imgleichen die noch nicht gezahlten ausserordentlichen Unterstützungen, so wie die noch etwa vorhandenen Holz-Anweisungen und das zu Winter-Unterstützungen bestimmte baare Geld ; die nach der Liquidation der baaren Almosen und der Pflegegelder vorhanden sein sollenden Commissions-Spezial-Akten ; die General-Akten der Commission ; letztere einzeln aufgeführt ;
 - h. die Schrift über die hiesige öffentliche Armenpflege (Berlin 1828 bei G. Reimer. 321 Seiten in 8.) ;
 - i. die neueste gedruckte und hoffentlich wenigstens im Personal der Vorsteher der Armen-Commissionen im Laufe des Jahres berichtigte Nachweisung der mit der Stadt-Armenpflege unmittelbar beschäftigten Personen ;
 - k. die Armen-Ordnung vom 3. October 1826 ;
 - l. die gedruckte Zusammenstellung der gesetzlichen Vorschriften über die Verpflichtung zur Unterhaltung der Armen, und das Erbrecht der Armen-Anstalten der hiesigen Commune. 1832. 8.
 - m. die gedruckte Instruktion für die Stadt-Sergeanten vom 11. Juli 1832, so wie die der Armenwächter vom 15. Juli 1832 ;
 - n. die Ordnung, betreffend den Geschäftsgang bei den Versammlungen der Armen-Commissions-Vorsteher, vom 20. Aug. 1832 ;
 - o. die beiden Stempel, nebst dem zu jedem vorhandenen Stempel-Apparat ;
 - p. die etwanigen besondern Inventariestücke jeder Commission, und
 - q. die Formulare, mit Bezeichnung der übergebenen Anzahl Marken zu warmen Wasserbädern.

Der Uebergabe dieser Gegenstände muss in dem aufzunehmenden und der Armen-Direktion von dem neu eintretenden Vorsteher zu überreichenden Protokolle specielle Erwähnung geschehen. Auf den Grund dieses Protokolls erfolgt die Dechargirung des abgehenden Vorstehers.

8. Das Ergebniss der desfallsigen Berathung ist, mittelst des vollständig ausgefüllten und unterzeichneten Fragebogens, der Armen-Direktion zur weitem Veranlassung anzuzeigen.
9. Ist die Wahl des Vorgeschlagenen, und seine Bestätigung verfassungsmässig erfolgt, so wird der neu Gewählte zur nächsten Versammlung der Commission eingeladen, in dieser den anwesenden Mitgliedern von dem Vorsteher vorgestellt, und in deren Gegenwart mit den von ihm wahrzunehmenden Obliegenheiten bekannt gemacht. Demnächst wird er von dem Vorsteher mittelst Handschlags zu seinem neuen Amte verpflichtet und dass solches geschehen, in dem Conferenz-Protokolle nachrichtlich vermerkt.
10. Einem jeden neu eintretenden Mitgliede einer Armen-Commission werden folgende Druckschriften behändigt:
 - a. die Armen-Ordnung für die Residenz Berlin, vom 3. October 1826;
 - b. die Druckschrift über die hiesige öffentliche Armenpflege (Berlin 1828);
 - c. die Nachweisung des mit der Stadt-Armenpflege unmittelbar beauftragten Personals;
 - d. die gedruckte Zusammenstellung der gesetzlichen Vorschriften über die Verpflichtung zur Unterhaltung der Armen und das Erbrecht der Armen-Anstalten der hiesigen Commune.

Wird das Mitglied von seinem Amte entbunden, so hat dasselbe unaufgefordert diese und andre ihm amtlich zugefertigte Drucksachen dem Vorsteher der betreffenden Armen-Commission zurückzugeben, damit darüber anderweit für den Nachfolger disponirt werden kann. Es ist des Vorstehers Sache, darauf zu halten, dass dies, zur Bewirkung möglichster Ersparniss, geschehe.

12. Jedes Mitglied ist gesetzlich auf 6 Jahre gewählt, jedoch befugt, nach 3 Jähriger Dienstzeit wieder auszuscheiden.
13. Das ausscheidende Mitglied kann aufs Neue gewählt werden und ist, wenn das Amt angenommen wird, alsdann auf's Neue auf 3 Jahre zu dessen Beibehaltung verpflichtet.
14. Das wegen seiner anderweitigen Bestätigung zu beobachtende Verfahren ist dem gleich, welches zu 4 vorgeschrieben ist.

Der Umfang dessen, was die durch den wechselnden Eintritt einiger Vorsteher in die Armen-Direktion mit dieser in die engste Verbindung gebrachten Armen-Commissionen im Allgemeinen, und deren Vorsteher und Mitglieder insbesondere zu leisten haben, ist so gross, dass die Armen-Direktion in dankbarer Anerkennung des theilweise auf eine ausgezeichnete Weise, bisher Geleisteten zuversichtlich hoffen darf, auf dem bisher betretenen Wege, dem, was von der täglich schwieriger werdenden Armen-Verwaltung mit Billigkeit zu fordern ist, auch künftig entsprechen, und somit auch auf eine nachhaltige Beförderung ihrer Bemühungen durch willige und freudige Aufopferung von Kräften, Zeit und Mittel Seitens der Einwohnerschaft rechnen zu können. Möchten wir davon am Schlusse des an dem ersten Vierteljahrhundert unsrer Städteordnung noch fehlenden Jahres dankbar zu erzählen haben!

Uebersicht der bei den Armen-Commissionen bestehenden Geschäftsführung ist aus dem Bedürfniss entstanden, eine kurze Zusammenstellung der bestehenden Vorschriften zur Anleitung neu eintretender Armen-Beamten zu besitzen, und dadurch den mannigfachen Nachtheilen zu begegnen, welche oft aus Unbekanntschaft mit den materiellen und formellen Bestimmungen erwachsen, deren Detail überdies leicht dem Gedächtniss entfällt. Diese Uebersicht soll alljährlich genau durchgesehen und geprüft werden, damit wir auf solche allein zusagende Weise zu einer unmittelbar aus dem Leben sich entwickelnden, möglichst einfachen, und wahrhaft praktischen Geschäfts-Instruktion für die Armen-Commissionen gelangen. Für jetzt möge die in den nachstehenden 13 Haupt-Abschnitten versuchte Zusammenstellung genügen.

I. Allgemeine Vorschriften.

S. 1. Der Vorsteher empfängt sämtliche eingehende Sachen, führt ein Tagebuch darüber, deputirt zwei Mitglieder zu den Prüfungen, besorgt in der Konferenz die schriftlichen Verhandlungen und führt die gesammte Korrespondenz; er führt über sämtliche Ausgaben und Einnahmen ein Cassa-Buch und sorgt, dass die darin verausgabten Posten von dem Mitgliede, welches sie zur Zahlung an die Armen empfangen hat, in der letzten Rubrik quittirt werden. Die in der Konferenz aus dem eisernen Bestande gezahlten Gelder werden, nach Anerkennung der Richtigkeit, im Laufe des Monats aus der Haupt-Armekasse gegen unterschriebene und gestempelte Quittung erstattet.

S. 2. Der Bezirksvorsteher ist jederzeit Mitglied der Kommission, kann jedoch der speziellen Aufsicht eines Reviers überhoben bleiben, sofern er nur bei Einziehung der Kollektengelder, bei Untersuchungen, &c. wirksam ist und den Conferenzen beiwohnt.

S. 3. Die Versammlung der Armen-Kommissionen findet in der Regel an einem der letzten Tage jeden Monats Statt. In dringenden Fällen setzt der Vorsteher auch besondere Konferenzen an.

S. 4. Alle Mitglieder haben gleiche Stimme, und in zweifelhaften Fällen entscheidet die Mehrheit derselben. Sind die Stimmen gleich getheilt, so giebt die des Vorsitzenden den Ausschlag.

S. 5. Um einen gültigen Beschluss in der Monats-Versammlung zu fassen, müssen wenigstens drei Mitglieder gegenwärtig sein, einschliesslich des Vorstehers.

S. 6. Die Protokolle, Beschlüsse, Berichte, &c. werden von dem Vorsteher und allen Mitgliedern unterschrieben, die der Berathung beigewohnt haben.

S. 7. Welche Gegenstände und in welcher Form das Konferenz-Protokoll sie umfassen soll, ist durch ein Schema bestimmt.

S. 8. Ueber die nicht in baarem Gelde bestehenden Unterstützungen, als: freie Kur, freies Begräbniss, Freischule, Brillen, Bruchbänder, &c., führt der Vorsteher ein besonderes, alimonatlich der Armen-direktion vorzulegendes Journal, welches, wie das Konferenz-Protokoll, von der Kommission unterzeichnet wird.

S. 9. Bei eingehenden Unterstützungs-Gesuchen hat der Vorsteher zu erforschen, ob der Bittsteller schon früher unterstützt worden ist, und in solchen oder anderen geeigneten Fällen sich von der Unterstützungs-Registratur der Armen-Direction, dem Arbeitshause oder Waisenhaus, &c. die Akten verabfolgen zu lassen.

S. 10. Armen-Kommissionen dürfen mit auswärtigen Behörden nicht kommunizieren, haben vielmehr die Armen-Direction von dem Gegenstande vollständig in Kenntniss zu setzen und derselben das Weitere zu überlassen.

S. 11. Sie können jedoch auf Ersuchen hiesiger Behörden, Vereine, und Einwohner über Armuths-Verhältnisse einzelner Personen Auskunft geben und solche von ihnen einziehen.

S. 12. Alljährlich wenigstens einmal, muss bei sämmtlichen im Revier wohnenden Almosen- Waisenkost- und Pflegegeld-Empfängern eine Lokal-Recherche abgehalten werden, um zu ermitteln, ob sich ihre Verhältnisse vielleicht geändert haben, und die Unterstützung vielleicht ganz oder theilweise aufhören kann. Diese Prüfung wird jedoch unter die Mitglieder der Kommission dergestalt vertheilt, dass nicht immer das Revier-Mitglied die unter seiner speziellen Aufsicht stehenden Armen allein revidirt, sondern das Mitglied für eine andere Revier-Abtheilung ihm hierbei behülflich ist, damit auf solche Weise die sämmtlichen Mitglieder nach und nach mit allen Armen des Kommissions-Bezirks bekannt werden.

S. 13. Der Armen-Kommission überwiesene Gesuche bleiben, wenn darauf ohne Weiteres abschlägiger Bescheid erfolgt ist, bei derselben, wogegen sie, im Fall frühere Verhandlungen beilagen, oder wenn sich in dem Gutachten über die Verhältnisse der Individuen der Aufbewahrung werthe Notizen befinden, an die Armen-Direktion zurück zu senden sind. Letzteres geschieht auch mit allen Suppliken, welche von der Armen-Direktion der Kommission zur Prüfung überschickt werden und mit einer Journal-Nummer der Armen-Direktion versehen sind, selbst wenn die Bittsteller durch die Kommission abschlägig beschieden worden, indem die sonst unumgänglich nöthige Rückforderung unnütze Weitläufigkeiten erzeugt.

S. 14. Gelder und Quittungen sind aus Vorsicht keinem Boten anzuvertrauen und dem Sergeanten nie über Nacht zu belassen. Ueber Zahlungen an Kommissions-Mitglieder hat Letzterer sofort Quittung zu überbringen.

S. 15. Bei Anfuhr des Winterholzes haben die Armen-Kommissionen möglichst dahin zu wirken, dass solche durch Wohlthäter ganz oder theilweise unentgeltlich erfolge. Die der Armen-Direktion über das vertheilte Brennmaterial von der Armen-Kommission zu legende Berechnung muss derselben unfehlbar spätestens Ende März eingereicht werden.

S. 16. Tag und Stunde der Monats-Konferenz ist jedesmal dem oder den Stadtverordneten, dem Bezirksvorsteher und dem Armenarzte schriftlich durch den Vorsteher bekannt zu machen; erforderlichen Falls kann auch der Armenwundarzt eingeladen werden.

S. 17. Lithographirte Zirkular-Verfügungen sind jederzeit in den Monats-Konferenzen vorzulesen und von allen Anwesenden, zum Zeichen der erfolgten Bekanntmachung, zu unterschreiben. Abwesenden Mitgliedern sind sie nachträglich zur Kenntnissnahme vorzulegen, und dann zu den betreffenden Kommissions-Akten zu nehmen.

S. 18. Diejenigen Personen, welche von Armenanstalten, milden Stiftungen und Privat-Wohlthätigkeitsvereinen, die nicht von der Armen-Direktion abhängig sind, Unterstützung erhalten, werden den Armen-Kommissionen mittelst lithographirter Extrakte namhaft gemacht. Es sind diese Personen, wenn sie ihre Wohnung wechseln, der Armen-Kommission, in deren Bezirk sie ziehen, unter genauer Angabe aller jener Verhältnisse bekannt zu machen. Zu diesem Ende ist es nöthig, dass die Armen-Kommissionen eine besondere Liste über dergleichen Individuen führen und vierteljährlich prüfen lassen, ob sie noch im Bezirk wohnen. Wird eine solche Liste nach dem Alphabet eingerichtet und fortgeführt, so erleichtert sie die Uebersicht, und ist von besonderem Nutzen, wenn dergleichen Personen sich wegen Unterstützung melden.

II. Genaue Kenntniss, Berücksichtigung und Unterstützung der Armen.

A. Bezirks-Einwohner in vorübergehender Bedürftigkeit.

S. 19. Für arm ist derjenige anzusehen, welcher weder zureichendes Vermögen, noch physische oder geistige Kräfte besitzt, um sich und seinen nicht arbeitsfähigen Familiengliedern den zum Unterhalt durchaus nöthigen Bedarf an Nahrung, Kleidung, Obdach und Feuerung zu verschaffen.

S. 20. Sind gesetzlich zur Unterstützungs-Leistung verpflichtete, und dazu fähige Verwandte vorhanden, (Seite IV. unter dem Buchstaben s.) so ist, obiger Verhältnisse ungeachtet, noch keine Verpflichtung der Commune zur Unterstützung begründet.

S. 21. Auch ist zu beachten, ob ein Armer einer mit besonderen Armen-Fonds versehenen Korporation angehört.

S. 22. Unterstützungen werden entweder durch die Armen-Kommission, und unter dringenden Umständen sofort bewilligt, oder desfallsige Anträge bei der Armen-Direktion gemacht. Die für einen Dürftigen von der Armen-Direktion einmal bewilligte Extra-Unterstützung darf nur für diesen, nicht aber zu Gunsten eines andern Bedürftigen, es sei ganz oder theilweise, verwendet werden; das Geld muss vielmehr, wenn zwischen der Zeit des Antrages und der erfolgten Bewilligung Seitens der Direktion, die Umstände des zu Unterstützenden sich verbessert haben und er der Unterstützung nicht mehr bedarf, an die Haupt-Armekasse zurückgezahlt werden.

S. 23. Bis zur Höhe von 5 Thalern darf durch Beschluss der Armen-Kommission die Familie eines Armen auf einen Monat ohne weitere Anfrage unterstützt werden; in dringenden Fällen ist auch der Vorsteher berichtigt, mit Zuziehung zweier Mitglieder der Kommission, Unterstützungen, jedoch nur bis auf Höhe von 3 Thlr. auf einen Monat zu bewilligen. Es muss jedoch in der nächsten Monats-Konferenz davon Nachricht gegeben werden.

S. 24. Die Zahlungen an die Armen leistet nie der Vorsteher, sondern jederzeit das betreffende Mitglied.

S. 25. Die in der Konferenz liquidirten Extra-Unterstützungen, mit Ausschluss der den Allmosen- und Pflegegeld-Empfängern bewilligten, werden in einer besondern Nachweisung zusammengestellt, welche der Armen-Direktion mit dem Konferenzprotokolle und den einzelnen Bewilligungs-Beschlüssen eingereicht wird. Vorschläge zu Unterstützungen werden in der Nachweisung vor der Linie bemerkt.

S. 26. Unterstützungen werden theils baar, theils durch Ueberweisung des Erforderlichen in natura geleistet.

S. 27. In dringenden Fällen der augenblicklichen Noth müssen die Armen-Kommissionen sofort Hülfe gewähren, ohne Rücksicht ob der Arme zur hiesigen Commune gehört, oder andere Personen und Communen die gesetzliche Verpflichtung haben derselben abzu-helfen.

S. 28. In letztgedachtem Falle müssen jedoch die Armen-Kommissionen der Armen-Direktion sofort Anzeige machen.

S. 29. Was die Verhältnisse des Gesindes, der Handwerksgesellen, der Militairpersonen und deren Angehörigen, &c. betrifft, so wird deshalb auf die Seite IV. unter dem Buchstaben l. erwähnte gedruckte Zusammenstellung Bezug genommen.

S. 30. Männer, welche in den Jahren 18 $\frac{11}{12}$ bei der Berliner Landwehr gestanden, oder freiwillig sich eingestellt haben, und ihre Invalidität als Militairs nachweisen können, sind bei Ansuchung um Unterstützung an die hiesige Städtische Kommission zur Unterstützung der Freiwilligen und Landwehrmänner zu verweisen.

S. 31. In Fällen, wo ein Gesuch auf Krankheit gestützt wird, ist, ehe die Vermögens-Umstände untersucht werden, ein ärztliches Gutachten einzuholen. Der Hülfesuchende ist aber mit der Supplik selbst nicht an den Armen-Arzt zu weisen, sondern diese wird dem Letztern durch den Stadt-Sergant versiegelt zugeschickt und Ersterem bloß angedeutet: dass ihm, wenn der Arzt sich von dem wirklichen Vorhandenseyn der angeblichen Krankheit oder des Gebrechens überzeugt haben wird, unentgeltliche Hülfe geleistet werden soll, weshalb er sich am folgenden Tage, zur bestimmten Sprechstunde bei demselben zu melden habe. (Siehe s. 78.)

S. 32. Die Verrechnung der Extra-Unterstützungen an Almosen- und Pflegegeld-Empfänger erfolgt in den Monats-Liquidationen. Alle Extra-Unterstützungen, besonders die Kranken-Unterstützungen, welche auf unbestimmte Zeit und länger als einen Monat bewilligt werden, werden in den Liquidationen der Almosen- und Pflegegeld-Empfänger aufgeführt, und in denselben die Dauer der Zeit, für welche sie gereicht werden soll, bemerkt. Die betreffenden Verhandlungen bekommen ebenfalls die fortlaufende Nummer der Verhörbogen und werden erst dann zur Registratur der Armen-Direktion abgeliefert, wenn die Unterstützung aufhört. Auch erhalten die Empfänger solcher Unterstützungen den gewöhnlichen Almosenzettel, jedoch oben mit dem Vermerk: "auf unbestimmte Zeit."

S. 33. Durch Geburt, Stand, Bildung, &c. ausgezeichnete, jedoch in Folge von Unglücksfällen heruntergekommene Personen, haben wegen jener Verhältnisse keinen Anspruch auf ausgezeichnetere oder reichlichere Unterstützung; sie können jedoch aus besonderen Legaten-Fonds unterstützt werden, und es ist deshalb in einem jeden solchen Falle vollständig und unter Benutzung des neuen abgekürzten Verhörbogens an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten. Bei dergleichen Prüfungen mögen die Armen-Kommissionen bedenken, dass dergleichen Personen in der Regel noch unglücklicher sind, als andre, welche die Hülfe der Communal-Armenpflege in Anspruch zu nehmen genöthigt sind, und also bei ihrem Benehmen die Berücksichtigung jener Verhältnisse nicht vergessen, oder hintenansetzen.

S. 34. Jede Prüfung muss nach Lage der Umstände möglichst schnell, der Gründlichkeit unbeschadet, erfolgen, und die Verhandlung dann sofort an den Vorsteher zurückgehen. Es muss hierbei ganz besonders die von der Armen-Direktion am 14. April 1830 erlassene Verfügung beachtet werden, nach welcher sämmtliche im Laufe des Monats eingegangene, den deputirten Mitgliedern zur Prüfung überwiesene Sachen, welche in der Monats-Konferenz zum Vortrag kommen, wenigstens 3 Tage vorher vollständig erledigt an den Vorsteher zurückgeschickt werden sollen, damit derselbe sich von den Gutachten gründlich unterrichten und sie eben so vortragen kann.

B. Almosen-Empfänger.

S. 35. Die gesammten Verhältnisse eines Armen, der auf Almosen-Bewilligung anträgt, müssen genau ermittelt werden. Ein Protokoll (Verhörbogen) ist darüber aufzunehmen. Dieses Protokoll wird von dem Hülfesuchenden und demjenigen Mitgliede, welches dasselbe aufnimmt (in der Regel der Vorsteher) unterschrieben. Ist der Hülfesuchende des Schreibensunkundig, so sind von demselben drei Kreuze in Gegenwart eines glaubwürdigen Zeugen, zu unterzeichnen, welcher den Namen des Bittstellers zu unterschreiben und zugleich zugleich dabei, unter Beifügung seines eignen Namens, zu bescheinigen hat, dass solches im Auftrage des erstern geschehen sei. Es ist dieses Verfahren wegen des durch den Verhörungsbogen festzustellenden Erbrechts des Armen-Fonds nothwendig.

S. 36. Die Angaben dieses Verhörungsbogens werden durch 2 Mitglieder gemeinschaftlich geprüft und das Gesuch ist von ihnen zu begutachten.

S. 37. Nach Rücksendung der Verhandlung an den Vorsteher erfolgt darauf, sofern nicht eine sofortige Unterstützung durch die Umstände nöthig wird, in der nächsten Konferenz der Beschluss.

S. 38. Als anfängliche Beihülfe eines neu aufgenommenen Almosen-Empfängers sind bisher monatlich 15 bis 20 Sgr. angenommen worden. In Fällen, wo ein höherer Betrag sofort bewilligt werden muss, sind die Gründe in dem Beschlusse der Armen-Kommission besonders auseinander zu setzen.

S. 39. Die Beschlüsse sind, wie alle andere, von sämmtlichen anwesenden Mitgliedern zu vollziehen.

S. 40. Das bewilligte Almosen unterliegt, so wie jede Erhöhung desselben, der Genehmigung der Armen-Direktion; diese erhält durch den Monatsbericht Kenntniss davon.

S. 41. Almosen werden zu Anfang jeden Monats für denselben durch das Revier-Mitglied gezahlt, und durch letzteres auf einem, jedem Armen zu behändigenden und von diesem allmonatlich vorzuzeigenden, gedruckten Almosen-Schein eingetragen. Das Almosen darf nur von derjenigen Kommission gezahlt werden, in deren Bezirk der Empfänger wirklich wohnt. Beim Jahresschlusse werden die Almosenzettel sämmtlich eingezogen, zu den Akten der Empfänger gebracht und ihnen dagegen neue Zettel gegeben.

S. 42. Almosen müssen in der Regel von dem Empfänger selbst erhoben werden; die Mitglieder sind für die Richtigkeit der Person, welcher sie Zahlung leisten, verantwortlich. Almosen dürfen nicht dem Stadt-Sergeanten übergeben werden, um sie den Empfängern einzuhändigen.

S. 43. Ueber jeden Almosen-Empfänger führt die Armen-Kommission ein besonderes Aktenstück, welches mit der in der Monats-Liquidation verzeichneten fortlaufenden Nr. zu versehen ist.

S. 44. Verlässt ein Almosen-Empfänger den Bezirk, so ist seine neue Wohnung vom Revier-Mitgliede auf dem Almosenscheine zu vermerken, und er damit an den Vorsteher zu weisen, welcher den Schein unterschreibt, und dem Inhaber desselben den Namen und die Wohnung des Vorstehers derjenigen Armen-Kommission, in deren Bezirk der Arme zieht, deutlich angeben muss, damit dieser sich bei demselben melde.

S. 45. Bei einer solchen Anmeldung, durch Abgabe des Almosenscheins, hat sich der Vorsteher zuerst gegen Quittung die Akten (Verhörungsbogen) von der früheren Armen-Kommission zu verschaffen, und solche an zwei Mitglieder zum Gutachten, nach Anleitung des den Armen-Kommissionen unterm 11. Juli 1832 zugeschickten Berichts-Formulars, zu senden.

S. 46. Bei jeder Almosen-Bewilligung bleibt zu ermitteln, ob der fragliche Arme bei einer Kranken- oder Sterbekasse oder bei mehreren betheiligt ist, auch ob er sich im Besitz eines geliehenen Arbeitsstuhls, Bettes, Spulrads oder anderer Utensilien von der Armenbehörde befindet, und ist solches und das Nähere darüber in den Akten, die geliehenen Gegenstände aber sind auf dem Titelblatte derselben zu vermerken. Auch ist es den Haus- oder Schlafwirthten solcher Almosen-Empfänger, welchen von der Armen-Direktion mit ihrem Stempel versehene Inventarien-Stücke geliehen worden sind, anzuzeigen, dass solche nicht des Miethers oder Einliegers Eigenthum sind, und demnach nicht für Miethsreste gepfändet werden dürfen. Den Vorstehern der Sterbekasse ist auch das bestehende Almosen-Verhältniss bekannt zu machen, um bei eintretendem Todesfalle zu verhindern, dass das Sterbekassengeld ohne Zuziehung der Armen-Commission ausgezahlt werde. Zur schnelleren Uebersicht wird auf dem Umschlagendeckel des Verhörungsbogens eines solchen Almosen-Empfängers, welcher bei einer Sterbekasse konkurriert, neben der Jahreszahl, ein rothes Kreuz vermerkt. Damit Ueberzeugung gewonnen werde, dass die Armen-Kommissionen wirklich untersucht haben, ob ein Almosen-Empfänger Mitglied von Sterbekassen sei, ist auf dem Umschlagendeckel der nicht mit einem rothen Kreuz bezeichneten Kommissionsakten eine rothe Null alsdann zu setzen, wenn der Almosen-Empfänger bei keiner solchen Kasse konkurriert.

S. 47. Auch bei Almosen-Empfängern findet die Bestimmung im S. 23. Anwendung.

S. 48. Jedes Mitglied führt über die von ihm auszuzahlenden monatlichen Almosen eine mit der Almosen-Liquidation übereinstimmende Liste, so dass der Abschluss der erstern dieselbe Summe enthalten muss, welche die Summen aller Revier-Listen der Mitglieder zusammen ergeben, wodurch eine Kontrolle gebildet wird. Nach Abschluss des Jahres bleiben die Revierlisten in den Akten der Kommission, wogegen deren Almosen-Liquidation in den Akten der Armen-Direktion aufbewahrt wird.

S. 49. Jedes Mitglied ist verpflichtet, die in seinem Revier befindlichen Almosen-Empfänger wenigstens monatlich einmal in ihren Wohnungen zu besuchen, damit es fortwährend über ihre Lage eine vollständige Kenntniss habe.

S. 50. In der Regel erhält jeder Almosen-Empfänger im Winter eine Unterstützung an Brennmaterial, sofern er eigene Wohnung hat; als Einlieger aber eine mässige Geldentschädigung, und zwar, bei geringer Zuverlässigkeit, in monatlichen Raten. Ist ein Armer jedoch den Tag über nicht zu Hause oder bedarf er überhaupt keiner solchen Unterstützung, so darf sie ihm auch nicht verabreicht werden, Wie es hierunter mit den Empfängern von Waisenkost- und Pflegegeld zu halten ist, müssen die besondern Umstände näher ergeben.

S. 51. Die Armen-Behörde hat ein gesetzliches Erbrecht auf den Nachlass eines in einer Anstalt verpflegten und darin verstorbenen Armen oder eines bis an seinen Tod aus den Armen-Fonds Unterstützten, wenn demselben das vorerwähnte Erbrecht in der vorgeschriebenen Art bekannt gemacht worden ist (S. 35); sie hat auch die Befugniß, wenn sie von jenem Erbrechte nicht Gebrauch machen will, die Erstattung aller, dem verstorbenen Armen aus Kommunalmitteln dargereichten Unterstützungen, mit Inbegriff der Begräbnisskosten, aus seinem Nachlasse zu entnehmen. In allen dergleichen Fällen ist unter Einsendung der Akten, an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten.

S. 52. Beim Absterben eines Almosen-Empfängers in der Charité, worüber der Armen-Kommission stets Nachricht zugeht, wird in Ansehung des Nachlasses so verfahren, wie bei anderen Almosen-Empfängern. (S. Abschnitt X. Verfahren beim Absterben, &c.)

S. 53. Da übrigens jeder Arme—Almosen-Empfänger und bis an seinen Tod Unterstützte oder nicht—zum Ersatz der erhaltenen Unterstützungen aller Art verpflichtet ist, so hat die Armen-Kommission an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten, wenn ein unterstützter Armer zu Vermögen gelangt, oder wenn sich unterstützungspflichtige und leistungsfähige Verwandte ermitteln lassen.

S. 54. Dasselbe ist zu thun, wenn die Armen-Kommission vernimmt, dass ein Almosen-Empfänger oder Unterstützter gegründete Forderungen oder Rechtsansprüche hat, die ihm hier oder sonst wo verweigert werden.

III. Bewilligung freier Kur und Arznei, so wie unentgeltliche Verabreichung von Brillen, Bruchbändern, Bademarken, &c.

S. 55. Anspruch auf den Beistand des Armen-Arztes und freie Medizin haben Alle, die so arm sind, dass sie beides nicht bezahlen können; ihre Vermögensverhältnisse sind daher genau zu prüfen.

S. 56. In dringenden Fällen kann zwar unter allen Umständen der begehrte Krankenschein ertheilt werden, doch nur vorläufig auf 3 Tage, und muss unverzüglich darauf die vorschriftsmässige Prüfung eintreten.

S. 57. Das betreffende Kommissions-Mitglied hat das Formular zum Krankenschein vollständig und die Nummer der Kommission besonders deutlich auszufüllen, zu unterschreiben und den Patienten damit an den Vorsteher zu verweisen, der den Schein unterzeichnet, stempelt und in eine besondere Liste einträgt. Es muss dabei die in dem Formular benannte Apotheke genau vermerkt und dem Patienten bedeutet werden, dass er das Glas oder das Gefäß, worin er in der Apotheke Medizin bekommen, bei jedesmaligem Wiederkommen nach Medizin unfehlbar mitzubringen habe.

S. 58. Bewilligt die Armen-Kommission in einzelnen Fällen nur freie ärztliche Behandlung, so ist die Stelle wegen der freien Medizin und der Aufnahme in die Charité auf dem Scheine mit der Feder durchzustreichen.

S. 59. In der Regel darf ein Schein nicht über 14 Tage, und nur bei chronischen, &c. Krankheiten auf einen Monat ausgestellt werden. Die Wahl der Apotheke bleibt dem Kranken überlassen, und wird die selbstgewählte in dem Medizinschein benannt, auf welchen dann nur die benannte Apotheke die verordneten Arzneien anfertigen darf.

S. 60. Wegen des Abschlusses der Apotheker-Rechnungen können die Anweisungen nur bis zum letzten Tage eines jeden Monats erfolgen, so dass z. B. am 29. der Schein nur noch für den 30. oder 31. gelten darf, und vom 1. des künftigen Monats ab ein neuer Schein gegeben werden muss.

S. 61. Wo mehrere Glieder einer Familie in einer und derselben Wohnung krank sind, ist nicht für jede einzelne Person ein besonderer Schein, wohl aber derselbe auf eine und dieselbe Apotheke auszufertigen. Almosen-Empfängern kann ohne vorhergehende Untersuchung freie Kur und Medizin bewilligt werden; es ist jedoch ihrer Eigenschaft als Almosenempfänger ausdrücklich in dem Scheine zu erwähnen.

S. 62. Sämmtliche Patienten sind dem Armenarzte zu überweisen, wenn nicht äussere Schäden oder Augenübel die Zuziehung des Armen-Wund- oder Augenarztes erfordern; in der Anweisung ist die Wohnung des Kranken aufs sorgfältigste und allergenaueste zu bezeichnen.

S. 63. Findet der Arzt die Absendung des Kranken nach der Charité nöthig, (wovon der Arzt die betreffende Armenkommission sofort in Kenntniss setzen muss) so verliert der Patient den Anspruch auf freie Kur und Medizin, so fern er nicht Folge leistet; mit ansteckender Krankheit behaftete Personen müssen dagegen, äussersten Falls durch polizeiliches Einschreiten, zur Charité befördert werden. Kranke, die in ihrer Wohnung nicht die zur Heilung erforderliche Wartung erhalten können, sind ebenfalls zur Charité zu senden.

S. 64. Führen zum Transport der Kranken dahin besorgt der Pächter des Leichenfuhrwesens auf Vorzeigung des ärztlichen Charité-Scheins; auch ist es dem Patienten gestattet, einen Begleiter mitzunehmen.

S. 65. Ausserdem steht im Neuen Hospital an der Waisenbrücke, im Arbeitshause und im deutschen Thurm auf dem Gensd'armen-Markte ein Tragekorb für Patienten, die ohne Nachtheil nicht gefahren werden können, auf Anweisung der Armen-Medizinalpersonen, bereit, wozu auch Träger beschafft werden.

S. 66. Wünscht ein armer Kranker in einer klinischen Anstalt behandelt zu werden, so ist auf dem zu ertheilenden Krankenscheine die Stelle wegen Aufnahme in der Charité zu unterstreichen, unterstreichen, die Anweisung der Apotheke auf Medizin aber, so wie die Dauer seiner Gültigkeit durchzustreichen.

S. 67. Unentgeltliche Arznei kann nur auf Verordnung des armenärztlichen Personals verabfolgt werden.

S. 68. Werden vom Armenarzte russische Schwitz-, Douche-, Schwefel- und andere künstliche Bäder, die Benutzung auswärtiger Heilquellen, oder der Gebrauch der hiesigen Trinkanstalt künstlicher Mineral-Wasser verordnet, so ist über die Nothwendigkeit des Gebrauchs, so wie über die Anzahl der Bäder, unter Beifügung des armenärztlichen Attestes an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten. Die für arme Kranke bewilligte Marken zu russischen und andern künstlichen Bädern sind nicht auf ein Mal, sondern nur jedesmal 2 bis 3 Stück von der Armen-Kommission dem Kranken zu verabreichen, und muss darüber eine möglichst genaue Kontrolle geführt werden. Diejenigen Marken, welche binnen vier Wochen, von dem Kranken, auf dessen Namen sie ausgefertigt worden, nicht abgeholt oder benutzt sind, müssen durch die Armen-Kommission an die Registratur der Armen-Direktion zurückgesandt werden.

S. 69. Sind aber nur lauwarme oder kalte Wasserbäder verordnet, so hat der Arzt eine Bescheinigung über die erforderliche Anzahl an den Armen-Kommissions-Vorsteher zu senden, welcher dieselbe auf den hierzu aus der Registratur der Armen-Direktion im Vorrath zu beziehenden Formularen ausfertigt, stempelt und unterschreibt. Weisse Marken gelten für die Pochhammersche Anstalt, blaue für die Welpersche; ersterer sind die Armen-Kommissionen No. 33—56 und No. 4, und letzterer die Armen-Kommissionen No. 1—3 und No. 5—32 zugewiesen.

S. 70. Verweigert die Königl. Charité die Aufnahme eines ihr zugewiesenen armen Kranken, und kann derselbe in seiner Wohnung nicht behandelt werden, so ist hierüber bei der Armen-Direktion Anzeige zu machen.

S. 71. Diätetische Hülfsmittel der Kur, als Fleisch, Fleischbrühe, Eier, Wein, Kaffee, &c. sind auf Verordnung und Requisition des Armenarztes dem Kranken zu reichen, und ist der Geldbetrag dafür in der Nachweisung der ausserordentlichen Unterstützungen zu liquidiren.

S. 72. Für zünftige Gesellen muss in Erkrankungsfällen das betreffende Gewerk Sorge tragen.

S. 73. Die Verpflegung eines kranken Lehrlings liegt in der Regel seinem Meister, so wie eines erkrankenden Dienstboten seiner Herrschaft ob, und nur in Fällen, wo die Nicht-Verpflichtung klar nachgewiesen wird, auch gesetzlich verpflichtete und zahlungsfähige Verwandte nicht vorhanden sind, tritt die Armen-Kommission zu und veranlasst nach Bewandniss der Umstände entweder die Charité-Aufnahme, oder die häusliche Behandlung. Eben so wird verfahren, wenn Meister oder Herrschaft ihre Verpflichtung in Abrede stellen, wovon in jedem Falle der Armen-Direktion Anzeige zu machen ist.

S. 74. Wird aber ein kranker Lehrling oder ein kranker Dienstbothe zur Charité befördert, so ist, Behufs des an den Meister oder die Dienstherrschaft zu nehmenden Regresses wegen der Kosten, das Dienstverhältniss und die Zahlungsfähigkeit des Meisters oder der Dienstherrschaft auf dem Scheine zur Aufnahme in die Charité zu bemerken.

S. 75. Bei Professionisten ist auf dem Krankenscheine stets zu bemerken, ob sie Meister oder Gesellen, und in einer Privat-Kranken- oder Gesellen-Krankenkasse sind oder nicht? Letztern Falls nur steht auch ihnen für ihre Person Anspruch auf freie Medizin zu, ausserdem bloß für die Familie. Sowohl die verheiratheten als auch die unverheiratheten zünftigen Webergesellen, müssen bei der Weber-Gewerks-Gesellen-Kranken- und Sterbekasse concurriren, also ihre Beiträge zu derselben (Auflagen) entrichten, mithin auch aus dieser in Krankheits- oder Todesfällen die übliche Unterstützung erhalten. Der Altmeister ist von dem Gewerks-Assessor angewiesen, hiernach für die Zukunft zu verfahren, und der Magistrat hat nicht nur diese Massregel genehmigt, sondern auch die bisherige Observanz, nach welcher die verheiratheten Webergesellen von der Gesellenkasse ausgeschlossen waren, aufgehoben.

S. 76. Laut Circular-Verfügung vom 6. Septbr. 1831 werden in den Militair-Lazarethen nur diejenigen Individuen aufgenommen, welche noch bei den Invaliden-Compagnien stehen, mithin auch die bei dem hiesigen Invaliden-Bataillon stehenden.

S. 77. Alle übrigen mit dem Gnaden-Gehalte von 1, 2 oder 3 Thalern entlassenen Invaliden, fallen dagegen der Commune hinsichtlich der ärztlichen Behandlung und Verabreichung freier Medizin anheim. Hinsichts der, auf unbestimmte Zeit mit Vorbehalt des Rechts zum Wiedereintritt beurlaubten Individuen der Garnison- und Invaliden-Compagnien ist aber in dem Reglement für die Friedens-Lazarethe im Jahre 1826 festgesetzt: dass denselben die Aufnahme in die Militair-Lazarethe gewährt werden muss.

S. 78. Die Armen sind anzuweisen, sich in allen weniger dringenden Fällen nur in der ihnen vom Armenarzte bestimmten Stunde bei letzterm einzufinden.

S. 79. Die Armen-Kommission kann die Medizinal-Armen-Beamten über den Zustand oder die Arbeitsfähigkeit einzelner Individuen konsultiren.

S. 80. Auch steht es ihr zu, dieselben zur Ausstellung von Impfscheinen und zur Attestirung der Krankheit eines im Bezirke untergebrachten Waisenhaus- Kost- oder Pflegekindes zu veranlassen.

S. 81. Augenschwache Kranke, die einer Brille bedürfen, oder eine nicht mehr passende umtauschen wollen, zu beiden aber durchaus die Mittel nicht besitzen, sind mittelst eines Armuthsattestes, in welchem die Art des Geschäfts genau zu bezeichnen ist, dem betreffenden Armen-Arzt zu überweisen.

S. 82. Bedarf ein Armer eines Bruchbandes, so fertigen nach erfolgter genauer Prüfung seiner Vermögens-Verhältnisse, das betreffende Mitglied und der Vorsteher eine Bescheinigung, durch Ausfüllung des vorhandenen gedruckten Formulars, aus, womit jener sich, Behufs der chirurgischen Prüfung und desfallsigen Anzeige bei dem Armen-Wundarzt meldet. Diese Bescheinigung wird hierauf nebst dem ärztlichen Gutachten durch den Armen-Wundarzt der Armen-Direktion eingereicht.

S. 83. An zünftige Handwerksgesellen kann ein Bruchband nur bewilligt werden, wenn sie durch ein Attest des Assessors ihres Gewerks nachweisen, dass sie von dem letztern diese Unterstützung nicht erhalten können.

IV. Bewilligung unentgeltlicher Hülfe bei Entbindung armer Schwangeren.

S. 84. Arme Kreissende sind an die nächstwohnende Hebamme zu weisen, welche gegen den taxmässigen Preis von 15 Sgr. die erforderliche Hülfe bei und nach der Geburt zu leisten hat.

S. 85. Die desfallsigen Rechnungen der Hebammen können, falls die Armen-Kommission von der Armuth der Entbundenen, so wie auch davon überzeugt ist, dass zur Zahlung zunächst verpflichtete bemittelte Verwandte nicht vorhanden, bei unehelichen Geburten aber der Schwängerer ebenfalls mittellos ist, ohne Weiteres aus dem Bezirksfond bezahlt, und gehörigen Orts zur Erstattung liquidirt werden.

S. 86. Wo die Hülfe eines Geburtshelfers nothwendig wird, ist die Hebamme verpflichtet, einen von denjenigen Geburtshelfern herbei zu rufen, welche Seitens der Armen-Direktion dem betreffenden Bezirk zur unentgeltlichen Hülfsleistung zugetheilt und sämtlichen Hebammen ausdrücklich bekannt gemacht worden sind.

S. 87. Nur wenn Gefahr im Verzuge ist, und die Hülfe der s. 86. erwähnten Geburtshelfer nicht zur gehörigen Zeit zu haben gewesen ist, (welches bescheinigt werden muss) soll es zulässig sein, einen andern zur Hülfe zu rufen.

S. 88. Ist in dringenden Fällen, wo nicht gleich ein Krankenschein zu beschaffen steht, sofortige Verordnung von Medizin nöthig, so hat die nächste Apotheke solche zu liefern, der Geburtshelfer auf dem Recepte aber zu bemerken, dass die Arznei für eine arme Kranke verschrieben ist. Am Ende jeden Monats hat der Apotheker solche Recepte der Armen-Kommission zur Attestirung vorzulegen.

S. 89. Werden Klystiere an weibliche Personen verordnet, so sind für jedes 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ Sgr. der Hebamme zu vergütigen.

S. 90. Melden sich arme Schwangere zur Aufnahme in die Charité Behufs ihrer Entbindung, so ist ihnen zu eröffnen, dass sie keiner schriftlichen Anweisung dazu bedürfen, sondern ohne solche im achten Monat ihrer Schwangerschaft sich bei der Charité-Administration zur Aufnahme zu melden haben.

V. Vermittlung der Hospital-Aufnahme für geeignete Arme im Arbeitshause, Neuen Hospitale, Dorotheen-, Koppenschen- und-Spletthaus-Hospitale.

S. 91. In's Hospital des Arbeitshauses werden aufgenommen: arbeitsunfähige Personen oder Krüppel, die wegen mangelnden Familien-Anhalts, selbst mit Geldunterstützungen, ausser einer Anstalt zu bestehen nicht im Stande sind, sich gleich wohl durch Verbrechen, Sittenlosigkeit, Trunk, &c. der Aufnahme ins Neue Hospital unwerth gemacht haben, ferner: Personen, die sich wegen Obdachlosigkeit oder angeblichen Arbeitsmangels, &c. freiwillig melden, bis zu ihrem anderweiten Unterkommen, desgleichen Blöd- und Schwachsinnige gutmüthiger Art, dafern sie nicht besonderer Aufsicht bedürfen, oder die Haus-Ordnung stören; wogegen Wahnsinnige und alle solche Gemüthskranke, die spezieller Aufsicht bedürfen, durch den Armenarzt und Physikus in die Irrenanstalt der Charité zu befördern sind.

S. 93. Gesuche, entartete Kinder dahin zu bringen, sind an die Armen-Direktion zu richten.

S. 94. Steht Obdachlosigkeit bevor, so ist wegen Aufnahme in's Arbeitshaus an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten; ist jedoch Obdachlosigkeit schon vorhanden, so bedarf es keines Berichts, es kann vielmehr die Ablieferung an das Arbeitshaus durch den Stadt-Sergeanten oder auf andere Art sofort nebst schriftlicher Ueberweisung erfolgen.

S. 95. Zur Aufnahme in das Neue Hospital eignen sich ehelose, arbeitsunfähige, hülfsbedürftige Personen beiderlei Geschlechts von makelloser Führung, wenn sie keine zu ihrer Erhaltung gesetzlich verpflichtete und leistungsfähige Verwandte haben. Hiesige Bürger, deren Wittwen und Kinder, haben bei gleicher Bedürftigkeit den Vorzug.

S. 96. Ueber die Aufnahme entscheidet die Armen-Direktion, an welche daher stets, unter Einreichung der Akten, zu berichten ist.

S. 97. Die Verpflegung geniesst ein Hospitalit bei fortdauernder Nothwendigkeit seiner Beibehaltung und guter Aufführung, auf Lebenszeit.

S. 98. Gegen eine jährliche Beköstigungs-Summe oder ein Eintrittsgeld können auch arbeitsunfähige Personen, selbst wenn sie noch einiges Vermögen haben, in's Neue Hospital aufgenommen werden. Der Abschluss eines solchen Uebereinkommens geschieht durch die Armen-Direktion.

S. 99. Alte, wenig arbeitsfähige Personen weiblichen Standes, die einige Unterstützung von Privaten oder anderweit beziehen, einen tadellosen Wandel führen, und nur zu bestehen im Stande sind, wenn ihnen Obdach und einige Beihülfe gewährt wird, eignen sich zur Aufnahme Aufnahme in eines der kleinen Hospitäler: in das Dorotheen-, das Koppensche- oder das Spletthaus-Hospital, wo ihnen Wohnung, freies Brennmaterial, eine monatliche Geldbeihilfe, freie Kur und Medizin in Krankheitsfällen und beim Ableben freies Begräbniss zu Theil wird.

S. 100. Auch hier hängt die Aufnahme ebenfalls von der Entscheidung der Armen-Direktion ab, und erfolgt nach Umständen unentgeltlich oder gegen Entrichtung eines Eintrittsgeldes, wovon die Aufgenommene, nach der mit ihr getroffenen Einigung, auch die Zinsen in Anspruch nehmen kann.

S. 101. Es ist aber wohl zu beachten, dass dort nur wenige Stellen vorhanden sind, und daher nur selten darauf gerichtete Anträge Berücksichtigung finden können.

VI. Vermittelung der Aufnahme hilfloser Kinder in das Waisenhaus; Beaufsichtigung der im Bezirke untergebrachten Waisenhaus-Kostkinder und Unterstützung der ausschliesslich der Fürsorge ihrer Mütter anheimfallenden Kinder.

A. Aufnahme in's Waisenhaus.

S. 102. Zur Aufnahme in's grosse Friedrichs-Waisenhaus und Unterbringung für Rechnung desselben eignen sich

- a. vater- und mutterlose Kinder, die ohne sonstige, gesetzlich verpflichtete und leistungsfähige Verwandte, arm, und christlicher Religion sind, sofern sie nicht zur französisch-reformirten Gemeinde gehören, in welchem Falle der letztern die Versorgung obliegt.
- b. arme Kinder, deren Aeltern zwar noch am Leben, aber wegen Abwesenheit, längerer gefährlicher Krankheit oder einer abzubüssenden Gefängniss-Strafe ausser Stande sind, sie zu verpflegen.
- c. Kinder, welchen in andern dringenden Fällen ein sofortiges Unterkommen beschafft werden muss.

S. 103. Soll unter solchen Umständen die Aufnahme eines Kindes erfolgen, so ist durch die Armen-Commission, wo möglich unter Einreichung des Tauf- und Impfungs-Scheins, jedenfalls aber unter Benutzung des auszufüllenden kleinen Verhörbogens, an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten, von welcher die Entscheidung abhängt.

S. 104. Es kann aber eine Armen-Commission, wenn durch Absterben der Aeltern oder auf andere Weise Umstände eintreten wodurch Kinder plötzlich hilflos werden, und weder durch Verwandte noch auf andre Weise ihre Unterbringung, selbst gegen ein mässiges Kostgeld, im Bezirke möglich ist, diese unmittelbar zum Waisenhause senden; doch darf dies nur in den dringendsten Fällen geschehen, damit eine Ueberfüllung der Anstalt vermieden werde; auch ist dann unverzüglich darüber an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten.

B. Beaufsichtigung der im Bezirk untergebrachten Waisenhaus-Kostkinder.

S. 105. Die dem Waisenhause überwiesenen Kinder verbleiben entweder darin, oder werden gegen ein monatliches Kostgeld, auf Grund eines von der Administration des Waisenhauses auf weissem Papier ausgefertigten Kotscheins, bei rechtlichen Familien und Personen untergebracht, die dann für Unterhalt, regelmässigen Besuch der Freischule, so wie für Kleidung und Erziehung Sorge zu tragen haben.

S. 107. Das Kostgeld wird in der Regel bis zum vollendeten 14ten Lebensjahre bewilligt.

S. 108. Die Armen-Commissionen führen, von verständigen und christlich gesinnten Frauen ihres Bezirks unterstützt, nicht nur die specielle Aufsicht über die in ihren Bezirken untergebrachten Waisenkinder und sorgen für deren Wohl, sondern sie haben sich auch zu bemühen, Personen und Familien zu ermitteln, die geeignet und geneigt sind, dergleichen Kinder in Kost und Pflege zu nehmen. Sie erhalten von jedem durch die Waisenhaus-Administration veranlassten Zu- und Abgange der Kostkinder Nachricht, und notiren solchen in der ihnen zu Anfang jeden Jahres für dasselbe zugehenden Liste. Das Letztere geschieht auch, wenn ihnen von den Pflegeältern zuerst ein Umzug in einen andern Bezirk gemeldet wird. Die Armen-Commissionen haben dann auch diesen Umzug der Administration des Waisenhauses, mit Benutzung des dazu bestimmten Formulars, anzuzeigen und die Wohnungs-Veränderung auf dem Kotscheine zu bemerken.

S. 109. Die Liquidation über die Kostgelder wird allmonatlich bei der Administration des Waisenhauses, und zwar spätestens bis zum 20. eingereicht, und von derselben nach wenigen Tagen revidirt und festgestellt, der Commission zurückgesendet. Letztere erhebt alsdann die festgestellte Summe in den letzten Tagen des Monats bei der Waisenhaus-Administration, gegen die von dem Commissions-Vorsteher ausgefertigte Quittung.

S. 110. Nach dem Jahresschluss und unter Begleitung der von den Pflegeältern eigenhändig durch Unterschrift oder zu attestirende Unterkreuzung zu vollziehenden Kotscheine, welche dadurch zugleich zur Quittung über die im Laufe des Jahres gezahlten Monats-Beträge dienen, stellt der Vorsteher eine Haupt-Jahres-Quittung über die Gesamt-Summe aus, und erhält dagegen die Monats-Quittung zurück. Jede dieser verschiedenen Quittungen muss übrigens mit dem Commissions-Stempel versehen seyn.

S. 111. Das Kostgeld wird nicht von Tag zu Tag, sondern jederzeit nach vollen oder Drittel-Monaten berechnet und folglich nur vom 1ten, 10ten oder 20ten Tage des Monats ausgezahlt.

S. 112. Einen Wechsel der Pflegeeltern darf die Armen-Commission nur innerhalb ihres Bezirks vornehmen und muss die Administration des Waisenhauses davon ungesäumt benachrichtigt werden.

C. Unterstützung der ausschliesslich der Fürsorge ihrer Mütter anheimfallenden Kinder.*

S. 113. Die Bewilligung von Unterstützungen (Pflegegeld) auf dergleichen Kinder ist fortan in die Hände der Armen-Commissionen gelegt und geschieht nach den Grundsätzen, welche auf Almosen-Empfänger Anwendung finden.

Dem zu Folge werden Mütter, die ausser Stande sind, ihre Kinder ohne Unterstützung zu erhalten, und nicht im Concubinat leben, gleich andern Armen, mit Rücksicht auf die Zahl ihrer Kinder, unterstützt.

S. 114. Diese bisher sogenannten Mutter-Kinder, die nunmehr, zum Unterschiede der Kostkinder, Pflegekinder genannt werden, stehen unter der Aufsicht der Armen-Commissionen und der mit ihnen vereinigt wirkenden Frauen. Es wird deshalb auf die besonders gedruckte und den Armen-Commissionen zugefertigte Anleitung, in Betreff der Wirksamkeit dieser Frauen, vom 19. Juli 1832 Bezug genommen.

S. 115. Für jedes Pflegekind fertigt die Armen-Commission, in deren Bezirk es sich befindet, einen Pflegeschein auf rothem Papier aus. Mit diesem und in der Regel mit dem betreffenden Kinde haben sich die Empfänger des Pflegegeldes monatlich zu demjenigen Mitgliede der Armen-Commission, welchem die Auszahlung obliegt, zu begeben, um das Pflegegeld zu empfangen. Ist die persönliche Vorstellung des Kindes nicht möglich, so muss dessen Leben oder Krankheit, bei Kindern über 7 Jahren aber der Schulbesuch auf dem Pflegezettel bescheinigt seyn.

Die erfolgte Zahlung des Pflegegeldes wird in dem Pflegeschein bemerkt.

S. 116. Gesunde und arbeitsfähige Mütter erhalten auf ein einzelnes Kind kein Pflegegeld. Haben sie deren 2, so erhalten sie nach Umständen auf eins, und bei 5 oder 6, das Pflegegeld höchstens auf 3 bis 4 Kinder; jedoch haben sie eine solche Bewilligung niemals als ein Recht in Anspruch zu nehmen, sie also nicht als etwas anzusehn, das sich von selbst verstehe und ihnen von der Commune gewährt werden müsse; es beruht vielmehr das Urtheil, ob ein Pflegegeld, und für wie viel Kinder, und auf welche derselben es zu bewilligen, lediglich auf der pflichtgemässen Ueberzeugung der betreffenden Armen-Commission von der Beschaffenheit eines jeden einzelnen Falles, und ihrem darauf gegründeten Ausspruche.

S. 117. Für Soldatenkinder, die während des activen Militair-dienstes ihres Vaters ehelich geboren sind, zahlt das grosse Militair-Waisenhaus in Potsdam Kostgeld; es muss daher in solchen Fällen dasselbe von den Müttern und Vormündern bei der Direktion des grossen Potsdamschen Militair-Waisenhauses — Wilhelms-Strasse Nr. 81 — nachgesucht werden.

S. 118. Das Pflegegeld beträgt in der Regel nie mehr als 1½ Thlr. monatlich für das Kind, es kann aber nach Umständen niedriger seyn. Für Kinder unter zwei Jahren, oder für sieche Kinder kann, bei der grössern Mühe, die ihre Wartung erfordert, auch ein höheres Pflegegeld bewilligt werden. Sobald jedoch die Umstände, welche dasselbe bedingt haben, es gestatten, ist es wieder zu ermässigen.

S. 119. Die Bewilligung des Pflegegeldes erfolgt, wenn nicht ein kürzerer Zeitraum genügt, immer nur auf ein Jahr, und die Lage der Mutter muss alsdann, bevor eine fernere Bewilligung erfolgt, auf's Neue untersucht werden.

S. 120. Vor der Bewilligung des Pflegegeldes muss stets der dazu besonders bestimmte Verhörbogen aufgenommen, so wie auch der Tauf- und Impfschein des Kindes beigebracht werden. Mit diesen 3 Documenten sind für jedes Pflegekind einzelne Commissions-Aktenstücke anzulegen, es sey denn, dass mehrere Kinder bei ihrer Mutter sich befinden, in welchem Falle für sie zusammen nur ein Actenstück einzurichten ist. Hinsichts dieser Acten ist überhaupt, und zumal bei Wohnungs-Veränderungen, das sonst bei den Commissions-Acten der Almosen-Empfänger übliche Verfahren zu beobachten.

S. 121. Sind die Pflegekinder nicht bevormundet, so ist solches der Armen-Direktion zur weitem Veranlassung anzuzeigen.

S. 122. Bedürfen sie des freien Schul-Unterrichts, so bewirkt die Armen-Commission denselben, unter Beobachtung der hierüber vorgeschriebenen Formen. (Abschnitt VII.)

S. 123. Treten Todesfälle der Kinder ein, oder verändern sich die Umstände der Mütter in dem Maasse, dass die Einziehung des Pflegegeldes unbedenklich ist, so kann die Armen-Commission gleich damit vorschreiten. Treten aber in den persönlichen Verhältnissen der Mütter, entweder wegen ihrer anderweiten Verheirathung, oder in Beziehung auf ihren Wandel oder sonstige Ursachen solche Veränderungen ein, die das zu beobachtende Verfahren, mit Rücksicht auf das Interesse der Pflegekinder, zweifelhaft machen; so ist deshalb an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten.

S. 124. Behufs der Buchung und Liquidation der für die Pflegekinder gezahlten Pflegegelder wird für das Jahr 1833 eine besondere Nachweisung den Armen-Commissionen zuge stellt, welche von dem Vorsteher in der betreffenden Monats-Colonne unterschrieben, gleich der der Almosen-Liquidation mit dem monatlichen Conferenz-Protocoll bei der Armen-Direction, zur Anweisung des Betrages, monatlich eingereicht, und nach erfolgter Feststellung, den Armen Commissionen, zur Erhebung des Betrages aus der Haupt-Armen-Kasse, zurückgeschickt wird.

VII. Bewilligung freier Schule für arme Kinder.

S. 125. Den Armen-Kommissionen liegt es ob, dafür zu sorgen, dass schulpflichtige Kinder armer Aeltern Schulunterricht geniessen und regelmässig die Schule besuchen.

S. 126. Die Schulpflichtigkeit derselben fängt observanzmässig hier mit Ablauf des 7ten Lebensjahres an, und endigt, wenn das Kind, nach dem Zeugniß seines Seelsorgers, die für seinen Stand nothwendigen Kenntnisse und Fertigkeiten erlangt hat, der Regel nach mit dem 14ten Jahre. Sollten Kinder später noch Unterricht geniessen müssen, die Eltern aber zu arm sein, diesen ihnen zu beschaffen, so ist der Armen-Direktion zur weitem Veranlassung hiervon Anzeige zu machen.

S. 127. Ausser den Armen hiesiger Stadt, (wobei jedoch s. 21. zu berücksichtigen ist) eignen sich zur Aufnahme als Freischüler die Kinder verstorbener Soldaten, welche aus dem grossen Potsdamschen Waisenhaus unterstützt werden, desgleichen die Kinder der aus dem Invalidenhaus mit Gnadengehalt entlassenen Invaliden, wenn die Aufnahme in die Garnisonschule nachweislich nicht erfolgen kann. Kinder, welche wegen unumgänglichen Broderwerbes die Tagesschule nicht länger besuchen können, sind, dafern sie zum Konfirmations-Unterricht noch unreif erklärt werden, einer Nachhülfe-Schule zu überweisen.

S. 128. Wenn gewissenlose Eltern Kinder ohne Unterricht aufwachsen lassen, muss die Armen-Kommission durch Ermahnungen, oder, wo diese nicht fruchten, durch Requisition der Polizei-Kommissarien, und äussersten Falls durch Anzeige bei der Armen-Direktion dahin wirken, dass dergleichen Kinder der Schule zugeführt werden. Ermittelt sich dabei, dass die Eltern das Schulgeld entrichten können, es aber verweigern, so ist ebenfalls zu berichten.

S. 129. Auch für den möglichst regelmässigen Besuch der Schule haben die Armen-Kommissionen auf dem vorbezeichneten Wege nachdrücklichst zu sorgen. Die ihnen monatlich zugehenden Extrakte der stattgehabten Schulversäumnisse werden dabei zum Anhalt dienen.

S. 130. Zur Aufnahme von Freischülern, deren Bedürftigkeit durch die Armen-Commissionen festgestellt worden, ist die Beibringung des Tauf- und Impfscheins erforderlich. Zur Erlangung des ersteren stellt der Vorsteher oder das damit beauftragte Kommissions-Mitglied dem Nachsuchenden ein Exemplar der dazu gedruckten Taufschein-Formulare zu, womit dieser zu dem Küster der Kirche geht, wo das Kind getauft ist; letzterer fertigt dann den Schein unentgeltlich aus. Der Vorsteher füllt hierauf das Formular eines Freischul-Scheins aus, und lässt auf dessen Rückseite die vorgedruckten Verpflichtungen durch Unterschrift des Vaters, Vormundes, &c. von diesem anerkennen.

S. 131. Der Vorsteher sammelt die im Laufe eines Quartals eingehenden Schul-Scheine, fertigt davon eine Liste, und sendet beides Mitte März, Juni, September und Dezember entweder an den Vorstand der Kommunal-Armen-Schule, oder wo eine solche noch nicht besteht, an die Freischul-Inspection (im Waisenhaus).

S. 132. Letztere weist die Schule an und sendet die Schul-Zuweisungs-Scheine dem Vorsteher zurück, um vermittelt ihrer, nach vorheriger Visirung des betreffenden Freischul-Verordneten, die Kinder der Schule zu überweisen.

S. 133. In Fällen, wo Kinder aus mehreren, zu einem Kommunal-Armenschul-Bezirk gehörigen Armen-Kommissionen nicht in die betreffende Kommunal-Armenschule untergebracht werden können, fertigt der Schul-Vorstand dieser Schule eine Nachweisung über die noch unterzubringenden Kinder an, und schickt diese mit Tauf- und Impfungsscheinen an die Freischul-Inspection zur anderweitigen Unterbringung. Diese weist nach Vorschrift die Schule an, und sendet die ausgefertigten Schul-Zuweisungs-Scheine an den Vorstand zurück, wodurch derselbe über den Verbleib der Kinder in Kenntniss gesetzt wird und demnächst der betreffenden Armen-Kommission die Schul-Zuweisungs-Scheine übersendet, um danach wie zu s. 131. zu verfahren.

S. 134. Bei Aufnahme von Freischülern ist zu erforschen, ob die Angehörigen derselben etwa im Begriff stehen, ihre Wohnung zu wechseln, in welchem Falle sie dann unverzüglich der Armen-Kommission zu überweisen sind, in deren Bezirk sie zu ziehen gedenken.

S. 135. Wenn Freischulkinder mit ihren Aeltern oder Angehörigen aus dem Bezirk, worin die ihnen angewiesene Schule liegt, wegziehen und in einem anderen entlegeneren Revier Wohnung nehmen, muss denselben der Schul-Zuweisungsschein zurückgegeben werden, mit der Anweisung, sich in ihrem jetzigen Bezirk, wegen Ueberweisung in eine Communal-Armen- oder andere Schule, an die betreffende Armen-Kommission zu wenden.

S. 136. Gehen Beschwerden über die Lehrer, oder von diesen über die Kinder ein, so müssen solche erörtert und wo möglich in Güte ausgeglichen werden. Ist dies nicht zu bewirken, so muss zur weitem Verfügung an die Armen-Direction berichtet werden.

S. 137. Entziehung von Almosen, Waisenhaus-Kost- und Pflegegeld ist zulässig, wo aller Ermahnungen ungeachtet der regelmässige Schulbesuch nicht zu bewirken steht.

S. 138. Bei den, den Kommunal-Armenschulen zu überweisenden Kindern ist in dem Falle, dass ein monatlicher Schul-Beitrag von 5—10 Sgr. entrichtet werden kann, dies auf dem Freischul-Schein zu bemerken.

S. 139. Bedarf ein Freischüler einer Bibel, so bescheinigt der Schullehrer deren Bedarf und den Schulbesuch, die Armen-Commissionen aber das Zahlungs-Unvermögen. Auf eine solche Bescheinigung verabfolgt die hiesige Haupt-Bibel-Gesellschaft (jetzt durch Herrn Prediger Schweder—Stralauer Stasse Nr. 38—Montags Vormittags von 8 bis 10 Uhr) eine Bibel gegen Erlegung von 5 Sgr. Kinder von Almosen-Empfängern, Waisenhaus-Kost- und Pflegekinder empfangen die Bibel aber unentgeltlich.

S. 140. Gesuche um Bekleidung armer Schulkinder sind, nachdem die an Ort und Stelle abgehaltene Untersuchung solche als begründet dargethan, von der Armen-Kommission, unter Beifügung der darüber gepflogenen Verhandlungen und des Attestes des Lehrers, durch den Vater, Vormund, &c. nebst den Kindern an den Verein zur Beförderung des Schulbesuchs armer Kinder zu verweisen, welcher zu diesem Behuf den zweiten und vierten Mittwoch jeden Monats Nachmittags 5 Uhr im deutschen Dom auf dem Gensd'armen-Markt öffentliche Sitzungen hält. Auf Kinder, für welche Waisenkostgeld gezahlt wird, und auf Kinder von Almosen-Empfängern, dehnt der gedachte Verein, wegen beschränkter Mittel, seine Fürsorge nicht aus. Während der Sommermonate können in den städtischen Armenschulen die Kinder baarfuss, und in Hemdsärmeln, jedoch reinlich, erscheinen.

S. 141. Den Armen-Commissionen liegt es ob, jährlich einmal, die Verhältnisse der in dem Bezirk wohnenden Eltern solcher Kinder, welchen der freie Schulunterricht bewilligt worden ist, untersuchen zu lassen, um zu ermitteln, ob sie dieser Wohlthat auch noch ferner bedürftig sind und erhalten die Armen-Commissionen zu diesem Behuf von der Freischul-Inspection im Januar jedes Jahres ein Verzeichniss derjenigen Kinder, welchen aus ihrem Bezirk der freie Schulunterricht für Rechnung der Armen-Direction bewilligt ist.

S. 142. Diejenigen Armen-Kommissionen, welche eine Mitaufsicht über solche Parochial- und Privatschulen führen, denen Freischul-Kinder für Rechnung der Commune zugewiesen sind, werden auf die Instruction für die Freischul-Verordneten hingewiesen.

VIII. Ausfertigung von Armuths-Attesten.

S. 143. Armuths-Atteste dürfen von keinem einzelnen städtischen Beamten, und von der Armen-Kommission nur zu bestimmt vorgeschriebenen Zwecken, welche, so wie die Behörde, bei der davon Gebrauch gemacht werden soll, ausdrücklich in den Attesten benannt seyn müssen, ertheilt werden.

S. 144. Zur Erlangung von Taufzeugnissen, die bei der Vormundschafts-Behörde eingereicht werden sollen, so wie zur Niederschlagung von Gerichtskosten beim Königl. Stadt-Gerichte, und zum Erlass oder zur Stundung der Miethsteuer bedarf es dergleichen Atteste nicht; vielmehr ist der Arme anzuweisen, in dergleichen Fällen der betreffenden Behörde seine Zahlungs-Unfähigkeit vorzustellen, worauf jene das Weitere veranlasst.

S. 145. Zum Gebrauch bei den höchsten und hohen Herrschaften oder bei Privatpersonen dürfen Armuths-Atteste nur dann ertheilt werden, wenn sie von denselben in bestimmten Fällen ausdrücklich verlangt worden sind.

S. 146. Eben so wenig darf an hiesige Einwohner zum Gebrauch ausserhalb Berlins ein Armuths-Attest ertheilt werden, vielmehr ist in solchem Falle an die Armen-Direction zu berichten.

S. 147. Die von der Kommission ausgefertigten Armuths-Atteste sind mit der Firma der Armen-Kommission zu bezeichnen, von dem Vorsteher und zweien Mitgliedern zu unterschreiben und mit dem Kommissions-Stempel zu versehen.

S. 148. Auf ausdrückliches Verlangen des Predigers können an Bezirksarme, die Erlass von Kirchen-Gebühren bei demselben nachgesucht haben, z. B. bei Taufen, Kopulationen, &c. dergleichen Armuthsatteste gegeben werden.

IX. Anweisung auf freies Begräbniss.

S. 149. Beim Absterben eines Armen bewilligen die Armen-Kommissionen das freie Begräbniss, wenn zu dem letztern keine Mittel in dem Nachlasse sich vorfinden.

S. 150. Insofern die Angehörigen eines Verstorbenen sich deshalb melden, und eine Prüfung die Zulässigkeit des Gesuchs ergiebt, wird ein Frei-Begräbniss-Schein, welcher von dem Vorsteher zu unterschreiben und zu stempeln ist, ausgefertigt, und der Empfänger damit zunächst an den Küster der betreffenden Kirche gewiesen. Hat Letzterer auf dem Scheine die Eintragung im Todten-Register vermerkt, so ist der Schein durch den Nachsuchenden in der Unterstützungs-Registratur der Armen-Direction vorzuzeigen, woselbst dann die zum Begräbniss erforderlichen Anweisungen ertheilt werden. Uebrigens ist den Hinterbliebenen vor der Ertheilung des Scheines zum freien Begräbniss noch genau bekannt zu machen, dass während der sechs Wintermonate die Leichen der auf Kosten der Armenkasse zu beerdigenden Individuen zur Anatomie abgeliefert werden müssen.

S. 151. Ein theilweise freies Begräbniss ist nicht zulässig, und folglich muss Jeder für den ein solches in Anspruch genommen wird, auf dem Armen-Kirchhofe in der für Arme festgestellten Weise beerdigt werden.

S. 152. Wie es mit dem Begräbnisse derjenigen Armen zu halten, die bei einer Sterbekasse interessiren, wird später bestimmt werden.

S. 153. Begräbnisskosten für Gesinde zu bezahlen, ist keine Herrschaft verbunden. Wenn also für einen Diensthofen ein Frei-Begräbniss nachgesucht wird, so ist ein solches zwar zu bewilligen, allein die Armen-Kommission hat alsdann den Nachlass und das etwa rückständige Lohn sicher zu stellen und darüber an die Armen-Direction zu berichten.

X. Verfahren beim Absterben unterstützter Armen in Beziehung auf deren Nachlass.

S. 154. Gleich nach dem Ableben eines Almosen-Empfängers nimmt das betreffende Kommissions-Mitglied von dessen Nachlass Kenntniss, lässt ihn erforderlichen Falls in sichere Verwahrung nehmen, fertigt ein Verzeichniss darüber an, wobei der Sergeant hülfsreiche Hand leisten muss, und macht davon dem Vorsteher Anzeige.

S. 155. Etwa vorgefundene Baarschaften werden an die Haupt-Armen-Kasse, Mobilien und und Kleidungsstücke aber mittelst einer von dem Mitgliede und dem Vorsteher vollzogenen Spezifikation mit einem Atteste des Armen-Arztes über die Beschaffenseit der Krankheit des Verstorbenen, an die Administration des Neuen Hospitals gesendet; das von derselben quittirt zurückerfolgende Exemplar wird dann mit den Personal-Akten des Almosen-Empfängers an die Armen-Direktion eingereicht.

S. 156. Hält der Arzt eine augenblickliche Vernichtung von solchen Nachlasstücken, die einen Ansteckungsstoff in sich enthalten, für nöthig, so hat die Armen-Kommission dem Revier-Polizei-Kommissarius dies mitzuthemen und der Armen-Direktion Anzeige davon zu machen.

S. 157. Der Transport der Mobilien &c. geschieht unter Begleitung des Stadt-Sergeanten durch möglichst genau zu bedingende Fuhren, wovon die Kosten in der nächsten Konferenz liquidirt und in Rechnung gestellt werden müssen, insofern sie nicht aus dem baaren Nachlasse zu bestreiten sind.

S. 158. Ist der Nachlass ganz unbedeutend oder von keinen erheblichen Werthe, so kann er den Hinterbliebenen, wenn sie seiner bedürfen, auf deren Wunsch, nach vorheriger Anfrage bei der Armen-Direktion überlassen werden.

S. 159. Ermittelt sich, dass der verstorbene Almosen-Empfänger ausser den in seiner Wohnung befindlichen Gegenständen noch anderes Vermögen besessen hat, so ist auch davon der Armen-Direktion Anzeige zu machen.

S. 160. Wegen des der Armen-Verwaltung auf den Nachlass der Almosen-Empfänger zustehenden Erbrechts, werden die Armen-Commissionen auf die s. 51. befindlichen Vorschriften hingewiesen.

XI. Prüfung und Begutachtung der bei der Servis-und Einquartirungs-Deputation, der Deputation der Königlichen Gewerbesteuer und der Salarien-Kasse des Königl. Stadtgerichts eingehenden und den Armen-Kommissionen zur Begutachtung zugewiesenen Stundungs-oder Niederschlagungs-Gesuche.

S. 161. Die von vorgenannten Behörden, &c. eingehenden Verhandlungen werden in gleicher Art behandelt wie die Armen-Sachen. Die Prüfung erfolgt ebenfalls durch zwei Mitglieder, welche die zu beantwortenden Fragen mit aller Sorgfalt zu erwägen, und die Gutachten vollständig auszusprechen haben.

S. 162. Almosen-Empfänger oder andere Einwohner, die nach sorgfältiger Untersuchung ihnen gleichgestellt werden müssen, sind von Mieths-Abgaben frei.

S. 163. Letzteres gilt aber nur für den Theil der Wohnung, wofür sie selbst die Miethe aufzubringen haben, nicht aber für das Quantum, was durch Aftermieter oder Einlieger aufkommt, sofern sich diese nicht in gleichem Armuths-Verhältniss befinden oder zu den steuerfreien Personen gehören.

S. 164. Fertigt die Servis-Deputation der Armen-Kommission ein Verzeichniss der bisher von der Mieths-steuer Befreiten zum Gutachten über die fernere Befreiung zu, so sind die Verhältnisse jedes Einzelnen genau zu erforschen und in der betreffenden Colonne zu begutachten. Die etwa anderweit noch im Bezirke vorhandenen Einwohner, bei welchen eine Steuer-Befreiung nothwendig erscheint und vollständig gerechtfertigt werden kann, hat die Armen-Commission in dem Verzeichnisse nachzutragen.

S. 165. Krankheit, Nahrungslosigkeit oder sonst ausserordentliche Bedrängnisse, rechtfertigen einen Antrag auf periodische Mieths-Steuer-Befreiung, Stundung von Prozesskosten &c.

S. 166. Bei den Gewerbe-Steuer-Begutachtungen ist niemals das Nahrungs- oder Gewerbs-Verhältniss, sondern lediglich das Armuths-Verhältniss zu berücksichtigen.

XII. Einsammlung und Berechnung der Haus- und Kirchen-Kollekten-Gelder.

S. 167. Bei den immer bedeutender werdenden Ausgaben der Haupt-Armen-Kasse ist mit Eifer dahin zu wirken, dass die freiwilligen Kollekten-Gelder-Beiträge der Einwohner sich nicht nur erhalten, oder verringern, sondern möglichst vermehrt werden.

S. 168. Halbjährig ist das Heberegister zu revidiren und zu prüfen, ob ausser den Beitragenden nicht noch vermögende und namentlich ihrer Standes-Verhältnisse wegen gesetzlich von der Mieths-Steuer befreite Personen im Bezirk vorhanden sind, von welchen ein Beitrag erlangt werden könnte, oder ein bereits bewilligter zu erhöhen seyn dürfte.

S. 169. Die Einsammlung erfolgt monatlich durch den Stadt-Sergeanten, und ein Mitglied (in der Regel der Bezirksvorsteher) fertigt unter Mit-Unterschrift des Kommissions-Vorstehers, die Quittungen nach Anleitung des Kollektengelder-Buchs (Heberegisters) aus.

S. 170. Nicht honorirte Quittungen müssen zurückgeliefert, und bei erfolgten Wohnungs-Veränderungen mittelst Abmeldung—nach dem lithographirten Formulare—der betreffenden Armen-Kommission übersandt werden. Letztere bescheinigt die Anmeldung auf der Quittung, und remittirt sie, um als Belag des Minus im Heberegister zu dienen.

S. 171. Bei Einlieferung der Kollektengelder, die spätestens 12 Tage nach Ablauf eines Monats bei der Haupt-Armen-Kasse erfolgen muss, sind jederzeit der Lieferzettel (welchen der Vorsteher und ein anderweitig bei Einziehung der Collecten beschäftigtes Mitglied zu vollziehen haben) das Heberegister und der Quittungs-Bogen bei der Armen-Direktion einzureichen. Auch abschlägliche Zahlungen in runden Summen können zur Hauptarmen-Kasse geschickt werden.

S. 172. Kollektengelder dürfen nie zu Ausgaben für den Bezirk verwendet werden.

S. 173. In sämtlichen Kirchen wird am zweiten Osterfeiertage und am Gedächtnistage der Verstorbenen (im November) des Vor- und Nachmittags für die Armen und die Armen-Schulen durch die Armen-Kommissionen kollektirt.

S. 174. Nach dem hierüber festgestellten Turnus haben gewöhnlich je zwei und zwei Armen-Kommissionen dies Geschäft durch ausreichende Besetzung der Kirchthuren zu besorgen.

S. 175. Die Einnahme wird nach beendigtem Gottesdienste in der Sakristei in Gegenwart des Predigers ausgezählt. Das über den Betrag aufzunehmende Protokoll wird von den anwesenden Mitgliedern und dem Prediger unterzeichnet. Des folgenden Tages werden die Gelder von der in dem Turnus zuerst genannten Armen-Kommission mit dem Protokolle an die Armen-Direktion abgesendet.

S. 176. Ausser den gewöhnlichen Kollektengeldern dürfen die Armen-Kommissionen ohne ausdrückliche Genehmigung der Armen-Direktion, keine Privatsammlung veranstalten. Auch ist den Stadt-Sergeanten untersagt, auf Bücher, Bilder u. s. w. Subscriptionen zu sammeln oder dergleichen Gegenstände zum Verkauf den Bewohnern des Bezirks anzubieten, wenn sie ihnen von Privat-Personen, zum Besten des Armenfonds oder eines Privat-Vereins übergeben werden, ohne hierzu durch die Armen-Direktion den Auftrag erhalten zu haben.

S. 177. Gehen einer Armen-Kommission irgend woher Gelder für einen bestimmten Armen oder einen bestimmten Zweck zur Verwendung zu, so müssen dergleichen Gelder im Kassenbuche, gleich den aus der Haupt-Armen-Kasse empfangenen Geldern, in Einnahme und Ausgabe nachgewiesen werden und nach der Bestimmung des Einsenders gewissenhaft verwendet werden. Sind an dergleichen Bewilligungen Bedingungen geknüpft, welche der Armen-Kommission bedenklich scheinen, so ist deshalb an die Armen-Direktion zu berichten.

XIII. Verminderung der Strassen- und Haus-Bettelei.

S. 178. Vorsteher und Mitglieder der Armen-Kommissionen haben ihre Wirksamkeit möglichst dahin zu richten, dass ihre Mitbürger vermocht werden, alle von Bettlern vorgezeigten Schriften, Atteste &c. zurückzubehalten, und an die Armen-Kommission, in deren Bezirk sie wohnen, einzuliefern, die Bettler selbst aber zur Prüfung ihrer Lage dorthin zu weisen.

S. 179. Almosen- und Pflegegeld-Empfängern ist das Betteln bei Verlust des Almosens und Pflegegelds zu untersagen.

S. 180. Es ist die Pflicht der Stadt-Sergeanten auf Bettler zu achten, und sie im Betretungsfalle zu verhaften, was ihnen daher öfters in Erinnerung gebracht werden muss.

S. 181. Es ist zu wünschen, dass es den Bemühungen der Armen-Commissionen gelingen möge, diejenigen Mitbürger und Einwohner, welche monatlich oder in anderen Fristen kleinere oder grössere Unterstützungen in den Häusern und Läden austheilen, dahin zu vermögen, dass sie diese zur Beförderung der demoralisirenden Bettelei gereichenden Spenden einstellen.

Berlin, den 1sten Januar 1833.

THE poor laws regulations of this city extend not only over the general administration, but also over the following benevolent institutions and foundations, viz. the Frederick Orphan Asylum, the New Hospital, the Workhouse and Hospital, the Dorothy Hospital, the Koppen Hospital, the Spletthaus Hospital, the Free Schools, and several endowed institutions.

The supreme management of the poor laws regulations belongs to the overseers of the poor, and the inferior authorities are the commissioners for the relief of the poor, who, by Article 179 of the City Ordinance of the 19th November 1808, are appointed to the local administration in each separate district; independent of those local authorities, there are the administrations for the before-mentioned institutions, inspectors of the free-schools, and the principals of the existing public schools for poor children.

The arrangements of the commissions for the relief of the poor are briefly as follows :

1. Each commission for the poor consists of a chairman and a certain number of members, proportionate to the extent of the district under its administration and to the number of paupers therein residing; which members are elected by the assembly of the district commissions, and confirmed by the magistrate.
2. The chairman is elected by the whole of the members from amongst themselves, by a majority of votes, and afterwards proposed to the directors of the poor for confirmation.
3. The election must be renewed every two years.
4. On the chairman going out office, should he be re-elected, it is legal, but he must be again proposed to the directors of the poor for confirmation.
5. The appointment of a new chairman takes place in the name and at the request of the directors of the poor.

6. The following items are to be delivered to the new chairman by the one going out of office, viz.:

- a. The cash-book; the revision of which the directors of the poor reserve to themselves at any time.
- b. The balance in hand of the funds of the poor and the nurse money.
- c. The journal containing a statement of the relief granted (not in ready money).
- d. The journal of contributions received.
- e. The register, showing what monies have been collected, received and paid into the receiver's office for the poor, according to the receipts produced, and also stating what may have been subsequently received.
- f. The iron money chest.
- g. The orphan and nurse expenses, as also the extraordinary supplies which have not been received or paid, as well as the present stock of wood, and the funds destined for relief in winter; the special minutes of the commissions which may be in existence, showing the balance of cash in hand for the poor, and nurse-money, and the general minutes of the commission; the latter to be kept separately.
- h. The book relating to the public administration of the poor of this city (Berlin, 1828, by G. Reimer, 321 pages, in 8vo.)
- i. The last list of the names of all persons who are engaged in the administration for the relief of the poor.
- k. The regulations of the poor of the 3d October 1826.
- l. The printed compilation of the legal prescripts in respect to the obligation of supporting the poor, and of the hereditary right of the institutions for the poor of this commune; 1832, 8vo.
- m. The printed instructions for the town serjeants, of the 11th July 1832; and for the police, of the 15th July 1832.
- n. The regulations as to the routine of business to be observed at the meetings of the chairmen of the administering commissions, of the 20th August 1832.
- o. The two stamps, together with the stamping apparatus belonging thereto.
- p. All such particular inventories as belong to each of the commissions, which may be there.
- q. The nature and particulars of the number of tickets for warm-water baths, as may have been delivered.

The delivery of all these things to the new chairman must be specially mentioned in the protocol which is to be presented to the directors of the poor, by virtue of which said protocol the outgoing chairman is to be discharged.

7. If a new member is proposed to be elected in consequence of another member going out, or a greater number of members being required from increase of business, it emanates from the commission of the poor, and such election can only be effected by the assembling of a proper number of the commissions, by a majority of votes.
8. The requisition is to be sent to the directors of the poor, accompanied by a list of interrogatories, which must be filled up and signed.
9. After the election of a proposed candidate has taken place, and his appointment been confirmed, the newly-elected member is invited to attend at the next meeting, at which he is to be presented to the members present by the chairman, and in their presence made acquainted with the obligations to be incurred by him. The chairman then introduces him into his new office by shaking hands with him, and the fact of this having taken place is to be entered in the protocol of the meeting.
10. To each new member of the commission for the relief of the poor, the following printed papers are to be delivered:
 - a. The regulations for the poor of the city of Berlin, of the 3d October 1826.
 - b. The regulations of the public administration for the relief of the poor of this city (Berlin, 1828).
 - c. The list of the names of persons charged with and engaged in the administration for the relief of the poor.
 - d. The printed compilation of the legal prescripts in respect to the obligation of supporting the poor, and of the hereditary right of the institutions for the poor of this commune.

Whenever a member is discharged from his office, he is to deliver, without being asked so to do, all the above-mentioned as well as all other printed papers which he may have obtained possession of by virtue of his office, to the chairman, in order to be delivered up to his successor. It is the chairman's duty to see this effected, for the purpose of avoiding expense.

11. Neither the chairman of the commissions nor any other member of the same, is allowed to resign his office at his own will; if he does so, he is responsible to the community.

community. Should strong obstacles prevent him from continuing in his office, he must solicit his discharge from the directors of the poor, and if found proper, the same is to be granted by them.

12. Each member is legally elected for six years, but permitted to resign his office after three years' actual service.

13. The member going out of office may be re-elected; and if he accepts office again, he is bound to serve three years longer.

14. The proceedings to be observed for his confirmation, are the same as stated in Article 4.

15. It is the duty of the chairman of the commission to see that the regular routine of business is kept up in the assembly; if he neglects to do so, he is answerable for it. The district commissions must, for that purpose, be divided amongst the members as equally as possible, and according to the number of the resident poor, and their proceedings must be strictly controlled; for which purpose the chairman has to satisfy himself, by interrogating the poor and by local investigation or otherwise, that no member of the commission has violated any of the duties imposed on him, either against the community or against the poor.

The business to be transacted on changing the chairman, by the directors of the poor, as well as by the commissions for the relief of the poor, is so laborious, not only on the part of the chairman, but on that of the members, that the directors of the poor, in gratefully acknowledging the admirable manner in which the commissions of the poor have hitherto discharged the duties of their office, confidently rely on their continuing to pursue the same course, and that they will improve in their experience, as the administration is daily becoming more difficult, in order that by their exertions, they may be enabled firmly to rely on the willing and cheerful sacrifice of health, time and means on the part of the inhabitants, and to express their gratitude at the end of the present year, which will complete the quarter of a century since the establishment of the City Ordinance.

The following review of the existing routine of business in the commissions for the relief of the poor has originated from the consideration, that the new members ought to be in possession of something which may guide and acquaint them with the existing prescripts, in order to prevent the many injuries which often arise from the ignorance of the principal and formal stipulations, and particularly as the details thereof may easily escape the memory. This review should be correctly revised and examined every year, that we may, by such exertions, produce at last an introduction to the business to be transacted by the commissions of the poor, which being developed from life, is as simple as possible and very practical. For the present, the following 13 Articles of an attempt at compilation must suffice:

I. General prescripts; see infra, S. 1 to 18.

II. Correct knowledge, inspection and support of the poor; that is to say,

a. Of the district inhabitants, in cases of transitory distress; see 19 to 34.

b. Of the receivers of alms; see 35 to 54.

III. The free medical attendance, with medicine, and the gratuitous delivery of spectacles, trusses, tickets for bathing, &c.; see 55 to 83.

IV. The gratuitous aid to poor pregnant women during their confinement; see 84 to 90.

V. The reception of the poor in the Workhouse, the New Hospital, the Dorothy Hospital, the Koppen Hospital, and the Spletthaus Hospital; see 91 to 101.

VI. The reception of helpless children by the Orphan Asylum, the inspection of the boarders of the orphan-house in the district, and the maintenance of the children depending exclusively on their mothers; see 102 to 124.

VII. A free-school for poor children; see 125 to 142.

VIII. The certificates of poverty; see 143 to 148.

IX. A free burial; see 149 to 153.

X. Proceedings to be taken on the death of paupers, relating to property left by them; see 154 to 160.

I. General

I. General Prescripts.

S. 1. The chairman receives all contributions, keeps a journal thereof, deposes two members for investigations, enters the proceedings, of the meetings in writing, and conducts the whole correspondence; he keeps a cash-book to enter all monies received and expended, and takes care that the entries of the expenditure be receipted in the last rubric, by the member who receives such money for the payment to the poor. The monies paid at the meetings out of the iron chest, are, after being acknowledged to be correct, to be restituted by the chief poor's pay office, in the course of the month, upon giving stamped and signed receipts.

S. 2. The district chairman is at all times a member of the commission, but he may be exempted from being inspector of any part of the country, provided he is assiduous in the collection of outstanding subscriptions, in the investigations, &c., and by properly attending the meetings.

S. 3. The meetings of the commission for the poor generally take place at the end of each month, but in cases of emergency the chairman may direct the meeting of the commission on any other day.

S. 4. All members have an equal vote, and in doubtful cases the majority decides. If the votes are equal, then the chairman gives the casting vote.

S. 5. For proceeding to a legal resolution at the monthly meetings, the presence of three members, inclusive of the chairman, is requisite.

S. 6. The protocols, resolutions, reports, &c. are to be signed by the chairman and all the members who may be present at the meeting.

S. 7. The objects and form of the protocols of the meeting, are to be written agreeably to certain regulations.

S. 8. The chairman is to deliver monthly, to the directors of the poor, a journal containing accounts of such reliefs as have been granted, not in ready money, but in free medical attendance, free funerals, free schools, spectacles, trusses, &c.; which, as well as the protocol of the meetings, is to be signed by the commissioners.

S. 9. On receiving petitions for relief, the chairman has to ascertain whether the petitioner has at any time previously received any relief, and in such or in other similar cases he has to procure the minutes from the registry of the reliefs granted by the directors of the poor, or from the workhouse or orphan asylum.

S. 10. The commissioners for the relief of the poor are not to have any communication with foreign authorities; but should they receive any, they are to give the fullest information thereof to the directors of the poor, and to leave the rest to them.

S. 11. They are, however, permitted to answer the questions of the authorities, associations and inhabitants of this city, respecting the circumstances of distress of any particular person, and also to obtain information from them.

S. 12. Once in the year at least, a local search is to be made in the dwellings of all those persons who receive relief either by alms, orphan, or nurse money, and who are living in the district, in order to ascertain whether their circumstances have so changed that the relief might entirely, or at least partially, be discontinued. The duty of this investigation is however divided amongst the members of the commission in such a manner that the member of a district does not alone revise the relief granted to the poor under his own inspection, but he is accompanied by another member of a different district to assist him, in order that in this manner all the members may by degrees become acquainted with all the poor of the districts comprised in the commission.

S. 13. The petitions presented to the commission for the poor, in writing, and which have been immediately refused, remain with the same commission, but the latter may return them to the directors of the poor, in case of such claims being a continuation of former proceedings, or the writing contains some motives worthy to be preserved. The same takes place also with all petitions which are sent by the directors of the poor to the commission for examination, and bear the number of the journal of the directors of the poor, even if the petitioners have received a refusal by the commission; thereby saving unnecessary trouble and all applications for the return of them.

S. 14. By way of precaution, no money or receipts are to be confided to the messengers or left in the hands of the serjeants during the night.

S. 15. At the time when the supply of fire-wood for the winter is to be taken in, the commissions for the poor have to use their best exertions, that the whole supply, or at least part thereof, be gratuitously delivered by benevolent men. An account of the manner in which the fuel has been divided is to be laid before the directors of the poor, by the commission for the relief of the poor, at the latest by the end of March.

S. 16. The day and hour of the monthly meetings is always to be communicated in writing to the city deputy or deputies, to the district chairman, and to the surgeon of the poor; the latter, however, may, in case of necessity, only be invited.

S. 17. Lithographic circular orders must at all times be read at the monthly meetings, and also be signed by all those that are present, as a proof of such orders being published. They are afterwards to be laid before the members who were absent, and then to be added to the minutes of the commission.

S. 18. Those persons who receive any relief from some charity or benevolent institution, or private benevolent society, such not being dependent on the directors of the poor, must be made known to the commissions for the relief of the poor, by means of lithographic extracts. Those persons, when moving to another dwelling, have to give to the commission for the relief of the poor, into whose district they have moved, a correct and true statement of their circumstances. It is therefore necessary for this purpose that a list of the names of such individuals be kept and examined every quarter of a year, in order to ascertain if any of them have left the district. If such a list is arranged in alphabetical order and so continued, the object intended will be greatly facilitated, and it will be of much use, particularly if such persons should attempt to make another claim for relief.

II. Correct Knowledge, Consideration and Support of the Poor.

S. 19. A person is to be considered poor, who is neither possessed of a sufficient fortune, nor physically or mentally capable of procuring for himself and for such members of his family as are unable to work, the necessary food, clothing, shelter and fuel.

S. 20. Such a person in such circumstances above stated, cannot however justly claim relief, if he has relations who are legally bound and able to support him.

S. 21. It is also to be ascertained whether a pauper belongs to a corporation who has funds for the relief of their poor.

S. 22. Relief is given either by the commission for the poor, or under pressing circumstances immediately, or notice of it is to be given to the directors of the poor. The extraordinary relief being granted by the directors to a poor person, must be applied only for him, and not in favour of any other poor person, be it the whole or part thereof; on the contrary, the money must be returned to the office for paying the poor, in case, between the time of claiming such relief and its being granted by the directors, the circumstances of the claimant should have improved, and he be no longer in want of relief.

S. 23. The commission for the poor may, by their own resolution and without asking leave, grant a relief of a sum of money not exceeding five dollars for one month, to the family of a poor person; and in pressing cases, the chairman, in conjunction with two members of the commission, is also justified in granting relief, but only to a sum not exceeding three dollars for one month, and of which circumstance information must be given to the monthly meeting.

S. 24. The payments to the poor are never to be made by the chairman, but always by the member concerned.

S. 25. The extraordinary relief which may have been granted at the meetings, exclusive of that which has been granted to the receivers of relief and nurse money, is to be entered in a separate book, and the book, together with the protocol of the meeting, is to be presented to the directors of the poor. Proposals for granting relief are to be set down in the book before the line.

S. 26. Relief is given either in ready money or in kind.

S. 27. In pressing cases of momentary distress, the commission of the poor have the power to grant immediate relief, without being required to take into their consideration whether the person in distress belong to that commune, or whether other persons and communes are under legal obligations to relieve him.

S. 28. In the last-mentioned case, the commission for the relief of the poor have to acquaint the directors of the poor therewith immediately.

S. 29. Regarding the circumstances of servants, journeymen, military persons, and those belonging to them, &c., there is a reference made to them at page 4, under Letter I. of the above-mentioned printed compilation.

S. 30. Men who have served in the Berlin landwehr, during the years from 1813 to 1815, or those who have voluntarily enrolled themselves, and who can prove their incapacity as soldiers, are, when they apply, referred to the commission for the relief of volunteers and landwehr men of this city.

S. 31. In cases where the claim is said to be founded on illness, the opinion of the surgeon is to be obtained previous to the investigation of his circumstances; but the claimant for relief is not to be sent to the surgeon of the poor with the petition itself, but the latter is to be sent to the surgeon by the serjeant, sealed up; and the petitioner is given to understand that, if the surgeon should confirm the actual existence of his illness, or his complaint, he will be relieved; and that he may come again the next day at the hour fixed for consultation, and announce himself to the surgeon (see p. 78).

S. 32. The extraordinary relief granted to the receivers of alms and nurse-money, is accounted for at the monthly meetings. All extraordinary reliefs, particularly reliefs to persons who are ill, which are granted for an indefinite time, and for longer than one month, are to be stated in the liquidation of the receivers of alms and nurse-money, and the length of time for which it is intended to grant the relief, is also to be added. The proceedings on such occasions, as also the running number of the sheets of examinations, are to be delivered to the directors of the poor, for the purpose of being registered only, after the relief has ceased. The receivers of such relief also receive the usual ticket for alms, however with the remark above mentioned, for an indefinite time.

S. 33. Persons who are distinguished by birth, rank, education, &c., but reduced through calamities, have, in consequence of such being the case, no claim for more distinguished or more ample relief; they may, however, be relieved from the particular fund arising from legacies, and of which a report is to be made to the directors of the poor, using at the same time the new and reduced sheet of examination. The commissions for the relief of the poor have at such examinations to consider whether such persons generally have been much more unfortunate than others who are necessitated to apply to the communal administrations for the poor, for relief; they have therefore not to overlook the consideration of those circumstances before they decide.

S. 34. Every

S. 34. Every examination must be effected according to circumstances as quickly as possible, but nevertheless perfectly accurately; and the proceedings taken down in writing are then to be returned to the chairman. The order issued on the 14th of April 1830, by the directors of the poor, stating that all cases received in the course of the month by the deputed members for examination, which are to come before them at the monthly meetings, must be delivered three days previous to the chairman, that he may inform himself of the correctness of the opinion of the members, and be able to confirm the same, must on this occasion be most particularly observed.

B. Receivers of Alms.

S. 35. The whole circumstances of a poor person petitioning for the purpose of procuring relief must be correctly ascertained. A protocol (sheet of examination) is to be drawn up thereon; this protocol is to be signed by the applicant for relief, and by the member who has drawn up the protocol, which is generally done by the chairman. If the applicant for relief cannot write, he is to make three crosses in the presence of a witness worthy of credit, who is to write down the name of the petitioner, and by adding his own name to certify that he has done so at the request of the other: this proceeding is necessary for the purpose of charging the fund for the hereditary right of the poor, by means of the examination list.

S. 36. The statements contained in the said examination list are to be scrutinized by two members jointly, and they have to give their opinion on the petition.

S. 37. After the proceedings have been sent to the chairman, a decision is to be given at the next meeting, provided circumstances do not make an immediate relief necessary.

S. 38. As a commencement of relief to recent admitted applicants, from 15 to 20 silver groschen per month have hitherto been granted. In cases where a larger amount is to be immediately granted, the grounds of such a resolution by the commission for the relief of the poor, must be explicitly stated.

S. 39. The resolutions are, like all others, to be executed by the whole of the present members.

S. 40. The granting of relief, as well as the increasing of the same, depends on the consent of the directors of the poor, the latter receiving information thereof by the monthly report.

S. 41. Alms are paid at the end of each month for such month, by the district member, and by the latter a memorandum is made on the printed alms-ticket which each pauper receives, and which he has to present every month. The alms are to be paid only by that commission in whose district the receiver actually resides. At the end of the year, all the alms-tickets are drawn in, they are then added to the minutes of the receivers, and new tickets are given to them.

S. 42. Alms must be received by the receivers themselves; this being the general rule, the members are answerable for the identity of the person to whom they make the payment: alms must not be delivered to the city serjeants for the purpose of handing them over to the receivers.

S. 43. The commission for the poor keeps separate minutes for each of the receivers of alms, which is marked by the running number as given in the monthly settlement.

S. 44. If a receiver of alms leaves the district, the member of that district has to write his new address on the alms-ticket, and he is sent therewith to the chairman, who also signs the ticket, and acquaints the holder of it with the name and address of the chairman of the commission for the relief of the poor in whose district the pauper is removing, that he may call there to announce himself.

S. 45. On such an announcement, by the delivery of the alms-ticket, being made, the chairman has to procure for himself, first, the minutes (sheets or lists of examination) of the former commission for relief of the poor, by giving a written acknowledgment thereof, and send them to two members for their opinion, as directed under date of the 11th of July 1832, to the commissions for the poor, by the formulars for reports.

S. 46. On every occasion of granting of alms, it is to be ascertained whether the claimant in question be a member of any benefit or other society, and whether he be in possession of any loom, bed, jenny, or other utensils borrowed from the administrators of the poor; this and all other particulars are to be stated in the minutes, but the borrowed things are to be written on the title page. It is also to be made known to the proprietors of houses and sleeping rooms, that the articles mentioned in the inventory, which have been lent by the directors of the poor to many of the receivers of alms, and which are stamped, are not the property of their tenants or occupants, and cannot be touched for rent in arrear. The circumstance of the receiving of alms is also to be made known to the chairman of the benefit society, in order to prevent, in case of death, the money subsequently to be received of such benefit society from being paid without the concurrence of the commission for the relief of the poor: as a quicker reference, a cross with red ink is to be made on the cover of the sheets or lists of examination of such persons as receive alms, who are members of any benefit society, such cross to stand at the side of the number of the years, in order to be properly convinced that the commission for the poor did actually endeavour to find out whether such receivers of alms be a member of any benefit society or not; and if not a member of any benefit society, then a zero with red ink is to be marked on the cover of such of the minutes of the commission as are not designated with a cross in red ink.

Berlin.

S. 47. The rules laid down in s. 23, are also applicable to the receivers of alms.

S. 48. Every member keeps a list of the monthly alms paid by him, which is in accordance with the liquidation of alms, so that when cast up the former must contain the same sum as the different sums of all the district lists of the members produce when added together, by which a control is formed. At the settlement at the end of the year, the district lists remain with the minutes of the commission, but those of the latter are to be kept with the minutes of the directors of the poor.

S. 49. Each member is bound to visit the receivers of alms in his district, at least once in the month, at their dwellings, that he may be constantly acquainted with their situation.

S. 50. Each receiver of alms generally receives, during the winter, a quantity of fuel, if he has any habitation of his own, but if not he receives, instead of fuel, a moderate sum in money, which, as there is not much confidence to be reposed in them, is to be paid only monthly; but if a pauper is not at home all day, or if he is not in want of such relief, it ought not, of course, to be given to him. In what manner the receivers of orphan board and nurse money are to be dealt with, must depend on the particular circumstances of the case.

S. 51. The authorities for the relief of the poor have a legal hereditary right to the property of any pauper who has been nursed in any of their institutions and died there, or had been supported out of the poor's fund until he died; provided the pauper has been informed of the above-mentioned hereditary right in the manner prescribed (see s. 35). The said authorities have also a right, in case they do not avail themselves of that hereditary right, to the restitution of all the relief granted to the pauper from the means of the community, including the burial expenses, out of such property as the pauper may leave. In all such cases, reports are to be made to the directors of the poor, by sending in the minutes.

S. 52. On the death of a receiver of alms in the Charité Hospital, of which the commission for the poor is always to be informed, the property of the deceased is to be dealt with as that of the other receivers of alms (see Article X., Proceedings on Death, &c.)

S. 53. Each pauper being a receiver of alms, and having received support until his death or not, is bound to restitute the value of the relief received of every description; the commission for the poor have therefore to acquaint the directors of the poor when a supported pauper inherits any property, or when his relations, legally bound to support him and able to do so, are ascertained.

S. 54. The same steps are to be taken if the commission of the poor hears that a receiver of alms or supported pauper has some well-founded claims and legal rights, which are refused him, either here or elsewhere.

III. Granting of free Medical Attendance with Medicine, as well as the gratuitous delivery of Spectacles, Trusses, Bathing-tickets, &c.

S. 55. All persons who are so poor that they cannot pay for medical attendance or for medicine, are entitled to the attendance of the doctor for the poor, and to medicine, gratis: their pecuniary circumstances are therefore strictly to be investigated.

S. 56. In cases of emergency and under any circumstances, the certificate of sickness may be immediately given, but only for three days, during which the investigation is to take place.

S. 57. The member of the commission concerned has to fill up the form of the certificate completely, to write the number of the commission particularly legible, and also to sign the same, and then to show the patient to the chairman, who also signs the certificate, stamps it, and enters it on a particular list. The patient must be informed where the shop of the apothecary, who is named in the certificate or ticket, is to be found, and he is further to be told that he must, on applying, after the first time, for medicine, always carry with him the phial in which he received his medicine on the first occasion.

S. 58. If the commission for the poor merely grant free medical attendance, the words relative to the free medicine and the reception into the Charité Hospital are to be struck out with the pen.

S. 59. A certificate or ticket is seldom made out for a longer duration than 14 days, but in chronic and other diseases it may be made out for the period of one month. The patient may choose any apothecary he likes; the name of the latter must be stated in the medicine ticket, and he alone has to prepare the requisite medicine.

S. 60. In consequence of the settling of the apothecaries' bills, the tickets for medicine can be issued only up to the last day of each month; so that a ticket which, for instance, has been given on the 29th, is only valid on the 30th or the 31st, and a new one will be given on the 1st day of the following month.

S. 61. Where there are several members of a family lying ill in one house, there is not to be a ticket for medicine given to each person, but one single ticket for medicine for the same apothecary will do. The receivers of alms may receive without a previous investigation, free medical attendance and medicine; their situation, as receivers of alms, is however to be expressly mentioned in the ticket.

S. 62. All patients are to be referred to the district doctor, if exterior hurts or diseases of the eye do not require the immediate presence of the surgeon of the poor, or of the oculist; the dwelling of the patient is to be carefully and correctly described in the order.

S. 63. If

S. 63. If the doctor finds it necessary to send the patient to the Charité Hospital (of which the doctor must immediately inform the commission of the poor concerned), the patient loses his claim to free medical attendance and to free medicine, if he does not consent to such removal; persons afflicted with contagious diseases must, in cases of extremity, be taken to the Charité Hospital by the police.

S. 64. Vehicles for carrying them to the Charité Hospital will be procured from the contractor of funerals, on showing the order for the Charité by the doctor, and the patient is allowed to take a conductor along with him.

S. 65. Besides this, there is in the New Hospital near the Orphan-house Bridge, a large basket for patients, who without injury cannot be conveyed in carriages, which is to be obtained by an order from the medical attendant of the poor, and porters are to be procured there also.

S. 66. If a poor person is desirous to go into a clinical institution, then the place in the ticket to be received by him, ordering his reception in the Charité Hospital, must be underlined, and the order to the apothecary for medicine, as well as the duration of its validity, must be struck out.

S. 67. Medicine can be given gratuitously only by an order from any of the medical men who attend the poor.

S. 68. If the doctor of the poor orders Russian perspiration, or douche, sulphur or other artificial baths, or the use of foreign watering places, or that of the Drink Institution of artificial mineral waters here, the necessity thereof, and also the number of baths, must be stated to the directors of the poor, and sent to them with the medical certificate of the poor. The tickets for poor patients for Russian or other artificial baths, are not to be presented to them by the directors of the poor all at once, but only from two to three each time, and there must be a control kept over them as strict as possible. Those tickets which have not been fetched away or used by the patients in whose names they have been filled up, within four weeks, must then be returned by the commission for the poor to the directors.

S. 69. If only tepid and cold-water baths are ordered, the doctor has to send a certificate of the number that is requisite to the chairman of the commission for the poor, who signs the same, agreeably to the forms which he receives in large quantities from the registry of the directors for the poor, and then stamps and signs it. White tickets are valid at the establishment of Pochhammer, blue ones at the establishment of Welper; to the former are assigned the commissions for the poor, No. 35 to No. 56, and to the latter the commissions for the poor, No. 1 to No. 3, and No. 5 to No. 32.

S. 70. If the Charité Hospital refuses to receive poor patients who have been ordered to be sent there, and if they cannot be attended at their own dwelling, then notice is to be given of it to the directors of the poor.

S. 71. Dietetic remedies for invalids, such as meat, meat broth, eggs, wine, coffee, &c. are to be given to the patients upon the order and at the request of the doctor for the poor, and the value thereof in money to be liquidated by the voucher for extraordinary reliefs.

S. 72. In cases of illness of journeymen belonging to a corporation, the company professing the trade which he follows has to take care of him.

S. 73. The nursing of all apprentices who may be taken ill, is generally one of the conditions agreed on at the engagement of the apprentice by the master, and the same is also the case with servants who make it a condition to be attended to in the house of their master or mistress, whenever they are taken ill; and only in such cases where the non-agreement can be clearly proved, and where there are no relations existing, legally bound and able to support them, the commission for the poor interferes, and causes the applicant either to be received by the Charité Hospital or to have attendance at home, according as the circumstances may require. The same is to be done if the master of an apprentice, or the master or mistress of a servant, deny having made such an agreement; but of this there is at all events a notice to be given to the directors of the poor.

S. 74. But if a sick apprentice or a sick servant be sent to the Charité Hospital, there must be written on the order for his reception there, some statement of the services of the servant, and of the capability of the master of the apprentice to pay, in order that redress may be had of them.

S. 75. With respect to tradesmen, it is always requisite to state in the certificate of sickness whether the applicant be a master or a journeyman, and whether he ever had any connexion with any private asylum for the sick, or with the benefit societies for the sick journeymen, or not. In the latter case only they are entitled to free medicine for themselves, but in the former case they are not in themselves entitled thereto, but their families are. The journeymen weavers, married or single, belonging to corporate companies, ought to become members of the journeymen weavers' benefit society for sickness and death; and as they must then contribute towards it, they must only look to that society in case of illness or death, for relief. The elder master has been ordered by the trades' assessor to act in future accordingly, and the magistrate has not only approved of this measure, but also entirely abolished the custom hitherto existing, by which the married journeymen weavers were excluded from the journeymen's benefit society.

S. 76. According to the circular or order of the 6th September 1831, there are to be received into the military hospitals only such persons as are still in the companies of invalids, consequently those also belonging to the battalion of invalids at this place.

S. 77. All other invalids who have been dismissed and have received one, two or three dollars on that occasion, fall to the community, when in need of free medical attendance and of free medicine. With respect to those individuals of the garrison and companies of invalids who are on furlough for an indefinite period, and have the right of re-entering reserved to them, there is, by the regulation of the year 1826, for the peace hospitals, ordained that they must be received into the military hospitals.

S. 78. The poor have to call on the doctor of the poor, in cases which are of less emergency, only at the usual hour appointed by him.

S. 79. The commission of the poor may consult with the medical man for the poor, about the state and capability of working of any individual.

S. 80. The said commission have it also in their power to cause the medical man for the poor to write orders for the purpose of attesting the illness of any person in the orphan asylum, or nurse-houses or nursery for the district.

S. 81. Persons whose eyesight are weak and who are in want of a pair of spectacles, or wish to exchange a pair which no longer suits them, for a new pair, and who do not at all possess the means of procuring the same, have their wants supplied by the oculist, who by means of a certificate and statement of the case procures the spectacles.

S. 82. If a poor person is in want of a truss, the member concerned and the chairman draw up, after a strict investigation of his circumstances, a certificate, by filling up the printed forms for the same, and he immediately proceeds to the surgeon for the poor, to show himself there and undergo a surgical examination; this certificate, together with the surgeon's opinion, is then to be delivered by the surgeon to the directors of the poor.

S. 83. A journeyman of any trade, who belongs to a corporate company, can only receive a truss after having proved by the handwriting of the assessor of his trade, that he could not get this relief from the latter.

IV. Granting of gratuitous Attendance at the Confinement of Poor Pregnant Women.

S. 84. Poor pregnant women are to be attended by the midwife living near them, who, for the taxed price of 15 silver groschen, will give her the necessary assistance at and after her delivery.

S. 85. The bill of the midwife is, however, to be immediately paid out of the district fund, and liquidated at the proper place for restitution, in case the commission for the poor are convinced of the poverty of the woman, and also that there exist no relations of her's who are legally bound and able to make such payment, and in cases of illegitimate birth, that the father be without any means.

S. 86. If the assistance of an accoucheur is necessary, the midwife is bound to call in one of those accoucheurs who are appointed by the directors for the poor to that particular district, for the purpose of giving their gratuitous assistance, and who have been expressly made known to all the midwives.

S. 87. In cases of imminent danger and when the assistance of the accoucheur mentioned at S. 86 cannot be immediately obtained (which must be certified), then only it is allowed to call in the assistance of another.

S. 88. If in pressing cases, when a certificate of illness cannot be quickly obtained, an immediate prescription of medicine should be necessary, the nearest apothecary has to deliver the same, and the accoucheur has to state on the receipt that the medicine was prescribed for a poor woman. The apothecary, at the end of each month, has to lay all such receipts before the commission for relief of the poor.

S. 89. For each clyster ordered to a female, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ silver groschen is to be paid to the midwife.

S. 90. If poor pregnant women wish to lye-in at the Charité Hospital, there is no occasion to present an order for their reception; they have only to go the Charité Hospital in the eighth month of their pregnancy, and make known their intention.

V. Regulation for the reception into the Hospitals of proper Poor Persons, and also in the Workhouses, the New Hospital, and the Dorothy, Koppen and Spletthaus Hospitals.

S. 91. There are to be received by the hospital of the Workhouse persons unable to work, or cripples, who having no relations to take care of them, are unable to subsist beyond the walls of the institution, even if relief in money was granted to them, and who by their crimes, immorality, drunkenness, &c. have made themselves undeserving of being received into the New Hospital; and also persons who, on account of their having no shelter and no employment, voluntarily present themselves until they are able to procure some employment, as well as idiots and weak-minded persons of good temper, who do not require any particular restraint or are not apt to disturb the order of the house; but all insane persons, and all who are delirious in mind and who require particular restraint, are to be sent by the doctor for the poor and the physician, to the asylum of the Charité Hospital for insane persons.

S. 92. Insolent beggars are also to be sent to the Workhouse.

S. 93. The request to have illegitimate children taken in there is to be made to the directors of the poor.

S. 94. If a pauper expects to be without a shelter, a report must be made thereof to the directors of the poor, in respect to his reception; but if he is already without a shelter, no report report is necessary, and he may immediately be taken into the Workhouse by the serjeant, with a written transfer.

S. 95. For reception into the New Hospital the persons must be qualified, viz. unmarried, unable to work and worthy of being relieved, who are of a blameless character, and have no relations who are legally bound and able to support them. The citizens of the place, and their widows and children, have the preference in this respect.

S. 96. The directors decide on the reception; therefore a report must be made to them on presenting the minutes.

S. 97. Every inmate of the hospital is kept and nursed there for life, if the necessity for his remaining an inmate continues, and he conducts himself with propriety.

S. 98. By paying an annual sum of money for boarding, or a sum at entrance, persons who are unable to work and are even still in possession of some trifling property, may be received into the New Hospital. The concluding of such an agreement is the business of the directors of the poor.

S. 99. Elderly females who are unable to do much work, but who enjoy some support from private individuals or otherwise, who conduct themselves with propriety, and who are only able to subsist if a shelter and some additional relief be granted to them, are proper persons to be received in one of the small hospitals; such as the Dorothy, the Koppen, or the Spletthaus hospitals, where they are to receive lodging, fuel, a monthly supply of money, free medical attendance and medicine in case of illness, and after death a free funeral.

S. 100. In such cases the decision is also dependent on the directors of the poor, and it is granted by them according to circumstances, either gratuitously or by the payment of a certain sum of money at entrance, for which the female received has, according to the agreement made with her, to claim the interest.

S. 101. It is, however, to be borne in mind, that there are but few places there, and therefore it is but seldom that an application can be taken into consideration.

VI. Regulations for the reception of helpless Children into the Orphan Asylum, for the inspection of the Orphans who are boarded elsewhere in the District, and for the support of those Children who are exclusively under the care and attention of their Mothers.

A. Reception into the Orphan Asylum.

S. 102. For the reception into Frederick the Great's Orphan Asylum, and procuring them board on account of the said Orphan Asylum, the following description of children are only qualified:

- a. Children without father and mother, who are without any relations legally bound and capable of maintaining them, are poor, and of the Christian religion, but not of the French reformed community, who are to provide for their orphans themselves.
- b. Poor children, whose parents are living, but through absence, long and dangerous illness, or penitential imprisonment, are unable to bring them up.
- c. Children to whom in other urgent cases an immediate shelter must be procured.

S. 103. If a reception under such circumstances is to be effected, the commission for the poor has to report the case to the directors for the poor, and at the same time, if possible, to present the certificate of baptism, and also the short list or sheet of examinations properly filled up, and the decision then depends on the said directors.

S. 104. But any commission for the relief of the poor can immediately send children to the Orphan Asylum, if by the death of their parents or otherwise, circumstances occur by which the children suddenly become unprotected, and cannot be taken care of either by relations or otherwise, even if a place for their board and for money were to be found within the district. This, however, is to be done only in the most urgent cases, as the overcrowding of the institution is to be avoided; the case must immediately be reported to the directors of the poor.

B. Inspection over the Orphan Children boarded out, but within the District of the Orphan Asylum.

S. 105. The children sent to the Orphan Asylum either remain therein, or are sent out upon the payment of a monthly sum for their board, and by means of a boarding ticket, filled up by the administration of the Orphan Asylum, on white paper, to honest families and persons, who have to board them, to see that they go regularly to the free-school, and to provide for their clothing and education.

S. 106. Those children, in case of illness, have free medical attendance.

S. 107. The money for boarding is generally granted up to the time of the children completing their 14th year.

S. 108. The commission of the poor, being assisted by intelligent and good christian-hearted females, not only keep an especial inspection over the boarded orphan children in their districts, and take care of their welfare, but they have also to exert themselves for the purpose of finding out families who are disposed and capable of taking such children to board and foster. Of the going out and taking in of the boarded children, caused by the administration of the Orphan Asylum, they receive information, and write it down on the list, which is to be sent to them at the beginning of every year. The latter proceeding must also be observed when they are informed by the foster parents of a removal to another district. The commission for the poor then have to communicate such removal to the administration of the Orphan Asylum, by means of the forms destined for that purpose, and to write the alteration of residence on the boarding ticket.

S. 109. The settlement of the money for boarding is to take place on the 20th of every month at the latest, by the administration of the Orphan Asylum, and after being revised and settled it is to be returned to the commission in the course of a few days; the latter then receives the fixed sum, during the last days of the month, from the administration of the Orphan Asylum, by giving a receipt for the same, signed by the chairman of the commission for the relief of the poor.

S. 110. At the conclusion of the year, and when the vouchers are presented for the expenses, signed by the foster-parents themselves, or marked with crosses by their own hands (which said vouchers also serve as a receipt for the monthly payments that have been made during the year), the chairman signs a general receipt for the total sum, and receives the monthly receipts back, each of which receipts must be furnished with the stamp of the commission.

S. 111. The money for boarding is not to be accounted for day by day, but always from one-third of the month to the other third, and consequently only paid on the 1st, on the 10th, and on the 20th of the months.

S. 112. A change of the foster-parents can only be made by the commission for the poor within their district, and in such case the administration of the Orphan Asylum must forthwith be informed thereof.

C. Maintenance of Children* who are exclusively under the care and attention of their Mothers.

S. 113. The granting of relief (nurse-money) for such children has been entrusted to the commissions for the relief of the poor, and is transacted on the principles which are applicable to the receivers of alms; in consequence of which, those mothers who are unable to keep their children without relief, and who do not live in a state of concubinage, are to be supported according to the number of their children, like other poor.

S. 114. Those children hitherto called "mothers' children," are now, in contradistinction to the boarded children, to be called "nursed children;" they are placed under the superintendence of the commissions for the poor, and the females who act unitedly with them. Reference is therefore made to the book of the 19th July 1832, purposely printed, respecting the efficiency of those females, of which each commission for the poor receives a copy.

S. 115. The commission for the poor executes for each nursed child, in the district in which it is living, a nurse-ticket on red paper; with that, and also generally together with the child concerned, the receivers of the nurse-money have to repair every month to that member of the commission for the poor whose duty it is to pay it, in order to receive the nurse-money. If the personal presentation of the child is not possible, its being alive, or illness, and with children above seven years of age, also its going to school, must be certified on the nurse-ticket. The payment of the nurse-money is to be mentioned on the nurse-ticket.

S. 116. Healthy mothers who are able to work, with only one child, receive no nurse-money; if they have two, they receive nurse-money for one; and if five or six, they receive nurse-money for three or four children; they have however no right to claim such grants, and to consider them as a matter of course to be granted to them by the community, as the decision, if any nurse-money, and for how many children, and in what manner it shall be granted, depends solely on the judgment and conviction of the commission for the poor, on the state of each case, and the claim founded thereon.

S. 117. For soldiers' children, born in lawful marriage, during active military service of their fathers, the great Orphan Asylum of Potsdam grants board-money; therefore it is to be asked by the mothers and guardians, of the great Military Orphan Asylum at Potsdam, No. 81 Wilhelm's-street.

S. 118. The nurse-money generally does not amount to more than 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ dollar per month for each child; but it may be less, according to circumstances. For children under two years, or for sick children, who require more care and attention, a larger amount of nurse-money may be granted, but as soon as circumstances will admit of it, it is to be reduced.

S. 119. The granting of nurse-money always takes place for one year, provided a shorter period is not considered sufficient; and before grants of the money are renewed the situation of the mother is to be inquired into.

S. 120. Previous to granting of nurse-money, the sheet or list of examination expressly intended for that purpose is to be filled up, and the certificate of baptism, and inoculation or vaccination, to be given in. Separate minutes of the commission are to be established with these three documents for each nursed child; but if several children live with their mother, then one act or single minute is only required for all of them. The rules to be observed in respect to the minutes of the commissions for granting of alms, are to be followed in respect to the minutes kept in the above cases.

S. 121. If the foster children have no guardian, notice thereof is to be given to the directors of the poor.

S. 122. If they are in need of a free-school education it will be provided for them by the commission of the poor, under observance of the forms prescribed in respect thereto (Paragraph VII).

S. 123. In

* The regulations contained sub letter C. are to take effect only on the 1st of April next,; until that time the old regulations remain in force, according to which those children are depending the same as those sub letter B., on the administration of the Orphan Asylum.

S. 123. In case of death of one of the children, or in case the circumstances of the mother have improved so much that the withdrawal of the nurse-money can be effected, the commission for the relief of the poor may withdraw the same immediately; but if the circumstances of the mothers again alter, either by their marrying again, or by their own misconduct, or from other causes which make the treatment in respect to the interest of the nurse-children doubtful, the directors of the poor are then to be informed thereof.

S. 124. For entering and liquidating the money to be paid for the nursed children, the commissions for the relief of the poor will receive for the year 1833 a particular voucher, which when signed by the chairman in the monthly column, as thereby directed, is to be presented monthly to the directors for the poor, together with the minutes of the meeting for the payment of the amount thereof, and after the same has been settled it is to be returned to the commissions for the poor, to receive the amount from the principal receiver's office for the poor.

VII. Granting of Free Schooling to Poor Children.

S. 125. It is the duty of the commissions for the relief of the poor to take care that the children of poor people who are able to go to school, do attend the same regularly, and receive instruction.

S. 126. The period of children being sent to school regularly commences at the completion of the child's seventh year, and terminates when the child, according to the testimony of the minister, has acquired that knowledge and perfection which are necessary for his station in life, and which generally occurs on his attaining his 14th year. Should any child require instruction beyond that period, and its parents are poor, then the directors of the poor are to be applied to, and the case left to their decision.

S. 127. Besides the poor of this city (S. 21 is however to be referred to), the following description of children are to be received as free scholars, viz. the children of deceased soldiers, who are supported by the Great Military Orphan Asylum of Potsdam; as also the children of such invalids who have been dismissed from the hospital for invalids, with a certain sum of money, provided it can be shown that their reception into the Garrison School cannot be effected. Children who from the absolute necessity of earning their own living, cannot attend the day-school any longer, are to be transferred to the assistant schools, if they are declared to be unacquainted with the necessary instruction for their being religiously confirmed.

S. 128. If any parents allow their children to grow up without receiving any instruction, the commissions for the relief of the poor have to remonstrate with them, by telling them that such children should be sent to school; and if this should be of no avail, the commissary of the police is to interfere; and should this also be without effect, information thereof is to be given to the directors of the poor. If it be ascertained that the parents are able to pay the school-money, but refuse to do so, a report is also to be made thereof.

S. 129. The commissions for the relief of the poor have also expressly to take care that the children do regularly attend the schools in the manner before mentioned. The monthly extract from the list of the names, of such children who may have occasionally absented themselves from school, and which is to be sent every month to the commissions for the relief of the poor, will give them an opportunity to remonstrate with such children.

S. 130. For the reception of such free scholars whose cases have been decided on by the commissions for the relief of the poor, it is necessary to produce the certificates of baptism and inoculation or vaccination. For the procuring of the first, the chairman or any member of the commission thereunto appointed, has to give a copy of the form of the printed certificate of baptism to the claimants, and the latter has to take the same to the clerk of that church in which the child has been christened, and which the clerk then fills up gratuitously; the chairman then fills up the form of a free-school ticket, and causes the obligations printed on the back thereof to be acknowledged by the signature of the father, guardian, &c.

S. 131. The principal of the school collects all the school-tickets of the children who have entered during one quarter of the year, makes out a list of them, and sends both, in the middle of March, June, September and December, to the principal of the communal school for the poor; or where such a school does not exist, to the inspectors of the free schools in the Orphan Asylum.

S. 132. The latter appoint the school, and send back the ticket, with the appointment of the school, to the head master, in order by means of such ticket to deliver over the children, who must be previously examined by the head master of the school.

S. 133. In cases where children, who are sent from several commissions for the relief of the poor, but who belong to the same communal school for the poor of the district, cannot be received in the local communal schools for the poor, the head master has to make out a list of all the children he is unable to receive therein, and send it, together with the certificates of baptism and inoculation or vaccination, to the inspector of the free schools, in order that such children may be placed in some other school by them; the latter appoint the school accordingly, and return the ticket of the appointment to the head master, by which he ascertains where the children are then living, and he then sends the tickets appointing the schools to the local commission for the relief of the poor, in order to act therewith, according to what is stated at S. 131.

S. 134. On the reception of free scholars, it is to be ascertained whether the relations of them are about to change their places of residence, in which case the children are immediately diately to be transferred to that commission for the relief of the poor, into whose district the relations intend to remove.

S. 135. Whenever free-school scholars remove with their parents or relations out of the district in which the appointed school is situate, into another distant district, and there take lodgings, then the ticket appointing the school must be delivered back, and the parties are to be informed that they must apply to the commission for the poor in their present district, for the transfer to any communal school for the poor, or other school there.

S. 136. If complaints are made about the teachers, or by them about the children, they must be investigated and amicably settled; if this cannot be effected, then information thereof must be given to the directors of the poor, whose decision must be waited for.

S. 137. The withdrawal of the benefit from the receipt of alms, orphan-board and nurse-money, irrevocably follows in cases where, notwithstanding every remonstrance, a regular attendance of any of the children at school cannot be effected.

S. 138. On transferring children to a communal charity school, in the case of their contributing a monthly school payment of five to ten silver groschen, mention must be made thereof on the free-school ticket.

S. 139. If a free-school scholar is in want of a Bible, the master certifies the want thereof and his regular attendance at school, and the commission for the poor certifies his incapability of paying for it. For such a certificate, the General Bible Society here (through the Rev. Mr. Schweder, of No. 18, Stralan-street, on Mondays from eight to ten o'clock in the forenoon) sends a Bible, on payment of five silver groschen; but children of receivers of alms, orphan-board or nurse-money, receive such Bible gratuitously.

S. 140. Applications for clothing poor school children, which must have been previously ascertained by means of an investigation on the spot, are to be referred, by the father, guardian, &c., with the children, and also together with all the written proceedings thereon, and the certificates of the master, to the society for promoting the attendance of poor children at school, who hold their public meetings in the German Dom, near the Gens-d'armen-market, every second and fourth Wednesday in each month, at five o'clock in the afternoon; the said society, however, does not, on account of its limited means, extend its assistance to those children for whom orphan-board is paid, nor to the children of those who receive alms: during the summer months the children may go bare-footed and in their shirt-sleeves, but they must be clean.

S. 141. It is the duty of the commission for the relief of the poor, to cause an annual investigation to be made into the circumstances of the parents, within their district, of such children to whom free schooling is granted, and to ascertain whether they are still deserving of such benefit; and the said commissions for the poor are, for that purpose, to be supplied (in the month of January in every year,) by the inspectors of the free schools, with a list of the names of those children to whom a free schooling within their district has been granted on account of the directors of the poor.

S. 142. Those commissions for the poor, who have a joint inspection over such parochial and private schools as are conducted on the free-school system for account of the community, are to be referred to the instructions for the management of free schools.

VIII. The granting of Certificates of Poverty.

S. 143. Certificates of poverty must not be granted by any individual functionary of the city; and those granted by the commissions for the poor must only be for distinctly prescribed purposes, which, with the authority who intends to make use of it, must be distinctly stated in the certificates.

S. 144. For procuring certificates of baptism, to be presented to the authorities of guardianship, as well as for the exemption of payment of judicial costs in the Royal City Court of Justice, and also for the excusing or deferring of the payment of rent, there will not be required any such certificate; all that the poor man has to do in such cases is to represent to the authorities concerned his inability to pay, whereupon that authority acts thereon.

S. 145. Certificates of poverty, to be used with the highest or high personages, or private individuals, are only to be given when they have been expressly demanded by them in particular cases.

S. 146. Certificates of poverty, to be used out of Berlin, are also not allowed to be given, but the case must be stated to the directors of the poor.

S. 147. The certificates of poverty granted by the commissions for the poor are to be signed with the name of the commission for the poor, by the chairman and two members, and the seal of the commission is to be thereunto affixed.

S. 148. At the request of the minister, certificates of poverty may be granted to those district poor who have petitioned him to excuse them the church dues, as, for instance, for baptism, marriages, &c.

IX. Granting of Free Burial.

S. 149. The commissions for the poor grant a free burial on the death of a poor person, if the deceased leaves no property to defray the expenses thereof.

S. 150. When the relations of the deceased have appeared and proved the fairness of the request for a free burial, a free-burial ticket is then to be executed, and to be stamped and signed by the chairman, and given to the receiver, who has to deliver it to the sexton of the church concerned. After the latter has made an entry in the register of burials, and noted such such registration on the ticket, the claimant has to present such ticket to the registry for the support of the poor, by whom all the necessary orders for the burial are to be given. Previously to the delivery of the free-burial ticket to the relations, they are to be informed that the bodies, to be buried during the six winter months at the expense of the poor's pay office, are to be then given up for anatomy.

S. 151. A burial partially free is not admissible; and, consequently, every one for whom it is claimed must be buried in the burial-ground in the manner ordained for the poor.

S. 152. The manner in which the burial of those poor who have been members of benefit societies is to take place, will be fixed upon hereafter.

S. 153. No master or mistress is bound to pay the funeral expenses of his or her servant. If, therefore, a free burial is demanded for a servant, it is to be granted; but the commission for the poor has then a right to take possession of the property left by the deceased, or to secure the wages which may be in arrear, and to report thereon to the directors of the poor.

X. Proceedings to be taken on the Death of supported Poor People, with respect to the Property left by them.

S. 154. Immediately after the death of a receiver of alms, the member of the commission concerned takes cognizance of the property left by the pauper, and in case he thinks proper so to do, puts it into safe custody; makes an inventory thereof, being assisted thereto by the serjeant, and reports the same to the chairman.

S. 155. The ready money which may be found with a deceased pauper is to be sent to the chief office for paying the poor; but furniture and clothes, with an inventory thereof, drawn up by the member and the chairman, are to be sent, with a certificate from the doctor of the poor, stating the nature of the illness or complaint of which the deceased died, to the administration of the new hospital, and a copy of which is to be returned by the latter, receipted, which is then to be presented, together with the minutes thereof, to the directors of the poor.

S. 156. If the doctor is of opinion that there is anything infectious in the clothes left by the deceased, and that they ought therefore to be destroyed, he has to report the same to the commission for the poor and to the commissary of the police for the district, and also to make it known to the directors of the poor.

S. 157. The furniture, &c. are carried away by waggons, which must be hired at the lowest possible rate, under escort of the city serjeant; the expenses thereof must be liquidated at the next meeting and entered in the accounts, provided they cannot be defrayed out of the ready money left by the deceased.

S. 158. If the property left is very inconsiderable, or of little or no value, it may be given up to the relations, provided they wish to have it and are in need of it, and have previously applied to the directors of the poor for that purpose.

S. 159. Should it be found that a deceased receiver of alms has been in possession of some property besides the articles in his lodgings, the directors of the poor are to be made acquainted therewith.

S. 160. For the hereditary right of the administration of the poor to the property of a deceased receiver of alms, the commissions for the poor are referred to the regulations contained in S. 51.

XI. Investigation of, and Opinion on, all Requisitions, &c. release or cancelment of Debts, which are sent to the Service and Billetting Directors, to the Pay-office of the Royal City Court, and to the Trades' Tax Directors, are to be referred to the Commissions for the Poor, for their opinion thereon.

S. 161. All proceedings coming from the above-mentioned authorities are to be dealt with in the same manner as the concerns of the poor; the investigation is to be effected by two members, who have carefully to take into their consideration the questions to be answered, and to give their full opinion thereon.

S. 162. Receivers of alms, or other inhabitants who, after a strict investigation, have been put on the same footing with them, are to be free of the rent-tax.

S. 163. This is, however, only for that part of the dwelling for which they themselves have to pay the rent; the other parts let to under-tenants, or as sleeping-rooms, are to pay the rent-tax, except the occupiers be in the same circumstances as to poverty, or belong to that class of persons who are exonerated from the payment of taxes.

S. 164. If the acting directors forward to the commissions for the poor, for their consideration, a list of those who have hitherto been free from the rent-tax, whether they are to remain free from it any longer, the circumstances of each of those persons exempted are to be strictly investigated, and an opinion given thereon in the proper column; the inhabitants living elsewhere in the district, and who may deserve to be exempted from payment of the rent-tax, are to be put down by the commission for the poor in an appendix to the list.

S. 165. Illness, want of nourishment, and other great distress, justify a claim for the exemption from payment of the rent-tax, and costs of law-suits, &c. during a certain period.

S. 166. On giving opinions in cases of the trades-tax, the circumstances to be considered are not those of the mode of living, or of the trade, but only those of poverty.

XII. The Collection, and accounting for the Monies collected, in Houses and Churches.

S. 167. As the expenses of the chief pay-office for the poor are every day increasing, great exertions are to be made that the money voluntarily subscribed by the inhabitants does not diminish, and that they will increase their subscriptions as much as possible.

S. 168. Every half-year the register is to be revised and looked into, in order to ascertain whether there are not other persons in the district, besides those who already subscribe, who being wealthy, and, from the circumstances of their superior situation in life, legally exempt from the rent-tax, might not be induced also to subscribe, or if they have already done so, to increase the amount of their subscription.

S. 169. The collection takes place monthly; the city serjeant and one member (generally the chairman of the district) signs, together with the chairman of the commission, the receipts, as prescribed by the book, for the money collected.

S. 170. Receipts which have not been paid must be returned, and in case a change of residence has taken place, they are to be sent with the lithographic form to the commission for the poor concerned.

S. 171. On the delivery of the monies which have been collected, the payment whereof is to be made to the chief pay-office of the poor, 12 days after the expiration of one month at the latest, the delivery ticket (which must be signed either by the chairman or by some other member occupied in the collecting of the subscriptions), the book of collections, and the sheet or list of receipts, are always to be presented to the directors of the poor.

S. 172. The money collected is never to be applied to the payment of the expenses of the district.

S. 173. On Easter Monday, and on the day kept in memory of the dead (in November), there are to be collections made for the poor, and for the charity schools, in all the churches, after divine service, in the forenoon and in the afternoon.

S. 174. By the regulation generally adopted, two of the commissions for the poor have to perform the duty of standing at the church doors with plates in their hands on these occasions.

S. 175. The money collected, after the final conclusion of divine service, is to be counted in the vestry-room, in the presence of the minister, and a memorandum, stating the amount received, is to be signed by all the members present, and also by the minister: on the following day, the money and the memorandum are to be sent to the directors of the poor by the two commissions.

S. 176. Except those monies usually collected, no commission for the poor, unless expressly approved by the directors of the poor, is allowed to make any private collection; nor is the city serjeant allowed to solicit subscriptions on books, prints, &c., or to offer such things as may be received from private persons or from private societies, for the benefit of the fund for the poor, to the inhabitants of the district for sale, unless he be ordered by the directors of the poor so to do.

S. 177. If any commission for the poor receives money for a certain poor person, or for a certain stated purpose, such money is to be entered in the cash-book, and a regular debtor and creditor account kept thereof, as is done with the money received of the chief pay-office for the poor, and to be conscientiously applied according to the wish of the donor; but if any of such grants are restricted by conditions which the commissions for the poor may think impracticable, they are to report thereon to the directors of the poor.

XIII. Decrease of Begging in the Streets and Houses.

S. 178. The chairman and members of the commissions for the poor have to exert themselves to the utmost, in order to induce their fellow citizens to retain all writings, petitions, &c. which may have been presented to them by beggars, and to deliver the same to the commissions for the relief of the poor of the district in which they live, and to cause the beggars to be taken before the said commissions, in order that their cases may be investigated.

S. 179. Receivers of alms and nurse-money are not to beg, on pain of forfeiting their claim to such alms or nurse-money.

S. 180. It is the duty of the city serjeants to watch the beggars, and to take them up when they transgress; a duty of which they are often to be reminded.

S. 181. It is desirable that the commissions for the poor should increase their endeavours to induce those citizens and inhabitants, who are in the habit of distributing relief in small or large sums, monthly or oftener, in houses or shops, to discontinue such distributions, as it only tends to a demoralizing beggary.

ANSWERS to QUESTIONS respecting the Prussian PAUPER REGULATIONS, &c.
 from Alexander Gibsone, Esq., His Majesty's Consul, Dantzic.

Dantzic.

VAGRANTS.

1. Mendicity does not much prevail in this country, particularly not in this or the adjacent provinces, there being, in general, sufficient employment for all who are able and willing to work. In the large and populous towns, particularly in those existing chiefly by commerce, shipping or trade, when these become less thriving, and the labouring classes thence suffer, mendicity is a consequence. It follows also, in some degree, when there is much employment at some seasons of the year, but little at others, and the labourers do not provide against the time of need. But when mendicity prevails much, it is owing to a lax administration of the laws against it, which are strict, and prescribe suitable preventive means, as will be seen hereafter.

Mendicity shows itself by begging in the streets or on the public roads, often by children or by mothers with children, and sometimes by asking alms at dwelling-houses, the latter chiefly by stranger-beggars. It is frequent at public Catholic festivals, to which beggars resort in numbers, and on which occasions the police is less disposed to interfere, being strictly prohibited from disturbing, in any way, meetings for religious worship.

2. Persons seeking work can usually find it, though perhaps not always immediately. Travelling handicraftsmen commonly obtain some assistance from corporations of their craft, where such still voluntarily exist, for they mostly ceased upon the free exercise of industry being established in 1810. Persons going about the country, seeking work, must have passports from the authority under whose jurisdiction they have dwelt, and they do not receive such without being able to show that they have the means of support while unemployed. In general it is the duty of the police authority in every community, where any person in distress may come, to render him the needful assistance for the moment, which must be repaid

- a) by the provincial pauper fund, if the person be a foreigner, or have no domicile; or,
- b) by the community, or owner of the estate (called the dominium,) he belongs to, if a native of the country.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. These are in no cases quartered on householders. Every pretended needy person is duly examined by a medical man, whether he be bodily and mentally able to maintain himself (it is the same with families,) by work, and in this case he is required by the police to do so, and to conduct himself properly. Any one who does not, is sent to the poor-and-workhouse (the work is compulsive,) of the province, where he is taught to earn a livelihood. If the distress be temporary, the proprietor of the estate (called the dominium), or the community in which the indigent person has acquired a settlement, is bound to afford the requisite relief; yet having the right to claim restitution, upon the assisted person becoming able to make it. When this is not the case, and the relief has been afforded by a community, the members of it must bear the expense, if in a town, out of its general funds; if in the country, in the proportions they pay the land-tax to the king, called war-contribution. The support is rendered in giving a dwelling, (with a garden, if in the country,) fuel, salt, money, &c., wholly or partly, sometimes by boarding the pauper, according to the necessity of the case.

2. They are only boarded with individuals, in or out of the community, by agreement with these, when such mode of assistance is deemed necessary, and which is done at the expense of the community. In Dantzic, this is chiefly done only with children, when not received into one of the public charitable institutions, and at an expense of 1 rx. (dollar) to 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ rx. monthly (about 35 $\frac{1}{10}$ to 46 $\frac{1}{2}$ pence).

3. There is in every province a poor-and-workhouse (the work compulsive,) for receiving the following persons:

- a) such as have indeed a fixed place of abode in the country, yet seek their livelihood by begging, although able to work;
- b) actual paupers, who receive a fixed maintenance or aid from communities, benevolent institutions &c., yet notwithstanding wander about the country begging;
- c) invalid soldiers, found begging, as every soldier who has been rendered invalid in war enjoys a pension from the state (a very small one);
- d) travelling handicraftsmen, as none are permitted to travel in their profession who have not the means of subsistence, or are above 30 years old;
- e) foreign vagabonds, until they can be transported over the borders;
- f) those who have been punished for crime, in the fortress or house of correction, and after expiration of their term of punishment, are unable to show how they can earn an honest livelihood;
- g) such as by particular sentences are, or by future laws may be, declared subjects for the compulsive workhouse.
- h) Parents and guardians are also permitted, with the approbation of the court of guardianship, and of the supreme high guardian of the province, to send degenerate children and foster-children to the workhouse for a fixed period, but upon paying for them.

In Dantzic there is a municipal poor-and-workhouse, but the wardens are so particular in receiving the inmates, that few are fit to work.

4. In some towns there exist (and even in the country, though rarely,) family charitable institutions, hospitals, and bequests to churches, for rendering more or less support to impotent paupers, till their death. These alms institutions, however, are only considered as private establishments, and do not belong to the public institutions for the poor.

5. It is left to every proprietor of an estate (called the dominium), to every town and village community, to provide and select, at their option, a livelihood for those individuals, having a settlement under their jurisdiction, who cannot procure such for themselves. Should a proprietor of an estate, or a community, not fulfil this obligation, it is compelled to do so, but which seldom is necessary.

6. This is partly answered in No. 5; but it is to be observed, that when, from bad crops, inundations, &c., a general scarcity occurs in particular parts of the country, works of public utility, such as turnpike-roads, drains, and the like, are ordered by Government, in order to afford the inhabitants the means of subsistence, which work is paid for with money, grain, salt or other articles, as most suitable, according to circumstances.

7. No person, able-bodied or capable of earning a livelihood, has a legal claim for support, but he can only, when misfortune befalls him, receive a temporary aid in the way of an advance. For further answer to this question, see the preceding answers.

8. All children capable of going to school are obliged to attend it. Those whose parents are unable to pay the expense must be sent thither at the cost of the community to which they belong, which must also do the needful for clothing, feeding, educating and apprenticing them. Such children also frequently receive assistance from private benevolent societies and individuals.

9. The

9. The law prescribes that parents and grand-parents must support their children and grand-children, and vice versa, also brothers and sisters each other, when requiring aid from sickness, impotence through age, misfortunes, &c., and upon the court judging the support necessary, when it determines as to the obligation to contribute, and to the amount to be given, according to circumstances.

The legal prescriptions for mutual support by relations are to be seen in the accompanying Paper, marked (A). *

10. In general, no assistance is given by loans. Under peculiar circumstances, as in times of general dearth in a province, seed-corn is sometimes delivered by Government, to be returned in kind, or paid for gradually.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. The maintenance of persons said to be unfit for work must, as before said, always be grounded on an attest from a medical man, that such is actually the case, and the maintenance must be provided for as follows :

- a) in particular by relations, ascendants, descendants or collaterals, as stated in the preceding answer, 9 ;
- b) when the relations have not the means to furnish support and subsistence, this obligation devolves on the community or the proprietor of the estate to which the needy person belongs ;
- c) should the pauper belong to no community, he must be supported out of the provincial poor-fund, either in the provincial poor-and-workhouse or in a private manner.

The Dantzic poor-house contains usually from 270 to 300 inmates, (about two-thirds male and one-third female,) but can receive as far as 350.

2. In the towns, the community must provide for all the absolute wants of the poor out of the municipal funds, and in every town a board is established for directing the management of these affairs.

In the country, the proprietors of the estates, or the village authorities, must provide for these wants, for which, in the latter case, the members of the village community must contribute in the proportions as they pay the taxes to the King, say the land-tax, called war contribution.

In Dantzic, the poor, besides being placed in the poor-house or otherwise assisted, receive alms at their homes from a charitable society of the citizens, whose funds arise partly from private contributions, partly from an annual supply out of the municipal funds. From this society about 1,000 persons yearly receive support, (about one-third males and two-thirds females), but not above about 3 s. to 4 s., and not under 1 s. monthly, for the time the support is required. In winter, when severe, they get also firing, partly in fir-wood but chiefly in turf. The sum thus disbursed is now considerably less than before, from the control on the part of the magistracy being much stricter. The whole annual expense of the society is about 1,200 l. sterling.

3. This is answered, for the most part, in the preceding reply. It is altogether voluntary with individuals to receive paupers as boarders.

4. This question is also answered in the reply to No. 2. None are quartered or billeted on the householders without the consent of these. In the country, the farmers and cottagers sometimes give board and lodging to paupers by turns, chiefly to children ; but this is not properly allowed of, and it is not to be recommended, being injurious to the paupers.

5. The reply to this is contained mostly in that to No. 1. All the absolute wants of the paupers must be supplied in the ways mentioned.

SICK.

1. The law prescribes that every town and every village community must support its own members when in distress, provided there be no relations able to do so, and the owners of estates are under a similar obligation ; hence the sick stand under the same regulations as the impotent through age.

In populous towns, institutions for the sick are established at the expense of the community, generally under the direction of a committee composed of members of the magistracy and of citizens.

In the country, generally, hospitals are only established at different points, for the cure of infectious and loathsome diseases, at the expense of the provincial pauper-funds.

In Dantzic there is an infirmary for the poor sick inhabitants of the town and its territory, under the direction of four citizens, in which there are usually about 400 sick, on an average, above the half of which are males and nearly the half females, in general, about two-thirds of whom pay nothing, and the remainder only about 3 s. per week. Further particulars of this institution are to be seen in a separate paper.

2. In the towns, the poor sick are provided for in public infirmaries or at their homes, at the expense of the community, accordingly as they require medical or surgical relief. In the country, every district (circle) under a landrath (the public officer administering the police in the first stage) has a physician and a surgeon appointed for it, the former having about 30 l., the latter about 18 l., yearly salary, who upon the appearance of any epidemical sickness determine its nature, and, according to the necessity of the case, are directed by the landrath to make the arrangements required by that. The medical measures of police are defrayed out of the revenue of the State; the cure of the sick in their dwellings is at the expense of the housekeeper, or, in case of his inability, of the community. The physician and surgeon of the circle are paid their salaries by Government.

3. In order to facilitate the cure of the sick paupers, the landrath makes it his business to effect an arrangement between the community of each circle and its medical superintendents, for curing the destitute sick, for inoculating the cow-pox, &c., and the expense, with that of supporting the destitute sick, is paid out of the public fund of the circle. The states of the circle are left at liberty to determine in what manner the contributions for the necessary disbursements of the circle are to be raised by it.

4. Midwives are appointed for suitable districts, as well in the towns as in the country, for assisting lying-in women, and are remunerated for each case at a fixed very moderate rate. Very poor inhabitants, unable to pay the remuneration, are exempted from it, and the midwives are indemnified by a small salary from the provincial pauper funds. The sick expenses of lying-in women, in necessary urgent cases, are defrayed, according to the regulations previously stated, by their relations, or by the community to which they belong.

There is an institution in Dantzig for giving regular instruction in midwifery, at the expense of Government. In furtherance of this object, from 115 to 125 poor women are annually delivered in it, and maintained till their recovery, gratis; besides which, other poor women are delivered at their own homes, also without remuneration. The pupils receive instruction, with the necessary books, and are maintained free of expense; and on leaving the establishment, they get a case with the necessary instruments for exercising their profession. There are two courses of instruction annually, in each of which from 16 to 20 pupils are instructed. The object of the establishment is, to provide thorough-bred midwives for the province of West Prussia and a part of Pomerania. The total yearly expenses of the establishment amount to about 670*l.* sterling.

There is a similar institution, I believe, in every province.

5. There are no general regulations for affording public assistance to the sick, except those stated; but support is never refused, on the part of Government, in cases when whole communities are attacked with epidemical sickness, and are unable to provide for the necessary assistance.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Illegitimate children are baptized in the name of the mother, which they must bear, and she educates them, at least till their fourth year; the father, however, is bound to pay her the expenses of child-bed, and of a suitable education until the child is 14 years old, which are fixed by the court according to circumstances, (at least one dollar, or about 3*s.* monthly,) the court also appointing a guardian. The legal prescriptions for their maintenance by the father or mother, also for assistance from the relatives of these, are contained in a separate Paper herewith, marked (B).

2. The answer to this query is partly contained in that to the preceding one. In cases of inability to pay the expenses, the regulations for the support of paupers come into effect.

3. They are no where supported at the public expense, say at that of Government; but the expense of education and maintenance, when the parents or relatives are unable to bear it, is provided for according to the regulations for the support of paupers.

In Dantzig there are two municipal hospitals for receiving, maintaining and educating children; namely, one for this from their birth until confirmed, and one from their sixth year until confirmed; which hospitals are supported partly from the interest of their own funds, partly from public collections which are allowed to be made, and from assistance received from the town's funds.

The former hospital supports about 150 children within, and about 250 without doors; the latter at an expense of about 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. weekly, being chiefly boarded in the country.

The children of poor persons are received into both hospitals, (in the latter, chiefly orphans,) gratis. In the former of the two institutions some are received, chiefly illegitimate, at certain rates of remuneration.

Further particulars respecting these hospitals shall be transmitted very soon.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4, 5, 6, & 7. The answers to these questions are exactly as stated in the three preceding ones. They are no where quartered or billeted on householders, unless by agreement with these. In small communities, such children are usually provided for by boarding them with the poorer inhabitants, at a monthly expense of about 3*s.* to 4*s.* to the community. Sometimes, in villages, the inhabitants maintain poor children belonging to the village by turns, but this is not properly permitted by law, and it is not beneficial to the children.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND :

Cripples.

1. Cripples are provided for and subsisted by the communities to which they belong, according to the laws and regulations for the maintenance of paupers.

Deaf

Deaf and Dumb.

Such are provided for in establishments for larger districts of the country, (usually for more than one province,) whereof the expense is defrayed by Government, or from the provincial pauper funds or contributions. These institutions have for object, to receive such children from 10 to 14 years old, to educate them, and afterwards to get them bred to a trade, by which their future subsistence may be ensured. Every other support, besides this provision, must be rendered by their relatives, by the community or estate to which they belong, or from the provincial pauper funds, according to the regulations for the support of paupers.

In the Dantzic regency department, having a population of 315,731 souls, there are 301 deaf and dumb.

Blind.

1. There are no provincial institutions for these. They are provided for according to the regulations for the support of paupers, and to the legal prescriptions for assistance from relatives.

2, 3, & 4. In this department there are 203 blind. The regulations and prescriptions just mentioned are applicable to the objects of these questions.

In the country, cripples, deaf and dumb, and blind, are sometimes maintained (in small villages) by the inhabitants, by turns, but this is irregular. When maintained at the expense of the community, this costs from about 2*l.* 14*s.* to 3*l.* 12*s.* sterling yearly, for each of these helpless persons; but the expense is uncertain, as depending upon the number of his children.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1, 2, 3, & 4. In fixed portions of the country there are asylums for mentally deranged persons, whereof the expenses are defrayed according to the regulations and legal prescriptions for the support of paupers, by the community or by their relations. The expense for each of these unfortunate persons amounts, as I have been credibly informed, to about 10*l.* 10*s.* sterling annually. Those not dangerous are, particularly in the country, often retained in the community, and provided for privately at perhaps about one-third of the expense.

The municipal infirmary at Dantzic never refuses, in urgent cases, to receive unfortunate persons of this description.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

1. The regulations for the support of paupers operate beneficially on industry. Every proprietor of an estate, every community of a town or village, has unquestionably the most correct knowledge of the bodily condition, of the moral conduct, of the expertness, of the capability to earn a livelihood in whole or in part, and of the pecuniary circumstances, of the needy persons under their jurisdiction, whom they are bound to support, as well as of the circumstances of their relatives. The pauper knows that aid must always be given when necessary, and he applies to the proper authority for it, when not duly afforded; while he is, on the other hand, deterred from making exorbitant claims, by his situation being so thoroughly known in every respect, and from ungrounded demands not being complied with. In general, therefore, neither the party called upon for assistance, nor that requiring it, inclines to let the authority interpose, but an amicable arrangement usually takes place between them, according to existing circumstances. The pauper must perform what service or work he can for those who must assist him, or for himself, towards contributing to his own support as far as in his power; while those rendering assistance can seek only in themselves the means to do so, of course in the least expensive and most suitable manner. The paupers are employed at various kinds of work and service, accordingly as such is wanted and as they are able to perform it, and this as well for their supporters, privately, as in the public workhouses.

2. This reciprocal obligation, therefore, operates favourably on the frugality of both parties, particularly on that of the pauper, because of his standing under the immediate control of those obliged to support him, with respect to his moral conduct, and to the supplying of his wants.

But, under these circumstances, the success of the due interpretation of the law, and its beneficial operation, depend upon the appropriate and energetic interposition of the public authorities; hence is this branch of administration generally very carefully and strictly superintended. Particular vigilance has to be directed to such claims for assistance as arise from disinclination to work, that these do not fall unnecessarily hard upon the party providing for them, but that they be always, and properly, removed through the medium of the provincial workhouse. Thus also is mendicity entirely prevented in those districts where the police regulations are strictly enforced; and the local authorities apprehend and deliver up to the police every mendicant, in order to be supported by the community or estate to which he belongs, or to be consigned over to the provincial workhouse. In the same measure as the local authorities are lax in performing this duty, do the evils it is intended to remove gain ground. Beggars are generally very averse to being sent to the poor or work house.

3. As all idleness among paupers is prevented by the due application of the law, the usual inducements to marry remain uninfluenced by the receipt or the expectation of relief.

Dantzic.

4. The mutual dependence of parents, children, and other relatives, as regards the reciprocal obligation to assist each other, when in distress, being fixed by law, their mutual affection is the less exposed to suffer from claims of this nature; and the assistance is usually given voluntarily, to avoid compulsion. When the pauper is once provided for, the moral ties between him and his relations may not materially suffer, particularly if he has been reduced to indigence by misfortune and not by misconduct. It very frequently happens that even relations, so poor themselves as to be freed by law from rendering any support, still give it (in a small degree perhaps, yet as far as they are able,) to their destitute kindred who are maintained by public means, when within their reach and not undeserving; which speaks in favour of a natural affection continuing to operate.

5. The moral condition of the able-bodied self-supporting labourers, even of the lowest class, is unquestionably preferable to that of the persons subsisting on alms or public charity, from the feeling of greater independence which they enjoy, and as self-earned bread naturally has more relish than that proceeding from charity; a feeling surely very general among men, as it arises out of the main-spring to all their exertions, the desire of maintaining their existence and improving their condition, by which all are so strongly actuated. When the case is different, it should be considered as an exception to a common law of nature, arising from the finer feelings in individuals being blunted by poverty, but particularly when a disposition to idleness, too common with such persons, is not checked. In Prussia, however, the exception is the more rare, as all paupers are obliged to contribute towards their own support, so far as they are able, by some sort of labour or service, and as those who can work, but will not, are sent to the workhouse, where they are compelled to work, by which idleness is discouraged and industry promoted.

As to the comparative condition of these self-supporting labourers, and of paupers maintained in the public institutions, with regard to their food, that of the latter may generally be, although meagre, rather better than of the former, particularly in the present times, when neither commerce nor agriculture flourish. This will appear more clear from the dietaries preparing to be sent, (p. 467, et post,) and considering that the lowest class of labourers live, for the most part, chiefly on potatoes and rye-bread, of which, however, the quantities cannot be stated. The only, yet questionable, advantage the latter have, is, that they have it in their power to supply themselves with spirituous liquors, the want of which they would consider a great privation, but which paupers are bereaved of. However, paupers maintained privately (as in the country, and according to the prescription of the landrath,) may not even live so well as the lowest class of self-supporting labourers.

It is, in general, to be observed that the right of settlement of individuals is established in the following manner:

If any person acquires the right of citizenship in a town, or a possession (house or lying-ground) in the country, or if he is permitted by the local authority to form a regular domicile by becoming householder, he then is considered as an expressly accepted member of the community, and the obligation to support him, when reduced to want, immediately commences. So soon, therefore, as any person shows an intention to settle, or to become householder, in a place, it is the business of the community, or of those interested, to ascertain, through the medium of the proper local authority, whether or not the immigrant possesses sufficient means to maintain himself there. Should this not be the case, and he is evidently unable to earn a livelihood, then must the support of the individual (or family) be borne by the community where he has previously dwelt, and it is not advisable to permit the change of domicile. Thence is the rule justified, that upon any person being regularly received as member of a community, with the express consent of its magistracy, that community becomes bound to render him support, when his situation requires it. Minors belong to the community in which their parents were settled, even after the death of these. With regard to other inhabitants, only that town or village community is bound to maintain a pauper, where he last contributed to its public burthens.

A person who is of age, and has resided three succeeding years in a place (for instance, as servant,) acquires by that the right of settlement, but which he again loses by leaving the place for one year. Privileged corporations, that possess a particular poor-fund, or raise among themselves, pursuant to their laws, the means to provide for their needy members, are specially bound to maintain them.

In conformity with the rules before stated must also the wives, widows and destitute children of paupers be supported by the communities or corporations, or the owners of the estates.

Paupers for whom communities, corporations, proprietors of estates, or relatives, are not bound to provide, according to the foregoing rules, or when these are unable to do so, have to be maintained in provincial poor-and-workhouses. These are established at the expense of Government, and supported by contributions from the whole province.

The financial matters of the poor-and-workhouses in these parts, are not yet so well administered as they might be, but reforms are making.

The poor-and-workhouse of West Prussia at Graudenz, is said to be the most expensive of any, and the provincial states have not yet been able to get a reform effected, but no doubt such will take place ere long. By the information I have received, the 93 inmates of that establishment cost each, last year, for maintenance, about - - £. 11 8 6

Less his earnings - - - - - 1 6 6

Leaving about - - - - - £. 10 2 -

(partly from the number being so small).

In the house of correction at Graudenz, each of its 324 inmates cost, last year, about 8*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*; or less his earnings, about 6*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*

The expense of the house of correction at Ragnit, in Lithuania, (the number of inmates I have not learned,) was last year about 5*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* sterling per head; or less his earnings, about 3*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*

By the Berlin state newspaper of the 20th February last, No. 51, the house of correction at Naugardt, in Pomerania, containing on an average 416 inmates, last year (above three-fourths male and nearly one-fourth female,) had an expense for each inmate of about 6*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* sterling; or deducting his earnings, of about 2*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*

And by the same newspaper of the 2d of this present month, No. 121, the house of correction at Lichtenburg, in Silesia, had an expense, last year, for each inmate (on an average about 600, whereof about three-fourths males and one-fourth females), at the rate of about 7*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* sterling; or less his earnings, of about 2*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

Houses of correction are maintained at the expense of Government.

The poor-and-workhouse at Tapiau, in East Prussia, seems to be particularly well administered, and it was proposed, when the provincial states were lately assembled here, as a model for reforming that institution at Graudenz, but not carried. It is arranged for 300 male and 100 female inmates; and their maintenance, including all expenses of clothing, firing, management, &c., has lately been farmed out for six years, at the rate of 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ silver groshes daily, per head, or 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ s. gr. weekly, the latter sum making about 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., but the farmer having the benefit of their work. The victuals to be furnished are prescribed by a late regulation, whereof I shall soon transmit a translation.

Henceforth this institution at Tapiau is only to receive vagrants, and the destitute poor, unfit for work, are to be maintained in the different circles of the province (East Prussia).

The maintenance and all expenses of the poorhouse at Dantzig are reckoned at about 4*l.* 15*s.* sterling, for each inmate, annually.

The maintenance of each child in the Dantzig Child and Orphan Hospital, costs yearly about 2*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* sterling; and the clothing, about 16*s.* 10*d.*

In the Dantzig Charitable Hospital for Children, the maintenance of each child costs about 2*l.* 2*s.* 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling; and the clothing, about 1*l.* 0*s.* 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. yearly.

Further particulars of these three Dantzig municipal establishments shall be sent soon.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The average rates of wages are, daily,

In the Country :				In Summer.	In Winter.
Of agricultural labourers	-	-	- about	4 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. to 7 d.	3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ d.
Of other labourers	-	-	- —	8 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. to 11 $\frac{3}{4}$ d.	4 $\frac{3}{8}$ d. to 7 d.
Of journeymen masons and house carpenters	-	-	- —	21 d. to 23 d.	17 d. to 23 d.
In the larger Towns :
Of common labourers	-	-	- —	8 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. to 11 $\frac{3}{4}$ d.	7 d. to 9 $\frac{1}{4}$ d.
Of sawyers and other labourers in the timber trade	-	-	- —	11 d. to 16 d.	8 d. to 12 d.
Of journeymen masons and house carpenters	-	-	- —	21 d. to 23 d.	21 d. to 23 d.

Of shoemakers and tailors, at the rate of about 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

The agricultural labourers get besides a dwelling, either free of or at a small rent, with a garden, pasture for a cow in summer, and a small load of hay in winter, and fuel. The other men receive only wages.

It may be remarked that work is usually more frequent in the large towns than in the country; in summer throughout, than in winter; and that in flourishing times the labourers earn more, particularly in the commercial and maritime towns.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is not general, but various kinds of work are paid for by the piece, as well in the towns as in the country.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A labourer, with such employment, may earn yearly, on an average, in the country, equal to about 8*l.* 10*s.* to 9*l.* sterling; in the larger towns, 10*l.* to 10*l.* 10*s.* sterling; the advantages of the country labourer being reckoned to money.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—This is very difficult to state. In general, they spend all or nearly all they earn. Labourers, from 16 to 60 years, pay to the state about 18*d.* yearly, called "Classification-tax," in lieu of excise on butchers' meat, and on the produce of corn ground at the mill, say, labourers living in the country and in the small towns; whereas those in the larger towns pay that excise.

The expense of school-money and of religious instruction, is about 18*d.* yearly for each child. The cost of the usual most necessary clothes of country labourers, is annually, from about 24*s.* to 30*s.* for males, and about 18*s.* to 24*s.* for females; the clothes of other labourers cost in proportion to their earnings, and they have a disposition to dress as well as they can.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—In the country, women and children are employed at various work in the fields, particularly during harvest; in the gardens; with the cattle; at washing and shearing the sheep; at turning the grain in the storehouses; in the breweries and distilleries; as assistants in erecting buildings; in spinning and weaving, &c.

In the towns, they are employed at various kinds of house and out-of-door work.

In the useful employment of children much remains to be done. It is only somewhat regular after their 14th year, as they must attend school till then, though this is not very strictly observed. There are almost no manufactories in this neighbourhood, in which they could find occupation.

6. What can women, and children, under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—The daily wages are, in the country, of women, as occupied see No. 5, about 3½*d.* to 4½*d.* in summer, and about 2½*d.* to 3*d.* in winter; of children, from 12 to 16 years, about 2½*d.* to 3*d.*, at an average computation.

In the towns, the daily wages are, of women, at house-work, about 4½*d.* to 7*d.*; of children, from 12 to 16, at various work, about 2½*d.*, but with less regular employment.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A woman may earn, so employed, in the country, about 3*l.* 15*s.* yearly; and in the larger towns, about 4*l.* 10*s.* yearly; a boy of 12 to 16 years, so employed, may earn, in the country, about 3*l.* yearly; and in the larger towns, about the same. Children under 14 years have few regular means of earning, as they must attend school.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—Very well; living, in the country, on rye-bread, potatoes and other vegetables, fruit, food of wheat-flour, lard, milk, meat once or twice weekly, and fish, but chiefly on rye-bread and potatoes.

In the larger towns, on much the same food, but with less fruit and vegetables, and more bread and potatoes.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—In general little or nothing, particularly if there be many children, and in these not flourishing times.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—The garden annexed to a labourer's habitation, in the country, contains generally from about two-thirds to one and one-third of an acre; not so much in some parts, or where the land is very good. In return, partly, the labourer gives his surplus manure to his landlord.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The owners of labourers' habitations are, in the country, almost universally the proprietors of the land, but some labourers have their own cottages; in the towns, the owners are usually tradesmen or persons of the middle class.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—The yearly rent, in the country may be, for a mere sleeping-place, from about 6*s.* to 9*s.*; for a dwelling, without a garden, about 15*s.*; for a dwelling, with garden, fodder for a cow, and fuel, about 36*s.* to 40*s.*, when rent is paid; but generally none is asked, the landlord having the advantage of some little work from the labourers, and of having them more at command when wanted.

In the towns, the yearly rent of a labourer's dwelling may be called from 24*s.* to 48*s.*; it is, however, difficult to state this correctly, from the uncertain value of the houses, in consequence of the bad times. When sold, a house with two dwellings, each of one room, a kitchen, and a spacious kind of lobby, fetches only about 23*l.* to 30*l.* sterling, at present, here.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Land is not generally let to labourers, excepting for growing potatoes, and then only in small parcels, at the rate perhaps of about 8*s.* to 9*s.* per acre. In the vicinity of the larger towns, land is often let in small parcels, for the purpose mentioned, at the rate of about 30*s.* to 36*s.* per acre, the landlord manuring the land; but if the person hiring the land manures it, then frequently no rent is paid, as the landlord enjoys the benefit of this in the use of the land the following year.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The proportion of the annual deaths to the whole population can only be ascertained for the town of Dantzic and its suburbs, but not for its department. The population of Dantzic and its suburbs, was, in 1831, 54,660 souls; the census being only taken every three years.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Cannot be stated.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—Not known. Common labourers seldom save anything, and this is particularly the case in the present unprofitable times. When there are exceptions, it is chiefly among the unmarried. The better class of labourers may save in some cases, principally journeymen masons and carpenters, and the like; but the unmarried more than the married. Servants in towns sometimes save.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—When savings are made, they are mostly invested in clothes, bedding, furniture, or in a small house acquired. Servants in towns sometimes place savings in the savings-bank here, but few labourers do so.

I have used every endeavour to make this communication correct and comprehensive, which has required much time, having to collect nearly all the information from private sources, there being little to be found in print. I should not have been able to perform the task to my wish, but for the great assistance received from the director of police, lately appointed here, a most able, intelligent and experienced public officer, whose information can be relied on.

Enclosure (A.)

THE PRUSSIAN LAWS decide on the Obligations of Relations, in regard to mutual Support, as follows :

Common Law of the Country ; Part II. c. 2, par. 251-254.

Par. 251. Also, after the parental authority has ceased, the children and parents are obliged to support each other reciprocally, and the one to maintain the other, when he cannot support himself.

252. If the incapability of self-support has arisen from sickness, misfortunes, or from any other cause not culpably produced, then are the children bound to furnish their parents, and the parents their children, a decent maintenance, according to their means.

253. But should the party requiring assistance be reduced to poverty by his own misconduct, or if he has behaved to the other in such a way, that the latter is entitled to disinherit him, then he must be contented with only the barely necessary support.

254. Children who, after the parental authority has ceased, must still be maintained by their parents, are in this case obliged, according to their ability, to assist their parents in their domestic economy and occupation.

Part II. c. 3, par. 14 to 27, 29 & 30.

Par. 14. Relations in the ascending and descending lines are obliged to maintain each another, according to the more particular prescriptions in the foregoing chapter, regarding parents and children.

15. Also brothers and sisters in the first degree must afford the necessary relief to each other, in cases of total incapability of self-support.

16. It makes no difference whether they are related to such brothers and sisters by full or half-blood, springing from a regular or a morgonatic (left-handed) marriage.

17. Generally, however, is the obligation of the relations to support helpless members of the family dependent on the rules of lawful succession.

18. That one, therefore, who would be the nearest heir of the relation to be maintained, has the nearest obligation to provide for his support.

19. If however, the one nearest bound to this duty should himself be destitute, then must the one next akin take his place.

20. Several equally near relations must bear the expense of the support of the indigent member of the family conjointly, in proportion, however, to their means.

21. Only brothers and sisters are entitled to demand back what the support of their destitute brothers and sisters has cost them, from these, when their circumstances have so far improved that they can make this restitution without detriment to the necessities of themselves and their families.

22. Other lateral relatives, besides brothers and sisters in the first degree, cannot be compelled to support the destitute members of the family.

23. Those, however, who desert their destitute relations, contrary to their natural duty, lose their lawful right of inheritance.

24. But this loss of inheritance can only take place when the relation, whom the same shall affect, has been expressly called upon to maintain his destitute relation, and has refused to do so.

25. Then that one takes his place, who has provided for such helpless person.

26. If several persons have joined for the support and maintenance of the same, then they inherit from him in proportion to their contributions.

27. Alms and presents alone, although they may have been given in certain fixed sums and at certain fixed periods, never make good a right of inheritance.

29. Relations, who have been prevented solely by their own incapability from supporting their helpless relations, can never be punished with the loss of their right of inheritance.

30. But they must refund to that person who has maintained the testator, the amount thus disbursed, as a debt, out of the heritage.

Judgment of the Law Commission of 22d April 1803, and the Rescript grounded thereon of 2d May 1803.

The relations in ascending and descending line, as far as their means admit, are obliged to pay that which is requisite for the most necessary support of the criminal relation, during the investigation, and the infliction of the punishment, accordingly as settled by the authorities.

Cabinet Order of 20 October 1822.

Lateral branches are not bound to maintain their lateral relatives, who are brought to examination and punished by judgment of court, during the investigation and in the place of punishment.

Enclosure (B.)

PRESCRIPTIONS by the General Law of the Country (Allgemeines Land-Recht) for the Maintenance and Education of Illegitimate Children.

Part II. chap. 2 ; par. 612 to 638.

Par. 612. Illegitimate children, who have not acquired the rights of legitimacy, either by the subsequent marriage of the parents, or by juridical decision, or by legitimation, can only demand maintenance and education from the father.

613. To that the father is bound, even when the mother according to the 11th section of the first chapter, has either no indemnification at all, or only the lesser rate, to demand.

614. So soon as the existence of an illegitimate child becomes known, either from a suit between the parents, or from credible information, to the Guardian-court, it must appoint a guardian by virtue of its office.

615. The guardian must support the rights of the child against the illegitimate father, and concert with both parents, under the superintendence of the Guardian-court, the necessary arrangements for its education and maintenance.

616. The guardian is entitled and bound to see that the arrangement made is adhered to, and if not, to give notice of this to the Guardian-court, for further decision.

617. Should the father deny that the child is his, the guardian must, even if the mother will not try a suit, nevertheless apply for a legal hearing and sentence on the subject, for the good of the child.

618. In investigating and judging whether the child be the offspring of the alleged father, the principles contained in the 11th section of the preceding chapter must be acted upon.

619. If the mother has cohabited with other men, during the period in which, according to these principles, the generation of the child falls, it depends upon the information obtained by the guardian, grounded on the circumstances of the case, from which of these he will first claim the fulfilment of the obligations due to an illegitimate child.

620. But if this one be discharged or unable to fulfil these duties, the guardian can prosecute the rights of the child also against these other men in succession.

621. The maintenance and education of the child, till the completion of the fourth year, must in general be left to the mother, at the expense of the father.

622. After the end of the fourth year, it remains at the option of the father himself to provide for the maintenance and education of the child, or to let the mother continue that, at his expense.

623. If the mother wishes to undertake the education and maintenance of the child at her sole expense, the father has no right to refuse consent.

624. Should the Guardian-court find that the education of the child cannot, without apprehension of detriment to it, be entrusted to the father, the court can transfer such to the mother, at the father's expense.

625. If the conduct of both parents be such that the education of the child can be entrusted to neither of them, the Guardian-court must then act as prescribed in par. 98 and the following.

626. In all cases when the expenses of maintenance and education have to be fixed in money, those only are to be calculated, which the education of a legitimate child of a peasant or of a citizen of the lower class costs.

627. At the same time must regard be had to the usual prices at each place, and to the increasing wants of the child, as it advances in years.

628. If the father is unable to provide for the support and education of the child, this obligation devolves on the grand-parents by the father's side.

629. Only failing these, or in case of their incapability, are the mother, or the grand-parents by the mother's side, bound to fulfil it.

630. However, if the mother possess so much property of her own as to be able to maintain the child from the revenue of it, without detriment to her own subsistence, then is she bound to do so, next to the illegitimate father, and in particular before his parents.

631. If the father of an illegitimate child cannot be ascertained, the duty of maintenance and education devolves directly on the mother and her parents.

632. Should even these no longer exist, or not possess the means, then is the State bound to provide for the maintenance and education of such children, through the pauper institutions established in each place.

633. The obligation of the parents to support illegitimate children continues only till the completion of the 14th year.

634. After this period the children must earn their own subsistence.

635. However, when illegitimate sons have been placed to learn a handicraft or profession, the father must bear the further fees of apprenticeship and the cost of church confirmation.

636. If, besides, the father has got the child brought up to a trade, by which it cannot yet earn a livelihood after completing its 14th year, the father must continue the support, until the child is able to maintain itself by the trade chosen by him.

637. Should illegitimate children become unable, from sickness, or from a defective constitution of body or mind, to earn their subsistence, then can they claim the requisite support from the parents or grand-parents.

638. On the other hand, however, must illegitimate children maintain, according to their means, destitute parents and grand-parents, failing other persons nearer bound to this.

ENCLOSURES in Mr. Consul Gibson's Despatch, 3 June 1834.

SPECIAL Victualling Regulation for 400 Inmates, say 300 Males, and 100 Females, in the Provincial Poor Subsistence Establishment at Tapiau (in East Prussia), for 1834 to 1836.

N.B.—The weights and measures are Prussian: the pound has 16 ounces, or 32 loths, and is about 3 per cent. heavier than the English pound;

The sheffel contains 16 metzes, and about 1,486 Imperial bushels;

1 stof, or quart, is about one-fourth of a gallon;

90 ditto, ditto, is 1 barrel;

The pound sterling is reckoned at 205 sgr., or silver groshes;

The Prussian foot is about 3 per cent. longer than the English foot.

The 400 inmates are arranged in classes (according to their conduct), namely,

The 1st class contains 150 inmates, say - - 90 males - - 60 females.

2d	"	200	"	170	"	30	"
3d	"	50	"	40	"	10	"

100 Females.

These inmates receive of victuals,

A. For general Subsistence.

Good well baked rye-bread; the male inmate, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.; the female, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb.

B. For Breakfast.

182 days, or every other day; flour-soup, of 8 loths rye-flour, $\frac{3}{4}$ loth salt, $\frac{1}{2}$ loth fat.

183 days, or every other day; groat-soup, of 4 loths barley-groats, $\frac{1}{2}$ loth salt, $\frac{3}{8}$ loth fat.

C. For Dinner.

Sunday, 26 days, or every other Sunday; sour cabbage, with potatoes, say $\frac{1}{2}$ quart sour cabbage, $\frac{1}{4}$ metz potatoes, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ loth salt, 1 loth fat, 1 loth flour.

The 1st class receives, instead of 1 loth fat, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. pork in the seven winter months, and $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. beef in the five summer months.

Sunday, 26 days; grey peas with bacon; say 24 loths peas, 1 loth bacon, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ loth salt, and 1 loth flour.

The 1st class receives here also, as before stated, instead of 1 loth bacon, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. meat.

Monday, 52 days; Rumford soup, say 6 loths white peas, 4 loths barley groats, $\frac{1}{4}$ metz potatoes, $\frac{3}{4}$ loth fat, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ loth salt.

Tuesday, 52 days; white peas, say 24 loths white peas, 1 loth fat, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ loth salt, 1 loth flour.

Wednesday, 52 days; vegetable soup, say $\frac{3}{8}$ metz potatoes, carrots or turnips, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ loth salt, 1 loth bacon.

Thursday, 52 days; Rumford soup, say 6 loths white peas, 4 loths barley-groats, $\frac{1}{4}$ metz potatoes, $\frac{3}{4}$ loth fat, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ loth salt.

Friday, 52 days; potatoes, say $\frac{1}{2}$ metz potatoes, 1 loth fat, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ loth salt.

Saturday, 52 days; white peas with potatoes, say 8 loths white peas, $\frac{3}{8}$ metz potatoes, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ loth salt, 1 loth fat, 1 loth flour.

To every dinner, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ silver groshe's worth of soup-herbs for each 100 persons.

D. For Supper; 1st Class.

Sunday, Tuesday, Friday, 156 days; barley-groats with bacon, say groats $\frac{1}{18}$ metz, or 7 $\frac{7}{9}$ loths, $\frac{2}{3}$ loth bacon, $\frac{3}{4}$ loth salt.

Monday, Wednesday, 104 days; table-beer soup, say $\frac{1}{2}$ stof (or quart) table-beer, (quality very poor.)

Thursday, Saturday, 105 days; potatoes with salt, say $\frac{1}{2}$ metz potatoes, $\frac{3}{4}$ loth salt.

Thus, for one sheffel of flour of 75lbs., there are required 15 ⅞ metzes of rye, and for the whole quantity of flour, sheffels 1,978. 13 metzes, rye, making at R. 1. 7 ½ sgr. (about 3 s. 7 ⅔ d.)	2,440 16 -	357 3 -
The carriage to and from the mill, including multure and grinding expenses, at 4 silver groshes per sheffel (about 4 ⅔ d.), nothing, as the rye is ground in the tread-mill of the establishment.
This has a bakehouse, the expenses attendant on which are as follows :
a. Firewood, at the rate of 1 ½ karnickel (40 ½ cubic feet) for 1 wispel, or 24 sheffels, makes for 1,978 sheffels 13 metzes, or 82 wispel, 10 sheffel 13 metzes 15 ½ acktel, each of 216 cubic feet. This firewood appears in the special table of firing.
b. Candles are required at the rate of two per day on an average, hence 750 yearly, or 45 ⅔ lbs. at 16 to the lb. These candles appear also in the table of lighting.
c. Salt, for every 2 wispels, 2 metzes, or 6 lb. 24 loths, salt are required, and for the whole 553lbs. (the lb. reckoned at 28 loths), which quantity, at R. 15 ½ per 405 lbs. makes (There seems to be a small error in this calculation.)	21 6 -	3 2 1

Dantzic Infirmary.

This institution is managed under the superintendence of four wardens, citizens, who are controlled by the magistracy. The expenses are defrayed out of its own means, and from the town's funds.

It has, on an average, nearly 400 sick, but can contain more. All notoriously poor sick belonging to the town are admitted and maintained gratis; those of the town who have the means, and of its territory, pay (the latter themselves or their communities for them) 1 R. (about 35 $\frac{1}{10}$ d.), and strangers pay R. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ (about 52 $\frac{2}{3}$ d.) weekly. At least two-thirds of the inmates pay nothing. Of the whole about four-sevenths are males, and about three-sevenths females, usually.

Sick paupers out of the house, legitimated as such by an attest from the superintendent of the district in which they live, are provided with medicine gratis, from the apothecary-shop of the infirmary, upon producing a receipt from its physician. The annual cost of the medicines required, taking the average of the years 1830, 1831 and 1832, is,

A seminary, on a small scale, has lately been established in the Infirmary, for young men who dedicate themselves to surgery.

When clothes are requisite they cost nearly R. 3, or about 8 s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. for each person, being of linen. The whole cost of clothing, on an average of the years 1831, 1832 and 1833, made about R. 1,440, or 210 l. 14 s. 8 d. sterling.

The particulars and expense of the sustenance is on the other side.

The whole cost of the establishment, including the expense of the administration, for medicines, &c. &c., upon an average of the years 1830, 1831 and 1832, made 1 R. 12 $\frac{2}{3}$ sgr. (about 4 s. 2 d.) per head, weekly.

Municipal Poor-House in Dantzic.

This establishment is administered by four wardens, citizens, under control of the magistracy. The paupers are sent by the police to the magistracy, and by it to the institution. Its expenses are defrayed out of its own, but chiefly from the town's funds.

The number of inmates is regularly from 270 to 300, but as far as 350 can be received. Only those found duly qualified are admitted, and the voluntary applicants when above 25 years of age. The poor are generally averse from going to the poor-house. About two-thirds of the inmates are usually males, and about one-third females.

The inmates are obliged to do what work they can for the service of the establishment, and also for the benefit of its revenue; but they are generally unable to do much work, and the whole amount of their earnings is only from R. 100 to R. 150 (about 14 l. 12 s. 8 d. to 21 l. 19 s.) annually.

The relatives of these paupers (ascendants, descendants and collaterals), when able, and the communities to which they belong (not that of Dantzic), must provide for their maintenance, as prescribed by law. The amount claimed from these for each pauper is R. 30 (about 4 l. 7 s. 10 d.) yearly.

The sustenance of the inmates consists of 1 lb. fine rye bread, daily, to each, and a nutritious dinner,

- 1 day in the week, of peas, with peeled barley.
- 2 - - - - - peeled barley and groats.
- 1 - - - - - oat-groats.
- 2 - - - - - potatoes.

7 days; prepared with butter or fat, and salt, without butcher's meat.

To each inmate is served, every other Sunday, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. pork; and six to eight days in the year, on holidays, a beef-soup, with $\frac{3}{4}$ lb. beef; weekly, $\frac{1}{8}$ lb. salt.

Each gets as much of a very thin species of beer as he desires. The morning's and afternoon's fire is made on different hearths, where each inmate can prepare his breakfast and supper of what he has; they generally make a beverage of the common beer, with bread.

The workhouse has an annual expense, for 300 inmates,

Dantzic Institution (called Kinder-und Waisen-haus) for Poor Children and Orphans.

Dantzic.

The children received are chiefly illegitimate. Those of very poor persons pay nothing. Illegitimate children, whose fathers have means (but perhaps not above 10 annually), are bought in at the following rates, paid once for all, namely :

For a child under 1 ½ years old	-	-	-	-	R. 150 or £. 21 19 -

Ditto - to 5 and above	-	-	-	-	500 - 73 3 5

The number maintained in the house is 150, and out of the house 250. Till their sixth year they are boarded with proper persons, in the town and country, and sometimes they are left with their parents, when decent people, all under the superintendence of the wardens of the establishment. For each child 10 silver groshes (about 11 ¾ d.) weekly have hitherto been paid for board, but now only this sum is frequently given for board and clothing. After their sixth year they are provided for in the establishment, when there is room, and they remain in it until confirmed, which cannot take place before their 14th year, but generally follows soon after, when duly qualified. About 30 are dismissed annually, when the boys are bound to a trade, and the girls are put to service, care being taken to have all well placed. They remain under the guardianship of the wardens till they are of age (24 years old). The relatives are not allowed to interfere, when they are in the house. The children in the establishment, able to work, are employed only in supplying the wants of themselves, and of those out of the house.

In the last 10 years 4,271 were taken charge of by the institution, and of these 265 died, four of the cholera.

They get for sustenance in the Institution,

At breakfast, carraway-tea, the 33 eldest and biggest without, the 117 youngest and smallest with milk, and each child ¾ lb. to 1 lb. boltered rye bread.

At dinner : Sundays, beef broth, with vegetables and bread ; Mondays, peeled barley, groats, bread and butter ; Tuesdays, soup of white peas, and bread spread with syrup ; Wednesdays, oat-groats, with bread and butter ; Thursdays, beef broth, with vegetables and bread ; Fridays, plums, with flour-balls, or grey peas, with sweet-sour soup and bread ; Saturdays, barley groats, with bread and butter.

At supper ; bread spread with butter or syrup alternately, with very ordinary beer to the elder and larger children, and flour-soup to the younger and smaller.

By way of change, fish-soup, in summer soup of fresh fruit, are given, and roasts on six great holidays.

The daily quantity of these victuals, when served, per head, is fixed as follows : of meat ¼ lb., potatoes ¾ lb., peeled barley ½ lb., flour ¾ lb., white peas ¼ lb., oat groats ¾ lb., grey peas ¾ lb., very small beer ¼ quart (about ⅙ gallon), bread ½ to ¾ lb., syrup ⅙ lb., bread ⅙ lb.

Dantzic Charitable Institution (called Spendhaus) for Poor Children, chiefly Orphans.

Only poor children, principally orphans, are received into this institution, and very rarely is anything paid for their admission. The number is limited to 163, and all are maintained in the institution. The period of their stay is from their sixth year till confirmed, which cannot be before their 14th year, and is generally soon after, when duly qualified. They receive education and religious instruction in the house. They do what work they can for the establishment, and even earn a little by working for others. When dismissed, the girls are put out to service, and the boys are bound to some trade or profession, according to their qualifications. Care is had to get them well placed and treated; their conduct is superintended till of age (when 24 years old), and assistance is rendered them, when wanting it, by advice and otherwise. From 12 to 20 of the children leave the institution yearly.

Their sustenance consists,

For breakfast; of carraway-tea, and a piece of fine rye-bread, baked in the establishment.

For dinner; of beef-soup, with potatoes or peeled barley, twice weekly; of peas-soup once in the week; the other days, alternately, of oat, buckwheat and barley-groats; and in summer, in lieu of these, fruit or garden vegetables, once a week.

For the afternoon meal, the same as for breakfast.

For supper; of bread and butter the one day, and dry bread the other day, with a portion of common beer to the largest and stoutest, of beer-soup and oat-groats to the smaller and weaker.

Each child receives daily about one pound of bread, of the best quality, it being the chief nutriment.

The number of deaths has never exceeded eight in one year, during the last 10 years, and in three succeeding years there was no death. Only two died of the cholera.

Improvements are continually making in the administration of the establishment. It is supported partly from its own means, partly by assistance from the town's funds.

The establishment is administered by three wardens, who are citizens, under the control of the magistracy.

Sustenance in the Prisons, in Dantzic.

Formerly the prisoner received two silver groshes (about $2\frac{1}{2}d.$) daily, with which to provide himself his sustenance. Now, this is farmed out at $1\frac{5}{8}$ silver groshes (about $2\frac{1}{4}d.$) per head, for which the prisoners receive potatoe-soup, and other cheap victuals, with the necessary bread. Those confined for debt are allowed $2\frac{1}{2}$ sgr. (about $3d.$) for their support, which is paid out of the advance the creditors have to make.

Soldiers' Subsistence.

A common soldier receives in time of peace, every 10 days, 25 sgr. (about $29\frac{1}{2}d.$) pay, from which there is a deduction of about 1 sgr. for mending his regimentals; every five days, a 6 lb. loaf of coarse rye bread; the necessary clothing; an allowance of 15 silver groshes (about $17\frac{3}{4}d.$) for quarters monthly, when he provides these himself, otherwise he is billeted on a householder, who receives the money.

In general, from five to 20 men join together in a mess, and give a caterer of their choosing about four-fifths of their whole pay, for which he provides and prepares the victuals, indeed chiefly consisting of potatoes, but frequently butchers' meat and other food can be added.

SAXONY.

LETTER from Francis R. Forbes, Esq. to Viscount Palmerston.

My Lord,

Dresden, 28th January 1834.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting to your Lordship Answers to the List of Questions drawn up by the Poor Law Commissioners. I have used every possible means for procuring information on this subject, and should your Lordship think that the Answers are inadequate, I must plead in excuse, that as well from the industrious and frugal habits of the Saxons as from the steady determination of every Government (whether before or since the events of 1830) to render the situation of those receiving parochial relief too irksome for it to proceed from any other than the merest necessity, neither the Ministry nor the Chambers have been forced to make any new provision for the poor, nor has the subject been once referred to in the present Diet.

It may not be irrelevant to mention here, that a woman who is employed to sell lace stated a few days ago that she considered herself as having been successful when, in the course of the day, she had cleared the sum of nine pfennings (scarcely more than a penny sterling), on which she has to support herself and four children. This will prove to your Lordship that the lower classes in Saxony can live for a sum which appears almost inconceivable. She however inhabits one of the mountainous districts, where every thing is cheaper than it is here.

I have, &c.

The Right Hon. Viscount Palmerston, K. B.
&c. &c. &c.

(signed)

Francis R. Forbes.

P.S.—I may perhaps be able to procure some further details, in which case I shall immediately transmit them to your Lordship.

VAGRANTS.

Question 1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer. The beggars are not numerous. There are more who beg in houses than in the streets, and more in the country than in towns; they are not troublesome.

Q. 2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—A. They receive from the parishes to which they belong assistance in proportion to their inability to maintain themselves. A sum is fixed as necessary to support a man; if he cannot earn the whole, the difference is given to him as relief. Persons found continually begging are committed to the house of correction.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families billeted or quartered on householders?—2. Or boarded with individuals?—A. The first claims of the poor are upon relations. The parish interferes only in cases where ejection takes place on account of non-payment of house rent, and guarantees payment for a short time to those who agree to receive the houseless; this happens but seldom.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—A. In the provinces of Saxony there are no work-houses for the poor. In that at Leipzig, cotton and flax are spun, and stockings knit. The daily pay is $2\frac{1}{4}d$.

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—A. Religious institutions have no immediate share in the support of the poor. Money is collected in churches at the communion, at weddings, christenings, &c. &c., and given from time to time to the Poor Commissioners.

Q. 5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—A. Nothing of this sort exists. If a man can find no work in his own profession, he must seek employment in another way.

Q. 6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—A. No work is provided for him; he is at liberty to seek it here or any where else.

Q. 7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—A. This question, as respects money, is answered in No. 2, Vagrants. The sum is paid weekly by the overseer. Coals and wood are given to them in fixed quantities. When there are at least four degrees of cold (Reaumur), the distribution is more general, and in some cases is repeated frequently during the winter. At the recommendation of the medical authority of the district, a sick person receives firing at any season.

Q. 8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—A. The local poor commission supports free-schools and houses for orphans. Boys willing to learn a profession are assisted with money to pay the expense of becoming apprentices, and of buying the bed which it is customary for each to have. At Dresden, an extensive charity society gives great assistance in this way.

Q. 9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—A. A law, published at Dresden in 1773, requires the assistance of relations in general, if they have the means.

Q. 10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—A. Is not customary.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

For such persons there are hospitals and poor-houses, where they may, according to circumstances, be either entirely maintained or by paying a very moderate sum receive the necessities of life.

SICK.

Sick, who have no comforts at home, are removed to hospitals; and for those who remain at home, there are medical men in each district who are forced to visit them daily, or more often if necessary. The medicine is supplied by the poor fund from apothecaries who agree to discount $25\frac{0}{100}$. The sick person on receiving a ticket from the overseer is treated gratis by the poor doctor or surgeon of the district, and receives, besides medicine, his nourishment, soup, bouillion, wine if necessary, clothing, bed, fire, baths, &c. &c. &c.

Poor lying-in women are taken care of on the same plan as above. Midwives are appointed for the poor. There is a society of ladies at Dresden, who do much for the poor, and give great assistance to lying-in women of good character.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

Q. 1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—A. The father is legally bound to provide for his child. The sum is regulated by his circumstances and his means of living.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—A. Vide No. 9, of Destitute Able-bodied. The case of an illegitimate child can make no difference.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—A. The same as legitimate children, who fall to the care of the public, either by placing them in schools or with families, particularly in the country.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—or, 5. Are they billeted or quartered on householders?—or, 6. Boarded with individuals?

individuals?—A. They are placed in the house for foundlings until their seventh year, and then in the establishment for orphans.

Q. 7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—A. When a child has accomplished its 14th year it is supposed to be able to earn its bread. For children brought up in the country, nine shillings per month is given until their eighth year, and from that time seven and sixpence.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

1st. On the industry of the labourers? 2d. On their frugality? 3d. On the age at which they marry? 4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—A. All depends upon the moral state of the individual, and the exact effect cannot be determined. More relief than is strictly necessary is never given.

LABOURERS, &c.

Q. 1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—A. The average amount of wages is not more than nine-pence per day, without provisions, throughout the year.

Q. 2. Is piece-work general?—A. Exists, but partially.

Q. 3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A. Vide No. 1.

Q. 4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—A. Is difficult to determine, as it depends entirely upon the management of the parents, the size of the family, upon unforeseen accidents, illness, scarcity, &c. &c. &c.

Q. 5. Is there any and what employment for women and children?—A. Spinning wool and hair, knitting, platting straw, &c. &c.

Q. 6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—A. A woman can earn on an average three-pence daily. A child one penny.

Q. 7 & 8. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years, respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment? Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—A. Parents with four children, with management, abstemiousness and diligence can earn their livelihood.

Q. 9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—A. A rare occurrence.

Q. 10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—A. Very little, and seldom exceeds a small garden.

Q. 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—A. Cannot be ascertained.

Q. 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—A. On an average one pound in the provinces, and two pounds in Dresden.

Q. 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—A. Occurs but seldom, although the produce, i. e. fruit, grass, &c. &c. is often rented by them.

Q. 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—A. The eighth child is illegitimate.

Q. 19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—A. Under fourteen years of age, twenty-three thousand and sixty-two, or one in $62\frac{8}{10}$.

Q. 20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—A. From fourteen to fifty years, six thousand five hundred and sixty-four, or one in $220\frac{9}{10}$.

Q. 21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—A. Past fifty, twelve thousand five hundred and seventy-seven, or one in $115\frac{3}{10}$.

Q. 22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—A. Cannot be answered with any degree of certainty.

Q. 23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—A. A man may not marry before he is twenty-one years old, if liable to serve in the army. Females are in no way restricted. In Dresden professionists may not marry until they become masters in their trade.

Q. 24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—A. Cannot be ascertained.

Q. 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—A. In saving banks, at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

WURTEMBERG.

LETTER from Sir E. C. Disbrowe to the Right honourable Lord Viscount Palmerston, G. C. B.

My Lord,

Stuttgard, October 28th, 1833.

IN obedience to your Lordship's commands signified to me by Mr. Backhouse, I have the honour to transmit a Report of the Poor Laws in Wurtemberg.

I have endeavoured to point out the spirit in which the laws were framed, the manner in which they are carried into execution by the parishes, the mode of obtaining settlements, the expenses of passing paupers, and the minor regulations which I have thought bore an analogy to, or presented any improvements on, the practice in England.

In order as much as possible to simplify the Report, I have reserved for a Supplement the text of the law, and the rules of certain other establishments, which, though they bear on the subject, have not so immediate a relation to the administration of the Poor Laws.

Whilst I have been employed in collecting the materials on which the Report is founded, a law has passed the Lower Chamber, amending the former law of settlement in many respects; I must therefore necessarily reserve this for the Supplement.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,

My Lord,

The Right hon^{ble}
Lord Viscount Palmerston, G. C. B.

Your Lordship's most obedient, humble servant,

E. C. Disbrowe.

THE principle of the laws for regulating the administration of the poor in Wurtemberg may be summed up in a few words.

Each parish* is bound to support its own poor; that is to say, to furnish the exact portion of food which shall sustain human life.

The administration of the poor is left to the separate parishes, and confided to the mayor and magistrates, who are elective.

The practice varies very considerably. In one thing the villages all agree. Those only are considered entitled to parochial relief who, from age and infirmities, are incapable of earning a living.

Any person receiving parochial relief is considered as being placed entirely at the disposal of the magistrates of the village, to be employed by them in any work they may think them still capable of performing.

A man is considered as belonging to that parish in which his father has or had rights of a burger (bürgerrecht.)

Where no such rights are made out, he is considered as belonging to the parish in which his father was born. The manner of ascertaining this is explained hereafter (heimathschein).

When neither of these cases can be made out, he becomes a beisitzer, but not a burger of the commune where he had resided or served longest.

The object of the law being to avoid any litigious proceedings, in cases which frequently happen, of the wife of a man travelling to look out for work being confined on the journey, the place of its birth does not give the child the right of burger.

These regulations have also the effect of taking away from the parishes all scruples as to employing a man with a family, when, on account of some great work, the parish stands temporarily in need of additional labourers.

Every parish has its church and school. The salary of the schoolmaster is paid by the Government sometimes; sometimes partly by the Government, partly by the parish, and partly by the circle or county; the nomination being in the hands of that body which contributes the most.

Every child must go to school from six to fourteen for six hours a day. He learns reading, writing and arithmetic, and some handicraft trade, or something of agriculture is picked up.†

The parents pay from 15 xr to 24 xr per quarter. If the parents cannot pay, the parish must; in which case, instead of repaying to the parents in the interval of school hours, they are made to work by the parish officers, and the money goes to the school. If the parent can pay and will not, he may be forced to do so, as well as to give sufficient food and raiment.

The able-bodied man in the possession of health is not entitled to any assistance by law, and in practice rarely obtains it.

The case of a man with a numerous family of very small children is occasionally considered as an exception, but he cannot demand it as a right.

If

* The word "parish" is here used, as more intelligible in English; perhaps the word "commune" would have been better, because there are two distinct administrations, the parish being an ecclesiastical jurisdiction, the commune having charge of the poor and rates; so that it is possible, as their limits are not the same, that a parish may contain a commune and a half, or vice versa. If it becomes advisable therefore to make any calculations on cost from the tables in the Supplement, it will be necessary to bear this in mind.

† It is not regularly taught.

WURTEMBERG.

If a man's earnings are sufficient to maintain his wife and one or two children and no more, the others, if he has more, are taken from him, and, if he cannot feed them, they are fed by the parish officers, or placed out to some farmer who will receive them. In many cases they are farmed out by contract to the lowest bidder.

They are in general removed from the parents because it is deemed right that special care should be taken that the parents shall, by no possible means, benefit by the parish allowance given to the child, and, where they are left to the parents, the sum given is calculated on this principle with the greatest parsimony; nine shillings in the course of the year have been doled out in weekly allowances.

The general scale of allowances will be best shown by the Supplement.

To the question which I have frequently asked in different quarters, whether a man considers it a disgrace to apply for parish aid, I have received various answers; but all agree in considering it to be a misfortune, and the little assistance which is given them is certainly not calculated to make it a desirable mode of obtaining a livelihood.

If a parish is too poor to maintain the paupers and the schools, &c., it may apply to the amt or bailiwick in which it is situated; the magistrates of which may accede to the demand or refuse it. It is always refused where a fair presumption exists of a bad administration of its property; an application is then made to the Government, which is seldom more successful, but in all cases the school is provided for the children; parties or some of them then disperse, and obtain a living by work or begging.

In some cases where the bad administration is notorious, the mayor and magistrates are made responsible.

Ascertaining to
belongs.

No person is allowed to quit his parish without his heimathschein, a species of passport showing to what parish he belongs, and where inquiries respecting his character may be made; he is entitled to it on demand. This of course determines at once the place where he has a right to demand his settlement and relief, if in want from accident, and saves much expense of litigation.

Heimathlose.

In case a man has resided a certain time in a parish without a heimathschein, and becomes chargeable, and unable to prove whence he comes, then the parish which admitted this irregularity is charged with his maintenance till his parish is ascertained.

If a man has behaved ill (not criminally) he is passed back by the gens-d'armes to his parish. A man being returned once or twice in this way is not allowed for a time to quit the bailiwick in which his parish is situated, and where consequently he is known.

These and other similar arrangements, by being strictly adhered to, have prevented any abuse in the charges for passing paupers; at the same time it has given the people a certain degree of economy from showing them the necessity for it.

The law forcing a man to belong to a parish is dated 1828, so that there are still some few persons whose parishes are not ascertained, but their number is daily decreasing, as somehow or other settlements are given them.

The enclosure (A.) will show the daily expense at which they are passed, amounting to between 400*l.* and 500*l.* per annum.*

The enclosure (B.) shows the punishment to which they are subjected by law for drunkenness, idleness, &c.†

There are several institutions in this country which by their nature contribute greatly to the assistance of the working classes; those which come more immediately into contact with them are here pointed out.

It is as well to premise that, by law, every charitable institution which exists or which shall be founded, must, at stated periods, give in to the Government a full account of its funds and of all its proceedings. The proceeds will be applied as directed by the founders, but the Government acts as a sort of universal visitor.

It is however not necessary that funds, if in money, should be vested in Government security, and there are instances in which the parties sustain considerable losses, because they have not, unfortunately, sufficient confidence in the Government to purchase its securities.

Savings Bank.

For example, the savings bank (Caisse d'épargne) in which servants, labourers, &c. place their small savings, for which they receive four per cent. interest; but the governors and directors will not place it in Government securities, but lend it out to small merchants at five per cent. on what is deemed good security. The surplus arising from the difference of the interest has formed a capital to answer to the subscribers for any accidental failure on the part of the persons who have borrowed the money; thus depriving themselves of a large portion of their income, sooner than trust it to the hands of the Government.

The

* The Chambers have just voted the sum of 1,200 l. per annum to cover at once this sum of 400 l., and the expense of passing criminals also. It appears the expenses of litigation and correspondence between the amts was calculated as making the difference.

† A man is put into prison, say for ten days—his keep is charged to him—he must remain till he has worked it out. One bad effect is that the Governor of the House of Correction, being anxious to obtain work for his prisoners, procures it by making them work cheaper than the ordinary rate of labour; consequently, in towns where Houses of Correction are built, the price of labour falls below its natural level.

The Credits-verein is an establishment of the nature of a joint stock company's bank, for lending small sums to parishes and individuals, carrying with it its own sinking fund.

It makes loans to parishes for forming roads, &c.; it lends to poor individuals of good character; and it is no uncommon thing for a parish to make itself responsible for one of its own inhabitants who undertakes the improvement of his garden, land, &c., or builds a mill within the parish, exacting perhaps in return that he shall take charge of some of the parish pauper children.

This establishment might be applied almost in the nature of a mutual insurance company by very small proprietors, or even by leaseholders of a cottage and garden. The good character borne by the individual will always prove advantageous to him.

There exists in this country an establishment called Allemands, of a very ancient date.

Allemands.

In order to comprehend the nature of this institution, it will be advisable to mount to the origin of it.

When the personal service required in feudal times began to be commuted, the peasantry retained part of the soil by agreement, paying a portion of its proceeds in kind or money, and still giving a certain number of days in the year of personal service.

In process of time the peasants, by their joint exertions, bought off the whole or part of these charges, as may be, and obtained a common property in the land.

A good deal of the property also arises from their having taken possession of uncultivated lands in their neighbourhood, their right of property being founded on prescription.

These people so clubbing together, and their children, had a joint property in the soil, and obtained bürgerrecht (the right of citizenship).

The land thus obtained has been farmed out, but it is more generally divided in small lots among the burgers, who cultivate it for their own benefit.

The burgers pay an annual tax to the joint stock purse, which has been variously employed, either in further purchase of lands, woods or buildings, or has been placed out to interest with individuals, or sometimes in Government securities.

Legacies or donations to particular districts have increased their funds.*

They appear in general to have paid their parochial rates and clergy jointly, as well as schools, &c.

The government of the village and of the joint stock purse, allotting lands, &c., is intrusted to a mayor (who is confirmed by the Government) and a certain number of counsellors for life; to these are added an equal number of representatives, chosen freely by the inhabitants, half of whom go out by rotation every two years.

They have the power of mortgaging (to the credits-verein generally) the revenues of the commune, to enable them to open roads, purchase lands, &c.

If the loan is considerable, leave must be obtained from the directors of the amt, or of the circle, as may be.

The management therefore is completely in the hands of those for whose benefit it is intended, and they are charged exclusively with the expenses of the poor.†

The land being divided amongst the burgers, it may of course happen that the number of burgers increase, and young men having that right may lay claim to their share in the land, and demand a portion for their subsistence.

In this case two different practices prevail; in the one a periodical division takes place; every burger of age receiving an allotment, the size of this allotment depending of course on the number of claimants.

In some parishes which have followed this plan, the subdivision has been so great, that, not only accumulation of property has ceased, but the burgers themselves are reduced to great distress.‡

The second practice is that of dividing the allotments once for all, so that when a man has once received an allotment, he knows it is his own for life (unless forfeited by bad conduct); consequently he is more disposed to expend money to bring it into a better state of cultivation.§

* Certain villages possess only funds, or only woods; still as the profits are applied in the same manner and under the same jurisdiction, they bear within themselves the principle of the allemand.

† To illustrate this establishment of allemands by a reference to England, let us suppose a parish to be enclosed by Act of Parliament, and that that portion of land which would be set aside by the commissioners as the shares of persons claiming rights of common from prescription, instead of being divided among the individuals in small portions which they might sell, should be thrown together in one lot as contiguous as might be to the village, and declared inalienable: the names of such persons as had enjoyed the rights of common being inscribed in a list, they and their children would enjoy the rights of burgers in that parish. Add to this a further portion of land (to be set out in the same manner as glebe land is), and make it chargeable with the expenses of the school and poor (the remaining receipts to be distributed among the burgers), this estate to be under the management of officers chosen by the burgers, who should make a report half-yearly to the parish, and at the same time be bound to submit a copy of their proceedings, income and expenditure to Government, who should be invested with certain powers as visitors—the remainder of the land would be freed from rates, as it is, in a similar case, from tithes:—such an establishment would be similar, in many respects, to the institution of the Allemand.

‡ In some parts of Wurtemberg, there are communes with land not yet taken in. They willingly receive new burgers.

§ In an extreme case, if the burger cultivates his land very ill, and applies consequently for parish relief, they may take his land from him, farming it for his benefit.

p. 489.Wohlthätigkeits-
verein.

The remaining burgers, who are of age to demand an allotment, are obliged to wait till, by the death of one of the older members, his turn comes, and he is provided for for life.

In the mean time he must earn his bread by other means. He is a day labourer, or he applies himself to some handicraft trade; he travels in search of work, or not unfrequently he emigrates altogether, being supplied with the necessary means by the parish, a manner frequently adopted to get rid of a bad character.

This would probably be practised more frequently, if by these means the parish was at liberty to erase his name from the list of burgers, but as the law compels them in case of his return in poverty to receive him, a check has been given to this proceeding.*

Most of this sort of parishes (allemands) possess, besides their arable lands, a certain portion of wood land, from which a provision is made gratis to each burger, and the remainder is sold, the proceeds being put into the stock purse.

The credits-verrein, which has been mentioned above, is resorted to with great effect by such a community, or by individuals belonging to it.

The right of citizenship in a commune is to be obtained by purchase, under certain restrictions.

By the law passed in 1828, to amend the former laws, a parish is obliged to receive the individual for a fixed sum, classed according to the property of the parish in that year, provided at the same time that the case of the person falls under certain other conditions, Enclosure (C.)

There is also in each village another class of persons, called Beisitzer; that is, having the right of living in the parish, but no share in the common land. The parish must maintain them in age and in sickness.† (C. bis.)

Since 1828, the number of persons of this class has augmented, because previous to that year, the execution of the law, by which a man is compelled to show to what parish he belonged, was extremely defective.

At present no man can marry or perform any other civil act without showing to what parish he belongs, either as burger or beisitzer.

If he has married previous to the passing of the law, his children, under certain conditions, become burgers. In the enclosure (C.) the conditions are pointed out.

If he wishes to marry now, he must purchase his bürgerrecht somewhere.

In certain villages the price is as low as 35s.; but, of course, this is a village where the property is proportionably small.‡

By these regulations hopes are entertained of ultimately reducing the number of beisitzers.

The natural children who would go to increase this class, are in a great measure provided for by a separate establishment; still a portion are always left chargeable to the parish.

With persons of this class the credits-verrein can have but few transactions, for though it was originally intended as a charitable institution, to relieve the necessities of the poor industrious classes, still, as it partakes at the same time of the nature of a mercantile speculation, the directors do not feel themselves justified in lending on such slight security, or rather without any at all.

In this respect the want of a resident landowner, who has the will and the means to employ the labourers, or relieve the wants of this class, is much felt.

Starve they will not, provided they will work, but their wages will be extremely small, much below the market price; whilst the refusal to work, or idleness in the discharge of it, is punishable by prison, and hard work with worse fare.§

But in this case charity is not idle, and an institution called the Wohlthätigkeits-verrein comes to their assistance.

It has been established since the accession of the present king, and is under the patronage of the king and queen of Wurtemberg.

The decidedly idle, and those having a bad character, receive nothing; but a man showing whence he comes, and having a reputation for industry, obtains a loan without interest, if he will show to the directors any plausible way in which he intends to employ it.||

This loan is frequently converted into a gift. So that a man with common industry may raise himself in the scale of life, and from a beisitzer may ultimately become a burger of the parish in which he is inscribed.

This institution was founded in 1816 and 1817, after the great famine of those years.

Distribution

* The law is rather doubtful whether, having lost his bürgerrecht, he does not become a beisitzer^a; it is rather believed he does.

† As to the proportion between burgers and beisitzers, in some allemands there are none of the latter; but, taken altogether, at a rough calculation, the beisitzers may amount to one-twentieth of the population of villages having allemands.

‡ These impediments in the way of marriage have increased the number of natural children. By law, a woman who has had a natural child, if she afterwards marries, must do so on a Wednesday.

§ A man condemned to prison for a crime, who is not able to pay the necessary expenses of his detainment, must work it out; if he refuses to work he is detained till he has done so.

|| Money is furnished by this institution to peasants or poor tradesmen for availing themselves of any little resource, and it will sometimes advance to the latter means for the purchase of some instrument to gain his livelihood, when he is too poor to procure it otherwise.

^a For explanation of Beisitzer, vide Enclosure (C bis.), p. 489.

Distribution of soup gratis, of bread below market-price, &c. formed a part of its attributions; but it is believed that these distributions encourage idleness and have been discontinued.

Enclosure (D.) contains an account of its receipts and expenditure for the years 1830-31 and 1831-32.*

From time immemorial this country has delivered itself from its surplus population by emigration.

It is rather a curious fact that almost every seventh year the number of emigrants exceeds the ordinary number of four or five other years put together.

It is difficult however to give the exact number in former years, as no very regular control has been kept.

By a modern regulation no person can pass through France or Holland without having a passport from the legation in this country, which passport is never delivered until a stated sum of money is placed in the hands of a banker here, which sum is sufficient to pay the expenses of the individual and his family to the place of embarkation, and to bring them back in case they do not embark; so that they cannot be a charge to the country through which they pass.

The sum for passing through France is fixed at 400 fl. = 25 l. for a man; at about 70 l. for a family. Through Holland, at for a man, and at for a family; and to Russia, at for a man, and for a family at 400 fl. = 25 l. †

The number who quitted this country in the year 1832, which may be considered as an average year, amounts to, through Holland and France, 4,534; to Russia, 45 families.

They have carried out of the country a sum of about 76,000 l. as shown by the return (E.) and there is every reason to believe this sum to be equal to about two-thirds of what has actually been drained from the country by this means.

It is therefore evident, that it is not exactly the poorest class who emigrate, and in fact that they are not driven to it by actual want.

It is not possible to distinguish those who have been passed at the expense of the parishes. In general, individuals sent abroad by the parishes are not those of the best character.

Besides these establishments, there is an orphan-house, there are hospitals, &c. of which it is not necessary to give any detail. The supplement will contain their rules and regulations as well as the text of the laws and returns, showing the actual operation from a considerable number of parishes.

To conclude:—

The spirit of law and practice combined, is—no man can starve, but if able to work he must do so. According to the work he performs will be his remuneration.

If by birth a burger, he must ultimately have a portion of land for life, and enjoy certain privileges; if not born to that advantage, he may attain to it.

If idle and dissolute, he is sure to find his way, not to a poor-house to live on clover, but to a house of punishment, where the necessities of nature will compel him to work: he can be delivered from it by good conduct and activity alone.

As regards public charities, whatever bequests are made, they are applied to the benefit of the town or village pointed out, but they must be subjected to the inspection and active control of the Government.

The means of the country are small but well directed; suffering certainly exists among the poor, but it is more local than general.

Twenty parishes are, I am informed, unable to support their poor. ‡

It is but justice to add, that in those districts which have originally belonged to the Wurtemberg Government, the administration of the parishes is, generally speaking, superior to that of the districts united to it in 1805.

The allemands are more universal as an institution, and richer within themselves: this important branch having always been well understood and watched by its princes.

To the question which will here arise, Whether the residence of the princes (not sovereigns) and nobles is considered an advantage to the country? the answer given has always been—"Yes; decidedly so."

Their presence is desired by the peasantry as a refuge in time of distress by affording succour, which the Wohlthätigkeits-verein cannot always supply. There is a less mass of individual suffering where they reside, whether the villages possess an allemand or do not enjoy that institution.

Where an exception exists, it arises from penury of the individual; a penury usually to be traced to the boundless expense to which these sovereigns were put during the last years of the German empire, in its struggle to resist the French Revolution of 1792. Whether individual individual small sovereigns, or imperial towns under republican forms of government, they equally suffered in their means, as did the establishment of allemands.

Since 1817, the means of the poorer classes have increased; but as property becomes more subdivided, the poorest class of all sustain a loss in the necessary contraction of individual charities. *

TRANSPORT des Prisonniers, (Loi du 26 Mai 1824.)

Les dépenses de la nourriture et de la garde des prisonniers se trouvant en route sont payées par la caisse d'état, sans que le prisonnier est forcé de restituer les frais.

Les prisonniers déjà condamnés à une certaine punition et se trouvant en route vers une maison de correction doivent payer les frais s'ils en ont les moyens.

Les dépenses pour un prisonnier par jour sont,

Pour un diner en route	-	-	-	-	-	-	4 rr.
Pour le gîte et le déjeuner	-	-	-	-	-	-	10 rr.
							14 rr.

Dans chaque station il y a une prison; la garde de cette prison reçoit pour un prisonnier enfermé,

Pour une ou deux heures	-	-	-	-	-	-	6 rr.
Pour une nuit	-	-	-	-	-	-	10 rr.
							16 rr.

Le montant ainsi des frais pour un prisonnier par jour sont 30 rr.

$\frac{2}{3}$ sont payés par sa commune, $\frac{1}{3}$ par le baillage, par lequel il passe.

Enclosure (B.)

PUNITION des mauvais sujets, des ivrognes, des personnes qui ont fait de petits vols, qui ont dit des paroles injuriantes, qui ont troublé le repos de la nuit, &c. &c. &c.

1. Emprisonnement.

2. Les personnes coupables plusieurs fois du même crime n'ont pour nourriture que du pain et de l'eau.

Dans les maisons de correction, ou on mincit la nourriture, ou l'on augmente le travail, ou l'on donne un plus mauvais gîte, ou enfin on met le coupable en chaînes.

Enclosure (C.)

CASES under which a Man may take out a Bürgerrecht.

1. A person who, by emigration or otherwise, has lost his right of citizenship (bürgerrecht), and desires again to possess it, must apply for it in that commune in which he was formerly burger.

2. If, however, he never before possessed this right, he must take it out in that parish where he has spent the last five years.

3. In default of this claim, he must apply for it in the parish from which he obtained his marriage license.

4. If not married, he must procure it from the parish in which he was born.

5. Married or widowed women, who cannot establish their claim to a Bürgerrecht under heads 1, 2 or 3, must take it out in the commune to which their husbands belong.

6. Children of parents not possessing the Bürgerrecht, whose case does not come under any of the heads from 1 to 4, are adjudged to that parish which ought to receive their father, or (if they be illegitimate) their mother.

7. If none of the preceding heads answer the case of a person who has not the Bürgerrecht, the police will indicate the commune where he must apply for it.

If a man can prove his case to stand under any of the heads from 1 to 6, the commune which fulfils the conditions must receive him as Burger; always providing, that he pays the necessary sum established by law on his admittance.

Enclosure

* This remark holds good rather in towns than in the country.

Enclosure (C bis.)

DIFFERENCE entre Bürger et Beisitzer.

Chaque habitant du pays doit être Bürger ou Beisitzer.

Un Beisitzer est, pour ainsi dire, un demi-Bürger.

Pour être admis comme Beisitzer dans une commune, il faut payer et posséder la moitié de la somme que doit payer et posséder le Bürger à sa réception. La différence entre Bürger et Beisitzer ne consiste qu'en ce que le dernier n'a pas le droit de choisir le député, et qu'il n'est pas en jouissance des émolumens que reçoit le Bürger de la commune, e. g. il y a des communes où chaque Bürger riche ou pauvre reçoit une certaine quantité de bois, &c.

Un vagabond sans moyens qu'une commune doit recevoir comme Beisitzer, ne paye rien à sa réception.

Un Beisitzer qui veut se marier, présente sa demande au magistrat, qui décide s'il est en état de nourrir une famille par son travail, et dans ce cas il peut se marier, et ses enfans seront Beisitzer et pas Bürger.

Un Beisitzer peut épouser une fille quelconque qui perd sa bourgeoisie (bürgerrecht) si elle a eu quelque part le droit de bourgeoisie, car les enfans suivent en tout le père.

En cas d'appauvrissement, il n'y a pas de différence entre Bürger et Beisitzer.

Il y a beaucoup de communes qui n'ont point d'Allemand, point de Pium Corpus, mais selon les lois elles doivent nourrir leurs pauvres. Dans ce cas il arrive quelquefois que les mendiants ne sont pas sévèrement punis par les magistrats de ces communes—contre la loi générale.

LETTER from Sir E. C. Disbrowe, to the Right hon. Lord Viscount Palmerston, K.B.

My Lord,

Stuttgart, Dec. 1833.

As a Supplement to my Report on the state of the Poor in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, I take the liberty of transmitting a variety of papers, some received previous, others subsequent to my Despatch, No. —, and from which I think it may be possible to extract further information.

The Enclosure (L.) from the magistrate of Ludwigsberg, to whom I feel much indebted for the information furnished, corroborates the statements in my former Despatch, and at the same time gives a general idea of the state of cultivation and value of land in that district.

This Return, which I received after I had despatched my No. —, is a reply to certain questions which I put to him, questions similar in substance having likewise been addressed by me to the chief magistrates of from fifty to sixty different villages.

The object I had in view was to ascertain if the system of cultivation in the different parts of the kingdom had or had not a sensible influence on the state of the poor.

I regret to say that my researches on this point will not enable me to come to a satisfactory conclusion; but where the vine is extensively cultivated, misery is in general more severely felt by the poorer classes, because the cultivation of it partakes of the nature of a lottery.

The Enclosure (G.) will show the quantity of land in this kingdom under cultivation, and how very small a proportion, particularly in the Neckar Kreis, is allowed to be fallow; of course this ensures for the moment an increased demand for labour; how far the land will bear it is another question, or whether the impoverishment of the land may not ultimately prove a serious loss to the poor.

Although these details do not perhaps strictly come within the limits of the inquiry which your Lordship did me the honour to submit to me, still as I have received the information in the course of my inquiry, and as they do bear on the question, I think it my duty to submit them.

The Enclosure (H.) contains six Returns, which I have selected.

No. 1. Is the return of a village having a considerable landed proprietor residing near it.

No. 2. That of a small town.

No. 3. That of a village influenced by its contiguity to a town.

No. 4. That of a parish having no particular circumstances attached to it.

No. 5. That of a parish having an Allemand.

No. 6. That of a parish without an Allemand :

All selected at hazard from amongst the returns, in order to present a general view of the subject.

The price of labour varies very considerably. I cannot state even an average price. 4d. per day is given in some places, 11d. in others. In this statement, I exclude towns.

I beg leave to add an account of the establishments of the small township of Weinsberg.

Besides the above, I have thrown together a number of papers, which may perhaps be found to contain further information, although in perusing them I have not found any particular points not already touched on to which I could venture to draw your Lordship's attention.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,

Enclosure (F.)

QUELQUES REMARQUES sur l'ADMINISTRATION des PAUVRES dans le
Royaume de WURTEMBERG.

Les lois commandent de donner du secours au pauvres de la part de l'état en cas que les bienfaisances volontaires des particuliers ne suffisent pas; mais ces lois sont modifiées en ce que l'état lui-même ne donne que peu de contributions, et que chaque commune est chargée du secours principal.

Par conséquent les lois s'occupent de quatre points principaux :—1. Des Fondations.—2. De la Caisse des Pauvres.—3. Des Obligations des Communes;—et 4. Des Contributions de la part du Gouvernement données comme exception.

D'après Memminger, (1829, 2 livraison, pages 311-442) il y a en Wurtemberg 64,896 pauvres, dont 22,863 sont capables du travail, 14,142 ne le sont qu'en partie, 11,044 ne sont point du tout capables, et 16,848 sont enfans au-dessous de 14 ans.

FONDATIONS.

Ceux qui peuvent prétendre au bienfaits des fondations sont,

1°. Des personnes tout-à-fait pauvres, de vieilles personnes ou malades, ceux qui sont incapables du travail et qui sont de bonne renommée.

2°. Les Haus-Armen, qui malgré leur travail ne gagnent pas le pain nécessaire à leur famille. Ces secours ne sont pas donnés en argent, mais, a. en leur procurant occasion pour le travail; b. en payant pour eux leur loyer; c. en payant le maître d'école pour leurs enfans. En général on se borne à ne pas donner le secours comme don, mais en échange de quelque service ou travail.

3°. Les pauvres ouvriers, ou possesseurs de terres, (qui, un jour, peuvent peut-être rendre ce qu'on leur avait donné) reçoivent de l'argent.

4°. En cas de famine, on donne de l'argent aux possesseurs de terres appauvris, en forme d'emprunt.

CAISSE des PAUVRES, établie dans chaque Commune (ou Pium Corpus.)

Les revenus de cette caisse sont ou perpétuels ou casuels. Les premiers se dérivent des épargnes faites par l'abolition du culte catholique dans les églises, (comme lampes, bougies, feu éternel, &c.) et des intérêts du capital fait par des vœux ou d'autres manières. Les revenus casuels viennent de l'argent donné comme offrandes pendant le sermon, par des contributions volontaires des habitants, de certaines amendes, e. g. des amendes imposées par le Kirchen-Couvent (magistrats ecclésiastiques et laïques), des amendes de certains ouvriers, notamment le tiers de toutes les amendes levées sur les aubergistes, de la quatrième partie de la taxe levée sur les chiens, de l'argent donné pour la cloche de deuil, pour les voitures de deuil, enfin de quelques taxes que le gouvernement a abandonnées aux pauvres.

OBLIGATIONS des COMMUNES.

En cas que ni les fondations ni le Pium Corpus ne suffisent, la Commune est obligée de contribuer, et il est ordinaire que la Commune ne donne pas une plus grande somme que le Pium Corpus.

Si la Commune ne peut pas assez donner, ou qu'elle a déjà donné autant que le Pium Corpus, et que tout est pourtant insuffisant, c'est l'Oberamt entier qui doit donner du secours, en se réservant le droit de redemander son argent quand ceux qui l'ont reçu seront en état de le redonner.

SECOURS donné par le GOUVERNEMENT.

Le Gouvernement surveille la caisse d'épargne (Spar-Casse), les établissements pour les orphelins, pour les sourds, et pour les muets.

WURTEMBERG.

(G.) p. 495.

The object I had in view was to ascertain if the system of cultivation in the different parts of the kingdom had or had not a sensible influence on the state of the poor.

I regret to say that my researches on this point will not enable me to come to a satisfactory conclusion; but where the vine is extensively cultivated, misery is in general more severely felt by the poorer classes, because the cultivation of it partakes of the nature of a lottery.

The Enclosure (G.) will show the quantity of land in this kingdom under cultivation, and how very small a proportion, particularly in the Neckar Kreis, is allowed to be fallow; of course this ensures for the moment an increased demand for labour; how far the land will bear it is another question, or whether the impoverishment of the land may not ultimately prove a serious loss to the poor.

Although these details do not perhaps strictly come within the limits of the inquiry which your Lordship did me the honour to submit to me, still as I have received the information in the course of my inquiry, and as they do bear on the question, I think it my duty to submit them.

The Enclosure (H.) contains six Returns, which I have selected.

No. 1. Is the return of a village having a considerable landed proprietor residing near it.

No. 2. That of a small town.

No. 3. That of a village influenced by its contiguity to a town.

No. 4. That of a parish having no particular circumstances attached to it.

No. 5. That of a parish having an Allemand.

No. 6. That of a parish without an Allemand :

All selected at hazard from amongst the returns, in order to present a general view of the subject.

The price of labour varies very considerably. I cannot state even an average price. 4d. per day is given in some places, 11d. in others. In this statement, I exclude towns.

I beg leave to add an account of the establishments of the small township of Weinsberg.

Besides the above, I have thrown together a number of papers, which may perhaps be found to contain further information, although in perusing them I have not found any particular points not already touched on to which I could venture to draw your Lordship's attention.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's most obedient, humble servant,

The Right Hon.
Lord Viscount Palmerston, K. B.

Royaume de WURTEMBERG.

Les lois commandent de donner du secours au pauvres de la part de l'état en cas que les bienfaissances volontaires des particuliers ne suffisent pas; mais ces lois sont modifiées en ce que l'état lui-même ne donne que peu de contributions, et que chaque commune est chargée du secours principal.

Par conséquent les lois s'occupent de quatre points principaux:—1. Des Fondations.—2. De la Caisse des Pauvres.—3. Des Obligations des Communes;—et 4. Des Contributions de la part du Gouvernement données comme exception.

D'après Memminger, (1829, 2 livraison, pages 311-442) il y a en Wurtemberg 64,896 pauvres, dont 22,863 sont capables du travail, 14,142 ne le sont qu'en partie, 11,044 ne sont point du tout capables, et 16,848 sont enfans au-dessous de 14 ans.

FONDATIONS.

Ceux qui peuvent prétendre au bienfaits des fondations sont,

1°. Des personnes tout-à-fait pauvres, de vieilles personnes ou malades, ceux qui sont incapables du travail et qui sont de bonne renommée.

2°. Les Haus-Armen, qui malgré leur travail ne gagnent pas le pain nécessaire à leur famille. Ces secours ne sont pas donnés en argent, mais, a. en leur procurant occasion pour le travail; b. en payant pour eux leur loyer; c. en payant le maître d'école pour leurs enfans. En général on se borne à ne pas donner le secours comme don, mais en échange de quelque service ou travail.

3°. Les pauvres ouvriers, ou possesseurs de terres, (qui, un jour, peuvent peut-être rendre ce qu'on leur avait donné) reçoivent de l'argent.

4°. En cas de famine, on donne de l'argent aux possesseurs de terres appauvris, en forme d'emprunt.

Appendix (F.)

Les revenus de cette caisse sont ou perpétuels ou casuels. Les premiers se dérivent des épargnes faites par l'abolition du culte catholique dans les églises, (comme lampes, bougies, feu éternel, &c.) et des intérêts du capital fait par des vœux ou d'autres manières. Les revenus casuels viennent de l'argent donné comme offrandes pendant le sermon, par des contributions volontaires des habitants, de certaines amendes, e. g. des amendes imposées par le Kirchen-Couvent (magistrats ecclésiastiques et laïques), des amendes de certains ouvriers, nommément le tiers de toutes les amendes levées sur les aubergistes, de la quatrième partie de la taxe levée sur les chiens, de l'argent donné pour la cloche de deuil, pour les voitures de deuil, enfin de quelques taxes que le gouvernement a abandonnées aux pauvres.

OBLIGATIONS des COMMUNES.

En cas que ni les fondations ni le Pium Corpus ne suffisent, la Commune est obligée de contribuer, et il est ordinaire que la Commune ne donne pas une plus grande somme que le Pium Corpus.

Si la Commune ne peut pas assez donner, ou qu'elle a déjà donné autant que le Pium Corpus, et que tout est pourtant insuffisant, c'est l'Oberamt entier qui doit donner du secours, en se réservant le droit de redemander son argent quand ceux qui l'ont reçu seront en état de le redonner.

SECOURS donné par le GOUVERNEMENT.

1.—842.	1.—1,026.	1.—The village of Neckar Rems counts in this year 287 inhabitants.	1.—1,608.
2.—In corn land 44 acres; vineyards, 150; meadows, 188, chiefly planted with trees.	2.—In vineyards 330 acres, meadows with trees 320, corn land 150.	2.—1,125 acres, of which $\frac{1}{2}$ are good, $\frac{1}{2}$ middling, $\frac{1}{2}$ very bad; meadows and garden land, above the average quality of vineyards; 168 acres, half of which are rooted up owing to unfavourable produce: woodland, 60 acres, inferior; 25 acres not fit for cultivation.	2.—1,800 corn land, & 120 in meadow.
3.—The whole of the lands belong to the inhabitants of the place.	3.—None.	3.—There are no lands here of that kind. Of the above, 50 acres of corn land and 95 acres of vineyard are the property of persons not living within the parish.	3.—All the above-mentioned land belongs to the community. The Crown possesses 72 acres of woodland.
4.—The number needing assistance has, since 1829, remained the same: viz. 1 infirm person receives yearly 36 fl. and two others weekly 12 sr. Besides this, about 10 fl. yearly is paid for medicine.	4.—In 1829 there were 22 persons; in 1830 & 1831, 25 persons; in 1832, 26 persons. All these were only poor people, and not sick or infirm.	4.—From eight to ten persons each year.	4.—In 1829, 10 persons, 1830, 9 " 1831, 7 " 1832, 6 "
5.—See 4.	5.—In each year 24 fl. 15 sr. In 1832, however, there was an extra outlay of 20 fl. Besides this, a blind man received 15 sr. and an old man 6 sr. weekly.	5.—The expenses for them annually amounted to about 125 fl. or 150 fl. for poor children, which are boarded by country people; 100 fl. for the sick and infirm; there remain 150 fl.	5.—Annual average expense, 300 fl.
6.—All in money, with a small portion of wood.	6.—In money. In the winter of 1829, two cords of wood were distributed.	6.—The relief was all given them in money.	6.—All in money.
7.—It is levied on the burghers.	7.—The parish chest furnishes it.	7.—It is levied on the inhabitants, in conjunction with the taxes, under the name of common rates.	7.—It is levied as rates on the community.
8.—The charitable endowments amount to 800 fl. The interest of which, however, is never employed for the support of the poor, as many other demands must be satisfied.	8.—None.	8.—The parish possesses a fund of 5,000 fl. in rents, besides a mill, a pasturage for sheep; the rent of which, deducting expenses for repair, amounts to 1,000 fl.	8.—There are 2,000 fl. of charitable endowments, but the community owes about the same sum.
9.—	9.—The Parish has a house in which poor people dwell gratis; and 15 or 20 children are yearly instructed in the public school, at the expense of 1 fl. per child.	9.—There is a school here.	9.—Sick or infirm persons are put out to nurse. There exists a parish school.
10.—They amount to 593 fl.	10.—945 fl.	10.—They are farmed out to private persons at the rate of the corn price, and amount to about 1,000 fl. The tithes of wine are farmed to the proprietors, and are paid at the rate of 1 fl. 36 sr. per acre.	10.—About 700 bushels of corn.
11.—The Crown receives 460 fl. ; the clergyman 133 fl.	11.—The Crown receives 900 fl. ; the clergyman 45 fl.	11.—To the Domain-office.	11.—
12.—The greater part are redeemed. Those of fruit only, received by the clergyman, amounting as above to 133 fl. , are paid in kind.	12.—They are redeemed.	12.—They are farmed. (See Article 10.)	12.—They may be commuted.
13.—On fruit only. (See 11.)	13.—On hay.	13.—From the produce of the ground, as field beans, cabbage, maize, rapeseed, oil plants, potatoes, clover, turnips, hemp and fruit.	13.—Potatoes, field beans, clover, and for small tithes, 21 florins.
14.—None. (See 10.)	14.—None.	14.—	14.—
15.—Yes.	15.—They receive assistance according to their circumstances.	15.—In providing for the poor the number of their families, as well as their degree of poverty and situation, is considered.	15.—Yes.
16.—It has remained the same. (See 4.)	16.—It has increased. (See 4.)	Note.—The regulations of this place (Neckar Rems) are very oppressive to the inhabitants, owing to the neighbouring road, of 1,200 rods, which is to be maintained by the village, and sometimes great damage arises from the Neckar and Rems overflowing, the costs of which must be covered by a tax laid on the inhabitants. The above is certified by the Bailiff. Wagner.
17.—Beisitzers have no part in the property of the commune. They must, however, help to bear its expenses, and only in case of real necessity have they any claim on assistance.	N.B.—The capital of charitable endowments on the parish amounts to 310 fl. The interest of this, viz. 15 fl. 30 sr. , is applied to the support of poor sick.

En 1832, on institua à cause du manque de vivres dans la classe indigente un établissement de soupes à la Rumfort au moyen des contributions des particuliers. Cette institution dura depuis le 15 Juin jusqu'au 25 Août, et on y distribua chaque jour jusqu'à 350 portions. La dépense de cette institution monta à peu près à f. 1,000. Des dames se chargèrent volontairement et sans rétribution de la surveillance dans la cuisine, et quelques bourgeois assistèrent à la distribution des portions pour y maintenir l'ordre. La bienveillance particulière est encore grande. Une association de dames se charge de distribuer leurs contributions à des indigents particuliers autant que possible en rapport avec leurs besoins. Une partie des secours pour les pauvres est employée principalement pour payer l'apprentissage de jeunes artisans et pour entretenir une école de couture, de tricotage et d'industrie, qui sont fréquentées gratis.

WEINSBERG.

REGLEMENTS concernant l'Etablissement pour les Soins et l'Occupation des Pauvres et des Malades.

PREFACE.

L'ANCIENNE manière de pourvoir aux besoins des pauvres par des aumônes hebdomadaires en argent et en pain, et par des habillements, en les logeant dans une habitation resserrée, en payant aux uns leur loyer, aux autres leurs pensions, a entraîné trop d'abus et a par cela même peu répondu à son but. En effet on manquait de la surveillance nécessaire sur une classe d'hommes en grande partie si dérégles et si corrompus. On n'avoit point fourni d'occupation à ceux qui étoient encore en état de travailler, et on n'avoit pu en aucune façon réprimer la mendicité et le vice.

Cela engagea le magistrat à fonder un nouvel établissement pour donner des soins aux pauvres et pour les occuper. Pour parvenir à ce but on acheta, monta et agrandit l'ancienne fabrique de Kleinknecht. Mais comme les arrêts du 5 Décembre 1828, et 9 Janvier 1829, d'après l'expérience acquise jusqu'à ce jour, n'ont pas été trouvés satisfaisants sous plusieurs rapports, on a arrêté les Règlements suivants.

I.—But de l'Etablissement.

ART. 1.—De former une habitation commune pour tous ceux qui ont besoin d'assistance, qu'ils soient malades ou en santé, et de leur donner des secours pour tout ce qui leur est nécessaire.

ART. 2.—De leur donner autant que possible de l'occupation selon leur plus ou moins grande capacité de travail.

ART. 3.—D'accorder cette occupation non seulement à ceux qui la recherchent volontairement, mais même d'obliger à travailler des hommes sans fortune et qui n'ont pas de métier fixe, mais qui veulent vivre aux dépens d'autrui, du moins tant qu'ils n'entrent pas au service d'une famille de bonne réputation.

On les oblige à travailler pour débarrasser la société de tout mendiant. Les secours publics qu'on leur donne ne répondent pas seulement à leur but, mais garantissent encore la société des mauvaises actions, qu'ils pourroient commettre.

Cet établissement dirigé avec zèle, assiduité et circonspection, donnera un exemple frappant comment dans la société on se débarrasse du mal le plus grand et le plus commun parmi les hommes.

D'après les premières intentions des magistrats on auroit dû joindre à cet établissement un autre institut destiné à l'éducation et aux soins à donner aux enfants pauvres. Mais comme pour f. 20 à f. 28 on peut mettre ces enfants en pensions chez des particuliers, ce qu'on ne pourroit pas faire à meilleur marché dans un institut, on n'a pas exécuté ce plan. D'ailleurs il ne peut pas l'être à cause du manque de fonds et de la trop grande occupation du magistrat.

ART. 4.—D'établir une chambre pour l'habitation de petits enfants qui ne peuvent encore aller à l'école et qui appartiennent à des pauvres qui travaillent à la journée; on leur a assignés une ou trois femmes de la maison de charité qui jouissent de la meilleure réputation, pour surveiller leur propreté et pour les servir. Ces personnes sont sous la direction de la femme du directeur.

ART. 5.—D'y joindre aussitôt que la place le permettra l'école d'industrie des femmes, qui en a été séparée jusqu'à présent, dans laquelle on enseigne à coudre, à tricoter, à filer simple et double. On chargera en outre l'institutrice de surveiller en même temps les enfants qui sont en état de recevoir des leçons.

II.—Conditions d'Admission.(a.) Des Volontaires.

ART. 6.—Les personnes qui ont besoin d'assistance sont à peu d'exceptions près des hommes qui autrefois ont été livrés au vice, ou qui ont été ou trop étourdis ou incapables de faire des épargnes et qui sont maintenant hors d'état de gagner leur vie. Les anciens secours consistoient, à payer leur loyer, à leur fournir du bois, en des aumônes hebdomadaires, en argent et en pain; mais on ne pouvoit pas penser avec confiance que ces personnes employaient bien ces dons. C'est pourquoi on n'admet dans cette maison de charité que des personnes dignes d'assistance; on les habille et les nourrit; car des gens honnêtes, même avec peu de talents, peuvent toujours gagner leur vie dans ce pays.

Cette admission a lieu à la demande des indigens, qui à cause de la faiblesse de l'âge, de l'incapacité de travail, ne sont plus en état de se nourrir.

ART. 7.—La direction de l'établissement ainsi que le président du comité de fondation, s'ils sont pleinement persuadés de la nécessité, peuvent ordonner l'admission des gens pauvres. Ceux-ci doivent s'engager par écrit à suivre les lois de l'établissement. Cette admission doit toujours être confirmée dans la prochaine séance du comité de fondation. Les mêmes conditions ont lieu pour l'admission des malades qui n'ont pas le moyen de se guérir et de se soigner.

ART. 8.—Mais

ART. 8.—Mais dans aucun cas cette maison de charité ne doit servir de demeure périodique à des gens qui ne sont pas accoutumés à un métier fixe, ou qui ne veulent pas rester chez des maîtres, ni à des personnes qui voudroient y séjourner en hiver, temps où les affaires ordinaires languissent, ou qui en été, quand elles ont gagné quelque argent dans une journée, passent les deux jours suivants à ne rien faire et à vivre dans le libertinage.

ART. 9.—Quiconque donc est une fois admis entre dans l'établissement avec tout ce qu'il possède, et s'engage à y travailler et à y rester toujours.

(b.) Des Obligés.

ART. 10.—Dans tous les cas les volontaires aussi bien que ceux qu'on y force du moment qu'ils sont regus sont regardés comme pauvres, et ce qu'ils possèdent entre dans la caisse de fondation.

ART. 11.—Dans le cas d'une conduite extraordinairement bonne de la part d'un pauvre et si l'on peut espérer avec fondement qu'il pourra se nourrir par lui-même, ou si l veut entrer au service d'une famille de bonne réputation, le conseil de fondation peut lui permettre de sortir de l'institut. Dans ce cas la fortune d'un tel individu lui est restituée, en retenant à des personnes capables de travail f. 58, et à celles qui en sont incapables f. 88 ; aux malades on retient autant qu'ils ont dépensé pendant leur séjour dans l'institut.

Tous les gens dès l'âge de 14 ans, qui ne peuvent pas prouver qu'ils sont au service d'une honnête famille, sont forcés d'y travailler.

ART. 12.—Toutes les grandes personnes des deux sexes qui sont hors d'état de se nourrir par eux-mêmes ni par le produit de leurs mains, et qui tombent à la charge des autres, peuvent y être admises. Elles doivent pourtant, avant que la police puisse exiger leur admission, avoir été punies trois fois, ou pour avoir mendié ou maraudé.

ART. 13.—Les grandes personnes non mariées qui n'ont que peu ou point de fortune, qui ne s'adonnent pas à un métier fixe, et qui n'entrent pas en service, on doit les y exhorter et leur donner un terme de 4 semaines.

Quand ce temps est écoulé on devra leur laisser encore quatre semaines en les menaçant de les punir. Après que ce délai se sera encore passé sans fruit, et si la personne ne demande pas volontairement l'admission dans l'institut, elle est mise en prison pour 36 heures ; après cela on accorde à l'individu encore 14 jours pour embrasser une vocation fixe, sous peine d'être enfermé pour trois jours ; si cette peine lui est infligée de nouveau ou lui donne encore huit jours. Quand ce temps est écoulé, et s'il ne s'est pas encore décidé à embrasser un métier, il entre à la maison de charité, où il est obligé de travailler aussi long temps qu'une famille honnête ne le prend pas en service.

ART. 14.—Dans le cas où des parents négligent l'éducation de leurs enfants au point que le magistrat soit obligé d'y pourvoir, les parents sont obligés d'en payer la pension selon leurs moyens. Si les parents veulent se soustraire à payer cette pension, ils peuvent être forcés à servir dans la maison de charité d'après la décision du comité de fondation.

ART. 15.—Pour des malades ou des estropiés qui faute de moyens sont soustraits par la police à la vue du public, pour les empêcher de nuire et d'infecter la société.

ART. 16.—On doit aussi admettre dans cet institut autant que la place le permet des personnes d'autres communes, contre une rétribution qui, pour celles qui peuvent encore travailler, ne doit pas surmonter f. 58, et pour les malades f. 88.

III.—Nourriture, Habillement, et Entretien complet.

Dès l'admission dans l'institut chaque personne doit recevoir toutes les choses qui lui sont nécessaires.

ART. 17.—Les personnes en santé des deux sexes qui sont occupées dans la maison reçoivent chaque jour leur nourriture d'après le règlement de la cuisine ; voy. le Protocole du 5 Déc. 1828, § 95, feuille 1286, art. 8.

Le matin des aliments froids, à midi et le soir une nourriture chaude, chaque fois une portion de $1\frac{1}{2}$ chopines et $\frac{3}{4}$ livres de pain par jour.

Mais quand elles travaillent sur la route ou à la campagne d'après les arrêtés du comité de fondation du 4 Juin 1830, § 16, outre les aliments mentionnés ci-dessus elles auront au lieu de $\frac{3}{4}$ livre de pain, à compter de la St. Martin à la St. George, chaque jour $1\frac{1}{4}$ livres de pain ; et de la St. George à la St. Martin, $1\frac{1}{2}$ livres de pain.

Les malades reçoivent trois fois par jour de la nourriture chaude et plus facile à digérer, selon leurs besoins et l'ordonnance du médecin ; voy. la Conclusion du 5 Déc. 1828.

ART. 18.—L'habillement, si celui que l'individu porte à son admission ne suffit pas, la direction de fondation lui donne le nécessaire. Il consiste en été en un habit de toile et en hiver en drap, taillé également, blanc ou gris, pour qu'on puisse y distinguer les cols et les parements noirs.

ART. 19.—Les personnes en santé couchent dans des lits fournis de matelats, de draps de lit, et de couvertures de laine ; les malades couchent dans des lits de plume.

IV.—Travaux dans l'Intérieur et à l'Extérieur de la Maison.

Principalement pour les hommes, si les femmes sont incapables de les supporter, les travaux suivant ont été votés et admis.

ART. 20.—1. De travailler sur les routes :

(a.) sur la route de Heilbronn.

(b.) ditto Ellhofen.

(c.) sur les routes menant à Erlenbach autour de la ville et vers la maison de chasse.

2. En travail au service commun des propriétaires de terres, dont ceux-ci ne s'acquittent qu'en payant f. 1 par an, les services consistent dans l'entretien et la réparation des routes qui sont dans la banlieue, et desornières.

3. En différents travaux de construction sur des terres appartenant à la ville, et des travaux dans les forêts ; en rassemblant des semences de jeunes arbres pour améliorer les forêts, sous la direction d'un forestier.

4. En journées, pour les quelles on a à payer à la caisse de fondation, pour un homme - - - 12 f.

si l'établissement fournit la nourriture.

Si l'individu n'est pas entretenu par l'établissement, on ne paye que la moitié.

ART. 21.—Les ouvrages particuliers des femmes consistent —

(a.) à blanchir la toile.

(b.) à conduire les oies dehors de la ville dans leur étable.

(c.) à nettoyer les places publiques.

ART. 22.—Les ouvrages dans la maison consistent —

(a.) pour les hommes : à fendre du bois, à apprêter de l'osier, et en d'autres occupations accessoires.

(b.) pour les femmes : à filer, tricoter, et en des occupations domestiques au service des habitants.

V.—Fondation de la Maison de Charité.

Pour atteindre le but mentionné,—

ART. 23.—La caisse de fondation qui jusqu'à présent avoit à pourvoir au soulagement des pauvres, fournit à tous les besoins de la maison par un nouvel arrangement.

La dépense pour les pauvres et les indigens montoit autrefois à f. 1,200 jusqu'à f. 1,300 par an, sans réprimer la mendicité ni le vice ; et cette somme depuis quelque temps ne suffisoit plus, à cause des demandes qui se multiplioient.

ART. 24.—La commune par le (premier) décret du 5 Déc. 1828, a été jugée obligée de fournir les contributions nécessaires.

On a réuni la place du surveillant de l'institut avec celle de l'ouvrier maçon, et ainsi comme il ne perçoit de la caisse de la ville que la paie de la première charge, la seconde ne coute plus rien à la caisse de fondation. Dans cette caisse entrent de plus,—

Ce que produit la blanchisserie de drap par décret du 27 Février 1829, art. 65, et 7 Mai 1830, art. 107. Pour profiter de ce blanchiment on doit payer $\frac{1}{2}$ kreutzer pour chaque aune de toile.

(c.) Tout ce que les habitants de la maison de charité gagnent par les occupations mentionnées, art. 20, sous N° 1 & 4. Cela s'est monté depuis le 1 Juillet 1829 à 1830 à f. 242. 46.

ART. 25.—Le nombre des habitants de la maison de charité, s'augmentant toujours, laisse espérer que tous les ouvrages pour l'entretien des routes, des ponts du rivage, pourront être faits par eux. Ces ouvrages ont été faits autrefois par les propriétaire de terres de la commune, et ils ont maintenant à payer pour cela f. 1 par famille d'après le décret du 23 Juillet 1830, article 211.

VI.—Devoirs du Surveillant et du Pourvoyeur, et Règlements pour sa Conduite.

ART. 26.—Le surveillant, qui fournit en même temps la nourriture, est le vigneron Charles Kummel de Ys,* et comme il est outre cela ouvrier maçon il tire la paie de cet emploi de la caisse de la ville en —

Argent	-	-	-	f. 103
Froment	-	-	-	5 boisseaux
Seigle	-	-	-	1 boisseau
Bois	-	-	-	2 toises.

Outre

Outre cela on lui a accordé par décret du 3 Avril 1829, art. 105, pour augmenter son zèle, un bénéfice ce que gagnent les habitants de la maison de charité, de manière qu'il reçoit - - - des premiers f. 100 - - - 3 kreutzer par florin.

„ seconds d^{ts} - - - 6 d^t d^t.

et ainsi de chaque centaine de florins 3 kreutzer de plus.

Mais il a à partager le profit des troisièmes f. 100 avec l'officier de police, qui emploie une grande partie de son temps pour l'institut.

ART. 27.—Le surveillant a outre la direction des occupations ci-dessus N° IV. art. 20 & 21, à faire les affaires dont le magistrat trouvera bon de le charger. Si les habitants de la maison de charité ne suffisent pas à ce travail, il doit demander à la commission des bâtiments des coupables ou d'autres personnes, et suivre les ordonnances de la commission des bâtiments et de l'établissement.

ART. 28.—Il est de plus de son devoir d'annoncer à la commission des bâtiments tout ce qu'il trouve de gâté aux fontaines, ponts, sentiers, indicateurs de chemin, ou autres objets publics, et ce qu'il ne peut pas réparer lui-même ou ses ouvriers. Si après cette annonce la réparation de la faute n'a pas lieu en 24 heures, il doit en informer le président de la ville.

ART. 29.—D'après le contrat du 1 Janvier 1829, il a à pourvoir à la nourriture ou moins d'après la mesure; comme cela est prescrit N° III. art. 17, et le règlement ci-joint. Il doit de plus se soumettre à tout nouvel ordre qui lui sera donné dans la suite tant qu'il ne lui cause pas de dépenses.

ART. 30.—Comme premier et unique surveillant de la maison, il doit faire sévèrement observer l'ordre et la propreté tant du corps que du linge, des habillements, des appartements et des lits des personnes.

ART. 31.—Le surveillant doit fixer, d'après la saison et la santé des personnes, l'heure de leur lever, de leur coucher et de leurs repas, et se diriger ponctuellement d'après la montre; mais de manière qu'au milieu de l'été elles ne commencent pas à travailler avant 4½ heures, et au milieu de l'hiver pas avant 7½ heures. En hiver elles ne doivent pas quitter leurs affaires avant 5 heures, ni en été avant 7 heures. Le diner ne doit pas prendre pas d'une heure, et le souper d'une demi heure.

ART. 32.—Le surveillant a toujours à surveiller les personnes et leurs travaux; il ne doit jamais permettre à quelqu'un de s'éloigner de la maison ou des ouvrages de la campagne, et empêcher toute fréquentation avec les habitants de la ville.

De plus, il aura soin de faire attention que personne ne soit hors de la maison pendant la nuit, et visiter les travaux, sinon toutes les heures, au moins chaque jour.

ART. 33.—Pour empêcher toute indécence, il a été défendu par décret du Juin 1829, à tous les habitants, sous peine d'une amende de f. 3. 15, de leur donner à manger ou à boire, ou de leur accorder une retraite sans une permission spéciale. Comme toutes les personnes admises dans l'institut ont assez sous tous les rapports, et comme tout le monde connoit cette ordonnance, ainsi que les personnes par leur habillement particulier, on publiera de nouveau cet ordre, avec la remarque que tous ceux qui agiront contre le règlement seront punis d'après les lois.

ART. 34.—Le surveillant a l'ordre de se comporter d'une manière décente, bienveillante et bienfaisante envers les pauvres, et de les engager autant que possible à une vie irréprochable et en rapport avec l'ordre qui règne dans la maison. Mais envers des personnes vicieuses et incorrigibles il doit se montrer sévère.

Pour entretenir l'ordre et l'obéissance parmi les gens corrompus, et pour encourager les honnêtes gens, on a décrété comme suit.

VII.—Encouragements et Récompenses.

ART. 35.—Le surveillant doit favoriser tous ceux qui se signalent par une conduite régulière et louable, en leur donnant de la liberté les Dimanches et les fêtes, et en les employant à des occupations qui demandent de la confiance. De telles personnes doivent autant que possible être aussi favorisées à la table, et outre cela on doit les employer particulièrement à surveiller les autres. Si quelqu'un mérite une confiance particulière, on peut le charger d'une affaire fixe, sans le surveiller; comme, par exemple, des ouvrages pour entretenir les allées dans la cour du chateau "la Weibertreue."

ART. 36.—Régulièrement tous les jours de foire et de fête toutes les personnes admises doivent recevoir, outre leur nourriture ordinaire, ½ livre de viande, et les hommes 1 chopine, les femmes ½ chopine de vin, aux frais de la maison de charité. A ce but le vin est tiré gratis de la cave publique de la ville. On en excepte ceux qui depuis le dernier jour de foire ou de fête ont commis une faute d'insubordination ou une faute plus grave.

ART. 37.—Si une personne s'applique assez pour gagner plus d'argent par des journées qu'elle ne pourroit en gagner au service du comité de fondation; le surplus doit lui être laissé, comme épargnes. On a en cela principalement égard au choix du travail.

De ces épargnes que la caisse de fondation doit encaisser, on doit de temps en temps en remettre quelque chose entre les mains de cette personne pour son amusement, dans le cas qu'elle ne préfère pas de le mettre entièrement à part.

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.—
WURTEMBERG.

ART. 38.—Un homme admis dans cet institut qui s'est conduit pendant deux ans d'une manière irréprochable peut demander la permission d'en sortir, si un honnête citoyen s'engage à l'entretenir au moins un an.

VIII.—Punitions.

ART. 39.—Pour mettre à l'ordre les personnes insubordonnées, paresseuses et livrées au vice, on a fixé des punitions, savoir,—

Les personnes chez les quelles on ne reconnoit plus la dignité de l'homme, et qui ne sont pas au-dessus des animaux, sont signalées chaque année par la commission de punition, et elles reçoivent en outre la bastonnade. Mais cette punition n'est pas employée si le manque de subordination envers le surveillant ou les fautes réitérées ne la rendent pas absolument nécessaire.

ART. 40.—Le surveillant qui leur donne en même temps la nourriture ne peut infliger d'autre punition que celle marquée sous la rubrique B.; c'est à dire, 24 heures d'emprisonnement. Mais dans le cas qu'un individu lui refusât l'obéissance ou qu'il agît malicieusement contre ses ordres, il peut lui faire donner jusqu'à 5 coups de bâton. Il doit inscrire chaque punition dans le Protocole destiné à cet usage, et l'annoncer à ses supérieurs. Il ne doit pas punir un individu plus de trois fois; pour des excès ultérieurs il doit en informer ses supérieurs.

IX.—Contrôle et Surveillance supérieure.(a.) Inspection de la Maison.

ART. 41.—L'officier de police est destiné à être le surveillant supérieur de toutes les actions et de tous les événements qui peuvent arriver dans l'établissement.

Celui-ci doit se rendre trois fois, ou au moins deux fois par jour, dans la maison de charité, assister le surveillant dans ses fonctions, et en cas de besoin le rapporter à ses devoirs.

Si la capacité et l'intelligence du surveillant ne suffit pas, il a la tenue des livres publics, savoir :

- (1.) Le Journal de l'entrée et de la sortie des personnes admises.
- (2.) La Liste des malades.
- (3.) Le Livre des affaires journalières.
- (4.) La Liste du gain.
- (5.) Le Protocole des délits et des punitions.

ART. 42.—L'officier de police a le droit de diminuer la nourriture pour deux jours à des gens qui par une faute ont mérité cette punition et de les emprisonner dans une chambre obscure. Car le surveillant outre les ces de besoins pressants où il peut faire donner quelques coups de bâton, ne peut pas ordonner une punition plus grave que 24 heures d'emprisonnement; punition que la plupart des admis préféreroit probablement au travail.

Mais il ne peut non plus infliger cette punition plus de trois fois au même individu, et en cas de réitération de l'insubordination ou d'autres fautes il en doit faire rapport à ses supérieurs.

ART. 43.—La direction des revenus et des dépenses, comme la nomination et la démission des individus, et toutes les affaires d'économie appartiennent au conseil de fondation. L'administration de l'établissement est jointe comme jusqu'à présent avec celle de fondation.

ART. 44.—Pour les punitions plus graves il existe une commission particulière de 8 membres, y compris le président. Cette commission est élue par le conseil de fondation, la direction du baillage, par la bourgeoisie d'après la majorité des voix. Les règlements de l'établissement, comme les noms de ceux qui ont été élus, doivent être présentés au gouvernement pour être confirmés.

ART. 45.—Il va sans dire, que le choix ne doit tomber que sur des personnes d'un caractère irréprochable, qui sont capables d'un jugement sain dans un cas de punition. On doit chercher principalement à engager des employés de l'état à entrer dans la commission.

ART. 46.—Le comité décide d'après la majorité sans appel, et pour la validité d'un arrêt a présence de 5 membres est nécessaire. En cas d'égalité de voix, le président qui est élu par la même commission a le droit de décider.

ART. 47.—La commission infligera pour le premier degré 8 jours d'emprisonnement, en conservant la nourriture ordinaire, et dans une chambre ordinaire de la ville.

Second degré;—La même punition dans une chambre obscure, avec une mauvaise couche, et enchaîné pour la moitié du temps.

Dans le cas, que les punitions soient infructueuses, la commission peut faire administrer 20 coups de bâton à un individu, dont le caractère corrompu ne laisse pas espérer d'amendement. Les crimes seront transférés au magistrat pour les punir.

Conclusion

Conclusion générale.

Comme l'intérêt pour le bien public, pour l'ordre et le devoir va toujours en croissant, le magistrat espère que chaque citoyen voudra bien concourir à atteindre le but que se propose cet institut. Il espère même que Messieurs les Ecclesiastiques uniront leurs efforts aux leurs pour retirer cette classe d'homme de leur ruine morale ; qu'ils les instruisent avec dignité ; qu'ils leur offrent les consolations de la religion ; qu'ils les exhortent à une conduite bonne et laborieuse, et qu'ils contribuent ainsi au beau et digne but de cet établissement.

Enclosure (L.)

ANSWERS to the QUERIES put by HIS BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S MINISTER.

1.—WHAT is the general value of the funded property belonging to the communes in the Ludwigsburg Amt ?

The value of landed property in the high bailiwick of Ludwigsburg, on an average, may be stated as follows :—For one acre of ground of the best quality, 400*f.*; middling, 200*f.* to 240*f.*; inferior, 100*f.* to 150*f.*; meadow, 200*f.* to 600*f.*; vineyards, 200*f.* to 1,000*f.*; gardens with fruit trees, 400*f.* to 1,000*f.*

2.—What is the estimated value of their landed property, including wood ?

An estimation of property, according to its selling price, does not exist ; on the other hand, the raw produce of the ground and soil, including woodland, is by the late register estimated at 310,671*f.* 16*sr.*; and the net proceeds, after deduction of the general and separate charges, rates and expenses for culture, at 289,671*f.*

3.—What is the number of inhabitants in the Ludwigsburg Amt ?

The number of inhabitants by the last census, in the year 1832, amounts to 29,068.

4.—What was the number of poor receiving relief from the communes in the years 1829, 1830, 1831 and 1832 ?

The number of the poor is, such as received a constant weekly or annual support, from July 1828–29, 362 ; 1829–30, 372 ; 1830–31, 376 ; 1831–32, 372. Such as received a temporary support only, by assistance in medical expenses, from the 1st of July 1828–29, 363 ; 1829–30, 422 ; 1830–31, 362 ; 1831–32, 371.

5.—As a principle, is food, raiment or fuel given to a single man who can work, or is it refused him?

As long as individual persons are able to work, and earn their maintenance, they receive no support from the commune; but if such a person has children to maintain, and the wages of his labour are absolutely insufficient, they receive assistance according to circumstances, and it in general consists in money, in towns especially; they likewise receive corn, raiment and wood.

6.—To a father of a family who is in full work, but who has no other means of maintaining his family than by his work, is the commune obliged to give assistance?

As long as a father of a family, though he does not possess a piece of ground, is, by his trade, or in general by his labour, able to maintain his family, the commune is not obliged to grant him any support.

7.—Is such assistance calculated according to the number of his small children?

The amount of the granted assistance is fixed by the magistrate of the place, and strictly regulated according to the want of the persons relieved, and in which the number of their families is always considered.

8.—If so, at what age does the commune consider the child able to assist its parent, and consequently cease to give this aid?

If children are received for board and education, it is generally granted them to the fourteenth year, as the legal time of leaving school; if the boy is to learn a trade, the commune besides pays a premium for his apprenticeship; but girls, from the time of their quitting school, in general receive no further support, as at that age they have to enter service, and thereby maintain themselves; this is also the case with boys when their apprenticeship is expired, and they are become journeymen. Boys who do not learn any trade, and devote themselves to agriculture, likewise receive no support from their fourteenth year.

9.—A person having the right of citizenship in the commune from birth or purchase, and receiving consequently a piece of ground to cultivate, is he entitled on account of an increasing family, to further assistance from the commune while in health and able to work?

In places where the citizens receive a piece of ground to enjoy as benefice, no addition to this is granted in consequence of an increasing family. Such a piece of ground is given to the rich, as well as to the poor citizens, without distinction of family situation, as the number of children, and the like; and he that is blessed with children, by no means acquires a greater right to the enjoyment of a larger lot of ground than is fixed by the commune for each citizen's share.

10. Or does he receive it only when sick?

It is a fixed maxim that the persons belonging to the commune claim support from it in cases of the utmost need only; as, for example, when by age, indisposition or infirmity he is no longer able to earn his maintenance.

11. If he receives aid in money from the commune, does he consequently forfeit his right to the ground he receives as citizen of the commune?

The enjoyment of that common share remains possession to every citizen during his lifetime, and after his death passes to the widow; it is not taken from him under any circumstances, even if at the same time the enjoyer receives public assistance, except if such a person must be entirely supported by the commune, and is received into a poor-house and fully maintained therein, in which case he ceases to be an active citizen, and thereby loses the enjoyment of his beneficium.

Subsequent Questions.

1. The number of the poor since 1828 at an average has not increased.
2. The citizen only has a claim to the enjoyment of civil benefits, whether that consists in ground or wood; but not so the beisitzer, who, according to local customs, is only entitled to take share of pasture ground where there is any.

Ludwigsburg, October 31st, 1833.

High Bailif Stump.

According to the inquiry I have made in three villages, I was informed that the proportion of the beisitzer to the citizens in some places is 5 or 6 to 100, and in others 12 at the most; at an average 9 beisitzer to 100 citizens.

Enclosure I.

I HAVE the honour to return to your Lordship's office, in compliance with Sir George Shee's circular Despatch to Sir Edward Disbrowe of the 30th of November last, a copy of the Questions proposed by the Poor Laws Commissioners as to the state of the poor in Wurtemberg, filled up according to the best information I have been enabled to procure.

In addition to this Return I enclose a voluminous Report furnished me by this Government on the subject, which enters into every detail, and contains much valuable information. It would have been a matter of much time and difficulty to have had it accurately translated here, and I have thought it better to leave such an undertaking to the discretion of the Commissioners. By each Question I have numbered the sections of the Report which bear upon it, in case a partial translation only should be deemed necessary.

The size of the Report is such that I take advantage of a private opportunity which has offered for transmitting it to England, although the translations of the dietaries and tables of money, weights, measures, &c. which I have been enabled to procure are not yet ready. They can easily be sent by post.

To the Right hon. Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Enclosure I.

VAGRANTS.

Question 1. To what extent, and under what form, does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer. The last census was taken in 1832, when there were 1,578,147 inhabitants. There has been no inquiry into the numbers of the poor since 1820, when a return was made of 64,896, of which number 4,645 were orphans, 13,389 were unmarried adults, and 15,154 poor families, consisting of 46,262 members.

Q. 2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—A. Begging is positively forbidden, under pain of imprisonment, and the most rigorous measures are taken, particularly in the towns, for preventing it. All strangers, on entering the kingdom, must show to the authorities on the frontier, a sum of at least 10 fl., with certificates that they are able to work at some trade, and are travelling for employment. If found begging, they are liable to be sent out of the kingdom at the expense of Government. If ill, they must be taken care of by the authorities of the place, and the expenses incurred are repaid by Government.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders? or, 2. boarded with individuals?—A. Never.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c. and in which they are set to work?—A. There are none for adults, but in many towns and villages there are schools of industry for children, where they are taught, but not clothed or fed.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—A. There exist none.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—A. For this purpose there is a commission appointed by Government, and there exists besides, throughout the kingdom, a charitable association, of which the central committee is at Stuttgard, and local committees in the principal towns, a part of whose object it is to find work for labourers out of employ, either by placing them, as opportunities occur, in their respective trades, or by giving them work at their own houses. The local authorities are every where bound to assist these endeavours to their utmost.

Q. 6. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—A. When a person can find no other employment, and comes to his parish for relief, he is by them employed on the roads, on the vineyards, in the forests, in draining, &c. as the case may be; but the parish only pays him according to its resources, &c. certainly less than he would obtain if otherwise employed.

Q. 7. To what extent, and under what regulations, are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families, at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—A. In every parish there is a sort of vestry, consisting of the clergyman, the overseer, and two or three of the inhabitants, chosen by vote. In great difficulties, such as a hard winter, famine, &c. they are empowered to give relief, either by selling provisions and wood under the market price, or by donations of them, as the case may require, and according again to the resources of the parish.

N. B.—The charitable association would also contribute relief.

Q. 8. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—A. All children throughout the kingdom, from the age of 6 to 14, when they are confirmed, go to school daily, in summer for about two hours, in winter longer; they are instructed in reading, writing, arithmetic and religion; the poor gratis. They are neither fed nor clothed. In some districts charitable funds exist for apprenticing children to the finer trades, when a sum of money is required with them. In trades requiring bodily labour, such as a carpenter, bricklayer, &c. not only apprentices pay no apprentice money, but they receive wages directly. The girls go to service.

Q. 9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—A. A man must support his wife and children, and if he dies, the grandfather, if he has the means, must support the grandchildren. Children must also support their parents, if able, and the latter in want. It may in general be remarked, that although there is no compulsion, it is considered a sort of moral duty for relations to assist each other.

Q. 10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—A. Persons of known respectability and good character receive loans in difficult moments from the association mentioned above, as also from various private charities that exist for the express purpose. Security is in general demanded, but not insisted on. The loan must be for actual relief, and not for purposes of speculation.

N. B.—It will be seen, from the general tenor of the Answers, that an able-bodied workman is always supposed to be able to obtain employment, and with a very little assistance he can maintain his family by his and their earnings.

88 to 93.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—A. In almost every village there is a poor-house, in which the impotent through age must be received, if they have no houses of their own. When no poor-house exists, a room is generally provided for the purpose.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—A. Not more than to the able-bodied (vide Destitute Able-bodied, Q. 7.) If they required more relief, their houses would be sold, and themselves taken into the poor-house or room.

87.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—A. Only when individuals agree to receive a sum of money for such board.

87.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—A. Where neither poor-house nor room exists, the parish may lodge its aged and impotent poor with all the inhabitants in rotation. The stay is longer or shorter with each, according to his means; this, however, is a case that rarely occurs.

33 to 38.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—A. Vide Destitute Able-bodied, Q. 9.

SICK.

88 to 97.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—A. In every bailiwick, indeed in almost every village, there is an hospital for the reception of the sick. Where such does not exist, a room at least must be provided when necessary.

82. 85.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—A. In every district there is an inspecting physician. Under him, in every bailiwick, there is another physician and assistant, appointed and paid by Government, a part of whose duty it is to visit the hospitals, and when necessary, the sick poor, at their own homes (gratis) within the bailiwick. They are allowed travelling expenses by Government. There is also in every bailiwick an apothecary, whose medicines are constantly inspected by the inspecting physician, who is bound to furnish medicines from 12½ to 25 per cent. cheaper to the poor. He can likewise never refuse to make up a prescription, if money is not sent with it, provided the prescribing physician certifies its urgency. Should the person be too poor eventually to pay, the parish becomes liable.

82. 85.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—A. Where there is no hospital, it will generally be found that the richer inhabitants send food from their tables to the sick poor; otherwise the parish must find it. (As to fuel, &c. vide Destitute Able-bodied, Q. 7.)

85 & 88 to 97.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—A. There are two public lying-in establishments, one in the Catherine Hospital at Stuttgart, the other in the Clinicum at Tübingen. In the former the poor women of Stuttgart alone are received gratis; others must pay themselves, or by their parish, 10 kr. daily. They are received 14 days before the expected time of their confinement. In Tübingen the poor women of the whole kingdom are received gratis three weeks before. They must be furnished with certificates of poverty from their parish, and that in case of mother's death, the parish will send for and support the child. Poor seldom come to these establishments, as in every village there must be a midwife, who has undergone a regular examination (educated at the above establishments, gratis.) It is besides a particular instruction to the police, to see that poor women are properly attended to in their confinement.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—A. Two hospitals; one at Stuttgart, where their own poor alone received gratis; others must pay by themselves or parish 24 kr. daily. The other in Tübingen, where poor, with certificate of poverty, are received, supplied with medicine, operated operated on, &c. gratis. At the medicinal springs of Bol and Wildbad, there are establishments for the poor, where, with proper certificates, they are taken in gratis for 24 days, or what is called a cure. If they stay longer, they or their parishes must pay a small sum. In every parish there must be proper nurses appointed for the sick; the police to see to it. There are also a great many private associations among labourers and artisans, for laying by a part of their wages as a sick fund.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

Q. 1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—A. The mother must keep the child till its 14th year. The father must pay towards its support according to his means. When the father dies and has no legitimate children, the illegitimate inherit one-sixth of what the legitimate would have had. The mother's property is inherited equally by both. 1. 6, 7. 33 to 38. 48.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—A. Relations that inherit from the parents are bound to contribute towards the support of illegitimate children.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—A. During the life of the father they are not received into any public institution; but there exist four private charitable associations in the kingdom for their relief. 60 to 66.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

	ORPHANS.	FOUNDINGS.	DESERTED CHILDREN, whose Parents are known.
Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they taken into establishments for their reception?—	A. Two orphan-houses, one at Stuttgart, one at Wiengarten, for 275 children; received in their seventh year; kept till about 14th; then apprenticed or sent to service. Parishes which send an orphan to these institutions bound to provide for it in the trade in which it may be instructed.	-- There are no establishments for their reception, but they are received under same conditions as orphans into the orphan-houses.	-- Sixty received into the establishment at Wiengarten mentioned under "Orphans."	59.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders?—A. Never. 59.

Q. 6. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—A. From 100 to 200, who appear not to have abilities sufficient to get on in trade, are sent by the above-mentioned establishments to respectable families in the country who may be willing to receive them. These families receive from 30 to 40 florins yearly for their support, and the clergyman of the parish is bound to see that such children are not over-worked or ill-used. 33 to 38.

Q. 7. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—A. Vide Destitute Able-bodied, Q. 9.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

	CRIPPLES.	DEAF and DUMB, and BLIND.
Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?—	A. One in Canstadt, to which Government contributes, on condition that a certain number of poor are received therein; but parish must also pay a small sum with any poor they may send. A rare case.	-- One in Gmund. Poor, when neither parish nor relations can pay, received gratis; certificate of poverty required; must have passed their 6th but not entered their 12th year; must have been inoculated or vaccinated, and have certificates that no malady stands in the way of their learning. Allowed to remain six years, but sent away sooner if they show inaptitude to learn. For the blind there is likewise a private charity in Stuttgart.	60 to 66. 68. 88 to 97.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders?—A. Never. 59 to 87.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—A. Only when individuals consent to it, and receive a yearly sum for their support; they are then bound to work as much as they are able. 59 to 87.

33 to 38.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Vide Destitute Able-bodied, Q. 9.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

		IDIOTS.	LUNATICS.
88 to 97.	Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?—	A. There exist none	-- There are two, one at Zweifallen, where desperate cases are confined; one at Win-nenthal, where persons whom there are hopes of curing are sent. Government pays a large sum to each; but all received therein must pay from 125 to 230 florins yearly. In every town there must be a strait waistcoat.
59 to 87.	Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders?—	A. Never - -	-- Never.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

100. Q. 1. You are requested to state whether the receipt or the expectation of relief appears to produce any and what effect on the industry of the labourers? 2. On their frugality?—
A. Children who have been brought up at any of the above-mentioned institutions generally turn out better than others; and it may be in general remarked, that there is a great aversion among common people to seeking relief from their parishes.
227. Q. 3. On the age at which they marry?—A. Vide infra, Labourers, Q. 23.
100. Q. 4. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—
A. Children who have been educated in charities are, on quitting them, always well received by their relations; but able persons who have been upon their parishes for relief are always more or less shunned; so great is the aversion to it, that it will almost always be found that a poor man's relations will assist him, provided he be of good character, rather than let him solicit relief.
- 42, 43, 44. 100, 101. Q. 5. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law Extracts.)—A. As labour of some kind or other is always demanded in return for relief, it is difficult to answer the question. Generally speaking, the parish price of labour is less than the labourer would obtain elsewhere. In the Woodlands the labourer is better off than the aged and sick that are in the poor-house; in the vine countries his condition is worse.

43. Q. 1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—
A. The best artisans are employed in the large towns, are fed and lodged by the master, and receive from one to two and a half florins weekly. Those in the smaller towns and villages are lodged, fed, and receive from 20 kr. to 1 fl.; when workmen are taken on extraordinary occasions by the day, they receive from 20 to 30 kr. and are fed. Farmers hire their servants by the year, feed and lodge them, and give them in the villages from 20 to 40 fl., in the towns from 50 to 60 fl. yearly wages.
43. Q. 2. Is piece-work general?—A. In the manufactures, and during harvest.
- 43, 44. Q. 3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A. About 150 fl., with the advantages of food and wood under the market-price in winter, as enumerated above.
- 42, 43, 44. Q. 4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different description, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—A. A labourer with a family pays for a house, if he has none of his own, from 10 to 20 fl. yearly; for each child that he sends to school, about 1 fl. The average expense of living may be put at from 40 to 50 fl. per head per annum.
43. 81. Q. 5. Is there any, and what, employment for women and children?—A. In the manufactures, of which, however, there are but few in the country; at home, spinning, knitting, lace-making, washing. They also go out by the day. They make wooden nails for shoemakers. In summer they glean, and at certain times of the year they collect wood in the forests.

Q. 6. What can women and children under 16 earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—A woman, from 42 kr. to 1 fl. 30 kr.; child, from 20 to 40 kr. In the manufactures, from 1 fl. 40 kr. to 2 fl. 30 kr., and from 1 fl. 12 kr. to 2 fl., without food. At home, employed as above stated.

43. 44. 87.

Q. 7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A. From 40 to 50 fl.: the children of these ages would be too much in the schools to earn much.

43. 44. 87.

Q. 8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—A. They could. In the morning, soup or potatoes and bread; dinner, vegetables or pudding; between dinner and supper, bread; supper, potatoes and milk, or soup; once or twice a week, meat. In the cold weather, the man would have a glass of inferior brandy before going to work in the morning. On Sundays, the man would have a little beer or wine, and the woman coffee, of which they are very fond.

Q. 9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—From 20 to 30 fl., if careful.

44.

Q. 10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—A. Almost all labourers possess, by purchase or inheritance, at least a garden, where they grow the vegetables they consume; say from half a morgen to a morgen.

3, 4. 76. 81.

Q. 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—A. Above two-thirds of the labouring population have houses or a part of a house of their own, either purchased or inherited.

42.

Q. 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—A. In villages, the value of a labourer's house is from 150 to 200 fl.; in small towns, from 200 to 400 fl.; in large, from 500 to 1,000 fl. The rent is calculated at five per cent. on the value of the house.

42.

Q. 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Seldom the case; the value of the rent varies from 8 to 20 fl. per morgen.

76. 81.

Q. 14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—A. 1 to 31 $\frac{1}{3}$.

Q. 15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—A. 1 to 27 $\frac{1}{10}$.

2.

Q. 16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—A. 1 to 147.

2.

Q. 17. The average number of children to a marriage?—A. 4 $\frac{3}{10}$.

2.

Q. 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—A. 1 illegitimate to 7 $\frac{1}{10}$ legitimate.

2.

Q. 19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—A. 34 $\frac{2}{3}$ to 100.

2.

Q. 20. Proportion of children that died before the end of their 10th year?—A. From the ages of 1 to 7, the proportion of deaths is 1 to 10; from 7 to 14, 1 to 45.

2.

Q. 21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—There exist no returns by which this question can be further answered.

2.

Q. 22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—A. Men, from 25 to 30; women, from 18 to 25.

2.

Q. 23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—A. No man allowed to marry till his 25th year, on account of his military duties, unless permission be especially obtained or purchased; at that age he must also obtain permission, which is granted on proving that he and his wife would have together sufficient to maintain a family, or to establish themselves; in large towns, say from 800 to 1,000 fl.; in smaller, from 400 to 500 fl.; in villages, 200 fl. They must not be persons of disorderly or dissolute lives, drunkards, under suspicion of crime, and they must not have received any assistance from their parish within the last three years.

2. 27.

Q. 24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—A. Unmarried men rarely save any thing; unmarried women, from 5 to 20 fl. yearly. Married, (vide Q. 9.)

44.

Q. 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—A. In savings banks, when they receive four per cent. for their deposit; there is one at Stuttgart, where five per cent. is given, and money allowed to accumulate at compound interest. Many buy land with their savings: there is great facility for doing this by instalments.

(TRANSLATION.)

GENERAL STATISTICAL NOTICES OF THE KINGDOM OF WURTEMBERG.

Rights of Citizenship.

§ 1. THE following persons are considered as belonging to the kingdom of Wurtemberg, (Wurtemberg citizens.)

A.) With regard to the kingdom of Bavaria, the grand duchy of Baden, the grand duchy of Hesse, and the principality of Hohen Zollern Sigmaringen, with which there exist special conventions on this subject,— aa.) All those whose father, or if they are illegitimate, whose mother, at the time of their birth, was connected with the state of Wurtemberg in the quality of a subject, or who have been expressly admitted as subjects without having been subsequently released from their obligations as subjects, or having acquired the rights of citizens elsewhere.

bb.) Those who are born of parents that have no settlement (homeless parents), and are accidentally within the territory of Wurtemberg, till they have acquired the rights of subjects in another state, by being expressly received as such, or who have married there with the license of the magistrates, or have resided with the connivance of the magistrates for 10 years together, or have at least carried on a trade on their own account.

cc.) Persons who are neither born in the territory of Wurtemberg nor have been received there as subjects, yet, on the other hand, after having given up their preceding civil relations, or otherwise, as having no settlement, have become more closely connected with the state of Wurtemberg by having married there with the consent of the magistrates, or by having been permitted to reside there for 10 years unnoticed, or by having carried on a trade on their own account.

dd.) If a vagrant happens to be born in one state, but has acquired in another the rights of a citizen, or has married there with permission of the magistrates, or by 10 years' residence and exercise of a trade has acquired a settlement, the latter state is to be considered as that which is bound in preference to receive him. If the right of citizenship in one state concurs with the marriage, or 10 years' residence, or exercise of a trade in another, the first of these relations is considered as decisive. If a person without a settlement has, with the permission of the magistrates, contracted marriage in one state, but after his marriage has been suffered during the term of 10 years as established or carrying on a trade, it is to be taken for granted that he must be retained in the latter. In the case of a vagrant, where none of these circumstances are applicable or provable, it is expected that the state in which he happens to be shall provisionally keep him.

ee.) Married women are considered as belonging to that state to which the husband belongs in consequence of any of the above-mentioned circumstances. Widows are treated according to the same principles; unless during their widowhood a change should take place by which they acquired a right of residence elsewhere, (another settlement.)

ff.) If there are among the members of a family without a settlement, children below the age of 14 years, or who otherwise, on account of the maintenance which they receive from the parents, cannot be separated from them, such children, without regard to the place where they happen to be born, are to be sent (verwiesen) to that state to which, in the case of legitimate children, the father, or of illegitimate, the mother, belongs; but if the mother is dead, and only the father living, the children are to follow the settlement (forum) of the latter.

gg.) If the subject of a state has by any action forfeited his civil rights without having acquired a settlement in another state, it is assumed that the state to which he had hitherto belonged cannot refuse to keep or again to receive him.

B.) With respect to other states with which no such treaty exists, the following are considered as belonging to Wurtemberg:—

aa.) Every one who can bring credible evidence that he has been received as a subject, or that his father, or if he is illegitimate, that his mother, at the time of his birth, was a subject of Wurtemberg, or of some territory since incorporated with the state of Wurtemberg, till it shall be proved that he, in the sequel, ceased to enjoy his inherited or acquired civil rights in Wurtemberg, and had gained a settlement elsewhere.

bb.) Even without a title to be considered as a subject founded as above, a settlement in Wurtemberg is granted to a person, not a subject of another state, who either—aaa.) Has resided for five years in the kingdom in an independent manner, or—bbb.) Is born in it and has not subsequently resided in a state of independence for five years in any other state.

cc.) If there should be in the same person a collision of several of the abovementioned grounds of settlement, they are decided according to the principles laid down under (a.)

Population, Marriages, Births, Deaths.

§ 2. According to the latest returns of 1st November 1832, the kingdom of Wurtemberg contains 1,578,147 inhabitants; viz. males below the age of 14 years, 240,730; above 14 years of age, 527,635; females under 14 years, 249,569; above 14 years, 560,213.

As according to the law a man must not marry, without a special dispensation, before his 25th year, the men in general do not marry before their 23d year; on an average, the men for the most part marry between the ages of 25 and 30, and the women between 18 and 25. Formerly, there were on an average about 11,000 marriages in a year, but from 1812 to 1822 only 9,851, which makes one marriage annually to 147 inhabitants. From 1822 to 1832, these notices are not found in the Population Returns. The total number of marriages was, on the 1st November 1832, 251,191, which, compared with the total amount of 1,578,147 inhabitants, gives on an average $6\frac{3}{10}$ persons, or $4\frac{3}{10}$ children, to one marriage. But as among these 1,578,147 inhabitants there is a considerable, though not accurately ascertained, number of independent bachelors, young women, widowers, widows and divorced persons, some with, some without children, the number of children to every marriage, as above stated, cannot be considered as very correct.

The births every year were, to the whole population, from 1812 to 1822, in the proportion of 1 to $27\frac{1}{4}$; from 1822 to 1832, as 1 to $27\frac{1}{10}$. The illegitimate were, on an average, from 1812 to 1822, as 1 to $8\frac{2}{3}$; from 1822 to 1832, as 1 to $7\frac{1}{10}$.

The deaths annually were, to the whole population, from 1812 to 1822, as one to $31\frac{1}{37}$; from 1822 to 1832, as 1 to $34\frac{2}{10}$. On an average of 10 years, the number of deaths of children under one year of age was $34\frac{2}{3}$ per hundred, that is, more than one-third; in several districts the mortality was even one-half. From the completion of the first year to the seventh, about one-tenth die, (likewise on an average of 10 years); from the completion of the seventh to the 14th year, the 45th part of the total of the children born. It cannot be ascertained from the Population Returns how many children die before attaining the 10th, and how many before attaining the 18th year.

Superficial Extent, and Landed Property.

§ 3. The whole superficial extent of the kingdom of Wurtemberg, amounts to 355 square German miles (about 8,000 English square miles.) On an average, therefore, there are 4,445 inhabitants to a German square mile; but in detail, the proportion of the population to the superficial extent, is very different in different parts of the country; for instance, in the district of Rentlingen and Kirchheim, also in the middle and lower valley of the Neckar, with the adjacent lateral valleys, especially the Kemsthal, we may reckon from 15,000 to 20,000 inhabitants to one German square mile; whereas about Ellwangen, in Upper Suabia, on the Alp and in the Black Forest, there are partly but 1,800 men to a square German mile. In private and public landed property the kingdom contains —

On an average, therefore, about two acres of cultivated land to one inhabitant.

Places of Abode; Means of Livelihood; Professions; Religion.

§ 4. The population of the kingdom inhabits 3,384 detached houses, 2,333 farms (Hofen), 1,878 hamlets, 1,575 villages, 175 country towns, 132 larger towns. The largest villages are Fellbach, with 2,572 inhabitants; Meyengen, with 3,609; Ehingen, with 4,584 inhabitants. The largest towns are Rentlingen, with 9,552; Ulm, with 14,079; Stuttgart (the capital, without the military), with 27,580 inhabitants.

With respect to trades and professions, there are among the inhabitants of the kingdom, — peasants and vine-dressers, 101,575; day-labourers, 41,913; citizens, 108,496; persons in office, 53,849, among whom, however, there are only 10,672 who have more than 300 florins annual income; without profession or office, and living on their property, 8,793. Among the citizens, there are, besides, many who are at the same time engaged in agriculture.

With respect to religion, there are, — Lutherans, 1,081,383; Reformed, 1,338; Catholics, 484,376; Jews, 10,670; Christian Sectarians, 380.

Political (Civil) and Ecclesiastical Divisions.

§ 5. In a political or civil sense, each city, town and village forms an independent community (corporation.) Detached hamlets and farms must join the community of the nearest place, or, if their local situation requires and allows it, form a community in themselves. The established rule is, that no community shall contain fewer than 500 inhabitants or 100 families. Every community in the kingdom must, besides, belong to one of the 64 bailiwicks into which the country is divided; and the communities united in such a bailiwick constitute a distinct corporation (Oberamts Körperschaft.)

The ecclesiastical division coincides for the most part with the civil; but as in many places persons of different religious persuasions live together, a civil community may often contain several ecclesiastical communities; likewise many towns, or hamlets, or small villages, villages may appertain in ecclesiastical matters to a different community from that to which they belong in civil or political respects.

WURTEMBERG.

Rights of Communes, Citizens and Non-freemen.

A.) § 6. The mere grant of protection or permission of a temporary residence gives no participation in the community of the place of abode. Only the citizen (§ 1.) is qualified to possess the rights of members of community in the kingdom; every foreigner to whom the competent authority has given the rights of citizenship, every Wurtemberg citizen without exception may, and in some cases, determined by the law, must be received by the authorities of the community concerned either as a burgher or a non-freeman.

B.) Every citizen, unless the law expressly makes an exception in his case, must belong to a community, either as a burgher or as a settled non-freeman. In a community composed of several places, every individual who belongs to one of these places as having a settlement is a burgher or a settled non-freeman of the whole community, and may as such fix his abode in any one of these places. The burgher of a community, still retaining his rights as a burgher, can acquire the rights of a burgher or a settled non-freeman in another community only for his own person, without affecting his wife or his children, whether born before or after his acquiring such right; or in case he should contemplate the removal of his family, retaining the previously enjoyed rights of a citizen or a settled non-freeman, only for his own person, not for his wife or children. The same rules are applicable to the settled non-freeman who, retaining his rights as such, will acquire the right of citizenship in another community; but he cannot obtain a second or further right as a non-freeman, unless by voluntary adoption, and then only to the extent above mentioned.

C.) The right of a burgher or a settled non-freeman descends to every legitimate child of the marriage in which the father lived at the time of the child's birth, or if he should have died before, in that place where, at the time of his death, he was a burgher or a settled non-freeman.

An exception takes place with respect to those members of a community who, after the promulgation of this law, have acquired the rights of members of two or more communities, as such can transmit to their children only one of these rights. Illegitimate children acquire by their birth the rights of burghers or of settled non-freemen in that community in which the mother possessed them at the time of their birth. If the parents afterwards marry, the child acquires the rights of a burgher or a settled non-freeman in that community to which his father belonged as such at the time of his marriage; and on the other hand, the rights of a burgher or a settled non-freeman, which he has acquired in the place of his mother's settlement, cease.

§ 7. An assignment of settlement can take place only in the case of the homeless (not settled), that is to say, such subjects of the state as do not belong to any certain community of the kingdom, either as burghers or settled non-freemen, by their birth or by virtue of special reception as such. Every subject of the state who is so situated may claim the assignment of a settlement in a certain community; and when the question is to provide a place of residence, or the necessary subsistence of a subject of the state, such assignment is made officially.

On these suppositions,—

A.) The homeless individual who has renounced the right of a citizen or settled non-freeman, acquired by birth or adoption, in consequence of emigration or any other cause, but has not actually obtained the rights of member of a community elsewhere, is assigned to that community to which he formerly belonged as a burgher or settled non-freeman.

B.) In the absence of such rights as a former member of a community, the homeless individual is assigned to the place in which he has lived independently for at least five years, and where two or more such places are united, to that place in which he resided the last five years.

C.) If this rule likewise cannot be applied, a settlement is given him in the place where the license of the magistrates for his marriage was granted.

D.) And if this rule cannot be applied, in the place of his birth, or in case of foundlings, in the place where they were found.

E.) Married women or widows, in whom none of the claims to a settlement enumerated under (A.) to (D.) are found, are assigned to that place to which their husband was, or, if he should be still alive, shall be assigned; and—

(F.) Those children of a homeless family who have none of the claims to a settlement enumerated under (A.) to (B.), are assigned to the community which has to receive their father, or, if they are illegitimate, their mother, that is to say, if these women or children are to be recognized as subjects of the state, according to the principles laid down above (§ 1.).

G.) If none of the preceding rules can be applied, the homeless individual is assigned to the place where found by the police.*

By the assignment, the rights of a settled non-freeman, with all the rights and obligations of the other settled non-freemen of the community (§ 6.), are acquired.

WURTEMBERG.

REGULATIONS RELATIVE TO THE POOR IN THE KINGDOM OF WURTEMBERG.

Authorities for the Management of the same.

§ 8. Respecting the authorities to whom the direction of the management of the poor in the kingdom of Wurtemberg is entrusted, the English Government has made no inquiry. They may therefore be passed over here, and the more so as their organization must be regulated in every state according to the peculiar circumstances of the organization of the other branches of the administration.

Funds for the support of the Poor.

§ 9. Many families in Wurtemberg have founded particular, and, in part, now very ancient establishments, for the support of poor members of those families.

In particular, however, every church and chapel in Wurtemberg had in the 14th century its own possessions and revenues (a Sacred Fund, as it was called), out of the amount of which not only was the church maintained, but something contributed for the poor. But besides this sacred fund, individual places, but especially towns, possessed already in very ancient times, particularly in the 14th century, also, endowments of their own, allotted chiefly to the distribution of alms and the maintenance of public poor-houses. But Duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg was the first who ordered, in the year 1536, on occasion of the Reformation, "That in every community all that the sacred fund, the church revenue, the Salve, the Brotherhood,* and the like, bring in, and all that can be obtained from glebe lands, from the lordships, towns and villages, for the benefit of the General Alms Fund, shall be united in one common treasury; and all that has hitherto been employed for masses, vigils, ever-burning light, wax and oil, in general all that can be spared from the pay of the offices of the church, and the schools, and the repairs of the church, shall be devoted to the advantage of the poor." Duke John Frederic renewed this, at least in part, in the new Ordinance of 1615, and commanded further, "That if the poor's fund† and hospital‡ in a place cannot be united, but must remain separate and apart; but the hospitals and sick houses might put something into the treasury for the daily maintenance of their poor, to contribute to the poor fund; and in general that the several institutions for the relief of the poor shall support each other."

Partly at the same time, partly in the sequel, other revenues were assigned by law to these poor funds, and many of them obtained subsequently additions from benefice money, inheritance, legacies and other voluntary contributions. Accordingly we still find in Wurtemberg, in almost every place, at least one such poor's fund, which in the villages is still usually called the sacred fund, and in small towns the poor's fund. In the more considerable towns there are for the most part two, three or more such separate funds under various denominations (the German names of which are here given.)

Besides these general local funds, there are many special local establishments for the poor; for instance, some schools of industry, some houses of education, most of the poor-houses, &c., and many local committees of the Charitable Union, with their own special funds. Here too we may reckon the local charitable funds belonging to the guilds, sick funds, insurance funds, &c.

§ 10. The bailiwick corporations, as such, have no funds specially allotted to the support of the poor; only the bailiwick of Stuttgart possesses a common poor fund, which first originated since the middle of the 18th century, chiefly from endowments and legacies. Besides this, some of the district boards of the Charitable Union have small funds, and there are also in some bailiwicks private endowments for the poor. There are besides in each bailiwick, not only in every place in which the funds of guilds of artisans are deposited, but in other places where the members of the guilds are more numerous, auxiliary funds for poor individuals belonging to them.

§ 11. For the whole of the former Duchy of Wurtemberg, Duke Ulrich, at the time of the Reformation in the years 1535 and 1536, besides the local poor's fund founded at that time in the several communities (§ 9.), formed also out of the sequestered estates a general church fund, which was subsequently known by the name of Church Estates, which was expressly destined by him, not merely for the maintenance of the churches and schools, but also for the relief of the poor. In the year 1806 it was indeed incorporated with the other domains of the state, which however has hitherto continued the former application of the church estates to charitable purposes.

For general benevolent objects extending to the whole country, there are further the funds of the Central Board of the Charitable Union, the Royal Private Gratuity Fund, also the separate funds of several special benevolent public institutions, as, for example, the Pension Fund for public servants in general, the funds for the support of ecclesiastics, schoolmasters, military individuals, noble ladies, &c., the fund for the widows of clergy and laity,

* Some sources of receipt are here mentioned, which existed in the Catholic times, and for which it might be difficult to find the equivalent expressions.

† This seems to be the meaning.

‡ But what is called hospital in Germany, is not what is meant by that word. It is a place of refuge for aged and infirm persons, who pay a sum on admission, and whose property belongs to the Establishment on their death.

laity, the funds of the public orphan houses, deaf and dumb and blind institutions, the fund of the Catharine Hospital at Stuttgard, the general insurances against fire and bail, &c.

§ 12. Religious institutions, which gave relief to the poor by alms or lodging, no longer exist in Wurtemberg, since the foundations and monasteries in Wurtemberg were suppressed by the treaty of Paris of 27th March 1802, the recess of the Empire of the 25th February 1803, by the treaty of Presburg of the 26th December 1805, and the Act of the Rhenish Confederation of 12th July 1806, when their estates, after previously providing for the monks, were incorporated with the other public domains, exist no longer, unless we should comprehend under the name of religious institutions the religious private societies which extend over the whole country, and which certainly afford various support to their poor members, as well by alms as lodging.

Special Resources of these Funds.

§ 13. The various authorities appointed for the support of the poor in Wurtemberg are however not confined to the income arising from the collective property of the funds just enumerated (§ 9—12.); for instance, to the produce of their building and lands, and to the tithes, lands, revenues, ground rents, interest, &c. belonging to these funds; but they have various other, in part very ample resources, in contributions, as well of private persons as of public establishments.

§ 14. The contributions of individuals are divided into contributions from the poor themselves, who are or are to be supported, and in the contributions from other persons. Among the first are, for instance, the profits of the work of the schools of industry, of the pupils of the houses of education, and of the inmates of the hospitals,* the money for the board and clothing of pupils of the houses of education, the entrance money paid by the inmates of the hospitals and the property left by them, the contributions of servants and journeymen mechanics to the infirmaries destined for their reception, the money paid by other sick persons received into such houses, the deposits of the members in the auxiliary fund of the guilds of the artisans, the deposits of the subscribers to the widows' funds, the contributions of persons in office to the pension fund, the deposits in the funds for insurance against fire and hail, &c. The latter are divided partly into voluntary, partly into forced contributions.

§ 15. The voluntary contributions consist either in legacies and endowments, or in gifts. The wills in which such legacies and endowments are given to the establishments for the poor are very much favoured by the laws; and persons whose business it is to draw up wills, as well as the clergy, are enjoined, as a special duty, to endeavour to interest the sick and dying in making such legacies and endowments in favour of institutions for the poor.

Encouragement to make presents to these institutions is given by general exhortations, for example, from the pulpit, and in the public journals, in printed reports, by the appointment and making known of persons to receive the presents, by the erection of permanent poor-boxes, by collections in the churches, at the consecration of churches, at the ordinary celebration of divine service on Sundays and holidays, at the monthly fast-days, at the administration of the sacrament, marriages, betrothings, christenings, at funerals, at the grant of leases of estates, mills, pastures, &c., at the binding and discharge of apprentices, the reception of masters and other meetings of the artisans; also by the collection of money and various articles in kind, or at least by signatures obtained by going from house to house; lastly, by special exhortations to the refractory individuals. The establishments for the poor are particularly indebted for frequent and ample gifts to the generosity of the King, the Queen and other members of the royal family, and to the benevolent dispositions of many land-owners and other members of the nobility, of the members of the Charitable Union and of several religious societies.

§ 16. Forced Contributions to the poor in Wurtemberg must be paid,—

A.) For certain offences; for instance, neglecting to attend schools and church, profanation of the Sundays or holidays, abuse of religion, immoral actions, refusal to perform lawful service, offences of servants, &c.

B.) At certain pastimes, prize-shooting, bowling and skittle-playing, lotteries, dances, at weddings and entertainments; exceeding the fixed number of sponsors at baptisms; exceeding the fixed expenses for funerals and mourning; the tax on dogs, &c.

C.) At the conclusion of certain contracts, for instance, relative to land, buildings, ground rents, &c.; sales of corn, &c.

D.) For carrying on certain trades, from apprentices, journeymen and masters.

E.) At the examinations of candidates for office, and on admission to an office.

F.) On admission to the rights of a citizen or settled non-freeman.

G.) On inheritances and legacies which fall to distant relations, or to individuals allied only by marriage, or to entire strangers.

H.) In the year 1817, and during the dearth which prevailed at that time, an old law which had fallen into desuetude was revived; according to which, the rich and opulent who, after having been previously applied to for voluntary contributions, should not come forward in a manner suitable to their property, are to be taxed by the magistrates in a sum conformable to their income, and according to all the circumstances of their situation.

WURTEMBERG.

§ 17. Lastly, with respect to contributions from public funds; a poor individual or an institution for the poor may, according to the circumstances, obtain such contribution from the dotation fund of the place, or from the funds of the community, or from the local fund of the Charitable Union, or from the funds of other communities of the bailiwick, or from the guild funds of the bailiwick, or from the fund of the board of the Charitable Union in the bailiwick, or from the royal gratuity fund, or from that of the central board of the Charitable Union, or from the church estate and the public coffers.

§ 18. The authorities charged with the management of the poor have often had recourse to loans; for example, on the building of a house, or in the purchase of buildings and land, or in times of peculiar distress. In the dearth in the year 1817, the communities and bailiwicks were expressly called upon by the Government to act on this system; and in order to facilitate to the bailiwicks and charitable public institutions the raising of means to procure subsistence and employment for the poor, and to prevent usury, a voluntary relief fund was at that time founded in the capital city of Stuttgart by a private association, and placed under the protection and guarantee of the Government; from which fund large sums were advanced to the managers of charitable foundations, communities and bailiwicks, upon moderate interest, and in some cases of larger loans, to be repaid by instalments. This fund, however, as its object is already obtained, has ceased, since the year 1818, both to take new sums upon interest or to lend out any more capital. In some respects, we may place under this head the General Credit Association, which was formed at Stuttgart in 1827.

FOREIGN POOR.

Restrictions of the same.

§ 19. Poor foreign individuals, who can prove a legally allowed object of their journey, or who must necessarily pass through the Wurtemberg territory on their way to a foreign state to which they belong, are suffered indeed to pass unmolested through Wurtemberg; they are however not only seriously warned to refrain from all begging by the way, but a route by the shortest road is prescribed them, from which they are not to deviate, on pain of being treated as vagabonds.

Strangers, on the other hand, who are not able to give a satisfactory account of their condition and the object of their journey are not allowed either to abide in or to pass through the kingdom; on the contrary, and likewise with the threat of being treated as vagabonds in case they again enter the kingdom, they are, if possible, immediately refused admittance at the frontier, and if they are already in the kingdom, they are sent out of it by the shortest road.

Persons who for any reason whatever have been ordered to leave neighbouring states, and who desire to be delivered up at the frontier by what is called the Schubs,* and who, on the other hand, by the existing regulations (§ 1.) have no claim to any settlement in Wurtemberg, are not allowed to enter the territory of the kingdom, unless it can be proved that the vagrant to be received belongs to some place situated beyond, to which he cannot well be sent except through the Wurtemberg territory, and that the neighbouring state observe the same mode of proceeding towards Wurtemberg. Hitherto Bavaria, Baden, the Grand Duchy of Hesse and Sigmaringen have engaged by formal conventions to act in this manner.

Travelling artisans and journeymen mechanics who have got the itch, if they come directly from a foreign country, and if they are not subjects of Wurtemberg, are sent back into the country from which they last came till they are perfectly cured.

§ 20. Foreign journeymen artisans (wandergesellen, or what are called travelling artisans), who —

A.) Have already passed their 40th year; or —

B.) Do not possess a sufficient sum to continue their travels and at least 10 florins; or —

C.) Cannot satisfactorily show that they will obtain work with a master in the kingdom, are at once refused admittance on the frontier, or, if they have already crossed, are sent by the shortest road out of the Wurtemberg territory, unless they are upon their return to their own home, and the shortest way to it is through the Wurtemberg territory.

In the same manner, a foreign travelling journeyman admitted into the kingdom, who has been there eight days without work, even though he can show that he has looked for work without success, is sent by the shortest road over the frontiers, unless — a.) He can prove that he has been hindered from work by sickness; or — b.) That at the moment of being ordered away an opportunity for getting work offers itself; or — c.) That he can prove that he possesses means to travel to the amount of at least 10 florins.

A foreign travelling journeyman, who stops more than 24 hours in a place where he has looked for work, but not obtained it, or in another place longer than over night without having obtained special permission from the magistrates, is punished with imprisonment for not less than one nor more than three days, unless circumstances of aggravation, for example, frequent frequent repetition of the offence, shall give ground for sending him out of the kingdom; but if grounds for mitigation should appear, a notice in his travelling book may be substituted for the imprisonment.

* It is in fact hardly necessary to translate this word "Schubs," which means a shove; and in the present instance is a transfer of the person in question from one state to another (shoving him across the frontier.)

Foreign journeymen artisans who are found without an authentic certificate, or who have disregarded the directions given to them at the countersigning of the same, are sent by the shortest way over the frontiers, with the threat that if they return they shall be treated like other vagrants.

Simple begging by a foreign travelling journeyman is punished by imprisonment for at least three hours; but importunate or repeated beggary or begging from house to house is punished by imprisonment for three to eight days, and, according to circumstances, by expulsion from the territory.

§ 21. Other foreign individuals, who have either no regular settlement, no service, and no business, or whose business is partly in itself injurious to the public, partly at least not sufficient for their subsistence, and which furnishes an opportunity and occasion for illicit secondary occupations, or the object of whose journey is not compatible with the laws of the police; namely,—

A.) Strolling foreigners, who make a business of the exhibition of wild beasts, sleight of hand, athletic exercises, musical or dramatic representations and the like, unless a higher degree of perfection or art or science authorizes an exception; consequently all strolling common players, jugglers, conjurors, mountebanks, gamblers, scholderer,* showmen, &c.

B.) All foreign china-menders, bellows-menders, tinkers, basket-makers, dealers in kitchen-spoons and stove-pipes, bagpipers, knife-grinders, saw-filers, buckle-makers, van or winnow basket-makers.

C.) All strolling quack doctors, hawkers of medicine, oil and colours, foreign pedlars who have no settlement any where, or have not regularly acquired the right to trade, or whose stock of goods is of very little value.

D.) All foreign lottery collectors and beggars without exception, whatever may be their origin or rank, and for whatever reason they may think themselves entitled to collect contributions for themselves or others, especially foreign Jew beggars, are immediately refused on the frontiers, without regarding whether they have a regular passport or not; but if they are already within the kingdom, if it is the first time of their coming and they cannot be properly considered as vagrants, and are not convicted of a crime or a connexion with criminals, they are sent out by the shortest way, with the threat that if they come again they shall be treated as vagabonds.

§ 22. If persons of the class of vagrants, properly so called, have, in spite of the prohibition, clandestinely passed the frontier, and if they are found in the interior of the kingdom, such persons, if they cannot be convicted of a crime or of a connexion with criminals, whether male or female, are to be punished, first on account of their idle vagrant life, which is detrimental to the public, with imprisonment for three to six days, and also, according to circumstances, by being beaten with a cane, and then sent over the frontiers, with the threat of still more severe punishment if they are again caught in the Wurtemberg territory. If such a person, notwithstanding the warning received, should again find his way into the kingdom, he is put into a workhouse or house of correction for four or six weeks, or subjected to a proportionate corporeal punishment; and if he should not be deterred even by this punishment, he is considered as a criminal and punished as such, with the observance of the necessary gradations.

Foreign Jew beggars or other Jews wandering about without a settlement and without a regular trade, who on account of a defect in their passport, or otherwise on account of insufficient license to reside in the kingdom, have been refused admittance at the frontiers, or have been otherwise sent away, and who, in spite of this, have in an illicit manner again clandestinely entered the kingdom, or have abused the permission given them to pass through, to commit underhand knavery, even though they are not convicted of any crime or of a connexion with criminals, yet on account of their vagabondizing, which is contrary to the police regulations, they are, according to circumstances, put into a workhouse.

Vagrants who are furnished with a false passport are sentenced to six months' hard labour.

If it is found that a vagrant brought in by the police is in connexion with thieves and sharpers, or has otherwise injured the public security by actual crimes, he is delivered up to the tribunals, and proceeded against according to law.

§ 23. If foreign vagrants and beggars have become liable to imprisonment for a term which does not exceed the duration of the first degree of hard labour in a workhouse, it may be commuted by the tribunals, and namely,—

A.) So that when the punishment incurred does not exceed six months' confinement in a workhouse, the offender, (the physician of the court having first given his opinion,) may be chastised with from 25 to 50 blows with a stick, and threatened, that in case of a repetition of the offence, the time of imprisonment which he has incurred shall be doubled. But if—

B.) The penalty incurred exceed six months' imprisonment, the offender is exposed for an hour, and the above punishment publicly inflicted on him, with the same threat as above.

In both cases, he is then conveyed over the frontiers, and given up to the authorities of his own country, when this is practicable.

Relief

*Relief of Foreign Poor.*Foreign
Communications.

WURTEMBERG.

§ 24. At the same time that these police regulations are strictly enforced, the duties of humanity towards foreign poor are not lost sight of.

When they duly observe the above police regulations, foreign wandering journeymen receive in every place where there is an auxiliary guild fund, (§ 10.); other foreign poor, who on their journey fall into embarrassment, especially foreign sick persons who cannot pursue their journey on foot, or who fall sick by the way, in every place where this occurs, even foreign poor who are conveyed by the police out of the kingdom, at every station, and foreigners under sentence of imprisonment, in every prison in Wurtemberg; all these receive precisely the same relief that is given to a native in the same circumstances. See below, (§ 84, 89 & 98.)

Foreign poor who are put into a penal establishment at Wurtemberg, or are removed from the kingdom by the police, receive this assistance out of the public treasury; foreign journeymen artisans, at the expense of the guild fund of the place where they happen to be; other foreign poor, at the expense of the fund of the endowment or community of the place in which they fall into embarrassment. Wurtemberg has made a convention with many foreign governments that this shall be reciprocally done without any indemnification for the expense, if the traveller in question should not be able to make it good from his own resources.

The corporations of some bailiwicks however, in order that unfortunate strangers may not suffer by this, have resolved to reimburse to the communities concerned, out of the fund of the bailiwick, the expenses which they may incur on this account.

Native Poor.

§ 25. Whoever, according to the principles above laid down, (§ 1.) is to be considered as a subject of the state of Wurtemberg, is never forced upon another state whose subject he is not, and in whose territory he has no settlement, or through whose territory he must necessarily pass as a subject of a state lying beyond, particularly not on the states of Bavaria, Baden, Hesse (the grand duchy,) and Sigmaringen, which are authorized by treaty to cause even those vagrants who, according to the documents found upon them, have already been sent to a state lying further on, but not received by it, to be sent back to that state from which they had been sent away, to be provisionally kept. Every vagrant or vagabond from whose papers it satisfactorily appears that he is a subject of Wurtemberg is, on the contrary, received on the frontier, if he desires to be given up by a neighbouring state.

Assignment of Settlements or Fixed Places of Abode.

§ 26. Every native vagabond who travels about without a profession has a fixed place of residence assigned to him, if it has not already been done, in the middle of that inland community in which, according to the laws (§ 6 & 7.) he has to claim a right of settlement, and which is accordingly bound to receive him. If a person confined in this manner names another inland community where he might hope to be received as a burgher or a settled non-freeman, and which would be peculiarly favourable to him for the carrying on of a useful trade, the competent authority is consulted upon the subject, and if there is no obstacle to his being received, he is allowed to change his place of residence, with the reserve of the continuance of the restriction in his new abode.

No person so restricted may remove from the place of residence assigned him, on pain of corporal punishment or hard labour, without special permission from the magistrate; and this permission can only be granted in case of his having observed an unexceptionable conduct during his abode in the place assigned him; this permission can be granted by the local magistrate only for the purpose of seeking or doing some work for a short distance, not beyond the boundary of the neighbouring place, and for eight days at the most; but if it is wanted for other purposes than to seek for employment, for a greater distance and a longer time, it can be granted only by the magistrates of the community.

In case however of blameless conduct for several years, and a regular business securing his subsistence, a person so restricted may be relieved from the restriction imposed upon him.

Restriction of Marriage.

§ 27. No subject of the state can marry till he possesses the rights of a member of a community or a settled non-freeman. But even such an one must prove to the magistrates before his marriage that he possesses sufficient means of subsistence. The want of such means of subsistence is considered as existing,—

A.) In every one who is not personally qualified for the exercise of a liberal art or science, or for exercising on his own account, commerce, a profession, agriculture or some other business sufficient for the support of a family, nor possesses sufficient property for the independent support of a family; and,—

B.) In every one who, at the time of the intended marriage, is the subject of political or police investigation, for vagabondage, prodigality, habitual idleness, notorious propensity to drinking, for repeated fraud, repeated theft or systematic begging, or who has been punished for the same, during the two years immediately preceding, or who in the course of the three preceding years (excepting in case of misfortune not incurred by his own fault) has received assistance from public funds for his support, or is in the receipt of such at the time of the intended marriage.

Prohibition

Prohibition of Beggary, Idleness, &c.

§ 28. Returned emigrants, discharged prisoners, and vagrants confined to a certain place, and their families, are placed under the special superintendence of their local magistrates, who are bound to do their utmost to convert all such people into harmless and, if possible, into good and useful citizens; to keep a vigilant eye over the restricted;* to observe their conduct and the means employed by them to gain their livelihood; to summon each of them to appear before them once a week, but not upon a fixed day; and in the like manner strictly to observe other inhabitants of the place who are addicted to idleness, prodigality, or otherwise to an irregular and immoral kind of life; and, if they should observe any indications of illegal associations among them, or even of intercourse with suspicious foreigners, to give notice of it to the superior authorities, that they may act accordingly.

§ 29. Whoever desires to exercise a business, whether it consists in work or in trade, by hawking out of the limits of his place of abode (travelling from place to place), must obtain for this purpose the permission of the public authorities in general, and in the several districts in which he means to exercise his calling, the special permission of the local police authorities. Every license of this kind is valid only for the person licensed, and, without the special permission of the public authorities, he can never be accompanied by other persons while travelling on his business; but this permission is, according to the established rules, never given to more than one of several sons of a father who supports himself by an itinerant calling. The license, too, is granted only for a certain time, at the most one year, and for a limited extent of country; it may, however, be renewed at the expiration of the time for which it was granted, according to circumstances. Whoever is guilty of transgressing any of the existing regulations on this subject is arrested, and unless there are grounds for proceeding against him in the place where he is arrested, he is to be conveyed back to the tribunal of the community of his place of residence, to be dealt with according to law. With respect to Wurtemberg journeymen artisans who are caught begging, or who by being long out of work, by neglect of looking for work, &c., make themselves suspected of idle vagrancy, the regulations above enumerated (§ 20.) with regard to foreign journeymen artisans are applicable, only with the difference, that where the alleged transgression would be followed, in the case of a foreign journeyman, by expulsion from the kingdom, the native journeyman, on proof of the allegation, is punished with three to eight days' imprisonment, and threatened, on repetition of the offence, to be treated as a vagrant.

§ 30. But in general, all begging, as well in the houses as in the streets, especially during divine service, is forbidden in the whole kingdom to Wurtembergers as well as foreigners, without distinction, and is punished as an offence against the police laws. In particular, the going out for the purpose of begging, especially to fairs, whether at home or abroad, is forbidden under severe penalties to every Wurtemberger, and particularly to idiots, dumb, epileptic, crippled or otherwise impotent or deformed poor. Every Wurtemberg subject who is caught begging out of his place of residence is imprisoned for the first offence for three days, for the second for eight days, every other day on bread and water. If a native beggar, who has been twice punished with imprisonment, has again gone out begging, and either confesses or is proved to have done so, he is put, according to circumstances, for a longer or shorter period in a house of correction (Polizeihaus).

OBLIGATION OF SUPPORTING THE POOR.

§ 31. On the other hand, every native indigent or poor person, that is, every subject who is not able to procure the necessary subsistence, either from his property or his trade or his work, can require that he shall receive sufficient for his subsistence, and be maintained, even though there should be no hope of an indemnity for the expense thereby incurred.

If the duty of maintaining him appertains to any person on a ground of private right, such right must be enforced before support can be required as a matter of public right.

Duty of Private Individuals.

§ 32. Such private duty is founded, for instance, sometimes by contracts; for example, the deed of gift. If a person has promised to give something to another, and before the execution of his promise falls into poverty, the donor has the right to deduct from his gift as much as he requires for his necessary support, and in case of need, to withhold the entire gift. But if the object of the gift has been already delivered, the donee is bound, on pain of losing the whole donation, to give to the donor the necessary support, if he has not himself, through misfortune or without any great fault of his own, fallen into poverty; or the gift is not too trifling or not calculated to afford support.

Such a duty is likewise sometimes founded upon an annuity contract, by which a person engages to pay to another, during his life, on the receipt of a certain thing, a fixed revenue destined for his support; for instance, when a person purchases a place in an hospital as a beneficiary (vide below, § 92.); or when a person during his life transfers or sells his estate to one of his heirs, and by a supplementary contract provides for his subsistence during life out of these estates, or when a debtor gives up his property on condition that he shall receive aliment.

A private duty of this kind also attaches, occasionally at least, in part,—

To drivers, with respect to persons injured by their carelessness.

To the lords of hunting grounds, to the vassals who meet with accidents in their service.

To masters, towards their servants.

To lords of the manor, towards poor dependents.

To vassals, towards needy feudal lords.

To lords of the manor, communities or other corporations, towards catholic candidates in divinity, to whom they have given table allowance, (Tischtitel).

To the Sovereign, to the former inmates of suppressed monasteries.

To parishioners, towards necessitous patrons.

To sponsors, towards their godchildren.

To the guilds of artisans, towards needy brethren.

To insurance societies against hail, fire and sickness, in respect to the contributors, &c.

Family Duty to support the Poor.

§ 33. A further private duty to support the poor is frequently founded on family connexions. Sometimes indeed the individual members of families are dispensed, at least in part, from this duty by the family endowments mentioned above, (§ 9.); but where no such endowments exist, or where they are not sufficient, the following rules prevail according to the laws of Wurtemberg.

Of Husband and Wife.

§ 34. The husband is not indeed bound, as is the case according to the common law, unconditionally to support the wife; but by virtue of the community of goods, the expenses attending it must be borne by the husband and wife in common. When however the wife of an emigrant, remaining behind with permission of the magistrates, is not able to derive sufficient support from her own property, or the retained *hinterfällig property of her children, the emigrating husband is bound to make up a sufficient aliment by leaving behind a part of his property, according to the decision of the magistrates. In the case of married persons separated from bed and board, the guilty party is bound to give the innocent alimony according to a judicial sentence; nor can either of a married couple entirely disinherit the other without special cause, but is bound to leave, at least, what is called the portion fixed by law (Pflichttheil.)

Of the Parents:—Of the Legitimate.

§ 35. To support and provide for legitimate children conformably to their property and station, and duly to educate them in the fear of God, and to study or to learn honest trades and professions for which they are fitted, is, so long as both the parents are alive, the common duty of both, and after the death of one, the duty of the survivor. If the latter should, in the sequel, marry again, the father-in-law or the mother-in-law is bound to support and to educate the step-children; if they have no property of their own, in conjunction with the real father or the real mother. If the surviving parent dies before the children are married or have attained their 25th year, they are to be delivered to their grandfather on the father or mother's side, if still alive and able and willing to undertake the charge, together with the administration of their property till they are married or have attained their 25th year; for which, however, an indemnity is to be allowed him.

When a child has attained the years of manhood and his full age, and is capable of superintending an establishment of his own, the parents, if they are both still living, are bound to portion him or her, if he or she marries with their knowledge, consent and advice, with an honourable fortune out of the common property of the parents, and suitable to their estate and rank in life; but if only one of the parents is still living, the marriage portions are to be allotted to the children from the property which has already fallen to them, and of which the surviving father or mother has the usufruct; and if there is none such, out of the property belonging to the surviving father or mother. Parents in indifferent circumstances however, that they may not implicate themselves in debts, are not to promise a larger marriage portion to their children than is suitable to their remaining property and the number of their other still unmarried children. Parents cannot, without special reasons, wholly disinherit any of their children, but must in every case leave them what is called the legitimate portion, (Pflichttheil). If parents do not provide suitable maintenance and support for their children who have fallen into poverty, misery or sickness, or who have lost their reason, children may disinherit their parents; and if such a child dies intestate in this his distress, and the parents have, knowingly, neither given nor have desired to give him any assistance, they are excluded by the law from the estate he has left.

Of the Illegitimate.

§ 36. With respect to illegitimate children, they cannot indeed inherit the fortune of their father if they have not been legitimated, or he has left legitimate children, or a lawful wife, nor

* The word "hinterfällig," not translated, does not appear to be in any wise applicable here; it is not to be found in any dictionary.

nor can the fortune of their mother, if they are the fruit of an adulterous intercourse, or are the offspring of persons who on account of their affinity are prohibited from marrying by the Divine law. As it is, however, more natural and equitable that such children should receive the necessary support from their parents, than from the poor's fund, or from others, such fathers shall be called upon, and obliged by the magistrates, to make the necessary arrangements during their life-time, that these their illegitimate children may be decently maintained, clothed and educated till they are able to gain their own livelihood.

The compacts and agreements by which the fathers sometimes impose exclusively on the mothers the maintenance and bringing up of their illegitimate children, on the payment of a certain sum, shall not be valid unless the sum fixed in the agreement is in proportion to the property of the father, and suitable to the circumstances and to equity; but if the sum agreed upon is too small, and the mother of the illegitimate child herself is poor, the father or their heirs, notwithstanding the agreements made, shall be obliged by the magistrates, to allot to such illegitimate children additional support and necessary maintenance, according to their ability.*

But should the fathers have omitted to make during their life-time due provision for the maintenance, clothing and necessary support of their illegitimate children, it shall before all things be assigned to them by the heirs on the division of the father's estate; and if the heirs refuse or attempt to allot to such children too small a maintenance, it shall be duly regulated and appointed by the magistrates according to the nature of the inheritance, so that, on the one hand, it may be such as can be borne by the right heirs, and on the other hand, that such children may not want the necessary support.

Of the Children.

§ 37. When the father or mother become aged, poor, infirm or fall into any misfortune, without any fault of their own, and their own property does not suffice for their necessary maintenance and support, but the property belonging to the children is sufficient, not only for the necessary support of the children themselves, but also of their indigent parents, as they are bound by divine, natural and all laws, shall give their parents the necessary help and support. Should the children unjustly refuse to do this, the magistrates shall assign to such parents out of the property of their children, according to the nature and extent of that property, what is absolutely necessary for their maintenance, and to this end so much of the property of the children as is requisite for the maintenance of their indigent parents shall be sold. Besides this, children and grandchildren, who do not maintain according to their ability their parents or grand parents, who have become poor or sick, or have lost their senses and reason, who have not provided them with necessaries, and who have let them suffer want of food and due care, even if such father, mother, grandfather or grandmother has made no will, are disinherited by the law, and those who have afforded them care and support, whether they be children, near or distant relations, shall be their heirs.

Neither can children, without a special reason, ever entirely disinherit their parents, but must in every case leave them at least what is called the legitimate portion.†

Of the Brothers and Sisters, and more distant Relations.

§ 38. According to the opinion of eminent lawyers, the brothers and sisters have a legal obligation to support each other; the laws of Wurtemberg, however, appear not to contain any express enactments on this point, any more than on the obligation to leave to brothers and sisters what is called the legitimate portion, though the latter appears to be assumed in practice, and the legal exemption of the eldest brother, or, if he is already serving in the army, of the next brother of a family who have lost their parents and who keep house together, following agriculture or any other regular business, from the military conscription, appears to presuppose a duty of this brother to support his brothers and sisters.

More distant relations are not in any case bound to support each other.

OBLIGATION

* In general when the mother is of mean condition, there is assigned to her for the loss of her virginity (die Schwächung) from 10 to 20 f.; for the expenses of the christening and childbed, from 10 to 15 f. for the illegitimate child itself, till it has attained the age of 14 years, from 10 to 15 f. annually; and if the mother is of a higher rank, from 20 to 30 f. annually.

† It is probably on account of this duty of the children to support their parents that the following are exempt from the military conscription:—

A.) The only son, who is also the only child, or whose father is sixty years old, or whose mother lives in a state of widowhood.

B.) The eldest son, or if he is already serving in the army, the next son, whose father is sixty years old, or whose mother lives in a state of widowhood.

C.) The only grandson, whose grandfather is sixty years old, or whose grandmother lives in a state of widowhood, that is to say, if the grandfather or grandmother has no son living then under the same conditions.

D.) The eldest grandson, or if he already serves in the army, the next grandson to him.

All these exemptions, however, take place only when the father or the mother, and, as the case may be, the grandfather or grandmother of the person liable to the conscription are still living.

If however the children themselves live in indigence, and cannot spare anything from their pittance for their parents, they cannot be legally required to support them. The son who is himself in straitened circumstances may take his father into his house, and let him share his table, but if the son's property is not sufficient for this, he must be excused, and he is not legally bound almost to die of hunger himself in order to support his father.

OBLIGATION OF THE STATE TO SUPPORT THE POOR.

WURTEMBERG.

*Of the Communities.

§ 39. He who cannot derive the necessities of life either from his property, his labour or his trade, nor be supported by his nearest relations and other persons, who (according to § 31 seq.) are bound to it by private right, has a claim on the support of the (political or civil) community in which (according to § 5, 6, 7.) he has the right of a burgher or settled non-freeman.

In times of particular distress, not only those who are absolutely poor, but those also who are indeed not without property, but, by the unfavourable circumstances of the times, are rendered incapable of providing the necessities of life for themselves and their children, have a right to require from the communities of which they are members, the necessary support. Thus in the year of scarcity in 1817, the spiritual and temporal overseers of the communities were expressly made responsible by the Government, that none of those who were confided to their superintendence and care should be exposed to suffer want, with the threat, that if, for want of care on the part of the overseers, any person should perish, the guilty should be prosecuted with all the rigour of the law.

If a person belonging to one or more communities (§ 6, 7.) has need of public support, the share to be borne by each is determined by the Government authorities, having respect to the merely personal or family connexion with the several communities.

Each of the three religious persuasions prevailing in the kingdom has indeed the full enjoyment of its poor fund. Poor members of the community, however, who belong to a religious persuasion different to that which prevails in the place, cannot however be denied the necessary relief from the poor fund of the place, on account of the difference of religion.

Of the Bailiwick Corporations.

§ 40. If a community has so many poor, or is so limited in its resources, that it is not in a condition properly to support its poor, the other communities of the bailiwick, particularly the towns, so far as they are better able and have few or no poor, are bound by the law to assist such a poor community with their alms. A general obligation of the bailiwick corporation to assist those communities of the bailiwicks which are not able to afford the necessary assistance to their poor inhabitants, is not ordained by the laws, unless such assistance is to the interest of the bailiwick corporation as such.

In the year 1817, however, the bailiwick corporations were enjoined, so long as the dearth lasted, and with reference to old laws, in case that single communities should be unable sufficiently to provide for all the inhabitants, to give them credit so far as to answer either partly or entirely for the debt, but always with the reservation of repayment by the receivers of the aid. And with respect to the support of the formerly homeless poor, which are in the sequel assigned to a community (§ 6, 7.) it is expressly ordered, that if the assignment is founded on one of the titles to a right of settlement enumerated under A., B., C., the community against which the right is established is to bear only one-third, and the whole of the bailiwick the other two-thirds; but if the assignment is founded on one of the titles enumerated under D., E., F., G., the whole bailiwick has to take upon itself this support. The expense which is hereby incurred by a bailiwick constitutes an object of what is called amtsvergleichung, and is imposed on the whole old and new rateable Cadastre of the bailiwick.

Of the Duty of the State.

§ 41. The public Exchequer affords indeed (see above, § 11-17.), partly on account of the previous sequestration of the church property and of some other funds and revenues destined for pious and charitable purposes, and partly without any such special legal ground, contributions for the foundation and support of various public beneficent institutions, and it sometimes assists single bailiwicks, communities and individuals in particular cases, by contributions for charitable purposes. But a general obligation of the public Exchequer to intervene in case of the inability of the communities or bailiwicks, is nowhere enacted in the laws of Wurtemberg, and is also not recognized by the Government, because too great liberality on its part, and the grant of a distinct head of expenditure for this purpose, as in general the transferring of local burthens to the public Exchequer, might lead to very extensive consequences, and might gradually give rise to always increasing claims, which, in the impossibility of ranging single cases under general points of view, it might not be always possible successfully to meet.

The support of poor Jews, without any distinction between burghers and settled non-freemen, is indeed, in the first place, the duty of the Jewish community to which the pauper belongs; if however such a community is so poor that it is unable wholly or in part to defray the expense, in this case the civil community to which the poor Jew belongs has to take upon itself two-thirds, and the Jewish central fund one-third of what is wanting.

Amount of Relief to the Poor.

§ 42. What is necessary for a poor person or a poor family, and how much such a person or family may require for their necessary support, is not expressed in the laws of Wurtemberg; on on the contrary, the answer to this question is left to the judgment of the magistrate in every particular case. In fact it is not well susceptible of a general answer, because the wants of men are so very different, according to their constitutions and inclinations and the means of satisfying these wants depend too much on personal, local and temporary circumstances.

The experience of how much each person, on an average, costs in the barracks, prisons, poorhouses, houses of education, &c., cannot serve as a sure guide in this respect; because where so many persons live together, many things are cheaper and many dearer than in the case of an individual or a family living alone.

A rather surer criterion in this respect may be afforded us by accurately observing the privations to which a poor person or family, living independently without external aid, submits voluntarily or of necessity, without being actually reduced to starvation; and an investigation of the minimum which such an individual or family actually wants in a year upon an average.

Yet even this question is very difficult to answer, for such people do not know how to estimate in money the commodities which they use, keep no account, set nothing down, and do not themselves know what they use. We know very well, that a very small house or a part of a house, such as people of this description often possess and inhabit with a family, which is often pretty numerous, for which they must sometimes pay, besides the tax, 6, 8 or 10 f. in ground rent, often does not cost above 100 to 200 f. to build or to buy; or that such families, when they lodge with another poor family, often do not pay above 10, 12, 15 or 20 f., and poor individuals not more than 4 or 5 f. annual house rent. We know that they seldom possess a feather bed, but content themselves with chaff, moss, hay or straw; and at the most have a miserable covering with feathers collected by themselves, or some old pillows purchased for a trifle at auctions. We know that their clothing costs them very little, (perhaps not 25 fl. in the year for a whole family,) because they often do with cast-off clothes which are given them, or which they purchase very cheap, or go from one year's end to another in clothes made of tick, or even in rags and barefoot. We know that the doctor and apothecary cost them but little, because they call in a doctor but in the utmost need. We know that the religious instruction and schooling of their children costs them very little, because the ecclesiastics and the schoolmasters are paid by the public; the school-money for each child does not amount to more than from 1 to 2 fl. a year, and as few school-books as possible are bought; we know that with such people food is the chief expense. But all this again depends very much upon circumstances of time and place; and besides a single person or a family, according to their individual wants and inclinations, requires more or less, sometimes under one head of expense, sometimes under another.

§ 43. Thus it appears almost impossible to learn in this way the average consumption of an independent poor person or family; we must rather (to have at least some ground to go upon) go further back and inquire how much such people, on an average, receive. But even this inquiry is very difficult, because the receipts of most of the independent poor flow from very various sources, while the custom of piece-work, where it is applicable, as well in agricultural as domestic work; because those who work for daily, weekly or yearly wages, seldom receive money alone, but for the most part, besides their wages, have their board; because in general, the receipt of such people consists partly in money and partly in commodities; because they do not know how to estimate the value of these commodities, and do not write down or say what they know. The following data may however perhaps in some measure serve as a guide.

A.) A grown-up female—

a.) By spinning and ordinary knitting can seldom gain more than 4, 6 or 8 kr. daily; by finer knitting, embroidery, lace-making and other such female work, which are paid by the piece, can seldom gain more than from 10 to 25 kr. one day with another.

b.) A sempstress receives, in the country in small places, from 4 to 6 kr., in larger places and towns, from 12 to 15 kr.; in the capital, a dressmaker, an ironer, a plaiter, from 24, 36, 48 kr. daily, besides board.

c.) A washerwoman or charwoman receives in the country only 8, 10, 12, 15 to 18 kr.; in the capital, 36 kr. daily with board, or without board, from 1 fl. to 1 fl. 12 kr.

d.) A maid servant receives, in money and money's worth, annually, besides board, in the country only 16, 18, 20 to 24 fl.; in the capital, 24, 30, 36 to 40 fl.; to which, according to circumstances, vails are to be added, especially in the capital.

B.) A male adult receives, namely,— a.) A journeyman workman—aa.) In the country, with the shoemakers and tailors, 20, 24 to 30 kr.; with the bakers, 48 kr. to 1 fl.; with the smiths, 48 kr. to 1 fl. 12 kr.; with calenders and tanners, 48 kr. to 2 fl. weekly, with board; a journeyman carpenter or bricklayer, from 30 to 36 kr. daily, with bread and something to drink.

bb.) In the capital, with board, from 1 fl. 12 kr. to 2 fl. 42 kr. weekly; without board 36 kr. to 1 fl. daily; on Sunday, nothing.

b.) A man servant receives in the country, 20, 30, 36 to 40 fl.; in the capital, 50, 60 fl. and more per annum, with board.

c.) A farmer's labourer or other day-labourer in the country, 12, 15, 18, 20 to 24 kr. daily, with board, or, instead of the latter, 10 or 12 kr. in money; in the capital, in winter, from 24 to 30 kr.; in summer, from 36 to 48 kr., for every thing.

d.) A wood-cleaver can gain daily in all only from 20 to 24, and at the most, 30 kr.

All these rates of wages rise or fall according as the work requires more or less dexterity or exertion, as the individual workman is more or less distinguished by skill, strength or diligence, as the scarcity and the supply of workmen is greater or less, as the days are longer or shorter, &c.

§ 44. Many sempstresses, embroideresses, live, however, exclusively on the above remuneration for their work, without, it is true, saving any thing, but enough to purchase a bed or a few things to begin housekeeping, but yet without suffering hunger or making debts. At Saulgan, three grown-up sisters support not only themselves but their parents, who, on account of their great age and infirmity, are totally incapable of work, that is to say, five persons, by embroidering muslin, by which each gains daily from 10 to 12 kr., that is altogether 3 fl. or 5 s. sterling a week, or from 150 to 175 fl. a year; and with this they do not deny themselves any thing essential in eating and drinking, dress respectably, &c.

The journeymen workmen do not often save any thing of their wages, because the most of them consider that as saved which they expend in purchasing many and good clothes, and because they are fond of visiting public-houses, especially on Sundays, though they have with their masters good food, namely, in the capital, in the morning, coffee, 2 kr. worth of white bread, or, instead of the coffee, a quart of cider and a pound of bread; at dinner, every day, vegetables and meat; in the evening, soup, potatoes and two ounces of butter; in some trades they have besides a quart of cider and bread. There are, however, instances of journeymen tanners, for example, that receive high weekly wages, who annually save as much as 50 fl. out of them.*

With respect to servants, however, both male and female, in the capital and in the country, it very frequently happens that they save out of their wages, especially if they receive many vails, 20, 30, 50 fl. and more every year, which they deposit in the Savings Bank at Stuttgart (§ 47).

Day-labourers, if they are unmarried, may likewise easily save part of their wages. Many of them lay by as much as the half; even a married day-labourer, who has not more than one or two children, can even, though he should save nothing, very well maintain his family by his wages; many of them live very respectably upon them. In the district called Auf der Bahr, for instance, every day-labourer regularly kills a hog every year, either alone or in conjunction with others, and has meat through the winter. In the Black Forest every woodcutter in like manner constantly eats meat, drinks wine, and in general denies himself nothing. Other day-labourers, who have fewer opportunities of obtaining constant work, or who have large families, must indeed live more frugally. A poor woodcutter at Delmensingen, in the bailiwick of Wiblingen, for instance, puts in the morning a slice of bread in his pocket, and is happy if he can drink a small glass of brandy with it, and in the evening finds a dish of warm vegetables when he comes home; during the whole week he does not taste meat, and often not even on Sunday. A poor tailor at Saugau, whose business does not afford him the means, supports by day labour himself, his wife and eight children, who, on account of their youth or attendance at school, can earn little or nothing, that is, ten persons, without incurring debts and without support from others, except perhaps a few articles of clothing which are given them as presents. The work on which he is employed is chiefly woodcutting and (stumpengraben,†) by which he earns, one day with another, at the most, 24 kreutzers, or 120 florins per annum. These people take, in the morning, soup; then the man goes into the forest, takes with him brandy to the value of 1½ kreutzer, and black bread, for 2 kreutzers; and in the evening sups with his family, who, during the day, have had potatoes, or garlic‡ and herbs, or some other vegetable, or perhaps potatoes again. These people taste meat at the most sometimes on Sundays; never wine or beer.

Not much better than this woodcutter's family, lives the family of a farmer at Saulgau, consisting of a husband and wife and three or four children. He possesses about four acres of arable land, two and a half pastures and two cows; only this family is perhaps able to kill a hog in the winter.

In other country towns also, for instance Rentlingen, there is many a poor citizen's family which, without applying on that account for public relief, eats every day in the morning potatoes; at noon, potatoes, seldom garlic (knopflen‡), sometimes half a pound of meat; in the evening milk and potatoes, but never wine, cider or beer; and in which the father dresses only in tick, and often does not even possess a coat. In the little town of Forchtenberg, many poor citizens, particularly vinedressers, often have not a bit of bread in their house for months together, especially when corn is dear, but live entirely on potatoes and curdled milk, without, on that account, applying for relief.

At Burgberg, in the bailiwick of Heidenheim, the schoolmaster, with a wife and seven children, lives without any other income or assistance upon an annual salary of 200 florins at the most, and rent-free. These people are respectably dressed, but their diet is of the poorest description. In the morning the parents often eat nothing, the children perhaps some weak broth; at noon, some farinaceous or vegetable meal; in the evening, potatoes or milk, most rarely meat.

The

* One florin = 60 kreutzers = 20 pence.

The Mode of relieving the Poor.

§ 45. With the great diversity of the means which are applied in Wurtemberg to the relief of the poor, the Government always abides by the fundamental principle,—

As far as possible to afford the poor man opportunity to gain his own livelihood, by the application of his own resources and abilities, and to induce him conscientiously to make use of this opportunity in a manner not injurious to the public.

Exemption of the Poor from certain Restrictions and Obligations.

§ 46. The poor enjoy for this purpose in Wurtemberg certain immunities and privileges, which, however, as the English Government has not expressly inquired about them, are here but slightly noticed.

Among these are, for instance,—

- A.) Certain privileges of the poor with respect to the acquiring the rights of citizenship;
- B.) The exemption of the poor from military service in certain particular cases (§ 37, 38.);
- C.) Their exemption from feudal service in certain particular cases, and the exemption of widows from having soldiers quartered on them;
- D.) Certain privileges of the poor in respect to the payment of the house tax, personal tax, property tax, excise, fees, stamp duties, postage, fees for testimonials and the affixing the seal to the same, and the exemption from tithes, ground rent, &c., which are conceded to them in cases of extraordinary misfortune, such as failure of the crops, frost, hail, inundations, fire, &c.;
- E.) The restriction of the liability of gratuities and pension to be taken for debt;
- F.) Certain privileges of the poor when their effects are sold by auction;
- G.) The gratuitous conducting of lawsuits for the poor;
- H.) The gratuitous defence of the poor implicated in a criminal investigation;
- I.) The right of the poor to work off or to be excused from the costs of criminal proceedings and prison fees which they are sentenced to pay;
- K.) Their right to the commutation, working off or remittance of fines, &c. &c.

Protection of the Poor against the Loss and Waste of their Savings.

§ 47. In order to give the poor the inclination and the opportunity to turn to good account the little which they possess and earn, to put out to interest without risk even the smallest savings, in this manner to lay by a trifle for the time of need, and always to be able to get it back with the interest when they want it, there is, in the capital city of Stuttgart,—

A.) For servants of every description, for the military who receive daily pay, for those who work for daily or weekly wages, for those in general who are employed in meaner services or who support themselves by manual labour of an inferior nature, for children of such persons and orphans who cannot be educated from the income of their property, and in general for all those who enjoy more or less support from public funds or would be entitled to claim it, without distinction, whether they are subjects of Wurtemberg or have only resided a long time in the country, the Wurtemberg Bank of Savings, which was originally founded by Her Majesty the late Queen Catharine, with the approbation of the Government, and after the death of the august Patroness, placed under the especial protection of His Majesty King William; and —

B.) For persons who are not allowed to take part in this public bank of savings, but who would willingly lay by and put out to advantage something out of their moderate income for particular purposes against misfortunes, &c., there is a separate Private Saving Fund. Considering the difficulty of finding opportunities of placing out the money in a safe and proportionably advantageous manner, and the difficulty of the management, which increases with the extent of the administration, the directors of these two institutions are desirous that separate district savings banks may be gradually established in the several bailiwicks; and the more so, as only district institutions of this kind would find it possible to unite with them a loan fund, out of which necessitous inhabitants of the districts might obtain loans upon interest, upon not burdensome securities, without exposing the institution itself to risk; in fact, a beginning has already been made, with good success, in some districts, with the establishment of such district and loan funds.

Education of poor Children under Fourteen Years of Age.

§ 48. However,

A.) Poor children, when they are left to their parents or relations, or to themselves, are too frequently exposed to the danger of becoming deformed, both in body and mind, of addicting themselves to idleness and beggary, and of so habituating themselves to these and other bad ways that no subsequent education is able to eradicate them.

(B.) It is a matter of experience, that men who, from their youth upwards, have been devoted to idleness and beggary, and have not been accustomed, from their childhood, to industry and perseverance, and acquired a certain, at least a general, skill in manual employments, and become sufficiently inured to them, cannot, for the most part, when they arrive at maturer years, and have full powers of body and mind, be made by the most rigorous constraint, industrious, diligent and skilful, or qualified even for the coarsest manual labour. Nay, even,—

C.) From the adult poor, the gaining of their own livelihood is, on the whole, only to be expected when, free from bodily and mental defects, they possess a certain degree of corporal and intellectual powers, and have been accustomed, from early childhood, to make a proper use of those powers.

D.) The keeping of poor children from idleness and beggary, the gaining them over to religious behaviour and morality, the early accustoming them to frugality, cleanliness, order, punctuality, industry and perseverance, the qualifying and inuring them to manual labour in general, and instructing them in works by which they may, in the sequel, be able to gain their own livelihood, is therefore the only condition, by the fulfilling of which we can prevent these young people from becoming subsequently, for their whole life, a burden to the community, and infinitely increasing the number of families of idlers and mendicants.

The education of poor children is, especially in modern times, one of the main objects to which the authorities entrusted with the direction of the affairs of the poor of Wurtemberg fix their attention, and as this education can have a complete and permanent influence when it is commenced in the first years of childhood, they are more and more desirous of beginning it as early as possible.

Infant Schools.

§ 49. To what dangers to their bodies, morals and understanding are not the little children of poor persons exposed who are not yet old enough for the ordinary schools, whose parents follow idleness and beggary; and also the children of indigent persons, who even if they are able and willing, and have the opportunity of earning by their labour a livelihood for themselves and children, yet, as, for instance, the vinedressers and other field-labourers, day-labourers, wood-cleavers, washerwomen, female water-carriers, market women, workmen in manufactories, &c., are obliged, by their business, to pass the whole day, or at least part of the day, from home, or, like the wives of poor tradespeople, must assist the husband in his business. While these poor infants are at the same time deprived of the enjoyment of the happiest years of their life, their older brothers or sisters, to whose care they are entrusted, are thereby kept away from school, and conscientious parents, who themselves attend to their little children, are thus hindered from earning their necessary subsistence; and lazy parents find herein an excuse to spare themselves the trouble of working for their livelihood, and to make a claim on public charity.

§ 50. In order to counteract, and at the same time to develop and prepare the body and minds of such poor little children, a private society founded, a few years ago, in the capital city of Stuttgart, an Infant School, consisting of two divisions in different quarters of the city, and has hitherto been maintained chiefly by voluntary contributions. In this school all poor children of the city belonging to the above class, both boys and girls, who have not passed their sixth year, are received every day, with the exception of Sundays and holidays, in the forenoon from seven or eight till twelve, and in the afternoon from one till six or seven o'clock. They are under the care of some women who have been instructed for this express purpose, and amused, partly in the house, partly in the open air, by games, pictures of natural history, &c., and accustomed to carefulness in going and returning through the streets, to obedience, order, punctuality, cleanliness, good behaviour, &c. They are at times also employed in easy work, such as knitting, &c., and prepared, by conversations, counting and other exercises of the memory and understanding suitable to their tender age, for the subsequent proper elementary instruction.

Such infant schools have also been commenced by private associations in several other large and small towns.

In order partly to assist in defraying the expense, and partly to render the institution more popular, children who are not poor are allowed to participate on payment of a small monthly contribution, or they are confined to the summer season, in which the want of such an institution is more felt in the country than in winter. As the experiments hitherto made have not only answered but exceeded all expectation, it is in contemplation gradually to extend these establishments through the country.

Elementary Schools.

§ 51. For older children, from the age of 6 to 14, there has long existed in Wurtemberg in every, even the smallest community, supported chiefly at the expense of the local church estate and community fund, and of the parents, with the co-operation, however, of the public treasury, a German or elementary school, which all children of that age, both boys and girls, must attend, and in which, with the exception of short holidays during the time of haymaking, harvest and vintage, they receive throughout the year every day, with the exception of Sundays and holidays, in winter for five and in summer for at least two hours, instruction in religion, morality, singing, the German language, reading, writing, arithmetic and the elements of natural philosophy, natural history, geography and history. In summer, in consideration of the work in the fields, the instruction is given as much as possible in the morning; and at the season when the labours of the field are the most urgent, and in cases of great poverty, an exception is made in favour of those children, where it is required, who, on application, are excused two or three times a week from coming to school. With this exception, every illegal neglect of school is punished by a fine of two or three kreutzers, and if the neglect of attending is continued, from four to six kreutzers; and no child, even if it has completed the 14th year, is suffered to leave the elementary school till it has acquired sufficient knowledge of what is taught there. Besides this, in order that even the poorest children may participate in these elementary schools, there are in some of the larger towns, for instance, Stuttgart and Ulm, separate free schools (poor schools) for them, and in the other places their school money, school books, &c. are paid for out of the local fund.

In

In what are called the Latin schools, which exist in most of the towns, and which are chiefly intended for boys of the better classes, as well as in the lyceums and gymnasiums in the larger towns, poor boys are also permitted to receive gratuitous instruction, and, if necessary, the requisite schools are also provided for them at the public expense; and in like manner 18 or 20 girls of the less opulent class are gratuitously admitted to receive instruction at the institution called the "Catharinen Stift," founded for the education of girls of the better classes.

Schools of Industry for Children.

§ 52. As, however, many poor children endeavour notwithstanding to avoid attending the elementary schools, and in all cases the instruction in these elementary schools occupies only the smaller portion of the day, so that those poor children who are not properly attended and employed by their parents have still plenty of time for idleness and beggary; attempts have latterly been made in some places to put such children under special superintendence, and, for instance, by appointing a guardian for each poor child in the person of an overseer or other public officer of the community, or of a neighbour, who has to observe it every where, at home, at work, at play; or by periodical general summons to the several parents; or by periodical visitations in the houses of the poor families, especially of those who are suspected of not paying proper attention to the education of their children; or by the periodical exhibition of the work done at home; or by the public performance of some work as a specimen; or by gratuitously providing the poor children with tools and materials; by the distribution of rewards among the most diligent and skilful of the children; and by exhorting, summoning and punishing negligent parents;—by these means to acquire the certainty that such children are kept to the constant attendance of the church and school and to doing their tasks; that they are sufficiently employed in a suitable manner; that they are not ill-treated, either by being overworked or by unmerited corporal chastisement; that they are not neglected with respect to clothing and cleanliness; and that they are not abandoned to idleness, beggary and other vices, &c.

§ 53. In other places, a few poor children have in latter times been confided to one or more persons experienced in useful works, sempstresses, embroideresses and knitters, to be instructed in their own houses at the public expense, or at least care is taken by the magistrates that there shall not be wanting in the place itself persons capable of giving instruction in such works.

But properly, according to the laws, the poor children are every where to be kept and instructed in common, in a public establishment, gratuitously, in useful works of this description, and it is expressly laid down, that a school of work or industry shall be attached to every elementary school. Hitherto, however, this regulation has not been carried into effect in many places, and it will probably never be generally executed, because the incurring of the expenses connected with the founding and support of a public school of industry could hardly be justified in many cases; for instance, in places where the inhabitants themselves are very industrious, and the poor children are employed at home in manufactures and other mechanical works, or where the children are from their childhood employed to assist their parents in their business and their domestic and agricultural occupations, or lastly, in places where there are few or no absolutely poor families. But in those places, where there is a great number of poor children neglected by their parents, and where on that account a public school of industry is really wanted, such establishments have been founded and hitherto maintained, partly so far back as the last half of the 18th century, but chiefly since the year 1817, by the exertions of the Charitable Union. In general it cannot be overlooked that the interest taken in them by the magistrates and the public is daily increasing, and there is every reason to expect that the establishment of schools of industry will be more and more extended.

§ 54. The existing Schools of Industry are often attended, not only by the Christian, but also by the Jewish children, not only by the poor, but those that are better off; which latter circumstance, so long as the number of the scholars is not disproportioned to the strength of the masters or mistresses, and the size of the room, makes the institution more popular, and helps to defray the expense, because the children who are not poor always bring their own materials, and also pay a small sum to the establishment.

There are, indeed, on the other side, still many Schools of Industry which are not attended, at least not regularly enough, even by all the poor children who need instruction, partly because the masters and mistresses are not equal to the management of a greater number of children, or there is not room enough for more, or the requisite means are wanting for extending the establishment, and partly because the parents prefer employing the children in their own domestic and field labours, or to hire them out to attend cattle, or take care of children, or even to send them out begging. Such parents generally excuse themselves by alleging that they want their children to gain their livelihood, that the School of Industry, even if it procures their children the necessary materials at the expense of the establishment, and pays for their work suitable wages, or, instead of that, even gives up the work gratuitously, does not afford them a sufficient remuneration; that the children, particularly in bad weather, have not the necessary clothing, especially shoes, to attend the Schools of Industry, and that they cannot possibly attend the establishment unless it provides them with food, particularly living at too great a distance from the school, cannot return home at noon. Arrangements, it is true, have already been made, with good success in many places, partly by voluntary contributions of the rich inhabitants, partly at the expense of the local public funds, partly at that of the bailiwick corporation, and lastly at that of the Central Board of the Charitable Union, that such children receive, in the Schools of Industry, the necessary clothing, and on every working-day, from half a pound to two pounds of bread, and in some places even a warm dinner. But it has not hitherto been possible to obtain the necessary funds for introducing this regulation every where that it might be wanted.

The worst, however, is, that while the poor boys, on account of their greater bodily strength and forwardness, are in general much more inclined to beg than the girls, and as we hear there are far more male than female criminals in the penal establishments, it has hitherto happened, that it is the attendance of the boys in the schools of industry which it has been practicable to enforce only in a few places, chiefly because it appears to be extremely difficult, in Wurtemberg at least, to find suitable employment for them. (See § 63.)

§ 55. Another imperfection of the Wurtemberg schools of industry hitherto, is, that in many of them, indeed, especially in the towns, the instruction continues throughout the year, and only part of these permanent establishments is closed during the sheep-shearing, hay-making, fruit-gathering, and harvest, in general when agricultural labour is the most urgent; but that the number of these schools of industry is still greater, especially in the villages, which are open only in the winter months, or at least are frequented only in those months by a great number of children. This is very much to be regretted, because it is just in summer that the better weather and better roads give the children more temptation and more opportunity for idleness and begging; and the limitation of the elementary schools to a few hours in the morning (see § 51.) leaves them to themselves, while it is precisely in the summer months that the school-rooms are least wanted for the elementary schools, and might therefore be best employed for the schools of industry, the expenses of warming and lighting them would be spared; and the masters and mistresses of the schools of industry are most of them poor people, too weak for field labour, and consequently not hindered by them, like many masters of the elementary schools, from giving instruction. But the overseers in those places in which the schools of industry are confined to the winter, say the children of the better class of people, are too much engaged during the greater part of the summer in field and domestic employments, and even the children of the poor are so much occupied, while the parents are at work for daily wages, in taking care of the children, house-work, attending the cattle, collecting fodder, or even assisting in field labour, nay, even in the autumn, in gathering in the harvest, winnowing, heckling flax and hemp, that they cannot attend the schools of industry.

There are also schools of industry, in which the instruction is given only in the summer months, and the overseers of such places say, in winter people want their children at home in those hours which the elementary instruction, which is longer in that season (see § 51.), leaves them, to spin their own or other people's flax and hemp, on which they set more value than on knitting and other works; for the same reason the teachers in these schools of industry have in winter less time to devote to the school; that besides the days are too short in the winter for the work in the schools of industry; that the heating and lighting the schools would cost too much; that a place is wanting in the winter, &c.

§ 56. In many places the school of industry is open every day in the week, with the exception of Sundays and holidays only, and in some places they even work on holidays, at least for half a day. In such places as the elementary schools are in summer, open only in the forenoon, and even in winter regularly break up in the afternoon at two or three o'clock at the latest, sufficient time has been found, before and after the school hours, for instructing and exercising the children in work. But in many places the school of industry is connected with the elementary school, and such a division of the lessons has been made, that the children, who are divided into different, generally three, classes, are alternately instructed and exercised now in the usual branches of elementary instruction, now in works of hand.

This arrangement is attended with no difficulty, in those cases especially in which the school of industry can have a room in the same building in which the elementary school is held. There are, however, places where, for want of a separate room, the school of industry is carried on in the same apartment as the elementary school, only on separate forms, and where the pupils, while they are receiving elementary instruction, if it does not happen to be instruction in religion, or they do not want their hands to write, do some work, for instance, knitting, at the same time. In some of these places, however, the school of industry remains closed on fair-days, wood-day and vacation-days.

In some places, too, fewer days are devoted to the school of industry in summer than in winter; but there are others again in which the contrary is the case, and in which, in summer at least, the rainy days are used in addition to the usual industry school days, as such. Lastly, there is a place in which the number of days in the week for attending the school of industry is fixed, but the days themselves undetermined, in order to be able to choose them at all times, according to circumstances. But in far the greater number of the schools of industry, instruction is given only on the two half holidays, generally Wednesday and Saturday afternoon, because in the smaller communities there is generally no separate place to be obtained for the school of industry, and consequently the elementary schoolroom must serve for it, and this is not free, except on the two half holidays.

Hence it is only in some places that the industry school continues for six, seven, eight or nine hours together on each working day (but only on the whole, not for each separate class of children). In some places the number of working hours in summer is greater, in others less than in winter; but as a general rule, it amounts on each working day to one, one and a half, two, and at the most to three, four and five hours.

§ 57. The employment of the children in these schools of industry consists indeed, especially in the villages, for the most part only in ordinary female works for the use of the scholars themselves and their families, such as spinning, sewing, knitting, &c.; but in very many schools of industry, besides these usual works, many others are introduced, according to local circumstances. Besides these works, it is the custom in several such schools during the work to sing and pray with the children; instructive stories are told them, and extracts from the Bible, or from moral works and other writings for young people, are read and explained. They are made acquainted with the rules of the German language, and with subjects of natural history; they are made to learn something by heart, or to reckon off-hand, and otherwise to exercise their understanding. In several places instruction in drawing is connected with the school of industry, and in those of the capital city of Stuttgart the children receive besides, special auxiliary instruction in reading, writing, arithmetic, the German language, scripture history and singing.

With the increase in the number of such public schools of industry and of the scholars who attend them, it becomes indeed more and more difficult to make use of them as a means of affording considerable pecuniary advantage to the children and their families; but they prove more and more to be an excellent means to keep the children from begging, idleness and neglecting the elementary school, to accustom them to order and cleanliness, to excite in them a sense of religion, morality and industry; to accustom them to diligence, punctuality and obedience in their work; and, at least in general, to qualify and inure them to works of hand, by which they may in the sequel, in maturer years, more easily gain their livelihood, or at least earn something, and occasionally save themselves an expense.

§ 58. The smallest number of these schools of industry have a fund of their own. The expense attending their foundation and support is, on the contrary, defrayed in most of them, partly by the profits of the work of the scholars themselves and small sums paid as school-money by those among them who can afford it, partly by other voluntary contributions of the inhabitants of the place, partly by assistance from the local church and community fund, and lastly, by grants from the Central Board of the Charitable Union.

Private Boarding Houses for Poor Children.

§ 59. However, the mere care for providing superintendence, employment and instruction is not all that is required in the case of poor children who have either no parents, or, what is frequently the case, especially with illegitimate children and those of vagrants, parents and other relations bound to maintain and educate them, so poor, weak or immoral, that their education cannot be entrusted to them without fear for the future welfare of the children themselves, and for the public tranquillity and security, or whose parents, for instance, soldiers, itinerant dealers, prisoners, are long absent from their home. In the case of such unprotected children, care must therefore be taken by the public authorities to provide them with lodging, clothing and food, and, in case of sickness, with the necessary medical attendance, medicine and nursing; the public authorities must therefore entirely provide for their physical, religious, moral, intellectual, industrious education.

It was formerly frequently the case that such children were taken in by all the members of their community from house to house, by the day or by the week. However as the object is but very imperfectly attained in this manner, there exists in most places, partly for a long time since, but for the most part only of late, the arrangement that such children are placed in certain private houses with people of good character for a continuance.

In many places such poor children are taken in gratuitously, not only by relations, but also by strangers. As a general rule, however, money is paid for the board of such children received in private houses. Almost in every village there are now at least one or two, and in many large and small towns 10, 20, 30 or 40 children placed in private houses, whose board is paid sometimes by the families of the children or individual benefactors, but for the most part out of the church and other local funds of their community, and but seldom out of the fund of the bailiwick corporation. Two hundred poor and unprotected children of all religious denominations and from all parts of the kingdom are boarded in private houses at the expense of the orphan asylums (§ 61). For the care of unprotected Jewish children, whose number is proportionably greater than that of unprotected Christian children, a separate association was formed a few years ago, which, by collecting voluntary contributions, has placed a number of such children, for their maintenance and education, with worthy families in the country, chiefly Jewish schoolmasters, who receive an annual sum for their board.

Public Houses of Education for Poor Children.

§ 60. In many poor children, however,—

A.) The physical, intellectual and moral weakness, infirmity and corruption has already attained such a degree, especially in the larger towns, where poor children are besides more exposed than elsewhere to temptations of various kinds, that the ordinary private mode of education is no longer sufficient to save them from total ruin; but for a time at least, a more careful attendance, closer inspection and stricter treatment are necessary.

B.) Many children, even though their own corruption is not gone so far, are yet so much exposed, when placed in private houses, to the seductions of wicked parents, relations, &c., that, even with the utmost good will of the foster parents, the intended object cannot be attained.

C.) Very often, too, the foster parents to whom such children are confided for their education, education, do not fulfil the duties they have undertaken, partly from want of good will and from interested motives, partly through want of the necessary judgment and of physical and moral energy; many expect them to make exertions which are out of proportion with their physical strength; nay, there are instances of such children having been actually trained and kept, by wicked foster parents, to begging, lying, cheating and theft.

D.) Lastly, when the physical and moral corruption of the parents and children has reached a certain degree, it is often not possible to find honest people who will take such children into their houses, even when good payment is offered them for it.

Accordingly, the necessity has long been felt of providing public houses of education for such poor children who are either already unprotected and corrupt, or at least in imminent danger of being abandoned and corrupted, besides the education of part of them in private boarding houses.

Public Houses of Education.

§ 61. There have existed, in fact, in the Kingdom of Wurtemberg, for more than a hundred years, two orphan houses for the children of soldiers, vagrants and others, of both sexes, and every religious denomination, and from the whole country, who have lost their parents, or at least one of them, especially the father, in which a considerable number of such children are brought up gratuitously, partly by means of the property belonging to the houses themselves and by voluntary private donations, partly from particular revenues assigned to them, and at the expense of the State.

The children of persons of the better class who are destitute of resources, are sometimes received, boarded and educated gratuitously, by the special favour of His Majesty, in the Catharine Asylum at Stuttgard, which was founded in the year 1818 for the instruction and education of young ladies.

Lastly, there is an establishment for the maintenance and education of deaf and dumb, and blind children, of both sexes, which was founded in the year 1807, at the expense of the State, with a small subsidiary establishment, in which poor children of this class are received gratuitously.

Community, Bailiwick and Private Houses of Education.

§ 62. In these Public Houses of Education, however, only children who are above seven years old, and are in good health, are received, and they are adapted only for a limited number, which is in no case large enough to admit into a public house of education all the children in the whole country who are in want of it. Now such of these children as could not be received into a public orphan house were, indeed, formerly admitted in general into the hospital or other public poor-house of the place (§ 89 seq.), which sometimes happens even now. But as the object is very imperfectly attained in consequence of the very dangerous communications for the health and morals of the children which take place in such houses, with grown-up persons of bad principles, there have been founded, in latter times, in fifteen places in different parts of the country, separate community, bailiwick and private houses of education (refuges) for unprotected children, each of which is adapted to receive only 12, 30, 50, up to 78 children, and in some of which none but children from the town in which the institution is situated, are admitted, but in others, children from the other towns belonging to the bailiwick, or from other bailiwicks, and even from foreign countries.

§ 63. Some of these community, bailiwick and private houses of education, are destined only for Protestant, others only for Catholic children; but in the greater number no difference is made on account of religion. In one of them only boys are admitted, in the others children of both sexes, but in most of them the number of the boys exceeds that of the girls (§ 54). Deaf and dumb, and blind children are admitted in only three of these houses, in which particular arrangements are made for giving them an education suitable to their circumstances; from the others, deaf and dumb, and blind children, or who are otherwise labouring under considerable bodily infirmity, are regularly excluded. One of these establishments is exclusively designed for infants from the cradle to the completion of their sixth year. In the others, the children are not admitted before their fifth or sixth year, for the most part from five to eight years old; one of them, however, receives, besides the older children, infants from one to six years of age. Children above ten years of age are admitted only as exceptions, when the danger of bad example which they might bring into the establishment is not too great, and there is still hope of some good effect from their education during their short stay in the institution. Only in the cases of deaf and dumb children these houses do not wish to receive them before their seventh year, and they are, for the most part, taken in between the ages of seven and twelve; past that age, only as exceptions to the rule. The pupils in these establishments are always kept there till they have completed their 14th or even their 15th year. Deaf and dumb children are, if possible, instructed so far that they may be confirmed, for which reason no fixed time can be named for their quitting the establishment.

§ 64. Only a few of these establishments have, besides their real property in land and building, and the effects in the latter, any capital. Several of them have, on the contrary, debts to the amount of some thousand florins, which, however, in no case exceed the value of their property. The means for founding these establishments are (besides the gratuitous grant of a site and some gifts of timber, without any charge to the public treasury) obtained partly by contributions from His Majesty the King, the Central Board of the Charitable Union, and of the church and community funds of the place and bailiwick, and partly by private donations and loans.

To

To meet the current expenses of these establishments the sum of 36, 40 to 50 florins, and from deaf and dumb children 55 florins, is annually paid for the board of each child admitted either by the family or the community to which it belongs, and, according to the circumstances, money for clothing is also paid. This is, indeed, the general rule; but a great many children are received and educated for a very moderate remuneration, and many quite gratuitously, and the deficiency thus occasioned is provided for (with the exception of some contributions of wood for fuel, likewise without charge to the public treasury,) partly by support from the Central Board of the Charitable Union, and from the church and community funds of the place in which the institution is situated, partly by voluntary gifts of money and goods, among which the presents of His Majesty the King, and of other Members of the Royal Family, are the most distinguished, and by which, in particular, the members of private religious societies, both at home and abroad, and some ladies' societies, who assist these establishments with gifts of linen, stockings, &c. of their own manufacture, are honourably pre-eminent.

Public Houses for the Education of poor Children in general.

§ 65. With respect to the physical education of the children in these establishments, the buildings are throughout constructed in such a manner, that the children are sufficiently protected against all injurious influence of the weather. In the sleeping apartments the boys and girls are separated, and each child has its own separate sleeping-place, with a bed sufficiently, but not too warm. In summer the children are well dressed in linen, in winter in woollen. Their food consists, in the morning, of soup, dinner of vegetables, some farinaceous dish, or meat; in the evening, potatoes, or meat, or both together; between meals they have some bread. Separate apartments are fitted up for children who are ill; they have rather better beds, and are fed entirely according to the direction of the physician, and provided with all necessary medicines and attendance.

With respect to morals, it is indeed a matter of course that among so great a number of children, some of whom come into the institution so very much corrupted and neglected, some disagreeable occurrences are the less easy to be avoided, as, unfortunately, the fathers, mothers, and other near relations of the pupils, nay, even people from whom it could be less expected, exercise an influence over them which is dangerous to their morality. On the whole, however, but few of these children are, in their obstinate idleness and intractableness, unsusceptible of better impressions, and even the most corrupt are never to be despaired of if they are only entrusted early enough to the House of Education.

With respect to the cultivation of the understanding, the pupils of the community, bailiwick, and private houses of education, may be something behind those in the public institutions which have at their command ampler means to pay more and better masters; yet the former perform, in this respect at all events, as much as an ordinary German elementary school in a village.

With regard to habits of industry, on the contrary, however, the local, district and private houses of education seem to have this advantage over the public establishments, that the education in the former approaches more nearly to domestic life, and the pupils in them have more opportunity to learn and to practise, from their earliest age, so far as it can be done without injury to their health, domestic and agricultural labours, than is the case in the public institutions, or than is, indeed, possible in them, on account of their greater extent. In particular, the field-labour connected with many of these smaller houses of education affords the decided advantage, that whereas the pupils in the public establishments can, in general, be brought up only to domestic services and professions which require less bodily strength, in the others the young people are trained so as to become fit for various kinds of service, and particularly qualified and inured for agricultural employments, and for professions which demand more bodily strength.

Even for those pupils who in the sequel learn professions which require less bodily strength, these agricultural employments are very beneficial, because the masters in the country, where most of them settle, generally, besides their profession, employ some time in agriculture, and they are therefore far more serviceable to such masters. But even in general, these agricultural occupations cannot fail to have a very advantageous influence on the sleep, the growth, the health, and the whole physical education of the children; and it is doubtless with reason that the very inconsiderable mortality for which the community, bailiwick, and private houses of education are distinguished, is ascribed partly to the frequent employment and exercise of the pupils in the open air, as well as to the careful superintendence of them.

§ 66. It is true indeed, that, notwithstanding all these institutions, there are still, in many places, unprotected children enough remaining, to whom admission to a public establishment of education would be very advantageous, and many of these establishments could and would receive a greater number of pupils from their own, and even from other bailiwicks, if they were enabled, by sufficient contributions, to defray the expenses of the extended arrangements and the instruction of the children. But, partly, many communities, whose duty it chiefly would be to provide for them, especially for illegitimate children, sometimes refuse to do anything for them because they are apprehensive of encouraging immorality, and partly they really appear to be too poor to do what perhaps they would readily do if they were able.

Poor Youths and Girls above the Age of 14 Years.

§ 67. Partly to retain, by practice, what they have learnt in the elementary schools, and partly to promote the further improvement of the grown-up youth, a Sunday School is kept in every community in Wurtemberg, in the common school-room, where every youth and girl above 14 years of age in the Protestant places to their 18th, and in Catholic places to their 21st year, must go every Sunday, or where there is only one school-room, the youths and girls every Sunday alternately, and attend the lessons for at least an hour and a half, on pain of paying 4 kreutzers, and if the neglect is of long continuance, 6 kreutzers, for every time that they remain away. It may be added, that, according to the existing laws, more care has been lately taken that young persons of this age, unless they are wanted to assist their parents in their domestic and field-work, particularly those who are educated at the public expense, and the poor girls and youths discharged from the penal establishments, do not remain at home with their families, or, out of love to a more unrestrained way of life, endeavour to gain a livelihood as Eigenbrödler,* as they are called, merely by sewing, knitting, &c., but that they try either to engage as servants or learn a trade. Thus the Jewish Orphan Association (§ 59) has for its principal object to educate the poor boys brought up at its expense principally for some trade, according to their abilities and dispositions.

§ 68. In the case of deaf and dumb and blind pupils leaving their institutions, there are indeed many difficulties in disposing of them in this manner. With regard to those who are sound and healthy, the overseers of these establishments likewise complain of the difficulty of procuring for them, when they leave the institution, suitable places in honest and religious families and with skilful masters, and likewise of the indifference of the communities to which these pupils belong, and which, from a selfish apprehension of the concomitant expenses, have an eye only to cheapness. But the overseers of other houses of education have hitherto contrived to meet this difficulty by taking from the magistrates and private persons who deliver a pupil to the establishment, immediately upon admission, a written engagement, by which they bind themselves to do their utmost to find a suitable situation for the pupil on his leaving; and even the other institutions of this kind, notwithstanding these difficulties, have in fact never been without an opportunity to obtain an eligible place for sound and healthy pupils on leaving the institution. Even the association for providing for those discharged from the penal establishments has, partly by written application to its local and district auxiliary associations, partly by sending out a man who is connected with the religious private associations in the country, who personally exerts himself to find such situations for a suitable remuneration, hitherto succeeded in most cases in finding for the young people in the penal establishments, before they are discharged, very acceptable places as servants in honest families and with skilful masters in different trades.

§ 69. As the young people who quit the public establishments of education in their 14th or 15th year have seldom taken, at that dangerous age, the decided direction for their path through life which might strengthen them for the struggle against the power of urgent temptations; as on the contrary it too frequently happens after they have left the establishment and come into other connexions, that bad passions which, during their residence in the institution, were happily subdued, break out with unexpected violence, or new culpable propensities, hitherto unsuspected, manifest themselves; as often even their fathers and mothers, with a deplorable zeal of infatuation or perversity, counteract the measures which are taken for their good when they leave the establishment, and do every thing to disturb the relations in which they have been placed, or to draw them entirely away from the profession which has been assigned them;—considering all this, care is taken not only to give these pupils on their departure the necessary exhortations, and to call upon the masters as well as on the spiritual and temporal overseers to pay particular attention to them, but pains are taken after they have left to retain them in certain connexion with the establishment, directly by reciprocal visits, and indirectly by the distant friends of the houses of education. A superintendence is maintained over their conduct and over their connexions with their masters; they are, as circumstances may suggest, called before the directors to receive exhortations and warnings, and if they have well-founded causes of complaint, endeavours are made to remove them. The same is done in the cases of the young people who have been placed as servants or apprentices by the care of the association for the providing for persons dismissed from the penal establishments; though notwithstanding, as cannot but be expected, especially in the latter class, it not unfrequently happens that such young people run away from their masters or need a warning; yet by far the greater part, especially of the former pupils of the houses of education, conduct themselves well, or are at least easily brought back into the right way by such exhortations.

Especially respecting Poor Girls above 14 Years of Age.

§ 70. With respect to grown-up poor girls in particular, as they are generally at the age of 14 still too weak for what may be properly called service, care is taken in the houses of education (in order that they may obtain admission in the more respectable houses, and till their strength is equal to household labour, may be employed in good families, partly to attend upon children, partly to perform minor services), that they learn particularly spinning, knitting and sewing, acquire some knowledge of washing, ironing and cooking, learn to speak pure German, and have a good external address. Where it is necessary, they are kept in the institution for some months after they have completed their 14th year for this purpose. Those pupils of the houses of education who are qualified to be nursemaids, housemaids.

* "Eigenbrödler," means one who endeavours to earn a livelihood independently.

housemaids, housekeepers, &c., if no other opportunity for procuring them a situation offers, are recommended by the directors of the institution in the news papers for such places. For poor girls who, on account of their weak constitutions, are not fit for servants, arrangements are made in many places that they may at least earn a livelihood as sempstresses or even as mistresses in the schools of industry, to defray the expenses of instructing them out of the public funds, or to give them gratuitously board and lodging during the time they are learning.

Several of the female members of the Jewish Orphan Association have also expressed their readiness to do all in their power for the Jewish girls educated by the Association, when they leave the private boarding house assigned to them, and, together with the care for their moral and religious improvement, to lead them especially to learn and practise female works. Besides this, in many places, poor girls, partly before they enter into service, partly during its continuance, are provided, at the expense of the local funds, with clothes and linen; this is also done, in part, by the public Houses of Instruction and by the Association for providing for discharged penal prisoners, which sometimes also, as an encouragement for them and for others, give rewards to those who have behaved themselves well as maid servants.

But that females dismissed from the penal establishments, who have little knowledge of domestic and agricultural employments, or for whom a suitable place cannot be found before or at the moment of their discharge, may, if possible, find an opportunity of bettering themselves if they wish it, and of earning their bread, in future, in a lawful and regular manner; the Association for such discharged prisoners has made the arrangement that a number of young persons of this description find a refuge, till an opportunity is found of otherwise disposing of them, upon a farm half a league from every other place, and still further from any town. The persons so admitted receive here, in two Christian families who have hired this farm, shelter, with plain but sufficient food; and in case they become ill, the necessary medical assistance and other attendance. Here they find an opportunity of learning as well agricultural business as useful domestic business; and if they conduct themselves in an orderly manner, and are diligent, care is taken to provide them with the requisite clothing, and, if possible, to get them into service with people of good character, and for suitable wages.

Especially respecting Poor Youths, and putting them out as Servants or to Trades.

§ 71. In order that the poor youths to whom opportunity has been afforded of learning a trade, may not be afterwards prevented from exercising it for their own benefit, by want of the necessary means to set them up; and that if they cannot settle elsewhere as masters, they may, at least, be able to obtain a maintenance in their native place; it has become customary of late, when they are put out apprentices, to choose such a trade as does not require any expensive arrangements to carry it on independently, and which is not already overstocked in that place.

In order to facilitate their apprenticeship to trades, those masters who take a poor youth, educated in a public institution, as apprentice, are free from the usual legal restrictions with respect to the time of work and the number of apprentices; and the apprentices themselves are free from the payment of apprentice fees.

In order not to be obliged to pay a premium with such poor apprentices, their board is, in some places, provided out of the hospital kitchen, (§ 90.) But if the premium cannot be saved, either in this manner or by prolonging the time of apprenticeship, a premium is paid for them. For those apprentices who have been educated at the expense of the Orphan-houses, the premium is paid out of the funds of the establishment; for the scholars of some Community and Bailiwick Houses of Education out of the funds of those establishments; for discharged penal prisoners apprenticed to trades by the Association for providing for them, and for other poor apprentices, by the Church or Community Funds of the place in which they have the right of settlement.

Many poor youths are also provided, at the expense of the above-mentioned funds, with clothes, linen, tools, books and money, partly at their entering on their service or apprenticeship, partly during its continuance, and partly also when they leave it, before they set out upon their travels, (*Wanderschaft). The masters of boys apprenticed from the Orphan-house have an additional year's service for keeping them, during their apprenticeship, in clothes and linen.

When such an apprentice becomes ill, he is received and attended in the Orphan-house. In the year 1829, a particular infirmary was opened at Göppingen for sick servants and apprentices, and the foundation of a similar infirmary has been commenced at Ravensburg, (§ 89.)

Sunday Schools for poor Apprentices and Journeymen Artisans.

§ 72. As however the establishments hitherto described do not afford to all poor youths designed for mechanical and other trades sufficient opportunity to acquire all the knowledge which, in the present state of society, is necessary to perfect them in their business, and enable them to practise it in an advantageous manner, a Mechanics' Sunday School was founded at Stuttgart, in the year 1825, for apprentices and journeymen mechanics, who cannot take part in the School of Science and Manufactures connected with the School of Arts in the capital, partly from want of the preparatory knowledge, and partly from want of time and means.

* "Wanderschaft" means "wandering," properly applied to the travels of journeymen mechanics, &c. who, by the old laws, must travel for a certain number of years into foreign parts before they can be admitted as masters in their own country.

means. In this school, they now receive instructions according to the knowledge they have already acquired and to their destination, for three to five hours every Sunday (holidays excepted), in nine classes and nine separate rooms, from 11 different masters, in the following branches:—

A.) In reading well, particularly MS.

B.) In writing, together with exercises in arithmetic, letters and other compositions.

C.) In arithmetic, up to the doctrine of proportions with their several applications, and the doctrine of square and cubic numbers and the extracting of the roots, and particularly in mental calculation.

D.) In geometry, up to the drawing and calculating of geometrical bodies, with the application to arches.

E.) In the elements of mechanics (statics), solid bodies and hydrostatics.

F.) In drawing, especially of simple and compound geometrical forms and figures, household furniture, ornaments, members of the human body and other natural objects, to be copied from designs and plaster casts.

G.) In architectural drawing, with reference to the arrangement of buildings and their construction of wood or stone.

H.) In the modelling of ornaments, heads, animals and other whole figures, after models provided for them.

I.) In the necessary parts of technical chemistry.

Most of the native and foreign mechanics, apprentices and journeymen in the capital take part in this institution, and the masters are in general very well satisfied with their conduct, attention and diligence; only complaints are made that many scholars, especially apprentices, under the pretext that they have been kept by their masters to work, put the workshop in order, go on errands, &c., or without making an excuse at all, frequently come too late to the lessons or entirely neglect them, or even wholly leave the establishment without giving any notice. The expenses of this institution have been latterly diminished by its having obtained the use of the apartments and of the mechanical, technological, chemical and other apparatus belonging to the Government School of Arts and Industry, and some of the Teachers in the latter give instruction in some branches in the Mechanics' Sunday School, without expense to it; the remainder of the expenses are defrayed, partly by certain fees which the mechanics' apprentices at the commencement and end of their apprenticeship, and the journeymen when they are received as masters, have to pay, partly by annual grants from the City Fund, of the central board of the Charitable Union, and of some private individuals, friends to the institution.

§ 73. In consequence of a recommendation issued in the year 1825, mechanics' Sunday schools have been established in the country in most of the considerable towns, and even in some smaller towns and villages, in which schools the mechanics' apprentices and journeymen are gratuitously instructed in singing, correctly speaking the German language, reading and writing, in making estimates of expenses, receipts, letters and other compositions in writing, in arithmetic, geometry and mathematics in general, in drawing, geography, natural history, chemistry and physics, in general technology, mechanics (knowledge of machinery), architecture, &c. It is true indeed that they are not everywhere instructed in each of these branches, but for the most part only in one or some of them, and chiefly in drawing, arithmetic, geometry and composition.

Unfortunately these mechanics' schools in the country are not everywhere attended, or at least not frequently enough by all those who might benefit by them, and several such establishments formerly opened in the country have even ceased entirely after a short existence.

The expenses of these mechanics' Sunday schools in the country are wholly defrayed out of the local funds, only with some small aid from the Central Board of the Charitable Union.

Superior Education of Poor Youths.

§ 74. The poor, and especially the poor youths brought up in the public institutions of education, are not exclusively confined to becoming servants and mechanics, but the road to every other destination is open to them for which they appear to have the requisite bodily and mental qualifications. Several of the former pupils of these institutions are, for instance, now apothecaries, jewellers, printers, booksellers, surgeons, gold-workers, instrument makers, merchants, lithographers, painters, clerks, letter-founders, silversmiths, watch-makers, &c.

Pupils of the Orphan-house, who are intended for the arts and other special purposes, are kept in the institution after they have completed their 14th year, till they have acquired the necessary instruction; and not only with the two public Orphan-houses, but also with one of the private houses of education, small associations of schoolmasters are connected, the first object of which is indeed to educate good teachers, especially for such houses of education, and likewise for the instruction of the deaf and dumb, but at the same time to afford to poor youths belonging to the houses of education the opportunity and possibility to qualify themselves for that profession, which they cannot obtain elsewhere on account of the expense. Pupils of these houses of education have also been already admitted into the theological seminaries. For poor university students there are in Wurtemberg family endowments and other stipends, free table, gratuities, aids towards travelling expenses, &c. The Jewish Orphan Society also intends, in case one of its scholars should distinguish himself by remarkable talents, so that it might seem desirable to give him a superior education, to make application in the proper quarter for this purpose.

Employment

Employment of the Adult Poor.

§ 75. With respect to the adult poor, it is enacted by our oldest laws, that such grown-up poor who would willingly work, but cannot find employment, shall, as far as possible, have means found them by the magistrates to earn a livelihood by their labour; but that lazy idlers who are strong and healthy shall be compelled to work; and according to a recent ordinance the able-bodied restricted in particular (§ 26.), who claim support from the public funds, are bound to take any work for which they have adequate strength, whether it be public or private, which is assigned to them by the local overseers, receiving for it proportionate moderate wages. If they refuse to do the work assigned them, and cannot allege that they can earn something by other work or produce some other excuse, the overseer is authorized to employ towards them the means of compulsion which he is competent to use.

§ 76. Poor persons who have no property, or at least not enough to maintain themselves and their families, enjoy the legal title of every active citizen to participate in the revenues of the community, that is, in those advantages which accrue to the members of the community, independently of their landed property and the quota of their taxation, from the productive property of the community, by a transfer of their usufruct, for instance, common lands, which, in many communities, is a very great relief, because in many places it is so considerable that a family may support itself thereby, if not entirely, at least in a great measure.

A poor community, which had not a sufficient extent of land, obtained, in the year 1826, assistance from the government to purchase woods belonging to the lord of the manor, and to clear and cultivate them, and this without paying the forest tax.

In the year 1818 the government founded, at the public expense, a small Poor Colony in a thinly-peopled and uncultivated part of the country, for poor returned emigrants, and other families reduced by misfortunes, who had resolved to seek their fortunes in a foreign country.

In the year 1821 a clergyman purchased, at his own expense, some acres of land in a similar district, and had it divided into twelve parts, and cultivated by poor persons belonging to the place who had no land of their own, under his personal direction and superintendence. He gave up the tithes that would have come to him, paid the land-tax for them, and left to them, first the whole produce of the land, and at last the property of it, without any remuneration.

Lastly, the law allows the poor to glean in the corn-fields after the corn has been carried in, and to pick up dry wood in the forest, what is called raff and lescholy.

According to old laws, poor persons who still have a house and lands, or at least some little portions of land, and who have suffered by failure of the crops, frost, &c., or who cannot sow their lands, or are unable to dispose of them without great loss, but are still able to work, and have hopes of retrieving their losses in the harvest and autumn, shall be assisted by the communities, which, according as the case may be, shall lend to them from the public fund a sufficient sum, to be repaid as they may be able to do it in course of time, or shall at least give security for them.

The Central Board of the Charitable Union, also, has frequently assisted individual unfortunate farmers who had settled on lands previously uncultivated, chiefly by advances of money without interest, to procure the necessary implements, seed and cattle; it has also lent money, without interest, to a community for the purchase of clover and sainfoin seed for poor burghers; and in order to protect farmers who have not sufficient means to purchase cattle for themselves, and are therefore obliged to make shift with hired cattle against the exorbitant demands of interested cattle-dealers, and to enable them, by purchasing cattle of their own, to reap the full advantage arising from keeping cattle, this Union did, in the years 1823 and 1824, likewise assist, to the utmost of its power, the auxiliary and loan funds recommended by the government and founded in many places for this very purpose, by loans to the communities, to be repaid by instalments, and partly at less than the usual interest. The Central Board of the Charitable Union also takes much pains to introduce branches of culture advantageous to the poorer classes, such as horticulture, planting of orchards, breeding silk-worms, &c., and in parts where they have been hitherto neglected, and particularly to procure to the poor the means to learn and to practise them.

Lastly, it has, for many years, left a part of the annual donation which it receives from His Majesty the King to the fund of the Agricultural Institution at Hohenheim, for the assistance and maintenance of necessitous, well-recommended and diligent pupils of the Agricultural School at that place.

§ 78. Ordinary offices in the community, for instance, that of field-guard, wood or forest-keeper, cowherd, watchman, beadle, gravedigger, or, if they are females, the office of gooseherd, midwife, mistress in the schools of industry (Leichensägerin),* are commonly given to poor persons who would otherwise be a charge upon the community, and who receive a fixed annual salary.

The laws also order that in public works which the communities have executed by daily labourers, labourers, able-bodied restricted, who have a claim to support from the public funds, shall be employed in preference.

* The word "Leichensägerin" means nothing. If it were "Leichensägerins," though not to be found in any German dictionary, it might mean a woman who gives notice of deaths, or who invites to funerals.

In places where the hospitals have lands of their own, and farm them on their own account, poor persons are also employed in preference at suitable wages.

Not only in the year of scarcity 1817, and subsequently, many adult poor have been employed at suitable wages on the public account in other hard work, such as forest labours, planting trees, cultivating waste lands, turf-digging, working in the quarries, limepits, or excavating for antiquities, pulling down old buildings, cutting down avenues of old trees, levelling ground, laying out new public walks or churchyards, draining marshes, cleaning common sewers and streets, working at bridges, roads and canals, &c.

Poor persons who wish to earn something by daily labour for private persons, as well foreigners as natives, are allowed at Stuttgart to signify their intention, and have their names entered at what is called the Burgher-wache (guard-house), where day-labourers are to be inquired for and bespoke, and in winter, when the weather is cold, to stop there some hours and warm themselves.

§ 79. According to the ancient laws, the communities are bound to advance money on loan according to the ability of the poor fund and to the circumstances of the persons, to poor mechanics who cannot begin or carry on their trade without assistance, which sum they are to repay as they may be able to do in time.

The Central Board of the Charitable Union also has very often, but particularly in the year of scarcity 1817, made such advances to mechanics and manufacturers, for instance, of silk, linen, baskets, tobacco-pipes, pottery, &c., or purchased a quantity of their goods, or made application in other quarters for them, especially when at the same time the employment of a great number of poor children or adults was to be expected from the support or extension of their business.

In order also to afford individual poor workmen an opportunity of earning something independently of the manufacturers, the Central Board of the Charitable Union, in the year of scarcity 1817, and subsequently, has exerted itself to the utmost, to introduce in the country new branches of industry, calculated for the poorer class of the population, straw manufactures, lace-making, &c., or to improve, extend and introduce among the poor, older branches of industry, hitherto neglected in the country, or not yet carried on so extensively as they might be. Not only were the establishments for spinning for poor adults and children, which were founded in many places in the last half of the 18th century, revived, but in almost every bailiwick materials for spinning were procured in abundance at the public expense, for the poorest places, and consumed in spinning, knitting and weaving, by the most indigent of the inhabitants. And in order to facilitate the sale of the productions of these institutions for the employment of the poor,—

A.) The sale of their goods was exempt from the excise duty.

B.) In the city of Stuttgart particular magazines were opened for the receipt and sale of such goods, one of the most useful of which is the National Magazine of Industry, founded at Stuttgart in the year 1817, by the Central Board of the Charitable Union, for the promotion of the sale of the produce of the private industry of the poor, particularly females of the country and the capital in reduced circumstances, to whom an opportunity was thus afforded of disposing of their work without disclosing their names.

C.) Both in the capital, and the country, sales and lotteries were established.

D.) The overseers of the orphan-houses, hospitals, mad-houses and penal establishments, were directed to procure such articles as they needed from those establishments in preference.

E.) The requisite steps were taken to obtain for these institutions, where it was possible, employment for the army. And lastly,

F.) Negotiations were entered into with respectable foreign, even transmarine mercantile houses, and with natives of Wurtemberg settled abroad. (See § 81.)

Loans to the more aged Poor.

§ 80. Besides the loans for the special purposes mentioned in § 77, 79, the poor are further sometimes assisted by loans in general.

It was enacted already by an old law, “diligently to help poor fatherless orphans to their marriage and housekeeping, with a serious exhortation to repay if they should be able.”

The object of the community corn magazines is not indeed properly to assist poor people out of them, but that a considerable real and constant stock shall be on hand, to be employed, in times of great distress, for the general good. However, the heads of the communities are empowered to lend some part of these stores of corn, according to circumstances, and not to rich persons, but to the poor, who want corn for the necessary support of themselves and their families, and have none of their own.

In order to maintain, alleviate and improve the condition of the distressed citizen who, without any fault of his own, is unable to obtain credit, the Government recommended, in the years 1823 and 1824, the establishment of distinct corporation loan funds, which have really been established in several bailiwicks, some earlier, in part through the assistance of the General Relief Fund and the Credit Association (§ 18.); some, in more recent times, partly in connexion with the bailiwick savings banks (§ 47.) Particularly, however, in the year 1817, the community overseers were urgently recommended by the Government to furnish furnish the poor citizens with the necessary means of subsistence by loans, bearing interest; and that, in case of great dearth and scarcity of corn in consequence of frost or other causes, poor persons may not be led, for want of being assisted in time with some small assistance, to leave their homes and go a-begging, an ordinance has already been sometimes issued, for instance, in the years 1699 and 1710, which was renewed in 1817, "That the loans and credit given in such melancholy times for the sustenance of the poor shall, in case of sale by auction, have the preference."

Direct Relief of the more aged Poor.

§ 81. But the indirect support of the poor by employment and loans has, however, its limits.

A.) In many places the share of a citizen is only one-half, one-quarter, one-eighth of an acre of common land; the allowance of wood, only one-half, one-quarter, one-eighth of a cord or fathom annually; and in a great many places there is no land fit for culture destined or disposable for this purpose, or it cannot be employed for this purpose, partly on account of obstacles founded on the nature of the land itself, partly on account of external hindrances; for instance, when it is indispensably required as a road, timber-yard, bleaching-ground, clay-pit, a dam against inundations, or for plantations of timber, or as a pasture for cattle, on account of existing contracts, services, rights of property, &c. on account of disagreements among the citizens, &c. Besides this, only actual citizens are entitled to participate in the revenues of the community (§ 76.), and these only so far as the individual rights of members of the community do not interfere, partly only on payment of a certain annual rent. Those who are only settled non-freemen, or assigned to the community (§ 6, 7.), are excluded, unless they have obtained before the promulgation of this law, by virtue of local custom, a participation in the whole or portion of the revenues of the community; and even in this case, the right is restricted to their own persons.

B.) The extraordinary expense incurred in 1817 for public works, was indeed justified at that time by the extraordinary distress; but for the constant prosecution of such works, there would be wanting in most places occasion and opportunity, and at all events the necessary means; nor could the communities well be expected, merely for the sake of employing the poor, to have such works done by them if they are not absolutely necessary, or at least urgently required at the moment, or if they could be performed at a cheaper rate by contract or by statute labour.

C.) In many places there is not always an opportunity to obtain work for daily wages, with private persons, especially in winter and for women and children; or at least the wages at different times of the year, and for many kinds of work, are too small to support a family.

D.) Many poor persons, especially women and children, are not able to follow such agricultural employments and day-labour, for want of the requisite knowledge and experience, of bodily strength, clothes, tools, seed-corn, manure and other things necessary in agriculture.

E.) Even for the employment of the poor which demands fewer requisites of this kind, opportunities are often wanting in many places, especially where there are no manufactures, and few or no mechanical trades, to obtain employment from private persons, at least not every day and for a continuance. But when public institutions for giving employment are in question, great prudence is necessary,— a.) That the price of the raw material may not be raised too much by over-extending a branch of industry, while the wages and the price of the manufactured article are too much depressed, or the sale of the latter even becomes impossible.

b.) That as in such an institution, according to the circumstances, the pay of accountants, superintendents and master, the purchase and keeping in order of the tools and utensils, and the fitting up, keeping in repair, lighting, heating of a separate working room, are to be attended to, the founding and maintaining such an institution, the expense connected with it may not be out of proportion with the advantage procured to the poor by it, and the authorities which incur the expense may not thereby deprive themselves of the means of relieving the other poor, who cannot take part in the benefits of the institution, and of defraying other equally or even more urgent charges. Lastly, c.) That while a poor person is in this manner provided with work and wages, another may not find the source of gain interrupted or cut off by which he has hitherto obtained a livelihood without the assistance of the magistrates.

But when due attention is paid to these very important considerations, it is extremely difficult, in Wurtemberg at least, to find means of employing the poor capable of work, by the intervention of the magistrates, when they are themselves not able to obtain suitable employment, and this difficulty must increase, from year to year, in which the number and extent of the public institutions for employing children increase, and as the employment of the prisoners in the penal establishments (police and workhouses, and houses of correction) is extended.

On this account, there are indeed in the capital, and in some other places, where for the sake of the moral gain a small pecuniary sacrifice is not regarded, particular public establishments for employing the adult poor in spinning and other such work; but they nowhere extend to a whole bailiwick; wherever they still exist, though the poor in them are not fed and clothed, but only employed, their support requires considerable annual aid from public funds; and in most places the establishments formerly opened for the employment of the adult poor have been entirely broken up, with the exception of a part of the inhabitants of the poor-houses, (§ 91.)

F.) Many parents, especially mothers, being engaged in taking care of their young children, in cooking and in the household-work in general, and many children by their tender age and by the legal obligation to attend the schools (§ 57 seq.), are hindered from giving the necessary time to work which they might obtain so as to get a sufficient livelihood by it.

G.) Besides this, experience teaches that persons who have not been accustomed from their childhood to industry and perseverance, and have not acquired a certain, at least general proficiency in works of hand, but, on the contrary, have followed from their youth idleness and beggary, cannot in general, in riper years, even with the best bodily and mental powers, and by the most strict compulsion, be rendered industrious, diligent and capable of performing even the rudest works of hand.

H.) Besides, there are in Wurtemberg, as every where else, a great number of poor persons, who from sickness, infirmities, weakness, idiotcy, advanced age, tender youth, &c. are really physically unable entirely to earn a livelihood by their labour.

I.) Lastly, the communities in Wurtemberg are in general but little inclined to grant loans to poor persons who cannot offer sufficient security for them, or even to be sureties for such poor persons.

Consequently, and especially till the new institutions for the better education of the youthful poor shall have been able to produce their entire effect, there will still remain in Wurtemberg a very considerable number, not only of poor unable or unwilling to work, but also of such as are both able and willing, who cannot be supported otherwise than directly.

Donations to Adult Poor.

§ 82. In many places the local poor are, with this view, allowed themselves to collect gifts in money, food, &c. from the wealthier inhabitants of the place; but in most of these places this kind of collecting of such gifts is limited to the houses of certain of the richer inhabitants, who have given them express permission to do so, and to fixed days and hours, and it is likewise subject to the superintendence of the police; but as a general rule, the poor are prohibited from personal collecting of gifts, even in their own place of residence, (§ 30.) On the other hand, those poor persons in whose cases the above described (§ 45. 75.) indirect means of relief are not applicable, or not sufficient for their necessary support, regularly receive everywhere out of the public funds of the community to which they belong, and under different names, such as alms, gratuity, pension, board, &c., partly weekly, monthly, quarterly or annually, partly without any fixed time, as need may be, gifts according to the wants of the individuals relieved and the ability of the community, sometimes amounting to only one or a few florins, sometimes to 20, 50, 70 and even 100 and more florins, for each person or family in a year. With respect to the extent of these gifts, there is nowhere any general, legal ordinance; but the question, how much is requisite for the necessary (§ 31. 42.) support of each individual or of each family, remains entirely for the consideration of the authorities which have to give the relief.

§ 83. The gifts of money are not always left to be disposed of by the poor at their own discretion, but often expressly to provide for certain expenses; for instance, to pay the school money, to buy school books, to pay apprentice fees, to purchase tools, to pay rent, to buy fuel, clothes or food, to pay the physician, surgeon or apothecary, for the use of the bath; and, in order to be certain of the due application of the money to the intended object, such payments are frequently made for the poor immediately by the public authorities, so that the money does not at all come into the hands of the person relieved.

From the same motive, such gifts are not always made in money, but very frequently in kind; for instance, in books (especially Bibles and Testaments), fire-wood, cloth, clothing, or in corn, flour, bread, warm food, medicine, wine, &c.

Wood, in particular, for cooking and warming the rooms, is distributed gratis in the capital every winter, particularly when the cold is severe, principally to those who already receive public support, in portions of 5, 10, 15, 20, and, in rare cases, even more billets. In very cold winters, when extraordinary gifts of wood are made to the institution, the portion is increased, and the distribution extended to a greater number of necessitous persons, particularly such as have seen better days; or, when this is not the case, wood in very small quantities is delivered by weight, on payment, every evening, to indigent persons who are in want of it. A turf magazine is also established in the capital, from which the poorer class receive on every work-day turf in small quantities, on payment.

In the country, too, firewood is often distributed gratuitously to the poor in severe winters, partly by charitable individuals.

Corn and flour is seldom, bread frequently, given to the poor, partly in consequence of certain bequests. Warm food is at present dressed only at Stuttgard, chiefly for poor families with many children, for persons whose low wages will not provide them with warm food, partly to some who pretend to be poorer than they really are. It is distributed every day, except Sundays and holydays, between 11 and 12 in the forenoon, in portions of a quarter of a masz (a masz in Wurtemberg about a gallon English), partly gratis, partly on payment of one and a half to two kreutzers; those who receive it may either take it home or eat it in the establishment; invalids and weak persons receive, by order of the physician, particular food fit for them and wine, the last in portions of a quarter of a masz. In the year of scarcity 1817, and partly also in 1832, in which, before the harvest, the prices of provisions began began to rise considerably, such soup establishments were set on foot in many parts of the country, particularly in the chief towns of the bailiwick, and in most of these places the arrangements are still in readiness, but no use is made of them in ordinary years, because when the prices of provisions are low, the poor are able to procure their food very cheap in another manner.

§ 84. Every travelling journeyman mechanic who can give a satisfactory proof of this his quality and of the observance of the police regulations, receives in every place where there is an auxiliary guild fund (§ 10.), if he has in vain sought work there, some money for his journey, which, however, he cannot receive more than once in the same place in the course of three months; besides this, travelling journeymen who, without any fault of their own, have fallen into distress, receive aid from the guild fund of the place where they for the time reside. Other poor travellers, who can certify a legal positive object of their journey, when they are in embarrassment, and, without violating the police regulations, apply to a public authority, receive out of the local funds a trifle to set them on their journey.

Poor travellers who, on account of bodily infirmities, are not well able to go on foot, are, so far as can be done without injury to them, conveyed in a waggon or cart, not from place to place, but from station to station, and if they are overtaken by illness, so that it is not advisable to send them any further, their removal is suspended, and they are kept, taken care of, and provided with medical attendance in the place where they happen to be at the time, till they are sufficiently recovered, and till they can be set forward without danger to their health; particularly journeymen mechanics, servants and other strangers who have the itch, or who are attacked in the place where they happen to be, by some other contagious disorder, which calls for the interference of the police unless they can reach their homes without passing a night any where else, are never sent away, without distinction, whether they are natives or foreigners, till they are perfectly cured; on the contrary, all care is taken in the place where they are taken ill, to keep them separate, support and cure them. (See Infirmaries, § 55. 71. 89.)

The expenses are defrayed out of the same public funds that have to provide for the cure of the local poor. In the case of native subjects they may, however, claim an indemnity from the community where the person relieved has his settlement. With respect to the indemnity for the expense of the foreigners, see § 24.

§ 85. For the sick local poor who receive public support, the medicines, especially in epidemic disorders, are always (for other sick local poor, mostly, at least in part) paid for from the public local fund, both in the capital and in the country. The apothecaries who furnish these medicines must make an abatement of 12 ½ per cent. from the usual prices; at Stuttgart they voluntarily abate 30 per cent.

Every poor lying-in woman receives in Stuttgart, besides relief in food, &c., two swaddling clothes, gratis, which remain her property, and the loan of a pillow, which she returns in three months.

All the physicians in the capital attend the poor gratis, but in the country the unsalaried physicians, if they will not do the same, are to refer the poor patients to the paid physicians of the bailiwick, who are obliged, by law, to afford medical assistance, gratis, to poor people at their own houses, as well as to the poor in the public hospitals and infirmaries.

In epidemic disorders, two-thirds of the expense of attending the poor are defrayed from the public treasury.

If a poor person dies, and the expenses of the burial cannot be defrayed out of his own property, or his relations decline to pay them, his body, if it can be done without danger to the public health, is delivered to one of the public anatomical institutions, which pays for the expense of removing it; for the interment of bodies, which, according to this regulation, are to be delivered to an anatomical institution, nothing is allowed (passirt) in any public account; in the contrary case the funeral expenses are defrayed from the public fund of the community to which the deceased belonged.

§ 86. Poor individuals who are very old, sick or infirm, have been long married, who have many children, who contemplate a marriage, the erection of a building, the purchase of a house or land, who have suffered by fire, inundation, frost, hail, damage to their buildings or lands, who have been robbed or suffered bodily injury and the like, receive, according to their circumstances, sometimes relief from the auxiliary guild funds, or from special family or other more general endowments designed for such purposes, or from the Public Gratuity Fund, or the Royal Private Gratuity Fund.

But in cases of injury by fire, hail or inundation extending over the greater part of a community, or over whole or several communities, or entire bailiwicks, or in cases of frost injuring the vineyards, orchards and fields, or uncommonly long and severe winters, or great dearness and general scarcity of provisions, either permission is given by the Government to single communities or bailiwicks to collect voluntary contributions in a limited extent of country, or a general collection of voluntary contributions in money and in kind is set on foot by the Government itself, or by the Central Board of the Charitable Union, or by private associations; in which cases the King and the Royal Family always take the lead in the most munificent manner, and the amount is divided among the sufferers; and in certain cases, where circumstances render it necessary, larger sums are assigned from the public treasury for the relief of the sufferers.

Private Boarding Houses for the Adult Poor.

who have no relations legally bound and able to superintend and take care of them, and who consequently would not be sufficiently relieved merely by a present in money or in kind, are even now, especially in small towns, taken in by all the members of the community in their turn, from house to house, by the day or by the week, or else put out to board in a fixed private house at the expense of the local funds.

Town and District Poor-houses for more aged Poor.

§ 88. But as nobody readily determines to admit such persons to his table and his house, particularly persons affected with the itch and other contagious disorders; and as even the most careful selection of such private boarding houses, with the best superintendence which is possible in such cases, frequently answers neither the expectations of those who provide such accommodation, nor the wants of those intended to be provided, it is very fortunate that, partly so far back as the 14th and 15th centuries, partly in modern and very recent times, almost in every large and small town, and even in some villages, partly by particular endowments for the purpose, partly at the expense of the local funds, a distinct public poor-house, or even several such poor-houses, have been built, or purchased, or taken from debtors in lieu of payment, which were not precisely intended to provide for persons of the above description, but rather to receive foreign vagabonds, and also for fear of the leprosy, plague or cholera; which establishments, founded under various denominations, such as poor-house, beggars-house, hospital, lazaretto, infirmary, leprosy-house, cholera-house, &c. &c., now that the entrance of foreign vagrants is prevented, and the fear of plague, leprosy and cholera is past, can be made use of for the reception of the native poor belonging to the above classes.

§ 89. Many of these houses can, indeed, accommodate only 10, 20, 30 or 40 persons, but many of them are calculated for a hundred or several hundred persons.

As they must be entirely supported from local resources, foreign poor travellers are indeed, (§ 84.) if they are afflicted with the itch, or are attacked in such a place with some other disorder, especially if it is of an infectious nature, calling for the intervention of the police, and they cannot reach their homes without passing a night elsewhere, received into them; but except in these cases, only poor persons belonging to the place itself, and very rarely belonging to other places in the bailiwick.

Formerly it was usual to receive also poor children with or without their parents, into these houses, but latterly the children (§ 59.) are otherwise disposed of, and only married persons without children or single adult poor, are admitted, who for the most part are, as far as possible, kept separate according to their sex, and partly according to other circumstances, especially as prescribed by existing ordinances. Separate rooms for insane and sick persons, particularly for those who have the venereal disease and the itch, are fitted up in these poor-houses, so as to answer, as much as possible, this particular object; and in some cases separate buildings are allotted for this purpose. (See § 71.)

§ 90. In many of these poor-houses, those who are admitted into them have only free lodging and firing, and sometimes clothing; and to provide for their other wants, a weekly, monthly, annual allowance in money or in kind. (See § 82.)

In others, they are directly provided with every thing; that is, they have in the house free lodging, candles, firing, bedding, clothes, food, and in case of sickness medical care, medicine and attendance. In general, in this case, each of the two sexes, or a great number of such persons, nearly of the same class, have a common sleeping room, and a common eating and working room. Sometimes however only two, three or four poor persons together, and often even individual poor have their separate rooms.

In the common sleeping rooms, every person has his separate bed, generally feather beds, such as are usually found in poor independent families.

The clothing is mostly warmer and stronger, but not so good looking and more old fashioned than that of the poorer independent citizens.

The food consists generally in the morning of soup, at noon a farinaceous dish and vegetables, and once, twice, rarely three times in the week of a quarter or half a pound of meat; in the evening of soup, together with milk or potatoes. There are, however, poor-houses where they get no breakfast in the morning; at dinner only farinaceous food or vegetables (not both together), and once a week only, or even but a few times in the year on certain holydays, or even not at all, meat, and in the evening nothing but Soup.* When this diet is furnished by contract, 5, 5½, 6, 7, 8 to 8½ kreutzer daily per head are at present paid for it; besides which, however, the contractor mostly has lodging and firing gratis and the use of a garden.

Besides this, every person receives in most of these houses, 3, 3½, 4, 5, 6 and even 7 pounds of bread weekly, and in some places a few kreutzer every week for snuff; wine is given only where there are special endowments for that purpose, mostly on certain holydays. The sick have better and lighter food and wine, as the physician thinks fit to prescribe in every case.

* The word "Suppe" here and elsewhere translated by the word Soup, has, however, a far more general signification; the proper definition of it being "boiled fluid food, eaten alone, warm, with a spoon." Thus the Germans have water soup, beer soup, milk soup, bread soup, flour soup, wine soup, &c.

§ 91. In some of these houses, more, and in others less, care is taken that the inmates of them do not unnecessarily go out, and that those who are able to do some work are not idle. Some hospitals have lands which they keep in their own hands, and in this case the inmates are employed as much as possible in assisting in the agricultural operations; where there is no land, they must at least prepare the necessary firewood, carry wood and water, help in washing, cooking and other domestic employments; they must spin, wind yarn, knit, sew, make clothes and shoes for the house, &c. In some poor-houses they are also employed in making wooden pegs for shoemakers and tilers, matches, &c.

On the whole, however, the employment of these people in the poor-houses does not produce much; for old, weak, infirm, sickly, &c. persons for the most part seldom want a pretence to avoid working, and many of them are not qualified for regular work, and the overseers of the institution (see § 81.) have no opportunity of giving them suitable employment.

Some voluntary industry is found in such houses only when those who manifest such an inclination receive some little recompense for what they do for the house, and are allowed to enjoy, wholly or in part, the profit of their work for strangers. In this case, old people of 70 or 80 years of age, even blind persons, will employ themselves, as well as they are able, in order to earn a trifle to indulge themselves with a cup of coffee, a glass of brandy, or a pinch of snuff.

§ 92. In some of these houses there are individual almspeople (called rich or Lord's almspeople) who, by agreement, have a separate and better lodging, better bed and clothing, better diet than the other inmates of the house, and who can also claim entire exemption from work. The origin of this is, that in former times persons who had property and strength enough to subsist independently, were allowed, not from necessity, but for their accommodation, to purchase a retreat in the hospitals for life by means of a contract (§ 32.), by which they transferred the whole of the property, or a certain part of it, to the fund of the institution, to which this property fell after their death. Those who have formerly purchased a retreat in the hospitals are treated according to the conditions of the contract. But at present permission to buy themselves in, is, according to recent ordinances, partly no longer allowed, partly to those poor only in whose cases it may be foreseen that they would, in a short time, entirely consume the whole of their little property, and then be necessarily admitted, gratis, into the hospital.

State Poor-houses for Adult Poor.

§ 93. Chiefly for the capital (in which there is, besides a specific civic hospital for aged, weak-minded and infirm poor, and a separate infirmary for the insane, for those who labour under incurable bodily complaints, and for females with venereal disorders, arrested by the police,) and secondarily for the common good of the whole country, there was founded, in the years 1820 to 1828, as a monument to her Majesty the late Queen Catharine, a new infirmary at Stuttgart under the name of the Catharine Hospital, which contains 72 large and small rooms, and accommodation for 300 beds, and it is divided into a lying-in hospital and an infirmary, in which latter persons are received who suffer under a curable internal or external bodily complaint.

This infirmary owes its origin and first arrangement to the voluntary contributions collected for erecting a monument to the late Queen, to the liberality of the King and the Royal Family, and to the grant of a contribution from the public treasury, but the current expenses, so far as they are not covered by the property of some old poor-houses in the city which have been dissolved, by donations and legacies, and by the contributions of the persons entitled to the advantages of the institution, are defrayed only to the amount of one-third out of the public treasury, and the other two-thirds out of the public funds of the City of Stuttgart; poor pregnant women and invalids of the description for whom it was intended are admitted in preference if they are taken in labour or fall sick in the territory of the city, and, only when there is room, such as come from other parts of the country; if the latter are in want of special assistance, for instance, an operation, of the aid of a Stuttgart surgeon or oculist, or of particular arrangements which are to be found in the house.

Gratuitous admittance, attendance and care in this house may be claimed by—

A.) All poor having a settlement in the city of Stuttgart, for whom the city fund would have to pay an indemnity, whether they are citizens or not, and, without distinction, whether they are admitted to the enjoyment of public alms, or only [word illegible] for sick days in general, or unable to pay for the longer duration of their illness, and in need of assistance.

B.) All poor foreigners, male and female, who, on their passage through or during a temporary stay in the territory of Stuttgart, are overtaken by the pains of labour or illness, and, in the opinion of the physicians, cannot be sent away on their journey without danger to their own health or to the public, unless, by existing contracts, some foreign public fund is declared to be bound to give an indemnity for them. (See § 24.)

An equitable indemnity, modified according to circumstances, must be given—

A.) By persons in the class of servants, for whom the fund of the insurance against cases of sickness, established in Stuttgart, has to pay an indemnity.

B.) All poor natives whose settlement is out of the territory of the city of Stuttgart, for whom their community has to pay an indemnity, whether they are wholly destitute of means or only need temporary relief for this special occasion.

C.) All poor foreigners overtaken by sickness in a community beyond the territory of Stuttgart, who are brought to the institution at the expense of that community.

WURTEMBERG.

D.) All poor prisoners who are under trial, or in the penal establishments, for whom an indemnity is to be paid by the local police fund of Stuttgart, or by the public treasury.

§ 94. In the year 1803, a public infirmary, belonging to the whole country, and amply provided with every requisite for the cure of diseases, was founded at Tübingen by the name of the Clinicum. In this institution most of our native physicians and surgeons have received their education. It consists of a medical clinicum ambulatorium, a surgical ambulatorium, a fixed surgical clinicum, and a clinical lying-in hospital, with a school for midwives. In this establishment the most desperate cases, and even patients who have already been declared incurable by the physicians, to whatever part of the kingdom they belong, may seek their last refuge. The women and sick are not only treated and nursed gratuitously, but even, according to circumstances, assisted at their departure with a small sum for their journey.

§ 95. Particular baths for the poor are attached to some of the establishments in Wurtemberg. Thus there is a Royal foundation, by which a certain number of indigent, infirm subjects are entitled to enjoy at Ball, for 24 days together, free lodging, with a complete bed, free board and firing, and the use of the sulphureous baths in that place, with the attendance of the physician to the baths. In like manner, and also by an endowment of the present King, a number of poor persons may enjoy at the Wildbad, for 24 days together, and under the special care of the physician to the baths, not only free use of the bath and lodging, but also board and attendance, gratis, in a distinct building properly fitted up for the purpose. The community to which the poor here received belong, has only to provide for their conveyance thither, and in case the cure should take more than 24 days, to take on itself the charges of board and other expenses, and in case of death, to pay the expenses of the funeral.

§ 96. For insane and melancholy persons from all parts of the kingdom who require to be more carefully guarded and more attentively superintended, a madhouse was established in the year 1746 at Ludwigsberg, in connexion with the house of correction and poor-house in that place; but in the year 1812 this institution was entirely separated from the house of correction, and transferred to the ancient monastery of Zwiefalten; and in the year 1833 in the ancient Castle of Wümenthal an entirely new institution for the cure of persons with disordered intellect from all parts of the kingdom, was established; besides which the madhouse Zwiefalten is now continued chiefly only as a place of security for lunatics, without, however, entirely excluding the prosecution of the cure. Both the establishments were founded and fitted up entirely at the expense of the state, and the current expense is likewise paid by the state, so far as it is not covered by legacies and donations; but a certain sum per annum must be paid to it for every patient admitted, which, if the patient has not sufficient property of his own, or if it cannot be paid by contributions from relations bound to support him, or by other private assistance, must be defrayed by the local funds which are bound to support the patient.

§ 97. An establishment for the care of adult blind persons from the whole country was founded in the year 1832 at [name of place illegible], under the name of Asylum for the Blind. It was indeed opened by a private association, and, for the present, with a small number of blind persons. The institution has a twofold object:—

A.) In the case of those blind persons who in their own home might indeed find a suitable asylum, but not an opportunity to learn and to practise works of hand adapted to their condition, to procure them such an opportunity by a residence for a shorter or longer time (one, two, three or four years) in the institution, and, according to circumstances, by subsequent continued connexion with it, chiefly by furnishing them with the necessary raw material for their work, and providing for the sale of the manufactured article.

B.) To afford employment and an asylum to blind persons who want, in their own homes, not only this opportunity, but also a proper asylum.

Prisons.

§ 98. With respect to the prisons, see the Appendix.

Support of certain particular Classes of Poor.

§ 99. Besides the above described general establishments for the poor, there are also separate institutions for certain particular classes of poor, particularly for the class known by the name of modest poor (Verschämter armen). Among these are—

A.) For noble ladies, a family foundation at Obristenfeld;

B.) For officers and servants of the Court, a pension fund, a widows' fund, and a Court infirmary;

C.) For the widows and orphans of the Royal Chapel, a separate pension fund;

D.) For the military and the jager corps (land jagercorps) gratuities, pensions, hospitals and an infirmary;

E.) For clerks, &c. in the post-office, a pension fund;

F.) For the clergy, a clerical widows' fund, table-money (Tischtitel), various gratuities, &c.;

G.) For schoolmasters, participation in the clerical widows' fund, separate funds for schoolmasters' widows, gratuities, &c.;

H.) For

- H.) For other public servants, a pension fund, gratuities ;
 I.) For persons not public servants, a general private widows' and orphans' pension fund, State Gratuity Fund, &c.

The Effects of the preceding System of Management of the Poor on the Morals and Number of the Poor.

§ 100. If we now compare the situation of one of the poorest of the Wurtemberg poor, who support themselves independently by their labour without external aid (see § 40.), with that of one of the more favoured of the Wurtemberg poor who lives by public charity, for instance, the inmate of an hospital (§ 90 & seq.), and even of a prison (§ 98.), it might certainly appear that the condition of the latter is preferable to that of the former.

In fact, we often see such hospital inmates, and even prisoners, attain the most advanced age, while many a poor day-labourer and artisan sinks at a much earlier age under the weight of his cares and the want of necessaries. In fact, many an inmate of an hospital and many a prisoner, even with bodily infirmities and sufferings, still seems to find his condition quite comfortable, and shows himself thankful for the good which he enjoys, while many a day-labourer or artisan in the enjoyment of good bodily health feels himself miserable and curses his existence ; in fact, many a one seeks admission into the hospital who would be very well able to provide himself with necessaries by his work at home. In fact, the man often separates from his wife, or the wife from her husband or from the children, to be received into the hospital. In fact, many a one does not economize, but squanders what he has, and does not work in order to earn something, because he thinks that he always has the right of being received into the hospital as a last resource. In fact, in many places where there are rich hospitals and other foundations, the number of the poor is proportionably greater than in places where less is done for their support. In fact, many a one continues to beg and to steal who has already been frequently imprisoned for these offences, because he finds his situation in the workhouse very tolerable in comparison with the laborious life of a poor man at liberty.

§ 101. Yet where, which is often the case, the liberality towards the inmates of the hospitals rests upon special endowments made expressly for this purpose, where the founders have positively declared their intention that the poor, whom they meant to benefit, should not only live, but in some measure enjoy their life, would it be right, in such cases, to act contrary to the will of the founders? Would it be right, even in cases where without the assistance of express endowments, there are ample means to be liberal to those of the hospital inmates (and of these there are certainly not a few) who have been compelled to seek a refuge in the hospital, not in consequence of prodigality or idleness, or in general by their own fault, but through unmerited misfortune, poverty, bodily or mental infirmities, debility or sickness. Is it possible to distinguish, in an hospital, between those who have fallen into decay without any fault of their own, and those who are themselves the cause of their misfortunes? And does not humanity require, even with respect to those who are actually to blame for having been obliged to seek refuge in an hospital, or having brought themselves into prison, that we should not be too niggardly, as long as we are able, without unjustly favouring them at the expense of other more needy and more deserving poor, and thereby depriving the latter of necessaries?

However, the situation of the inmates of an hospital, even of those which are the most liberal to their inmates, is by no means so enviable as from the above comparison (§ 100.) it might seem to be. Frequently their residence is embittered by their being obliged to live together with rude, quarrelsome, mad, silly and disgusting persons. Many embitter their own lives by a discontentedness, which may either be natural to them or communicated by others. Many dislike the kind or the quantity of the work allotted to them, the restrictions with respect to the time of going out and returning home, which are prescribed by the regulations of the house. Prisoners, in particular, consider the loss of their freedom as an intolerable burden. Besides this, too, the treatment is by no means in general and in every poor-house so good as it is represented in the above comparison ; hence it is not the case with all the poor received into a poor-house, that they have voluntarily sought admission there, or that they voluntarily and willingly remain in it ; hence, too, the applications for admission to these houses are not every where equally pressing ; hence the assertion that the existence of such houses increases the number of prodigals, idlers and poor, cannot be taken as generally correct.

At all events, the above comparison applies to the actual inmates of the hospital, rather than to those poor who are relieved only by money and commodities, or by finding them employment ; for the relief which they receive in this manner is in most places dealt out with so scanty a measure, that their situation is little or not at all better than that of a healthy poor person, who maintains himself independently by the labour of his hands, without external assistance. The independent poor man always has the cheering consciousness of maintaining himself and his family by his own exertions, and of enjoying the respect of his fellow citizens, which is always lost in a greater or less degree by the poor man who receives relief, to whom, in the eyes of the better classes, a kind of disgrace attaches, which must often fall on the idle, who is excluded from elections of the community, &c. restricted in marrying, &c.

§ 102. According to the Population Returns which the Government causes to be made, the following are the numbers of persons, out of the whole population of the kingdom, stated as receiving alms :
 P. L. (F.) 4 C 4 the

But according to a return made at the instance of the Central Board of the Charitable Union, on the 1st of January 1819, there were at that time, in the whole kingdom, 63,367, and according to a return made by its direction on the 1st of January 1820, there were 64,896 poor; namely :

Poor orphans	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4,645
Unmarried adult poor	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	13,389
Poor families, 15,154, consisting of individuals	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	46,862
Total	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	64,896

The difference between the numbers stated by the Government and those of the Charitable Union, arises from the circumstance, that in the Government Population Returns, only those are enumerated as receiving alms who were actually in receipt of them, kept house themselves, or at least were to be considered as independent members of a community not depending on any other family; but in lists of the Charitable Union, all those are included, even women and children, who for want of property or of strength, or of an opportunity of employing it, were at that time in want of assistance from others.

Since that time no enumeration of the poor has been set on foot, either by the Government or the Charitable Union; but as the numbers estimated in the years 1819 and 1820 were doubtless increased for the moment, in consequence of the years of scarcity, 1816 and 1817, and from that date better times have come, and as the Charitable Union was only founded in the year 1817, and has since done so much to improve the condition of the poor, and especially for the better education of the youthful poor in Wurtemberg, it may be confidently affirmed that the number of poor persons requiring relief in the kingdom does not exceed 50,000, though the effect of many measures adopted latterly, especially with respect to the better education of poor children and the restrictions on the marriages of the poor, cannot, in the nature of things, have yet manifested their influence on the present generation of adult poor, and will not be felt till the next generation; consequently there is in Wurtemberg, upon an average, only one poor person to 30 inhabitants, whereas in most other countries this average proportion appears to be much more unfavourable.

Effects of the present System with regard to Beggary.

§ 103. It has already been observed, under the several heads, that, and why, the above system of the Government with regard to the management of the poor has by no means been every where carried into effect.

Even in many communities, where the requisite pecuniary means would not be wanting, there are yet wanting, from a deficiency of judgment and good will, many institutions which must be supposed as existing, if the local poor are to be deprived of every pretext to allege that they are driven to beggary by want; and in many really existing charitable institutions all those poor persons who should participate in them do not however do so, or at least not regularly, which they must do if they are to be restrained from beggary and led to gain their own livelihood. In many such cases the laws do not admit of any direct compulsion; and even when such compulsion might be legally employed, prudence advises not to make use of it, because in many instances friendly exhortation and encouragement, examples in the neighbourhood, the waiting for a change of persons, or some other favourable conjuncture, and in general patience, lead more securely to the object than any imperative interference.

Besides this, many communities really have not the pecuniary resources required for completely carrying into effect the system of the Government.

There are communities which have so many poor that they may indeed be able in ordinary times, with a little exertion, to afford them the necessary support out of their own resources, but might no longer be able to do so in case of any extraordinary misfortune.

There are also communities where the number of the poor is so very great, that they are not indeed left entirely without relief, yet even in ordinary times cannot possibly be so far supported by the less indigent part of the community to which they belong, as to deprive them entirely of the pretext of being obliged by necessity to seek relief elsewhere. Lastly, it is precisely through the improvements of the police regulations that a number of formerly homeless poor, who, as basket-makers, brush-makers, buckle-makers, knife-grinders, saw-filers, tinkers, &c. used to roam all over Germany, generally with their whole family, and when they did not entirely obtain a livelihood by those trades, endeavoured to supply the deficiency by begging, and occasionally perhaps by cheating, stealing and robbery, were crowded together in a proportionably small number of places in Wurtemberg, where the land-owners had formerly taken them under protection, as it was called (§ 6, 9.), partly out of self-interest, partly out of mistaken religious zeal, and sometimes only out of vanity or thoughtlessness. As most of these places have no territory, or at least of very inconsiderable extent, as the half, the third, the fourth-part possess neither land nor property sufficient to carry on a regular regular trade, and as these places are precisely those which have the least property belonging to endowed establishments or to the community, it is evident that such communities are utterly unable to fulfil their legal duties towards their poor inhabitants, who have no share in the land nor any other property, and who for the most part have not been brought up from their youth to any hard labour. If we at the same time consider that even in places where all the necessary public establishments exist, where all poor children are regularly kept to their attendance at the elementary and industry schools, all the adult poor able to work made to attend the public institutions destined to afford them employment, where all the poor incapable of work either receive sufficient support from the public funds or are admitted into the existing poor-houses, no police can hinder individual attempts of foreign beggars from entering the kingdom, or the native poor to get something by begging, especially so long as the public will relieve beggars, does not denounce them to the poor establishments or the police, nay, even frequently conceals them from the police when it is in quest of them, or actively takes their part against the police. No one will be surprised by the confession, that it has not yet been possible entirely to extirpate beggary in Wurtemberg.

§ 104. However, the measures taken to keep away foreign beggars cannot possibly be without effect; and with respect to the native poor, at least the many poor children who now attend the infant, elementary and industry schools, and are received in private boarding-houses and houses of education, the many poor young people who by the intervention of the magistrates are provided for as servants, apprentices and journeymen, and attend the Sunday schools, the older poor who, by means of the magistrates, obtain employment either at their own homes or at the public institutions, and who are in private boarding-houses or the public poor-houses, do not beg during the hours that they are in those establishments. A very great number of poor persons are certainly kept from begging by these establishments who, without them, would certainly be mendicants, but are now always led and induced to gain their own livelihood. By this means the number of beggars in Wurtemberg must certainly continue to decrease, whereas in many other countries it is increasing in a frightful degree.

In fact, ever since the year 1807, in which the first decisive steps were taken to keep foreign beggars out of the kingdom, and to repress the practice of mendicity by the native poor, the number of beggars in Wurtemberg has evidently decreased considerably. It is now extremely rare to see a foreign beggar in Wurtemberg. Only the travelling journeymen artisans, both foreigners and natives, are seen; it being more difficult to watch them, as they are travellers, often at great distances from their home, begging sometimes on the road, sometimes at house-doors, for a trifle, either to buy food or to pay for a night's lodging. But they are satisfied with the smallest current coin in the kingdom ($\frac{1}{2}$ kreutzer) and generally soon fall into the hands of the police. The inhabitants of the poorest places in the kingdom (§ 103.) do indeed still frequently importune in the neighbouring country, partly under the protection of the travelling licenses granted them to carry on a little trade, partly too under the pretext of bodily infirmities or of losses by fire or hail, &c. Such people, knowing very well that the peasantry are more able to give commodities than money, seldom ask for the latter, but more frequently for the produce of the field, corn, potatoes, fruit, hay, flax, hemp, &c. (which they also occasionally pilfer); and in the houses they ask for flour, bread, milk, butter, lard and warm food; of persons who have just killed a hog, they beg for meat, sausages, &c.; of sugar refiners, for treacle; at village fairs, for cakes, beer, brandy, sometimes even for clothes, household utensils; at night, for a night's lodging, &c.; and people seldom refuse such a request, partly out of good nature, partly from fear of their revenge. The vigilance of the police, however, for the most part confines this species of beggars to within a short distance of their own home, and the Government, which is at present devising the means of better providing for people of this description, will doubtless be able to put an end to such practices. Besides, it is only the begging of the local poor respecting which more complaints are made in many places, in proportion as the present police regulations hinder them from going to beg elsewhere. But the greater inconvenience arising from this has, in better times, induced many local magistrates to approach nearer to the system of the Government for providing for the poor, and it is to be hoped that this species of mendicity will also be more and more limited, by the amelioration of the local institutions for the poor.

Conclusion.

§ 105. This is the present system of the Government of Wurtemberg, with respect to the management of the poor. It sees at present no grounds for any essential changes in it; less essential improvements will be adopted as often as a change in temporary and other circumstances shall call for them; when new observations, investigations and experience shall give occasion for them; or further consideration, experiments or the examples of other states shall offer new means for introducing such improvements.

Should further more detailed accounts of any of the institutions here mentioned be wished for, they will, if called for, be communicated with great pleasure.

 MY LORD, Stuttgart, July 4th, 1834.

Enclosures (A.) to (E.)

WITH reference to my Despatch of the 22d of May, I have now the honour to enclose various translations of dietaries, &c. belonging to different prisons and charitable institutions in this country, together with a table approximating as nearly as possible the weights, measures and money of Wurtemberg with those of England. I do not think it worth while to forward the whole of the dietaries I have procured, as they are a mere repetition of those I send.

I beg at the same time to add a copy of the statutes of the poor establishment at Weinsberg, which I have been enabled to obtain, and which gives an excellent idea of the system in general pursued in this country. I am obliged to send it in original, on account of the great difficulty of getting an accurate translation made here.*

I have the honour to be, &c.

The Right hon^{ble} Lord Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

In the Year 1827-28 the Average Expense of a Prisoner amounted to —
All charges included - - - - -
Expense, after deduction of the Prisoners' earnings -
Real expense, after deduction of all receipts and outlays of the Establishment - - - - -

In the year 1827-28 the average cost of a prisoner in the different prisons of Wurtemberg amounted to 54*fl.* 5 ktz. 2 heller. And including the expenses of the Prisons Commission, 56*fl.* 4 hellers.
In the House of Correction, Gottes Zell, the earnings of the prisoners amounted, in the year 1827-28, in the whole, to 6,483*fl.* 15 ktz.; so that each prisoner had earned, 29*fl.* 4 ktz. 2 heller. Of this sum the prisoners received, as the produce of the extra work done by them, 1,591*fl.* 23 ½ ktz. which averages for each prisoner 7*fl.* 8 ktz. There are prisoners who have saved from 20*fl.* to 36*fl.*
In the House of Correction, Ludwigsburg, the earnings amounted to 18,732*fl.*; for each prisoner, 22*fl.* 45 ktz. 3 ½ heller.; of this sum, 1,474*fl.* are for extra work of the prisoners, averaging 1*fl.* 47 ktz. 3 h. per head. Some prisoners have saved from 34*fl.* to 10*fl.*, which have been paid to them on quitting the prison, or it has been paid to their families.
In the Police Houses, as the imprisonment is of too short duration, the extra work done by the prisoners is very trifling.

BAVARIA.

BAVARIA.

LETTER from Lord Erskine to John Backhouse, Esq.

Sir,

Munich, 5 January 1834.

IN compliance with the orders of Lord Palmerston, which you transmitted to me in your letter of the 30th November, I have now the honour of forwarding to you a detailed account of the laws and institutions within the kingdom of Bavaria relative to the poor, and of the legal and charitable provisions for their support.

In giving my answers to the questions which you transmitted to me, and which have been drawn up by the Poor Law Commissioners of England, relative to the condition of the poor, I have adopted the plan of marking on the printed list of questions a reference to my communications on that subject, inclosed in this despatch, according to the different articles mentioned, because there would not have been room enough on the printed paper itself to have answered fully the questions contained in it.

Upon carefully examining and considering these poor laws of Bavaria, I have come to the conclusion in my own mind that they are useful, and well adapted to the purposes for which they were intended, because by the establishment of the poor institutions (as they are called), by districts over the whole kingdom of Bavaria, with sufficient power by law to carry their provisions into execution, the great and important object is attained of giving relief and support to the aged, helpless and sick, and finding work in workhouses or at their own homes, at a moderate payment, for those who cannot otherwise obtain it; for which purpose a register is to be kept by the guardians of the poor of all those persons who are in want of work, and who are therefore either a burthen upon the parish, or are likely to become so, as also a list of those who wish to employ workmen, in order to endeavour to arrange between them the terms of employment; and that this object may be the more easily attained, the directors are required to be in continual communication with the overseers of public works, the masters of manufactories, with individual proprietors, and societies; and that where there are a quantity of hands capable of work, they are to be passed into that part of the country where they are most wanted; but whenever it may happen, that notwithstanding all inquiries and exertions, the necessary work cannot be obtained, in such cases materials and tools are to be distributed to those paupers who may be in want of them, to be used at their own houses; and if in larger towns the number of those paupers should be very great, houses are to be opened and maintained at the expense of the institutions for the poor, in which the paupers who are out of work are to be employed; but the number of paupers to be so employed is always limited to those who have not had a reasonable offer of work from any other quarter. But the great cause why the number of the poor is kept so low in this country, arises from the prevention by law of marriages in cases in which it cannot be proved that the parties have reasonable means of subsistence; and this regulation is in all places and at all times strictly adhered to.

The effect of a constant and firm observance of this rule has, it is true, a considerable influence in keeping down the population of Bavaria, which is at present low for the extent of country, but it has a most salutary effect in averting extreme poverty and consequent misery.

I am, &c.

Erskine.

BAVARIA.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any and what effect,

- 1st. On the industry of the labourers?—Industrious.
- 2d. On their frugality?—Frugal.
- 3d. On the age at which they marry?—At various ages.
- 4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—Generally affectionate towards each other.
- 5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law “Extracts.”)—Compared with the paupers, have more comforts, and are better off every way.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—Good labourers 8*d.* a day; generally provisions in harvest time.
2. Is piece-work general?—Not very general.
3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—In the country parts there are very few day labourers, as almost every person has some little ground of his own, and few are rich enough to hire labour except in towns, where it is of course different, and varying from 8*d.* to 16*d.* a day, according to their merit.
- 4 to 22. Not answered.
23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Marriages prohibited by law, unless the parties can prove that they have competent means of support.
24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Savings seldom considerable.
25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Generally improvidently placed.

COPY of the BAVARIAN POOR LAWS, enclosed in Lord Erskine's Despatch to J. Backhouse, Esq., of the 5th January 1834.

PROPOSITIONS for INSTITUTIONS for the Relief of the POOR.

I. Division.—Treats of the Formation of these Institutions, their Destination in general, and their Rights.

- Art. 1.—Institutions for the poor are to be established every where, and are to be kept up with care.
- 2.—They are to enjoy the rights which the law allows to pious institutions.
- 3.—They are to be the heirs of those persons who had been supported during their lifetime by the means of these institutions, unless they have poor relations.
- 4.—These institutions are exempted from all stamp duties and fees.

II. Division.—Concerning their Establishment.

- Art. 5.—Each town, market and village, is to have an institution for the poor; but if several villages wish to unite in forming one of these institutions, it is not only to be permitted, but every facility is to be afforded it.
- 6.—Each provincial district (landgericht) must have an institution of its own.
- 7.—All the inhabitants of such district are obliged, according to their means, to contribute to that purpose; each person is, besides, bound to continue to support those poor relations whom the laws direct him to maintain.
- 8.—The claims for relief are to be fixed according to the laws of their district (heimath gesetz.) Sometimes in cases of great necessity, relief is allowed to strangers who do not belong to that parish.

III. Division.—Concerning Overseers and Assistants.

- Art. 9.—The overseers consist (unless it is otherwise determined) of the directors, of the police, commissaries and magistrates.
- In cases where medical aid is necessary, they are to be attended by physicians who are appointed by the State.
- 10.—In towns and larger market-towns, besides the above-named overseers, a council is to be formed, consisting of the clergyman and the mayor and persons deputed by the magistrates and all classes of the people, in proportion to the number of inhabitants of each place.
- 11.—In smaller market-towns the clergyman and deputies from the peasants form this council.
- 12.—When several villages join together to form one of these institutions, a general committee is to be formed.

13.—The

13.—The members of the council for the institutions for the poor are to be elected in the same way as the magistrates and mayors (burgermeister).

When several parishes are joined together a deputy is to be chosen from each, and again, several are elected from among these, who are to take immediate charge of the affairs. Each deputy is chosen for three years, and is obliged to perform his duties without remuneration; no inhabitant is allowed to refuse to perform his functions the first time he is elected; extraordinary merits in the service of the poor are to be publicly distinguished.

IV. Division.—Concerning the sphere of Action of these Institutions.

Art. 14.—The particular duties of the institutions of the poor are, 1st. To examine into the state of the poor; 2d. To provide for their wants; 3d. To take them under moral and civil inspection; 4th. To find out the necessary resources, to administer and apply them.

V. Division.—Of the Description of Poverty and of the State of the Poor.

Art. 15.—The condition of the poor is to be ascertained and described.

The preliminary inquiries and remarks for that description are to be collected by the members of the council and their deputies, according to the order that has been before agreed upon, or by assistants chosen by them; in towns the co-operation of the police may also be made use of.

16.—Every body who wishes to partake of the relief of the institution for the poor, is to be accurately questioned, and his present abode, his christian and surname, his religion and age, his birthplace, his right to his present abode, the cause of his poverty, the state of his expectations of property, the state of his body, his trade or occupation, his capability or incapability of working, and his former or present wages, his relations, or the persons who are also obliged to support him, and what he enjoys from them, what he receives besides public means or from the hands of private benefactors, and the kind and magnitude of his supposed wants are to be written down.

17.—If the person who seeks relief is married or a widower, every member of his family is to be described; and in families in which there are children who are capable of learning by the means of a school, he is to remark whether, where, and with what effect they attend the schools and lessons of religion.

18.—With regard to such persons as demand a participation of the institution for the poor on account of the malformation of their body and the state of their health, a medical examination is to take place if these circumstances are not visible to the eye.

19.—All the claims and declarations of those who wish for relief, are to be generally examined by diligent inquiries, and if necessary, to be confirmed by formal certificates, and besides this, their moral and civil conduct is to be mentioned in the description.

20.—The foundation of these descriptions is to be, 1st. Whether the described are really to be regarded as poor? 2d. Whether they have claims on the institution of that district or parish? 3d. In what kind and to what amount relief is necessary? 4th. How long the same is to last?

21.—Each description which occurs in the course of the year is to be dated with the day, month and year in which the same was formed. And after the addition of what has been determined (Art. 22), this description is to be arranged in consecutive numbers, and completed with a reference to these numbers, and the alterations are to be followed up each time.

22.—Every year, before the approach of winter, there is to be a general description of the poor, and after that the certificates are to be corrected and renewed.

23.—No pauper is exempted from personal attendance on those who are appointed over them for this description, except those who are prevented by illness or some other equally important reason, or who, on account of their reduced circumstances, are ashamed to appear, and are allowed to absent themselves by the pledges of at least two members of the institution.

VI. Division.—Of the Charge of the Poor.

Art. 24.—By the public care for the state of the poor, private benevolence towards single persons is not prevented; yet it must neither prejudice the public obligations of each man towards the institution for the poor of the district or parish, or interfere with the ordinances against begging.

25.—That public charge is brought into action into the following manner:

- 1st. By institutions for working.
- 2d. By institutions for taking care of people who are unable to work.
- 3d. By institutions for alms.

VII. Division.—Of the Workhouses.

Art. 26.—The principal attention is to be given to those who are only incapable of serving and working on account of their want of tuition, and are still capable of receiving that tuition from their age. These are to be taught either without remuneration or at the expense of the institutions for the poor.

BAVARIA.

27.—Besides this a register is to be kept, which is to contain a detailed list of those persons who are out of work and service, and who for that reason are either a burthen to the parish, or on account of their continuation of their want of work, would soon be a burthen to it. Not only those who wish for work are to be put on this list, but also those who are looking out for workmen. The kind of work which they can perform is to be mentioned and compared on the one hand, and on the other the kind of work required, and they are, if possible, to satisfy each other's wants reciprocally.

28.—That this end may be the more easily attained, the directors are required to be in communication with the overseers of public works, the masters of manufactories, with proprietors and societies, &c. &c. If necessary, the councils of the different parishes are to help each other by reciprocal information; and it is also to be remarked, that where there are a quantity of hands capable of working, they are to be passed into that part of the country where they are most wanted.

29.—Materials and tools are to be distributed to those paupers (who, notwithstanding all inquiries and interference, cannot obtain the necessary work), to be used at their houses until the required situation can be obtained. If in larger towns the number of these is very great, houses are to be opened and maintained at the expense of the institution for the poor, in which the paupers who are unoccupied are to work.

30.—The choice among the different sorts of work in these houses is settled according to the local circumstances, and chiefly according to the facility with which either orders from private persons can be received, or with which the material is obtained and worked. Then accordingly as the material can be used for the wants of the poor or can be usefully employed for any other purpose.

31.—The houses for the employment of the poor are always to retain their original destination; namely, an employment for the present of poor men who would otherwise be without work, and therefore do not admit any such persons whose names are not down on the above-named register. Therefore those persons are no longer allowed to work in this house after they have had an offer of work from any other quarter.

VIII. Division.—Of the Houses for the care of the Poor.

Art. 32.—Houses of nourishment are to be erected for those poor who, besides having no fortune or means of obtaining their livelihood, are in an extraordinary degree helpless, namely, children, sick people, old persons and cripples.

33.—Poor deserted children, orphans and foundlings, who are deprived of the natural help of their parents, are to be put under the care of good-natured nurses, so that they may attend the schools and be taught some trade for their future honourable advancement, and provided with the necessary support till they are capable of providing for themselves.

34.—With regard to poor sick people, the institutions for the poor are to provide them with the necessary shelter, attendance, medical advice, and medicines; poor women who are about to be brought to bed are to be provided with a public midwife. For this purpose, country doctors are to be appointed by the State, according to a certain order, so that their assistance may be always had. The directors of the institution for the poor are to make an arrangement with them for this purpose.

35.—For the advantage of those poor who may be far advanced in age and helplessness, and who have a particular claim to compassion, and chiefly for the advantage of idiots and those who have a great many defects, a house is to be erected in those districts in which their number is largest, and all possible care is to be taken of them, and they are to be retained there during their lives, and clothed and fed.

36.—The care of poor children, and of the helpless from sickness and age, is to be attended to and assisted by the houses of nourishment, which are established either over whole districts or over the entire kingdom, which are founded either by the application of the funds which they have already got, or for want of these, by the general co-operation of the institutions for the poor, namely, of birth and foundling houses, of mad houses, of hospitals, &c. &c.

IX. Division.—Of Almshouses.

Art. 37.—Poor people who do not require extraordinary care, and who are not fit to be admitted into the particular houses of nourishment, or cannot yet be received into them, but are unable to gain their livelihood, are to be assisted by alms, which, however, are not to be given without the most complete proof of want.

38.—The alms are to be given in the form of gifts of money. These gifts are sometimes to be increased, according to the price of provisions; and from time to time a maximum is to be fixed, which is on no account to be exceeded.

39.—These gifts of money may, either in part or entirely, be substituted by provisions, if this sort of aid is more easily afforded with regard to lodging, nourishment and clothing.

40.—Their lodging is to be changed every day among the different members of the parish, but the poor who are lodged are obliged to repay this lodging by work. Where there are opportunities, rooms are to be warmed, to which the poor may bring their work.

41.—The nourishment of the poor can be facilitated and insured by the equal division of them among the public, to be maintained in turn, being obliged to partake of the work of their host, or by voluntarily offered days for food, or lastly, by distribution of bread and other nourishment. Where circumstances permit, kitchens are to be erected on purpose for preparing nourishing soups, partly gratis, partly very cheap.

42.—For the clothing of the poor, the stuffs made in the workhouses are to be chiefly used; the same use is to be made of the voluntary gifts of clothes or stuffs; and those parts of the dress of the deceased poor which can still be used, if the doctors do not object on account of infection.

43.—Lastly, the almshouses have to pay the extraordinary expenses, namely, the cost of the burial of the poor, and of the church service for it; the costs of the church service and of a simple monument for distinguished benefactors of charity; the costs of the education of poor apprentices, and of helping them to further instruction, particularly for intelligent and capable children and young men; the costs of the most necessary tools for poor beginners of a trade of great capacity, under the obligation of compensation on their part; travelling money, in uncommon and unavoidable cases, and under the restriction that the money be given by the body of apprentices.

Title 3.—OF THE MAGISTERIAL AND MORAL INSPECTION OF THE CONDITION OF THE POOR.

Art. 44.—The inspection of the condition of the poor consists, besides the care for the most necessary wants, in a continued inspection

1. of each particular pauper,
2. of the public offices in conjunction with the poor institutions, and
3. of the condition of the poor in general.

Chapter 1.—Of the Inspection of each particular Pauper.

Art. 45.—The inspection of each particular pauper regards not only their moral and civil conduct in general, but also particularly their instruction, their industry, their forbidden gain by begging, the use of the support granted by poor institutions, their feigned poverty, and the punishment of the transgressors against the officers of the poor.

46.—All children of the poor should, without favour and without regard to the usual pretexts, be kept to the practice of the public school and religious instructions, as also of frequenting the work and industry schools and of learning a trade. The school money for these is a settled payment from the poor institutions, who are to come to an understanding with the teachers when poor schools do not already exist.

47.—All the poor are bound to employ themselves as apprentices to husbandry, or to some work, and to continue strictly to do so.

48.—All sorts of begging are to be suppressed according to the existing laws without exception, and every poor man shall be made acquainted with the contents of these laws when he is inscribed.

49.—No pauper who partakes of the benefactions of the poor institutions may go away from his dwelling without the knowledge and leave of the head of the village, to stay for some time, or permanently in another village, even if it is in the same district.

The same leave from the police direction is necessary when a pauper wishes, for some good reason, to go out of his police district; the leave is only to be given in both cases on well-grounded reasons, and on proofs that the poor will not be burdensome to other villages and districts; also he must give in a declaration to the same, in which, besides his name and village, and the duration of his absence, the villages to which he intends to go must be expressed.

Paupers who are found vagabonding about are to be treated as vagrants.

50.—Every pauper is indeed in general allowed to make what use he likes of the assistance afforded to him; still this does not prevent inspection concerning the use of it, and parish officers have particularly to interfere when the abuse either has influence on the maintenance and morals of the pauper, on the expenses of the poor direction itself, or on the public opinion, or where the dissipation of an immoral head of a family has a bad influence on the whole family.

51.—Paupers who have been warned in vain concerning bad conduct and idleness, shall be proceeded against without favour, by the power of magistrates, and be punished accordingly.

52.—The poor institutions can claim repayment from those hypocrites who although they possess private means, embezzle and grasp at the gifts and assistance which are only intended for true poverty, which shall be fully repaid. The poor institutions can make the same claim from those persons who have renounced their duty of supporting those relations whom they are obliged to support, either by law or by contract.

Chapter 2.—Of the particular Inspection of the Public Establishments connected with Poor Institutions.

Art. 53.—The public establishments connected with the poor institutions, namely, the providing for and maintaining institutions for the communes and districts, are of themselves under the direction of the governors of the institution; but besides this, there should be inspectors chosen out of the number of the persons belonging to the direction of the institution; and at least every three months there should be a general inspection of these institutions.

54.—The duty of changing the particular inspectors, as well as that of the general visitation, is to examine into the aforesaid establishments, to convince themselves of the order which prevails in them, of the good and regular treatment of the poor, and altogether of the fulfilment of the fundamental purposes, and to prevent abuses and complaints.

Chapter 3.—Of the Inspection of the Condition of the Poor in general.

Art. 55.—The condition of the poor in general must be followed up with much attention, to consider whether the poor institutions answer their purposes, what influence they have had from time to time on the morals, the industry, and the habit of begging, what hindrances the officers of the poor still have to contend with, and how the same may be removed in the quickest and surest way.

The poor institutions offer the best means for discovering the causes of the growth or diminution of poverty, for finding ways to prevent it, and for making useful propositions concerning it.

56.—The poor institutions are particularly to help, by advice and aid, those heads of families who by unavoidable circumstances are in danger of ruin, and supply means for saving them.

Also, the poor institutions should watch over those heads of families who by their licentious conduct are likely to require their aid, and by well-timed warnings, with the assistance of their relations, strive to dissuade them from such conduct.

57.—Besides this, the poor institutions should support the existing or projected fire and storm insurance offices, according to circumstances, and take care that savings banks for old age and want are instituted, as also loan funds; but particularly they ought to see that societies in case of sickness are instituted, by means of small subscriptions of their pay, by the apprentices, with assistance from their masters.

58.—No marriage between people without capital shall be allowed without the previous permission of the poor institutions.

Directors who do not follow these orders, nor pay attention to the Act of the 12th of July 1808 (Government Paper, page 1506,) concerning marriages in the country, have to answer for the maintenance of the new families, should they not be able to maintain themselves. In the same manner, the priests and other churchmen shall be responsible for the support of such persons as they have married without leave from the authorities, besides other fines which are imposed on this breach of the rules of the marriage ceremony.

Title 4.—OF THE SOURCES OF CHARITY.

Chap. 1.—Of what the Poor Fund consists.

Art. 59.—Besides the extraordinary sources, which consist partly in the restitution which hypocrites and relations who avoid their duty are obliged to make, and partly out of fines which are given to the poor fund, or may be hereafter given, are sources for charity from donations from the district fund, and from loans or from taxes.

60.—The yearly produce of all charities belongs to the poor institutions, and is used for their purposes. With the establishments for the poor are united the already existing or still accumulating capitals of one or other of the poor institutions; the gain on mortgages or on those possessions whose owners cannot be discovered; the legacies for the poor, when by the will of the deceased they are to be laid out in a regular yearly income, and the fourth part of such legacies as are destined in general for pious purposes.

61.—The voluntary donations consist of casual gifts in money and food which have been given by philanthropic persons of their own accord, for the use of the poor institutions, and in this manner are to be employed for their daily use. Besides these, are the legacies which are meant for immediate division among the poor, and those subscriptions which are collected either by single persons or by companies and corporations.

62.—General and extraordinary collections, in the name of the institutions for the poor, are to be made monthly from house to house, when the members of the parish have bound themselves to a certain subscription; also in the churches on the great holidays, and in the public-houses by means of private poor-boxes; and lastly, on all important and joyful occasions of the state, or single companies.

63.—According to the circumstances of the place, certain accidental funds can be appropriated to the uses of the poor institutions, which particularly on great joyful occasions, namely, great marriages in the taverns, the permission to have music, particularly past the stated times, processions of the apprentices, shooting matches, &c. &c., at shows, balls, masquerades, and so on.

64.—When all the aforesaid sources do not suffice to cover the wants of the poor institutions, it will be supplied out of the funds of the district, or through loans, and then only when all these means cannot be put in practice, or do not suffice to cover their wants, compulsory contributions or poor taxes are to be resorted to; the manner and amount of these are to be according to the calls of the villages and districts, and are only to be levied for a certain time. It is to be observed, however, that these taxes are to be imposed with the greatest equality, and without any exception among all classes.

Chap. 2.—Of the use of the Poor Funds.

The charitable institutions, whose capital must never be touched, do not properly belong to the poor institutions, but are still to be taken care of by the particular directors, who till further orders enter into the poor institutions as members, whereas the poor institutions only direct direct the appropriation of the yearly funds by voluntary and compulsory contributions, as also the funds which do not belong to the foundation. This direction contains the four following chief classifications, the calculation for the expenses of the ensuing year, the receipts of the funds, their appropriation and their estimates.

65.—The calculations for the ensuing year, for all the institutions of every commune and every district, are to be made with allowance for every want, as well of the work as of the district and almshouses, with a probable estimate of the receipts. The foundation of the estimate is the list of the poor.

66.—Concerning the receipt of the funds of the poor institutions, the district councils and committees name certain receivers out of their own number, or choose them out of the inhabitants.

67.—The appropriation of the receipts is in general determined by the wants of the institutions themselves, with the approbation of the higher authorities.

No part of the income may be used for purposes not belonging to the institution; no article of the approved estimates may be departed from without consideration; no new expenses made which are not authorized by particular authority. Also in the use of it there shall be made a just and well weighed comparison of the wants of the different offices of the poor institutions, also of the wants of the different classes of the poor and single paupers belonging to them, and none favoured or neglected.

68.—The inhabitants are to give up what they have collected to the treasurer, who is to be either one of the district councils or committees, or is to be chosen by these out of the number of the inhabitants.

Receivers and treasurers may be united in the same person. Also a treasury for the poor may be managed by a foundation under public direction, but never by a police or magisterial authority. The treasurer may not pay away anything without public or private directions from the assembled institution. Separate directions of the authorities, or of single members, are not valid.

69.—In order that such paupers as find themselves in unavoidable want, and cannot wait for the formalities of the decrees of the poor institutions, may be immediately relieved, a sum may be given weekly to priests to be given beforehand; at the same time, however, they must act with all possible circumspection, and bring the affair into the common order as soon as possible.

70.—Concerning the use of all sums received, there is to be a reckoning made yearly, which is to be open for every one's inspection; but in the towns it is to be made known by the press.

3d Section.—OF THE BUSINESS OF THE POOR INSTITUTIONS, AND OF THEIR RELATION TO THE PUBLIC AUTHORITIES.

Title 1.—Of the Assemblies in Affairs of the Poor, and their Resolutions.

Art. 71.—Every council of the poor is to hold an assembly weekly, to dispose of the affairs of their parish, and to hear the complaints of poor orphans, and to settle them, and to give required opinions. On important occasions extraordinary sittings are to be held.

72.—In the common sittings the councils and committees are to employ themselves in various affairs, particularly in the first reception of the inscriptions of the poor in the receipt of their revenues, the money to be advanced, and the inspection of the offices belonging to the institution; in choosing and instructing in their duty the needful assistants for that purpose, the receivers, the treasurers and inspectors; in verifying the assembled poor inscriptions, in correcting them, putting them together, and renewing them yearly; in calling the candidates and partakers of the institution before them, to hear them, to decide upon the manner, amount, and duration of their support, and to arrange quartering nourishment, clothes, &c., particularly to take measures for their work and instruction, according to circumstances; to institute work and district houses; to maintain order in them, and to arrange what persons shall be received, also to settle the quarterly visitations of the aforesaid and other charitable institutions, and to watch over the decisions of the councils; to warn paupers who conduct themselves badly, and if necessary to inform the public authorities; to aid the latter in suppressing begging; to consider how unfortunate fathers of families may be set up again, the ruin of whole families prevented; inconsiderate heads of families brought to their duty, and useful assurance offices instituted and supported; as also how the causes of charity in general may be furthered, and to consult concerning them with the more respectable inhabitants, and according to circumstances to appeal for assistance to the common authorities; to arrange an exact inspection of the resources of the poor institutions; to insure the full receipt of the income; to require payment from delaying debtors; to watch over the proper use of the funds; to make the yearly estimates; to settle the yearly bills; also to inquire minutely into the receipts and expenses every week. Lastly, to consider whether and how the want of means is to be supplied from the common fund, or by loans or particular taxes and poor contributions; also what necessities are to be supplied by the district institutions; with what means and revenues these district institutions are to be endowed, and how the subscriptions for this purpose are to be divided amongst the different institutions.

73.—The sittings in which the accounts for the year are brought up, are to be held publicly, and questions for more particular explanation from householders are not to be forbid. The time of their sittings is therefore always to be publicly announced.

74.—In those cases where the wants of the poor fund are to be supplied out of the common fund, or by loans, or particular taxes and poor contributions, the district counsellors are to assemble in towns and large markets with the municipal counsellors and magistrates, for the purpose of taking council, and coming to decisions. In the smaller markets and country meetings affairs of the aforesaid description are to be brought before the assembled public, and submitted to their determination.

75.—Where these affairs of justice occur lawyers are to be chosen and joined to the sittings, and to be heard with their counsel.

76.—The police directors and commissaries are to take the chair in the meetings for the poor, where there are not particular presidents named; and the judges of the district tribunal at the places of their office; but otherwise the clergyman. Short protocols are to be made of their discussions, at which every member is at liberty to give his opinions, his disapprobations, and his wishes; the determinations are to be entered into them, according to the unanimity or majority of the votes, and to be signed by all present.

77.—The clerks of the police and of the magistrates are to be used for the writings; besides these the schoolmasters are to be employed for a given annual payment.

All useless writings are carefully to be avoided, and all are to be arranged with the greatest simplicity.

78.—The execution of the decisions, if no higher consent is necessary, is to be carried into effect by the members of the poor institutions, and of the committees appointed for that purpose. The announcement of the decrees to the different parties is to be verbal. Whatever is to be made known to a community, or a whole district, will be stuck up publicly or in the weekly papers, both after examination previously made by the police authorities; to these authorities are also to be left the measures which are to be taken, where punishment and compulsion is to be applied.

Title 2.—Of the subordination of the Poor Institution.

Art. 79.—The poor institutions and committees in such towns as have no police directors or commissaries, also in the market-towns and parishes, are directly under the control of the district tribunal, and under their guidance and inspection.

These should always have a continual knowledge of the condition of the poor institution in all its branches; to look from time to time into the description of the poor; to watch that the meetings for the poor, which they have to visit sometimes in single parishes, be kept industriously and orderly; to guard that no district should neglect the care of the poor for any reason whatever; to stop any arbitrary execution which occurs of the power given to the poor institutions, particularly in the employment of the funds, and in unfit delays in giving the accounts; to visit the poor institutions often; to correct abuses and disorders; to instruct the counsellors and committees in their duty, and in the course of their business, and to keep them in continual useful activity; in short, to help the institutions in every way, and to give the necessary assistance to the execution of their decisions, if they should not be contrary to any rule or law, or law process.

80.—To the particular duties and rights of the district tribunal belongs the ratification of the members and assistants chosen to be counsellors and committees for the poor institution; the discussion of the complaints brought against the decrees of the latter, the decision of the differences between the poor institutions of different parishes, the examination by the magistrates of the accounts for the next year.

81.—In the towns where there are police directors or commissaries, the counsellors for the poor are under the authority of the general and local commissaries. These can still, under some circumstances, empower the police directors and police commissaries to be their substitutes, and the latter remain always empowered and obliged to be attentive to the state and condition of the poor institutions, to inform the counsellors of the existing wants and abuses and to demand relief of them, and if it be not given, to call in the interference of the higher authorities.

82.—To the immediate inspection of the poor institution in the last named larger towns, the general circle commissaries have also the charge of the district tribunals.

83.—The general and local commissaries ratify the choice of the counsellors and other assistants for the institutions under their direction; they decide the complaints brought against the decrees and orders of the under police, and any differences which might arise between them; they give in their estimates and accounts of their offices at their examination, and are to inform themselves of the business going on in the district tribunals; they decide about the cases in which the deficiency of the poor money is covered, out of the parish purse or by loans; they further decide about the offers as to the necessaries and requisites for the general institutions, and lastly, about the measures which are to be taken in matters of law. About proposals of particular taxes (Article 63) and of the contributions for the poor, they have to refer to the finance directors.

84.—The inspection of the poor institutions of the whole kingdom is given to the ministry for the interior, which is to receive regularly the report of the state of this branch of administration from the annual accounts and other proper sources, and which is to issue the necessary general orders and regulations, and is to judge of the proposals for the establishment, the arrangement and fitting up of workhouses, and others in which the poor are taken care of, for single districts, whole circles, or for the entire kingdom, which decides with the finance all proposals for allowing certain taxes and poor subscriptions, decides the complaints brought against the general circle and local commissaries, if such do not belong to the private council, and causes the election of certain poor directors where it may be found advisable.

In having these Articles made known by the regierungs-blatt, We command our general circle and local commissaries to put them into execution without delay; to give the necessary directions with respect to arrangements already made, to the police directors, police commissaries, and to the district tribunals; to pursue this important affair with uninterrupted attention and activity, and to give Us an account of the plan of their progress every three months, until the poor institutions are every where established.

We trust to the dutiful zeal of the higher authorities and of the inferior officers in whose care the poor institutions are placed, to the particular aid of the clergymen and the heads of the parishes, and to the well known feelings of Our subjects for benevolence and order; and We hereafter expect that Our Royal resolutions shall be every where acknowledged and put into execution.

FRANKFORT.

THE following QUESTIONS apply to Customs and Institutions, whether general throughout the State, or peculiar to certain Districts, and to relief given :—

1st. By the voluntary payment of individuals or corporate bodies ?—By voluntary payment of individuals.

2d. By institutions specially endowed for that purpose ?—There are six different institutions in Frankfort ; town and country.

3d. By the Government, either general or local ?—Government poor funds, revenues from the gates on entering at night, and fines.

4th. By any one or more of these means combined ?—Many poor receive assistance from several of these institutions with the knowledge of the others.

And you are requested to state particularly the cases (if any) in which the person relieved has a legal claim ?—Never any legal claim.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country ?—The poor in the town and territory of Frankfort receive sufficient support so as to be kept from begging in the streets ; but on the two weekly market-days, a good number of beggars from the neighbouring states enter the town, under the pretext of selling baskets, matches, &c., and ask for alms.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging ; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations ?—An assistance of 2d. per day is granted, by the police office, to beggars passing through the territory of Frankfort ; and suspicious characters, without passport or other satisfactory papers, are escorted over the frontiers by police officers. The sick and lame are provided with vehicles for that purpose. This assistance is only granted one day.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders ?—Begging in the streets is not allowed ; the police arrest the beggar and conduct him out of the town, in case he is a stranger ; and on repetition, he is liable to be sent to the house of correction for a day or two. The poor belonging to the city or territory of Frankfort are never billeted or quartered on householders.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals ?—The poor are under the control of the police, living in their own or hired dwellings or lodgings.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work ?—Under the control of the committee superintending the general poor funds intended alike for the poor of the three Christian religions. Through this establishment, the weekly assistance is given in money and loaves of rye-bread, according to the number of children and the degree of distress, but not in clothes nor free lodgings. Such loaves weigh 3 lb., and each costs, at the present price of rye, six kreutzer, equal to 2d. per loaf. See below. There are no district houses of industry.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms ?—The regulations vary according to the existing funds and the annual income of the several religious institutions named further on ; none of them supply the poor with board and lodgings, but merely with money. Schooling is paid for poor children, and the premium is paid for their apprenticeship after the boys are confirmed, which generally takes place between the age of 13 and 15, according to their mental and bodily faculties.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves ? or, 6. Is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works ?—There exist two establishments which supply the poor with work in their own dwellings : 1st, The Frauenverein or Association of Ladies ; a most useful establishment, which provides poor females with work at home ; they receive the raw materials, and payment for the work. 2d, The Versorgungs-house ; an establishment superintended by ladies and gentlemen, where the poor of both sexes are supplied with work (all trades), and the raw material charged to the account of each individual whilst they are credited for the proceeds. They can either work at home, or in the locality belonging to the establishment, supported by donations and annual subscription. A large hall is warmed in winter, where they are allowed to work during the day-time ; they are at liberty to take their dinner and beer in the hall, for which their account is debited. A few bed-rooms are reserved for cripples and infirm old people. The balance of

of their account is paid to them. Except mending the high and bye-roads, other work is hardly ever given to the poor, such as public work, &c.*

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—There exists no fixed regulation as to fuel, clothing or money distributed. To prevent scarcity of fuel, Government keeps a considerable stock of beech and fir-wood, out of which the wants of the poor are supplied at all seasons (at cost price), either on paying for it or gratis, as an assistance from the various poor establishments, in small lots of three logs each, and even in single logs three feet long, taxed at 2*d.* each.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—All orphans and children of poor citizens and soldiers are received and educated gratis, in a well-organized establishment called the Orphan-house; they must be six, and not above 13 years old; they must have had the small-pox, or be vaccinated. Epileptic children are excluded. The boys are apprenticed, and the girls taught cookery, to facilitate their being placed as servants; they are well clothed and well instructed.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Neither parents nor relations are obliged by the law to assist their relations. The committees of the several poor institutions are obliged to apply to such relations to encourage and to request them to contribute towards it, but it cannot be claimed as a right.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—There exists but one small donation of about 600*l.*, intended for loans to mechanics and tradesmen, which does not appear to have done much good, as it has already been reduced to 400*l.* through losses.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—The old and infirm, as well as the poor in general, who cannot get their livelihood by their own work, are entitled to apply for relief to one or several of the poor establishments, which apprise each other mutually of the extent of the assistance granted. There are three institutions founded by donations; one for six old men and six old women, having each their own room, and breakfast, dinner, tea, and fires gratis; two other establishments receive each 12 widows, or daughters of the higher classes, to whose option it is left to take such support in money, from 40*l.* to 50*l.* a year, and to remain with their relations. There is a fourth, for 12 daughters of the patricians of Frankfort (nobility), who have each a couple of rooms, and dine together; they have a certain allowance for pocket money, and may stay for life on remaining single.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—The extent of the relief granted depends on the degree of poverty, as well as on the information collected by the committees as to the character received.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—The Fraunverein, or Association of Ladies, is the only establishment which supports and superintends the poor quartered in private houses.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—No regulations exist on that head.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—No law in existence at Frankfort.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick? or, 2. are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—There are six hospitals in the town of Frankfort: one for servants and strangers; two for burghers or citizens; one for the itch patients; one for epilepsy; one for mad and insane people. The poor receive medical and surgical advice gratis in the hospitals, as well as in their dwellings. The six youngest physicians on the list are obliged to perform this duty without any remuneration, or, some of them, a very small one. A medical board, named by Government, superintends the whole. The reformed or Calvinist church grants stipends to young parishioners to defray their expenses at the university and later travels; these young men are bound to visit the poor gratis who receive assistance out of their poor funds.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—Under the guidance of the committee for the general poor funds, and under three other committees of the confessional funds belonging to the Lutheran, Calvinist and Catholic separate poor funds, arising from the interest on legacies, annual subscriptions, and money collected after Divine service. The three latter grant assistance in money, clothes and schooling, and are well superintended.

FRANKFORT.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There is no establishment for lying-in women. Six midwives, received by Government after their examination, and the six before-named physicians, attend the poor gratis. The Frauenverein (Ladies' Association) attends to wants and comforts in such cases.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—Relations cannot be compelled to give assistance. The sick are placed in the hospitals, where they remain under the best care until perfectly recovered; when needed, each patient is attended by a nurse.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—If an illegitimate child is born at Frankfort, and of parents either burghers or under the protection of Government by special licence, it enjoys the same privileges as other children; but in case they are to be placed into one of the public institutions, they must, by an Act of the Senate, be received as illegitimate children, in order to enable them to be received as apprentices to any trade.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—The father of an illegitimate child (if rightly ascertained) is called upon to contribute towards its support, from 10 d. to 2 s. 6 d. a week. In case the mother has no means to do so, the child falls to the charge of the poor institutions.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—No other regulations, than the above for illegitimate children, exist for foundlings, that must be supported at Government's expense, which makes agreements with the poor institutions about board, lodging, &c.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—If borne by Christian parents, citizens are under the protection of the State. The child must be three years old, and not more than 13: the child must have had the small-pox, or be vaccinated: epileptic children are excluded.—Foundlings and deserted children are received into the orphan establishment at the charge of Government.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—The orphan institution takes also charge of younger children, under three years of age; they get board and lodging in the town or in the country.

6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—At 1 s. 8 d. a week; clothes, medicaments, &c. gratis.

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—No obligation.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—Cripples are taken into the poor-houses: the number is not considerable.—For the deaf and dumb, and blind, no public institutions; they are assisted by private institutions and individuals.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—At the charge of the poor institutions, but not quartered on householders.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—They receive soup, bread and money from the general poor funds, and from the Ladies' Association (Frauenverein).

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—No degree of relationship compelled to support them.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—Idiots are generally boarded and lodged at the charge of the Government, or the poor establishments on which the parents have some claims through annual contributions past or present.—There is but one lunatic asylum, particularly well-organized; patients are received gratis when poor, others are received against payment according to their means.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, 3. boarded with individuals?—Not quartered on householders, except against an arrangement to be made.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Relations are obliged to contribute towards their support according to their means, on which subject negotiations take place between the parties and the poor establishments.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any and what effect,

1st. On the industry of the labourers?—In the orphan or poor-house, children are taught every thing useful, even vocal and instrumental music, drawing, agricultural labour, and all work in the house, to make useful servants, &c.

2d. On their frugality?—Great attention is paid to frugality; repeated insobriety is punished by being sent to the house of correction.

3d. On the age at which they marry?—At the age of 14, they are placed as apprentices or servants, &c. The Government prescribes no age for marrying, but the permission to marry is only granted on proving a livelihood.

4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—At certain hours, on Sundays, parents may visit their children. Every New Year's day, and on deaths in the family or other particular occasions, the children are allowed to visit their parents. With few exceptions, the children appear very much attached to their relations.

5. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—In general, the poor are so well supported in the charity institutions, that they live nearly as, and even more, comfortable than the common labourer who earns 5 s. a week. In the orphan or poor-house, the allowance is as follows:—For children (6 to 15 years) meat three times a week, from two, three, to four ounces per day, at dinner and supper; soup, from 1 to 1½ plateful, dinner and supper daily; bread in four portions per day, total 1½ lb., per week 148 ounces; fruit at supper in summer; beer, at dinner only, from ½ to ¾ pints daily. Prices: beef, 1 lb. 3 ½ d.; veal, 3 d.; mutton, 3 ½ d.; pork, 3 d.; bread, mixed rye and wheat, 1 lb. 1 ½ d.; beer, 2 d. a quart; potatoes, 1 s. a bushel. For the ushers and servants belonging to the establishment, two meals a day: dinner, 5 ounces meat, soup, greens, potatoes, butter and cheese; supper, meat, soup and salade ommelets, &c. The above allowance is considered fully sufficient for the children, as well as for the grown inmates. The rooms, beds and furniture are kept particularly clean. In summer, the children (boys) are obliged to bathe in the river, and are taught to swim by masters engaged for the purpose. In consequence of the careful and cleanly education, the morals are improved, and on an average the children there educated turn out better subjects than those merely kept to school and living at home.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—Mason's wages, about 1 s. 4 d. a day; carpenter's, 1 s. 6 d.; in winter about 2 d. a day less; to begin work soon after sun-rise till six in the evening, without provisions from their masters or employers, but it is customary to allow each man 2 d. a day for beer, under the denomination of drink-money. The pay of a Frankfort common soldier is 4 d. a day. Their mess stands them in 2 d. a day, and is very substantial, including ½ lb. of meat per head.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is customary with carpenters, joiners, &c., but not general; a good many masters, such as coopers, tailors and others, board and lodge their journeymen at their own house: this used to be the general custom, but has fallen off within the last 20 years.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—Day-work and piece-work on an average, from 14 l. to 28 l. a year, according to their abilities and industry. Labourers coming to town from the neighbouring country, receive 1 s. a day in general; individuals working in tobacco and snuff manufactories, 10 d. a day. Many of these labourers hold an acre or two of land, superintended by his family.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—The pay of a porter is from 7 s. 6 d. to 11 s. 6 d. a week. The wages of a man-servant, with board, lodging and livery, from 3 l. 10 s. to 10 l. a year; without board, lodging and livery, 30 l. a year. No servant or labourer can save much on a similar income. The needy obtain free schooling for their children, as well as religious instruction, and the girls are taught needle-work, &c. Parents who can afford it pay 2 fl. a year for schooling.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Women work in the fields, in tobacco and snuff manufactories, washerwomen, charwomen. As there are no other manufactories in Frankfort, the children work in the fields, and earn from 2 d. to 4 d. a day.

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.

FRANKFORT.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—By washing, ironing, spinning, knitting, &c. from 1 s. to 1 s. 4 d. a day upon an average. As charwomen, or otherwise employed in families, the pay is 8 d. a day with board.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years, respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—Upon an average, about 1 s. 8 d. a day. If a widow, she is entitled to free schooling, and may also apply for a weekly allowance of bread for the youngest children; whilst a boy of 14 is generally apprenticed to some trade or other.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and, if so, on what food?—Yes: twice meat a week; soup, vegetables, potatoes, bread, coffee and beer daily.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—They may save a trifle, if very industrious and saving; but hardly more than a couple of pounds a year.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—The labourers living in the town have no land; they generally live in lodgings. Some of the day-labourers coming to town in the morning, have at times a quarter, half or one acre of land.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The better class of labourers possess houses, of which they let part to those who are not so well off. Many of them are gardeners: their wives and children come to market with cabbages, potatoes, &c.

12. The rent of labourers' habitation, and price on sale?—The rent of a labourer's habitation is from 2 l. 10 s. to 4 l. per annum. The sale price of a house in Frankfort may be adopted at 100 l. to 160 l., but there are very few of that description; and in general 300 l. to 500 l. is the value. Such a house is let to four, five, and even six different parties.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Land is hardly ever let to labourers; the rent is from 9 s. to 11 s. an acre per year; and the value, according to the soil and the distance from town, from 17 l. to 25 l. an acre.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The population of Frankfort and the suburb, Sachsenhausen, is adopted to be 50,000 souls.

Deaths in 1830	-	-	1,045	} 4,620 in four years; or, deaths 1,150 in one year; or, 1 in 43 $\frac{1}{2}$.
1831	-	-	1,218
1832	-	-	1,127
1833	-	-	1,230

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—

Births in 1830	-	-	1,056	} 4,147 in four years; or, births 1,037 in one year; or, 1 in 48 $\frac{2}{10}$.
1831	-	-	1,015
1832	-	-	1,076
1833	-	-	1,000

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—

Marriages, 1830	-	-	267	} 1,060 in four years; or, marriages 265 in one year; or, 1 to every 188 $\frac{7}{10}$ persons.
1831	-	-	279
1832	-	-	262
1833	-	-	252

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Average from five to six children to a marriage.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—In the year 1833, births 1,000; of which 130 illegitimate (67 Christian, 63 Israelite) children; or, 1 in 7 $\frac{7}{10}$.

19, 20, 21. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first, 10th and 18th year?—Deaths in 1833:—

	Males	Females.	Total.
In the first year	-	-	90	- 87 - 177 - or, 1 in 282 $\frac{1}{2}$.
From 2d to 6th year	-	-	37	- 40 - 77 - or, 1 in 649 $\frac{3}{10}$.
From 7th to 19th year	-	-	23	- 42 - 65 - or, 1 in 769 $\frac{2}{10}$.
From 20th to 25th year	-	-	41	- 18 - 59 - or, 1 in 847 $\frac{4}{10}$.
Upwards of 25	-	-	379	- 326 - 705 - or, 1 in 70 $\frac{9}{10}$.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Men, from 25 to 36; females, from 18 to 27 years old.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—An application for permission to marry must be accompanied by a written consent of the parents (if both living) of both parties. The banns must be published on a Sunday morning from the pulpit by the officiating clergyman, stating, besides the Christian and family names, their trade or business, and if a widower, widow or spinster. The parties cannot be married but after the third Sunday is over, so that most marriages take place on Mondays (15th day after the banns); and objections against the marriage (such as previous engagements or other reasons) must be brought forth before the third Sunday is over.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save? 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Wages to men and female servants run generally from 2 l. to 8 l. per annum; and although low, yet some lay by annually, as appears from the saving bank books, where they receive so small a saving as one florin, equal to 1 s. 8 d.; and when accumulated to 10 florins, or 16 s. 8 d., they receive 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest a year on such deposits, which dividend may be added to the capital. This useful establishment begun 12 years ago, and the last balance-sheet shows that the deposits of 4,024 individuals amount to 821,825 fl. 23 c., equal to 70,000 l. sterling, or about 17 l. 8 s. each. Such savings are also invested in Frankfort bonds or obligations, bearing 4 and 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ interest.

LETTER from G. S. Jerningham, Esq. to John Backhouse, Esq., transmitting Papers relative to the CONDITION of the POOR in Holland.

SIR,

The Hague, November 12, 1833.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith some Papers sent to me yesterday by M. Verstolk, upon the Condition of the Poor in Holland; which I had asked for in compliance with, and in the terms of, your note of the 12th of August; together with a copy of the Note which accompanied them.

I have, &c.

G. S. Jerningham.

John Backhouse, Esq.
&c. &c. &c.

Enclosure No. 1, in Mr. Jerningham's Despatch to Mr. Backhouse, of 12 November 1833.

Monsieur,

La Haye, le 11 Novembre 1833.

EN réponse à la demande que vous avez bien voulu faire au Département des Affaires Etrangères, par votre office, du 18 Août dernier, j'ai l'honneur de vous envoyer ci-joint copie d'une note rédigée au Ministère de l'Intérieur, et de ses deux Annexes, contenant les renseignemens que l'on a pu rassembler sur les réglemens adoptés aux Pays-Bas relativement à l'administration des Secours et des Etablissemens de Charité.

Je saisis, &c.

(signé)

Verstolk de Soelen.

A Monsieur Jerningham,
&c. &c. &c.

Enclosure No. 2, in Mr. Jerningham's Despatch to Mr. Backhouse, of November 12, 1833.

NOTA ter beantwoording der vragen door den Britschen Zaak gelastigden in deszelfs missive aan Zijne Excellentie den Baron van Zuylen van Nyevelt, dd 18. Augustus ll. gedaan.

VOLGENS het burgerlyk wetboek mag geen armbestuur, eene erfstelling, Legaat of Schenking onder de levenden aanvaarden, zonder daartoe de magtiging van wege het Gouvernement bekomen te hebben.

Tydens de inlyving dezer Gewesten in het Fransche Keizerryk zyn, wel is waar de Fransche wetten, betrekkelijk de daarstelling van Bureaux van Weldadigheid en Administratien der Godshuizen, ook in de Hollandsche Departementen executoir verklaard, doch zy zyn slechts in zeer weinige provincien met de daad in werking gebragt, en de daaruit in die weinige provincien voortgevloeide organisatie, is, in 1814, weder vervangen, door eene by Koninklyk besluit voorgeschrevene inrigting, meer overeenstemmende met het gene van oudsher hier te lande had bestaan en in de meeste provincien by voortdoring was blyven bestaan, en waarvan de hieronder volgende byzonderheden den aard zullen doen kennen.

De Kopielyk hierby gaande wet van den 28. November 1818, (regelt het onderstands domicilie der behoeftigen; hunne ondersteuning geschiedt, naar aanleiding daarvan, plaatselyk, men is in Noord Nederland steeds uitgegaan van het beginsel dat die last, in de eerste plaats, rust op, de in de gemeenten bestaande armbesturen der Godsdienstige gezindten; doch wanneer de middelen van zoodanig kerkelyk armbestuur ontoereikend zyn, kan hetzelfde zich, onverschillig tot welke gezindheid zoodanig armbestuur behoort, tot het plaatselyk bestuur om bystand wenden, welke, na gedaan onderzoek, ook gewoonlyk verleend en, in verhouding tot het vermogen der burgerlyke gemeente, door deszelfs bestuur geregeld wordt.

Zoodanige Armen echter, welke of geen lidmaat van eenig kerkgenootschap zyn, of van wier Godsdienstige gezindheid, in de plaats alwaar zy hun onderstands domicilie hebben geen kerkelyk armbestuur bestaat, worden van wege het Gemeente bestuur der plaats, alwaar zy hun onderstands domicilie hebben, ondersteund; ten welken einde er in veele groote steden en Gemeenten een afzonderlyk en aan het gemeente bestuur rekenplichtig burgerlyk armbestuur is daargesteld, terwyl in de overige steden en gemeenten, die onderstand, of, door den burgemeester of, door een daartoe door hem benoemden armmeester wordt verleend.

De Gast of Ziekenhuizen die in vele steden bestaan zyn meest overal burgerlyke Gestichten, welke voor rekening van het plaatselyk bestuur door één, door hetzelfde benoemd, Collegie van Regenten worden beheerd, en in welke gast of Ziekenhuizen, alle ingezetenen, zonder onderscheid van Godsdienstige gezindte, worden opgenomen. Eenige dezer gast of ziekehuizen zyn echter af zonderlyke fondatien die geheel of gedeeltelyk uit derzelver eigene Inkomsten bestaan.

Onder de Wees, en Kinderhuizen, als mede de Godshuizen voor oude lieden, zyn onderscheiden fundatien, welke geheel of gedeeltelyk uit hare eigene Inkomsten bestaan, terwyl de overige meestendeels het eigendom zyn van byzondere kerkelyke armbesturen, het geen in de groote steden byna algemeen het geval der wees of kinderhuizen is.

De vondelingen en verlaten Kinderen worden, ten laste der plaats in welke zy zyn verlate, verzorgd in de Kindergestichten der Maatschappij van Weldadigheid, door welke instelling almede de bedelaars in de daartoe door haar ingerigte en door het Gouvernement erkende gestichten verzorgd worden, ten laste der plaats van hun onderstands domicilie.'

Er bestaan drie plaatselyke Werkhuizen, als één te Amsterdam, één te Middelburg, en één in de Gemeente Nieuwe Pekel A., in de provincie Groningen, in welke, behoeftigen, meestal zoodanige welke zich vrywillig aangeven, worden opgenomen onder de verplichting om zoo veel mogelijk hun onderhoud door arbeid te moeten vergelden; voorts zyn er, in verschillende plaatsen, Een en twintig werkplaatsen van liefdadigheid die aan behoeftigen, welke tydelijk gebrek aan werk hebben, het zy in de werkplaatsen zelve, het zy aan de woningen der armen werk verschaffen.

De nevens gaande Tabel doet het getal kennen der personen aan welke Jaarlyks door de daarin vermelde openbare burgerlyke of Kerkelyke instellingen van Weldadigheid onderstand is verleend geworden of werk is verschaft. Hierby valt echter aantemerkken dat in Nederland niet gelyk elders wel eens plaats heeft, alleenlyk onder het getal der onderstand genoten hebbenden, de hoofden der huis gezinnen worden gerekend, maar ook alle by hen inwonende Kinderen.

Behalve de voormelde instellingen, bestaan er in veele plaatsen nog vereenigingen en genootschappen wier doel het is, om, op de eene of andere wyze, onderstand te verleenen, als daar zyn die tot ondersteuning van Schamele armen; die tot verleening van onderstand aan behoeftige kraamvrouwen, en de Commissien of vereenigingen, welke gedurende den winter uitdeelingen doen van levens middelen en brandstoffen.

Tot een doelmatig en oordeel kundig onderwijs aan de Kinderen der armen, zoo van bedeelde, als niet bedeelde doch behoeftige ouders, is byna in alle plaatsen kosteloos gelegenheid gegeven, het zy in de door de plaatselyke of armbesturen bekostigd wordende armenscholen, en waar deze ontbreken in de gewone scholen, gemeenschappelyk met andere Kinderen; ook neemt het getal der leerlingen jaarlyks toe. In 1831, heeft het getal derzelve in de eigenlyke armenscholen bedragen 36,378, en het getal der leerlingen, aan welke in scholen gemeenschappelyk met andere Kinderen onderwijs gegeven werd 372,31. Zoo dat er in alles aan 73,609 Kinderen van behoeftigen kosteloos onderwijs is gegeven.

De burgerlyke armbesturen en de gesubsidieerd wordende kerkelyke armbesturen, zyn aan het plaatselyk bestuur verantwoording van derzelve ontvangst en uitgave verschuldigt; zy zyn daaren-boven, even als de niet gesubsidieerd wordende kerkelyke armbesturen, gehouden om jaarlyks de noodige inlichtingen te geven, ten einde het Gouvernement in Staat te stellen om, ingevolge het 228 artikel der grond wet, jaarlyks aan de Staten Generaal een verslag, aangaande het armbestuur en de opvoeding der armen kinderen te kunnen aanbieden.

De gelden bestemd voor den onderstand, het verschaffen van werk en van kosteloos onderwijs der armen bestaan uit :

1. De inkomsten van de eigendommen der onderscheidene instellingen en de op sommige plaatsen aan eenige derzelve toegekende boeten of andere regten.

2. Uit Collecten.

3. Uit door de gemeente besturen en, in zeer enkele gevallen, ook door de Provincien of den Staat verleende subsidien; terwijl sommige werkplaatsen en armen scholen ook door armbesturen worden gesubsidieerd.

4. Uit de opbrengst van het werk of der Koloniale Etablissementen.

5. Uit contributien en vrywillige bydragen, en uit de door de Maatschappij van Weldadigheid by contract bedongen gelden voor de by haar uitbesteede personen.

Over de twaalf Jaren van 1820 tot 1831 gemiddeld hebben elk Jaar de ontvangsten van de besturen voor de huiszittende armen en die der Godshuizen te zamen bedragen.

1. Aan Inkomsten van Eigendommen en toegekende regten	-	$	2,461,883	26
2. Aan opbrengst der collecten	-	-	1,320,551	48
3. Aan subsidien verleend door:
a. De Gemeenten	-	-	$ 1,779,719	67
b. De Provincien of den Staat	-	-	38,642	78
			1,818,362	45
			5,600,797	19
Uitmakende - - - $
Waar door alle de uitgaven dier Instellingen zyn gedekt geworden; en wanneer men nu by bovenstaande som nog voegt, insgelyks over voormelde twaalf Jaren, gemiddeld:
1. Voor de plaatselyke werkhuizen en werkplaatsen van liefdadigheid:
a. Wegens inkomsten van Eigendommen	-	-	7,458	50
b. Wegens kollekten	-	-	7,971	63
c. Wegens subsidien van de Gemeenten	-	-	99,083	87
2. Voor de thans opgehevene bedelaars werkhuizen:
a. Wegens daggelden betaald door de Gemeenten voor de daar in geplaatste bedelaars	-	-	41,090	40
b. Wegens provinciale subsidien	-	-	871	49
3. Voor de Maatschappij van de Weldadigheid:
a. Wegens contributien en vrywillige bydragen van particulieren	-	-	48,893	55
b. Wegens bedongen bestedings gelden	-	-	208,651	69
			6,014,818	32
Dan verkrygt men in alles eene som van - - - $

Waar door over een tydvak van 12 Jaren gemiddeld, is voorzien in alle de uitgaven der op de nevens gaande tabel vermelde instellingen, welke som van $6,014,818 32 insgelyks omgeslagen over het gemiddeld getal der personen (241,514) welke elk Jaar, op de eene of andere wyze in den verleenden onderstand of werkverschaffing dier instellingen hebben gedeeld, voor elk derzelve oplevert $ 24. 90.

De uitgaven voor het kosteloos onderwijs in 1831 aan 73,609 kinderen van behoeftigen gegeven, zyn, met uitzondering van \$ 56,400 39 $\frac{1}{2}$ door de armbesturen verleende subsidien, bestreden geworden door de navolgende ontvangsten, als :

1. Wegens inkomsten van eigendommen aan de armen scholen verbonden - - - - -	\$	10,694	08 $\frac{1}{2}$
2. Wegens collecten, inschryvingen en bydragen van partikulieren -		27,274	21 $\frac{1}{2}$
3. Wegens subsidien verleend door :
a. De Gemeenten - - - - -	$ 158,973	32
b. De Provincie of den Staat - - - - -	3,120	-
		162,093	32
En wanneer men by deze som van - - - - -	$	200,061	62
voegt, die waar door over 12 Jaren gemiddeld jaarlyks is voorzien in de uitgaven voor den verleenden onderstand in werkverschaffing ter somma van - - - - -		6,014,818	32
Zoo verkrygt men eene som van - - - - -	$	6,214,879	94
By een-gebragt,
1. Door de inkomsten van de eigendommen der instellingen en eenige weinige aan dezelve toegekende regten ten bedrage van - - -		2,480,035	84 $\frac{1}{2}$
2. Door kollechten en andere vrywillige bydragen van particulieren ter somma van - - - - -		1,404,690	87 $\frac{1}{2}$
3. Door gelden bygedragen door de gemeenten Provincien en den Staat, ten beloope van - - - - -		2,330,153	22
Te zamen bedragende - - - - -	$	6,214,879	94

Men ziet dus dat byna $\frac{2}{5}$ dezer som ontsproten is uit de inkomsten van de eigendommen der armen ; dat meer dan een ander $\frac{1}{5}$ is by eengebragt door vrywillige bydragen van particulieren, en dat het geen door de Plaatselyke besturen, de Provincien of den Staat is gefourneerd, en het welk men alleenlyk beschouwen kan, als op eene in directe wyze uit belastingen ontsproten te zyn nog geen $\frac{2}{5}$ der geheele som bedraagt ; en welke som van \$ 2,330,153 omgeslagen over de bevolking, na afrek der onderstand genoten hebbenden, slechts ruim ééne gulden per persoon bedraagt.

Wat nu de vraag betreft welke in de uitvoering, de werking en de resultaten van het tegenwoordig armenstelsel zyn, op de ondersteuning, op het karakter en op den toestand der inwoners, zoo mag men, over het algemeen genomen, het een en ander als voldoende beschouwen.

De verleening van den onderstand is meest overal vry goed geregeld, en ofschoon de bedeeeling van sommige armbesturen wel iets ruimer konde zyn, mag men echter met grond veronderstellen, dat niemand, wiens behoefte by dezelve als voldoende bewezen bekend staat, wezenlyk gebrek lydt, en men vermeent te mogen zeggen dat het in deze eeuw zoo merkbaar verbeterd onderwijs der lagere volksklasse, heilzame vruchten draagt.

Translation of Enclosure, No. 2.

NOTE in answer to the Questions asked by the British Chargé d'Affaires, in his Letter to his Excellency the Baron van Zuylen van Nyevelt, the 18th August last.

ACCORDING to the municipal law book, no overseers of the poor may accept of any inheritance, legacy or donation, without having first obtained the authority of the government.

At the time of the incorporation of this country with the French empire, the French laws relating to the formation of the office for charitable institutions, and the administrations of hospitals, were likewise ordered to operate in the Dutch departments ; but they were only put in practice in very few provinces ; and the organisation proceeding therefrom in these few provinces was replaced in 1814 by a Royal regulation and decree, coinciding more with that which formerly existed in this country, and continued to exist in most of the provinces, and which the following particulars will show the nature of :

The annexed copy of the law of the 28th November 1818, regulates the settlements and the relief of paupers ; their relief takes place, according to it, locally.

In North Holland, the principle which invariably has been acted on is, that this charge should in the first place rest on the overseers of the poor of the religious sects in each parish; but when the means of the administration of the poor are not sufficient, they can indiscriminately (without reference to the sect to which such poor belong) apply to the local administration for relief, which, after due investigation, generally grants it, according to the means of the municipal administration, which is regulated by its direction.

Paupers, however, who are not members of any congregation, or any religious sect, in the place where they live and receive relief, or where no ecclesiastical charity for the poor exists, are supported by the municipal administration of the place where they live and obtain their support; for which purpose, in several cities and parishes a separate administration for the poor is established, responsible to the municipal administration; whereas in the remaining cities and parishes such relief is granted either by the burgomaster, or by an overseer of the poor nominated by him.

The hospitals, which in many cities exist, are for the greater part government establishments, which are administered on account of the local magistracy, by a number of directors appointed thereto, in which hospitals all inmates, without any distinction as to religion, are taken in; some of these hospitals are however separate foundations, which exist wholly or in part on their own revenues.

Amongst the orphan houses and charities for children and old people, there are several establishments which exist wholly or in part on their own revenues; whereas the remainder are generally the property of particular church administrations of the poor, which in great cities is almost generally the case in orphan houses or charities for children.

Foundlings and abandoned children, at the charge of the place in which they are abandoned, are provided for in the establishment for children of the society for charitable purposes, by which institution the beggars are also provided for in the establishments appropriated for that purpose, and acknowledged by the government, at the charge of the place where they have a claim for relief.

There exist three local workhouses, one at Amsterdam, one at Middelburgh, and one in the commonalty Nieuwe Pekel A., in the province of Groningen, in which paupers, generally those who apply of their own accord, are taken in, upon condition that they contribute to their support as much as possible by labour: further, there are in several places twenty-one charitable houses of industry, which procure work for paupers who are in immediate want of work, either in the houses of industry, or at their own dwellings.

The table hereunto annexed states the number of persons to whom relief has been granted yearly, or work procured by the therein mentioned public municipal or ecclesiastical institutions of relief. It ought, however, to be observed, that sometimes amongst the number of those who have received relief, not only the heads of the family are reckoned, but also all the children living with them.

Besides the before-mentioned institutions, there are also various places, unions and societies, the intentions of which are to grant relief in some way or other; namely, some for the relief of very indigent poor; others for granting relief to poor lying-in women; and the commissions or societies which during the winter distribute provisions and fuel.

For affording useful instruction to the children of the poor, as well of those who receive relief, as of those who do not, but whose parents are poor, an opportunity in almost every place is given by means of charity schools, and where they do not exist, then in the common schools jointly with other children, free of expense, and paid for either by the local authority or overseers of the charity schools. The number of scholars increases yearly. In 1831 the number of them in the charity schools amounted to 36,378; and the number of scholars to whom instruction was given in the common schools jointly with other children, 37,231; therefore, in the whole, instruction is given to 73,609 children of paupers free of expense.

The local overseers of the poor, and those who being subsidized are under the control of the church, are responsible to the local authority for their receipts and disbursements; and moreover, in the same manner as those not under such control, bound annually to render the necessary statements in order to enable the government (in conformity with Article 228 of the municipal law) to present its annual report to the States General respecting the administration of the poor and the education of poor children.

The money intended for the support, procuring of work, and instruction of the poor free of expense, consists as follows:

- 1st. Of the revenues arising from the properties of the various institutions, and at some places from fines, and other rights granted them.
- 2d. From collections.
- 3d. From the administration of parishes; and also in some few instances from subsidies granted by the provinces or the State; whereas some of the houses of industry and charity schools are likewise assisted by administrations of the poor.
- 4th. From the produce of the work of the colonial establishment.
- 5th. From contributions and voluntary donations, and from the monies stipulated by contract by the society for charitable purposes, for the paupers hired out by them.

For the twelve years from 1820 to 1831, the receipts of the administration for the established charity houses, and those of the hospitals, taken on an average for each year, amount together;

The disbursements for instruction given in 1831 to 73,609 children of the poor (free of expense), are, with the exception of \$56,400 39 $\frac{1}{2}$, the amount of subsidies granted by the overseers of the poor, covered by the following receipts; viz.

It ought therefore to be observed, that about two-fifths of this sum are produced from the revenues of the poor; that more than another one-fifth is gathered by voluntary contributions of individuals; and that therefore the sum furnished by the local administrations, the provinces or the State, and which can only be considered as originating from taxes in an indirect manner, doth not amount to two-fifths of the whole sum, and which sum of $2,330,153 divided over the population, after deducting therefrom the number of poor who have received relief, amounts only to about one guilder each person.

HOLLAND.

With respect to the query as to what are the effects, working and results of the present poor law system upon the relief, the character, and the condition of the inhabitants, taking the whole together, it may be considered satisfactory.

The granting of relief is generally regulated pretty well every where; and although the distribution by some of the overseers of the poor could be rather more extended, yet it may however upon good grounds be supposed that no person, whose distress is known to them and satisfactorily proved, suffers absolute want; and with justice it may be said, that in this age, the instruction of the lower classes has so considerably improved, as to produce very salutary effects.

Annex No. 1.

STAATSBLAD van het Koninkryk der Nederlanden.

Wet van den 28 November 1818, houdende bepalingen tot aanwysing der plaats waar de behoeftigen in den algemeenen onderstand deelen kunnen.

Wy Willem, &c.

ALLEN die deze zullen zien of hooren lezen salut! doen te weten.

Alzoo wy in overweging hebben genomen dat het noodzakelyk is om door vaste en Algemeene bepalingen de plaats aan te wyzen waar de behoeftigen in den Algemeenen onderstand deelen kunnen.

Zoo is het dat wy den Raad van Staten gehoord, en met gemeen overleg der Staten Generaal hebben goedgevonden en verstaan, gelyk wy goedvinden en verstaan by dezen.

Art. 1. De Gemeente in welke een behoeftige in den Algemeenen onderstand deelen kan is die zyner geboorte.

Art. 2. De Gemeente waarin een kind toevallig geboren is, wordt daarom niet de plaats waarin hetzelve in den algemeenen onderstand deelen kan; deze blyft in de gemeente, waarin zyn vader woonde toen hetzelve geboren werd, en in die welke zyne moeder bewoonde, indien zy weduwe of het kind onecht is.

Art. 3. Indien iemand gedurende vier achter-één volgende Jaren, in ééne gemeente gewoond heeft, waarin hy niet is geboren, en aldaar gedurende denzelfden tyd al de hem opgelegden belastingen voldaan heeft; zal deze Gemeente wat den onderstand betreft, zyne geboorte plaats vervangen.

Art. 4. Dit nieuwe domicilie van onderstand wordt even zoo door elke andere gemeente vervangen, waarin dezelfde persoon naderhand, gedurende den tyd en op de wyze, by het voorgaand artikel bepaald, gewoond mogt hebben.

Art. 5. De behoeftigen, welke op het uitvaardigen dezer wet, in eene gemeente uit den Algemeenen onderstand bedeed worden, zullen gerekend worden tot die Gemeente te behooren, voor zoo ver dien onderstand betreft.

Art. 6. De Vreemdelingen welke mogten toe-gelaten zyn om in het Koninkryk hun verblyf te vestigen, en hetzelve volgens de wyze by Art. 3. bepaald, in eene Gemeente, gedurende zes jaren behouden hebben, kunnen in die gemeente in den Algemeenen onderstand deelen.

Art. 7. Het domicilie van onderstand voor getrouwde vrouwen en weduwen is dat harer mannen; voor minderjarigen dat van hunnen vader, voor onechte minderjarigen dat hunner moeder.

Eene weduw vrouw kan, zoo voor zich zelve als voor hare minderjarige kinderen een nieuw domicilie van onderstand, volgens de termen van Art. 3. verkrygen.

Art. 8. Het is aan Administrateurs van den algemeenen onderstand veroorloofd daar uit de genen te bedeele, aan wie zy die bedeeleing anderzins volgens de tegenwoordige wet, zouden kunnen weigeren, wanneer deze uit-zondering door regtvaardigheid en menschelykheid wordt gewettigd.

Art. 9. Door de bepalingen van deze wet wordt geenszins gederogeed aan de bestaande reglementen en verordening op het stuk van onderhoud, alimentatie en onderstand, door de Diakonien en alle andere administratien van Godsdienstige gemeenten aan derzelver behoeftige ledematen te verleenen.

Art. 10. Evenmin wordt door dezelve gederogeed aan plaatselyke Statuten, welke daarmede niet strydig zyn, noch aan de reglementen op het onderhoud der weduwen en kinderen van Militaire.

Art. 11. De verschillen over het onderstand domicilie van eenen behoeftigen, tusschen twee Gemeenten, zullen de plano door het kollegie van Gedeputeerde Staten worden beslist, indien de Gemeenten tot dezelfde Provincie behooren, en door Ons, indien dezelve in meer dan ééne provincie gelegen zyn.

Art. 12

Art. 12. Op dezelfde wyze zullen de verschillen van denzelfden aard worden afgedaan welke tusschen onderscheidene Diakonien of andere Soortgelyke Instellingen mogten ontstaan, gelyk mede die verschillen welke tusschen die Instellingen en de Gemeente besturen mogten ryzen.

Doch de geschillen tusschen onderscheidene Diakonien of andere soort gelyke Instellingen ontstaan in ééne en dezelfde gemeente, welker bevolking Vyf duizend zielen overtreft, zullen door het plaatselyk bestuur worden beslist.

Art. 13. Indien de billykheid sehynt te vorderen dat men in eene Gemeente eenen behoeftigen, uit den Algemeenen onderstand te hulp kome, zonder dat men het ééns zy, aan welke gemeente of aan welke Instelling die behoeftige zich kan aanmelden, zal in geval van noodzakelykheid, de gemeente waar hy zich bevindt billyke hulp verleenen, behoudens haar regt van verhaal tot restitutie op den genen op wien zulks haar toekomt.

Art. 14. De akten van Indemniteit, borg-togt, ontslag, readmissie en dergelyke na de uit-vaardiging dezer wet verleend, worden van onwaarde gehouden.

De zwarigheden, welke uit de bestaande akten van indemniteit enz, mogten ontstaan, zullen afgedaan worden in maniere als bepaald by Art. 11.

Lasten en bevelen dat dezer in het Staatsblad zal worden geinsereerd en dat alle Ministeriele Departementen en autoriteiten, kollegien en ambtenaren aan de naauwkeurige uitvoering de handen zullen houden.

Gegeven te Brussel den 28 Nov. des jaars 1818, het vyfde onzer regering.

Translation of Annex No. 1.

STATE Paper of the Kingdom of the Netherlands.

Law of the 28th November 1818, containing particulars for reference to the place where Paupers can participate in the General Fund.

We William, &c.

To all to whom these presents shall come, salute, and make known. Whereas we have taken into consideration that it is necessary to point out in fixed and general terms where the poor can participate in the general fund.

Therefore we have heard the Council of State, and after a joint deliberation of the States General have approved and granted, and as by these presents we do approve and grant.

Art. 1. The parish in which a poor person can participate in the general relief fund, is that of his birth.

Art. 2. The parish in which a child is born by chance does not therefore become the place where it can participate in the general fund; this belongs to the district in which the father lived when the child was born, and in that in which the mother resided if she is a widow, or the child illegitimate.

Art. 3. If any person has resided in a parish in which he was not born for four consecutive years, and during that time paid all the taxes there imposed, such parish, as far as regards relief, shall relieve his place of birth.

Art. 4. This, his new domicile of relief, is in like manner relieved by every other parish in which such poor at any later period shall reside, during the time, and in the manner fixed in the preceding article.

Art. 5. The paupers who, at the emanating of this law, receive relief in a parish from the general fund, shall be considered to belong to such parish as far as regards such relief.

Art. 6. Foreigners who are permitted to settle in the kingdom, and having resided in a parish six years, according to the terms fixed in Article 3, can participate in the general relief fund in such a parish.

Art. 7. The domicile of relief for married women and widows, is that of their husbands; for minors, that of their fathers; for illegitimate minors, that of their mothers.

A widow can obtain for herself, as well as for her infant children, a new domicile of relief, by confirming to the regulations of Article 3.

Art. 8. The administrators of the general relief fund are allowed to give relief from it to those whom they, according to the present law, might otherwise refuse; when this exception arises from justice and humanity, it becomes lawful.

Art. 9. In consequence of the stipulations of this law, there shall be no deviation from the existing regulations and ordinances with regard to the relief, alimentation and support to be granted by the deacons, and all other administrations of religious bodies to their poor members.

Appendix (F.)

HOLLAND.

Art. 10. Neither is altered by them any local statutes which are not contrary thereto, nor the regulations for the support of widows and children of the military.

Art. 11. The disputes between two parishes regarding the settlement and relief of a pauper, shall be decided by the chamber of the deputed States, if such parishes belong to the same province, and by Us if they are situated in more than one province.

Art. 12. In like manner shall be decided any disputes of the same nature which may arise between different bodies of deacons, or other similar institutions, as well as those which may arise between the said institution and the local authorities.

But the differences which may arise between different bodies of deacons, or other similar institutions belonging to the same parish, whose population exceeds 5,000, shall be decided by the local authorities.

Art. 13. Should justice appear to require that a pauper should be relieved from the general relief fund, without first ascertaining to what parish, or to what institution, such pauper ought to apply, the parish in which he then is shall give him a reasonable relief, saving their right of claim for restitution against the parish or institution who ought to have relieved him.

Art. 14. All acts of indemnity and security, release, re-admission, and such like, granted after the emanating of this law, are to be null and void.

Any difficulties which may arise from the existing act of indemnity, &c., are to be settled in the manner set forth in Article 11.

We order and command that these presents be inserted in the State Gazette, and that all ministerial departments and authorities, colleges and officers, give their assistance to the execution of it.

Given at Brussels the 28th November 1818, the fifth of Our reign.

OBSERVATIONS.

General Observations.—Although the persons who have only worked in or for the charitable work-places, and are not lodged or fed in them, are probably already included amongst the number of those who have been relieved by the direction of the Poor-house; it was however thought proper not to exclude them from this Table, because the expenses of procuring work belong likewise to these persons.

- (a) This being the first year in which the establishment at Veere was opened.
 (b) This decrease is occasioned by the removal of able paupers to the Ommerschans.
 (c) This establishment was done away with on the 20th June, and the able paupers were removed to the Ommerschans, and the invalid paupers to Hoorn.
 (d) This establishment was done away with on the 15th October; all the paupers in it were removed to the Ommerschans.

AMSTERDAM.

ANSWERS to the QUERIES circulated amongst His Majesty's Consuls.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Mendicity being discountenanced by law, does not prevail to a great extent; and it is principally confined to the towns, where it shows itself in the form of public begging, and applications at the houses of the inhabitants.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—There are no regulations for the relief of persons of this description; but they generally apply to the deacons or overseers of the poor of the church of which they are members, who on investigating their case, render them assistance if deserving of it.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—They are never billeted or quartered on householders.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—They are never boarded with individuals, except it be by private agreement between the overseers of the poor and such individuals, for the support of some indigent or helpless person they may wish to provide for in this way.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—At Amsterdam there is a work-house, in which, on application, the destitute are admitted for a limited time, and put to moderate labour in carpet making, &c., and are discharged from it whenever they find themselves in a situation to earn a subsistence; but in which persons found begging in the streets are forcibly confined by way of punishment: this, however, is not very strictly executed. They are clothed in dresses manufactured in the house, of a very inferior description. A few other towns have establishments something similar; but in the country they are not met with, the indigent there being generally relieved, in periods of distress, by a small assistance given them from the funds of the churches of which they are members, and from voluntary contributions of the inhabitants.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—The main support of the poor is derived from religious communities and charitable institutions. Every denomination of Christians, as well as the Jews, relieve their own members; and for this purpose have, for the most part, orphan and poor-houses and schools connected with them, which are supported by property belonging to them, and by voluntary contributions at the church doors, and collections at the houses of the members; the Jews being permitted occasionally to make a general collection throughout the city for their own purposes. These establishments, among the Protestants (the most numerous community), are called Deaconries; and they provide not only for the support of their indigent members, but also for their relief in sickness. The deacons, who have the immediate superintendence of the poor, limit the assistance given according to the exigency of the case, which they investigate very narrowly; and by becoming particularly acquainted with the situation of the applicants, are enabled to detect any imposition. The pecuniary relief afforded is very small, and can only be considered as in aid of the exertions of the poor to earn their own support, being limited to a few pence in the week; a weekly donation of 2 f. (or 40 d.), being looked upon as one of the largest. In winter, provisions, fuel and clothing are given in preference to money. The aged and infirm are admitted into the poor-houses, where, and at the schools, the children are educated, and afterwards put out to different trades, till they are able to provide for themselves. The deacons act gratuitously; and being of the most respectable class of citizens, elected by the churches to that office, the conscientious discharge of it is ensured, and in consequence malversations seldom take place. The general poor (being inhabitants), including persons who are and are not members of religious communities (Jews excepted), are relieved at their own houses from the revenue of property since long appropriated to that use, administered by commissioners appointed by the magistrates, and acting without emolument (as is the case with most similar offices in this country), and in aid of which public charitable collections at private houses are permitted, while any eventual deficiency is supplied from the funds of the city; but the relief afforded by these means is very small, and is confined chiefly to bread, with the addition of fuel in winter. Without other resources, therefore, or the assistance of private charity, the claimants could hardly subsist upon what they obtain in this way. By a decree passed in the year 1818, it was enacted, that the domicile of a male pauper is the place of his birth, superseded by the place where he has resided four years and paid taxes; and that of a child, the residence of his father, or of his mother, if a widow. That the domicile of a stranger is the place where he has resided six years; of married women and widows, the place of their husbands' residence; of legitimate minors, that of their fathers', and of illegitimate, that of their mothers'. This decree, fixing the domicile of paupers for the purpose of obtaining relief, and a subsequent one, by which gratuitous legal advice is allowed them, if they apply for it, implies that they have a claim to support, which can be enforced at law; but as the funds from which this support must be obtained are uncertain, the amount of the relief that can be given depends upon their extent, and it is in fact left at the discretion of the overseers, who have the faculty of withholding it on the proof of bad conduct of the recipients, or when their children do not properly attend the school, or have been neglected to be vaccinated. Those not members of churches are, moreover, admonished to join some religious community, and must promise to do so the first opportunity. The decree above alluded to also regulates the proceedings of one town against another, and of religious and charitable institutions at the same place, in respect to paupers. There are at Amsterdam, besides, a variety of private establishments for the poor of different religious denominations, endowed by charitable persons, in which the poor are relieved in different ways, according to prescribed regulations. In general, the funds of all the public charitable institutions have greatly diminished, while the number of claimants have much increased, which causes frequent and urgent appeals to the public benevolence. In the country the same system prevails, and the deacons or office-bearers of the churches are often called upon during the winter to assist in the support of indigent labourers with families, till the return of spring enables them to find work; but there are few permanent poor there, except the old and infirm, who are generally boarded in poor-houses in the adjoining town.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—This is never done.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—No work is provided for them in this way.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—See Answer to No. 4.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—The children of members of churches are taught, clothed and apprenticed, as mentioned (No. 4.), but there are besides public schools, supported in a great measure by charitable contributions, in which the children of the indigent obtain instruction free of any expense; and also other public schools, the admission to which can be obtained at a small contribution monthly. Religious instruction is obtained free of charge by the clergyman of the different religious establishments, and by catechisers, at a small expense.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Only those who are related to the destitute in the direct ascending or descending line, can be compelled to relieve them.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—This, if done at all, must be quite a voluntary act.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—Members of churches, when old, impotent and destitute, are admitted into the poor-houses belonging to these establishments. The magistrates provide at their own houses for those coming under the denomination of the general poor.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded at their homes?—The same is the case with respect to grants of fuel, &c.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—If boarded with individuals, it must be in consequence of some special agreement with the deacons.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—They are never quartered or billeted on householders.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Only those related to the destitute in the direct ascending or descending line, can be compelled to relieve them.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—There are hospitals for the sick. At Amsterdam there are two; and the Jews have one of their own, in which every sick inhabitant finds admittance, as well as

as lying-in women, and where they are provided, without expense, with medicinal and chirurgical attendance, food and medicines. Foreigners are also taken in, at a small charge, when there is room. In villages where such establishments are wanting, the sick are provided for as stated in the following reply.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—Physicians and surgeons are (in towns and villages) appointed at the public expense, to attend upon the destitute sick, and to lying-women at their own dwellings, if required, and have also the faculty of ordering medicines necessary for them (in towns at the city dispensary), gratis, where no remuneration can be afforded. The religious establishments have also generally a physician in their pay, to attend upon the sick belonging to their community. The inferior ranks of society in the towns generally subscribe to clubs for retaining a physician to attend upon any of the members who may require one, by which the expense does not fall too heavy on any individual.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There are none of that description.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—Answered in reply to Nos. 1 and 2.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are no other modes than the before mentioned.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—Upon the parent by whom the child is acknowledged.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—None can be compelled to it.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—Illegitimate children whose fathers and mothers, or either of them, are known, when destitute, are supported in the same manner as the legitimate. See Foundlings, and answer to question No. 4, Destitute Able-bodied.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

	Orphans.	Foundlings.	Deserted Children, whose Parents are known.
4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—	See answer to Q. 4, under the head, Destitute Able-bodied .	Funds belonging to the Foundling Hospital, lately suppressed, aided, when required, by subsidies from the city and administered by commissaries, are applied to their relief. The children are nursed and boarded in the city, and when of sufficient age, are sent to the agricultural colonies in the interior, where they are trained to rural occupations and to trades, and maintained out of the same funds till they are 20 years of age, when, if able, they must provide for themselves. There are no hospitals specially destined for foundlings in the kingdom.	Parents cannot desert their children, but are bound to support them.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—	They never are billeted on householders.	} - - Answered in the preceding column.
6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—	They are only boarded in consequence of a private agreement.
7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relations compelled to support them?—	Only grandfathers and grandmothers, or such relations as are in a direct ascending line, can be compelled.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

	Cripples.	Deaf and Dumb.	Blind.
1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—	There are no separate establishments for their reception.	An establishment for deaf and dumb, supported by voluntary gifts, exists at Groningen.	An establishment for blind exists at Amsterdam, also supported by voluntary contributions. It is entirely of a private nature, and the admission to it is at the option of the directors. The inmates are chiefly indigent persons, who receive board and instruction for nothing, but provide their own clothes.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—	They are never billeted on householders.
3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—	Nor boarded, except by private agreement.
4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—	Only those who are of the direct ascending or descending line can be compelled.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

At one of the hospitals in this city, indigent idiots and lunatics are provided for, and have medical attendance. But there are several private establishments, where those whose relatives have the means of supporting them are taken care of. None, however, can be placed there but under the sanction of the law.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

1st. On the industry of the labourers?—Such a degree of degradation attaches to the idea of obtaining relief, as is sufficient to stimulate a labourer to the greatest exertion to avoid it.

2d. On their frugality?—His earnings being so small, and barely sufficient to exist upon, induces to frugality.

3d. On the age at which they marry? 4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—The same cause must operate in preventing premature marriages, and in promoting affection among the members of a family, and a desire of rendering each other mutual assistance, to prevent recurrence to public charity.

5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The condition of the able-bodied and self-supported labourer may be considered as superior to that of one receiving pecuniary aid, not only for the reasons mentioned in Answer No. 1, but because the degree of support afforded them is so very scanty, as barely, with his own exertions in addition to it, to place him on an equal footing with the former. This has reference only to able-bodied paupers; no degradation attaching to the children and orphans of members of religious institutions, on account of the relief they receive, many of these having at times attained to eminent situations in the community.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and winter?—See Annex, No. 1, p. 586.

2. Is piece-work general?—See Annex, No. 1, p. 586. It is not common with agricultural labourers, except with grass mowers, who arrive periodically from Westphalia. They are generally paid 3*fl.* 30 c. (5*s.* 6 d.) to 4*fl.* 40 c. (7*s.* 4 d.) the bunder (about 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres), according to the thickness of the grass, without board or lodging. A stout labourer is able to mow 1 to 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ acre per day.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living? 4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—He might net from 150 fl. to 200 fl. (12 l. 10 s. to 6 l. 13 s. 4 d.) after payment of house-rent, assessed and district taxes, and school-money for his children; and he would require the whole for his expenditure. Only the entirely destitute can obtain instruction for their children gratis; but religious instruction is given without fee by the clergyman of his church, or can be obtained from a catechiser at a small expense. Labourers in general think it beneath them to let their children go to school for nothing, and some even keep them at home when unable to pay, rather than to send them there on these terms.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children? 6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Married women can seldom earn anything, having occupation enough in looking after their families; and children in general but little. A clever boy may get about 1 fl. (20 d.) a week; and some few women, employed in weeding gardens, earn 1 fl. 50 kr. (2 s. 6 d.) to 3 fl. 51 kr. a week in summer. Girls are employed as maids by the farmers, for their board and lodging, and sometimes a very trifling emolument.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years, respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—Perhaps 200 fl. (16 l. 13 s. 4 d.) or 250 fl. (20 l. 16 s. 8 d.), of which he would not be able to lay by anything. Excepting the husband, the others would hardly earn altogether 20 fl. (1 l. 13 s. 4 d.) or 30 fl. (2 l. 10 s.) a year, being only capable of performing light work in summer.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—They could subsist thereon, and live upon bread, (principally rye) cheese, potatoes, vegetables, beans and pork, buttermilk, with buckwheat meal, &c.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Could not lay by anything.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—Only a little garden of 10 or 30 rods, (600 rods about 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres) and some have none.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—Generally the proprietors of the soil, but sometimes a labourer, who lets a part to others, and occupies the remainder himself.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—By the week 60, 90 to 100 cents (12 d., 18 d. to 20 d.), according to the tenement. By the year for part of a house or room, 20 fl. to 25 fl. (1 l. 13 s. 4 d. to 2 l. 1 s. 8 d.), the whole of the premises being worth about 500 fl. to 600 fl. (41 l. 13 s. 11 d. to 50 l.).

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—The quantity is uncertain, but generally very limited, consisting of a few rods for the purpose of cultivating potatoes for their own use, or for sale, and is let to them in sundry soils, at the rate of five cents (one penny) a rod; and in better lands, at two or three times that price; arable land at 50 fl. or 60 fl. (4 l. 3 s. 4 d. to 5 l.) the bunder (2 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres).

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—In the province of North Holland, there died in the year 1832,

In towns, Males	-	-	-	-	-	5,114
— Females	-	-	-	-	-	4,790

Being 936 females to every 1,000 males; and 1 for every 30 $\frac{6}{10}$ of the population. In this year 920 persons died of cholera in North Holland.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—In said province were born in the year 1832,

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The marriages in the province of North Holland, in the year 1832, were 2,660; and compared with the births, give $5\frac{1}{10}$ children to every marriage. In Amsterdam, in 1833, were 1,642 marriages and five divorces. The population in 1832 was 200,784 souls. Proportion of marriages, 1 to every $122\frac{2}{10}$ persons.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Generally between 20 and 25 years.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—No particular cause can be assigned for marriages being delayed besides the inability of the parties to support a family.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—No class of labourers earn sufficient to enable them to lay by anything. There are saving banks established in cities, but the monies lodged there are deposited by a different class of persons.

LETTER from Sir R. Adair, to the Right Honourable Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B., &c. &c. &c.

My Lord,

Brussels, May 9th, 1834.

HAVING at length obtained from the Minister of Justice an answer to the questions concerning the Belgian Regulations for the Poor, which I addressed to him in obedience to your Lordship's instructions, I herewith enclose it to your Lordship, together with the printed documents by which it is accompanied.

I have, &c.

Robert Adair.

Enclosure.

LETTER from the Belgic Minister of Justice to Sir Robert Adair.

Monsieur le Chevalier,

Bruxelles, le 6 Mai 1834.

J'AI l'honneur de vous faire parvenir avec la présente des réponses aux questions que vous m'avez remises de la part du gouvernement Anglais, relativement aux établissemens de bienfaisance et au système de secours pour les indigens, en Belgique, en les accompagnant de divers ouvrages et documens qui concernent ces objets.

Je n'ai pas cru devoir attendre pour vous faire l'envoi de ces pièces, que je fusse à même d'y joindre les nouveaux renseignemens statistiques concernant l'exercice de 1833, et que je fais recueillir en ce moment; je me réserve, Monsieur le Chevalier, d'avoir l'honneur de vous les transmettre dès qu'ils seront prêts.

Quant aux questions relatives à l'état des agriculteurs et des artisans, au taux des salaires, au nombre des mariages, des naissances et des décès, &c. &c., comme il compète à mon collègue au Ministère de l'Intérieur d'y répondre, je lui ai communiqué la série de ces questions, et il se dispose sans doute à y satisfaire.

Veillez agréer, Monsieur le Chevalier, l'hommage de ma considération la plus distinguée.

A Sir R. Adair,
Ministre Plénipotentiaire du Gouvernement Britannique.

Le Ministre de la Justice,
Lebeau.

MINISTERE DE LA JUSTICE.

REPONSES aux Questions adressées par le Gouvernement Anglais sur l'état des Indigens en Belgique.

(Janvier 1834.)

I.—1. LE vagabondage et la mendicité habituelle deviennent chaque année plus rares en Belgique.

La mendicité accidentelle, occasionée par le manque temporaire d'ouvrage, par la rigueur de l'hiver, etc., est plus commune; mais comme elle cesse ordinairement avec les causes qui l'ont fait naître, on déploie rarement contre ceux qui s'y livrent, les rigueurs de la législation. On trouvera des renseignemens sur cette législation, ainsi que sur les institutions qui s'y rattachent, dans un Rapport de M. l'Inspecteur-général des Prisons, publié en 1832, sous le titre suivant: "Des Moyens de soulager l'Indigence et de prévenir la Mendicité." Le vagabondage habituel est limité à quelques districts.

2. L'autorité n'accorde de secours d'aucune espèce aux individus traversant le pays, cherchant de l'ouvrage, retournant au lieu de leur domicile, ou mendiant pour vivre. La charité particulière seule vient par fois à leur secours. Tout individu pour voyager en Belgique doit être muni d'un passeport, faute de quoi il s'expose d'être arrêté.

II.—1 & 2. Les indigens valides sont le plus ordinairement secourus à domicile par les bureaux de bienfaisance institués et dotés pour secourir les pauvres. Les secours dans ce cas sont limités au tems de la détresse, et cessent lorsque l'indigent valide se trouve de nouveau à même de pourvoir à sa subsistance par son travail.

A défaut ou en cas d'insuffisance des secours alloués par les bureaux de bienfaisance, les indigens valides peuvent se présenter pour être admis dans les dépôts de mendicité; ces dépôts sont au nombre de six; savoir, Le Dépôt d'Hoogstraeten, pour la Province d'Anvers.

— de la Cambre	—	Brabant.
— de Bruges	—	Les deux Flandres.
— de Mons	—	Hainaut.
— de Namur	—	Namur et Luxembourg.

Néanmoins, pour prévenir les abus qui pourraient résulter de la libre admission des indigens valides dans ces établissemens, l'arrêté Royal du 29 Août 1833, prescrit aux commissions chargées de leur administration de n'y admettre que provisoirement les individus qui viendront y chercher un asile, sans la demande préalable de l'autorité municipale de la commune de leur domicile de secours, et de donner immédiatement à celle-ci avis de l'admission provisoire. Si l'administration communale offre de les entretenir au lieu de leur domicile, ils y sont renvoyés; si non ils demeurent au dépôt, et la commune est obligée de payer leurs frais d'entretien.

Indépendamment de l'arrêté du 29 Août 1833, qui pose les bases de la réorganisation des dépôts, on pourra consulter, pour ce qui concerne le régime et la discipline de ces établissemens, les dispositions insérées dans le code administratif des établissemens de bienfaisance, et le Rapport de M. l'Inspecteur-général des Prisons, cité plus haut.

Outre les dépôts où l'on reçoit les indigens valides, ils peuvent également trouver un asile et du travail aux colonies agricoles: dans quelques localités, à Gand, par exemple, on les admet aussi temporairement dans des maisons de travail, où on leur fournit de l'occupation jusqu'à ce qu'ils puissent s'en procurer eux-mêmes.

3. Les abbayes et les autres établissemens religieux qui distribuaient des aumônes aux indigens, ont été supprimés en Belgique comme en France, à la suite de la Révolution Française; leurs biens ont été vendus comme propriétés nationales. Il y a en Belgique plusieurs communautés religieuses qui se vouent à l'éducation de la jeunesse, à l'instruction des pauvres, au soulagement des malades; il n'y en a plus qui fassent aux pauvres des aumônes et des distributions.

4. Les bureaux de bienfaisance se bornent ordinairement à procurer aux indigens des secours en vêtemens, en denrées, pain, pommes de terre, chauffage, en objets de couchage, en médicamens, et quelquefois en argent. Rarement ils procurent du travail à domicile aux indigens qui exercent un métier, mais qui sont hors d'état de trouver par eux-mêmes de l'occupation. Dans quelques localités, à Bruxelles, à Liège, à Verviers, etc., des associations particulières se sont formées pour combler cette lacune, et suppléer à l'insuffisance des ressources des bureaux de bienfaisance. Cependant, leurs efforts pour procurer du travail aux indigens valides n'ont pas toujours été couronnés de succès.

5. Les travaux publics offrent dans quelques localités une ressource aux indigens valides sans autre moyen d'occupation. C'est ainsi qu, pendant l'hiver de 1830 à 1831, on employa un grand nombre d'ouvriers de Bruxelles, momentanément sans travail, à l'achèvement des boulevards de la ville. Cet hiver encore la même ressource est offerte aux indigens valides. Alors que les circonstances ou la saison se montrent plus favorables, ces ouvriers rentrent dans leurs ateliers ou reprennent leurs travaux accoutumés.

Au dépôt de mendicité d'Hoogstraeten (province d'Anvers), et aux colonies agricoles, les indigens valides sont employés à l'agriculture; dans les autres dépôts ils sont exclusivement employés à des travaux d'atelier.

Les enfans pauvres dans les écoles communales ne reçoivent que l'instruction; ils ne sont ni nourris, ni vêtus; le soin de les mettre en apprentissage est généralement abandonné à leurs familles. Cependant, les jeunes filles apprennent assez souvent dans les écoles à tricoter et à coudre. Elles vont ensuite en apprentissage comme les garçons.

Indépendamment des écoles communales, il existe encore en Belgique, particulièrement dans les communes populeuses, des écoles particulières où l'on admet aussi gratuitement les enfans pauvres. Les frères des écoles Chrétiennes, expulsés de Belgique sous le gouvernement Hollandais, y ont érigé depuis la Révolution de 1830, plusieurs établissemens d'instruction que fréquentent un grand nombre de pauvres enfans. Il y a quelques années aussi qu'on a fondé à Bruxelles des écoles en salles d'asile pour la première enfance, à l'instar des infant schools d'Angleterre. Cet exemple commence à être imité dans quelques localités.

8. Aux termes des art. 203 à 211, 349, etc. du Code Civil, les parens au 1^{er} degré, ascendans et descendans, le mari et l'épouse, se doivent assistance mutuelle en cas d'indigence. Les secours qu'ils reçoivent dans ce cas, à titre d'alimens, sont proportionnés à la fortune de celui qui doit les allouer.

9. Des établissemens de prêts sur gages, nommés Monts-de-Piété ont été institués dans les principales villes, sous la surveillance des autorités locales. Les Monts-de-Piété ne prêtent jamais qu'une valeur moindre que celle de l'objet engagé; les intérêts qu'ils retirent de leurs avances dépassent généralement l'intérêt légal. Si les gages déposés ne sont pas retirés au bout d'un certain tems, ils sont vendus pour compte des dépositaires. Les bénéfices résultant de ces transactions servent à couvrir les frais d'administration des Monts-de-Piété.

Piété, et le surplus est versé dans les caisses des hospices. (Voir dans le Code Administratif des Etablissements de Bienfaisance les dispositions qui concernent l'organisation et la direction des Monts-de-Piété. Voir aussi la brochure de M. Arnould, sur les Monts-de-Piété.)

III.—1. Il y a en Belgique un grand nombre d'hospices et de maisons de refuge, où l'on reçoit les indigens qui, à cause de leur grand âge, sont incapables de gagner leur subsistance. Les réglemens de ces établissemens varient suivant les localités. Les uns sont communaux, c'est le plus grand nombre ; les autres particuliers.

La statistique des établissemens de bienfaisance, publiée sous l'ancien gouvernement, indique le nombre des hospices, leurs revenus, leurs dépenses, leur population, etc., pendant une série de plusieurs années.

2. Les bureaux de bienfaisance accordent également aux indigens invalides par suite de vieillesse, des secours à domicile en nourriture, chauffage, habillemens et argent.

Ces secours, accordés à titre provisoire aux indigens valides, sont ordinairement accordés sans interrogation aux invalides.

3. Lorsque l'indigent invalide n'a pas de famille où il puisse être reçu, à défaut de pouvoir le faire admettre dans un hospice, il arrive parfois qu'on le met en pension chez un particulier ou un cultivateur, moyennant une somme modique qu'on paye annuellement à ce dernier. On a particulièrement recours à cet expédient dans les communes rurales qui n'ont pas d'hospices où l'on recueille les pauvres vieillards.

4. Nous avons répondu plus haut à cette demande. (II. R. 8.)

IV.—1. Des hôpitaux, de même que les hospices, sont établis dans la plupart des villes ; généralement on y reçoit tous les malades indigens qui s'y présentent, et on les traite gratuitement.

La statistique des établissemens de bienfaisance indique le nombre des hôpitaux en Belgique, leurs revenus, leurs dépenses, leur population, leurs décès : les réglemens de ces établissemens diffèrent suivant les localités, de même que ceux des hospices.

Nous joignons aussi quelques-uns de ces réglemens à nos réponses, ils suppléeront à ce que celles-ci peuvent avoir d'incomplet.

3. Indépendamment des secours médicaux donnés aux malades indigens dans les hôpitaux et par l'intermédiaire des bureaux de bienfaisance, il existe encore dans quelques localités des sociétés d'assistance mutuelle entre les ouvriers exerçant une même profession ; les sociétés ont pour but principal, de donner des secours aux ouvriers malades ; elles sont établies d'après le même plan que les sociétés d'assistance mutuelle de Paris.

4. Dans quelques hôpitaux on reçoit les femmes en couche quelles qu'elles soient ; dans d'autres on ne reçoit que les femmes mariées munies de certificats favorables ; dans plusieurs localités on n'admet pas même celles-ci dans les hôpitaux. Cette exclusion a donné naissance aux sociétés dites De Charité Maternelle ; ces sociétés fournissent des secours aux femmes et aux filles en couche, soit à domicile, soit en les admettant pendant un certain tems dans des lieux appropriés à cet effet. Il existe en Belgique trois sociétés de charité maternelle, à Liège, Verviers et Gand.

5. Il n'existe point à notre connaissance, d'autre mode de secours public pour les malades indigens que ceux que nous venons d'énumérer.

V.—1. Tout ce qui concerne l'entretien et l'alimentation des enfans illégitimes, est réglé en Belgique par le Code Civil Français, qui y est encore en rigueur. La charge de cet entretien incombe aux pères ou aux mères qui les ont reconnus. On sait que la recherche de la paternité est interdite par le Code Français.

2. A défaut de tel père et mère, nul autre parent en ligne ascendante ne peut être tenu de fournir des alimens à l'enfant illégitime.

3. Les enfans illégitimes ne peuvent être entretenus aux frais des communes, des provinces, ou de l'état, qu'en cas d'indigence dûment constatée ; ils sont dans ce cas rangés dans la catégorie des enfans trouvés et abandonnés, et admis dans les établissemens qui sont destinés à ces derniers.

VI.—1. Il existe en Belgique plusieurs établissemens destinés à recevoir les orphelins ; ces établissemens sont, avec les établissemens pour les vieillards, les infirmes, les incurables, les hôpitaux, etc., administrés par les commissions locales, appelée Commissions Administratives des Hospices. Ce sont pour la plupart des fondations particulières successivement dotées par des legs et des donations de particuliers. Les établissemens ou maisons d'enfans trouvés sont distincts des établissemens pour les orphelins. Jusqu'ici la charge des premiers a incombé aux communes ; un projet de loi récemment présenté à la législature, a pour but de déplacer cette charge en la répartissant entre les communes, les provinces, et l'état.

vieillards. Faute d'hospices de ce genre, beaucoup d'estropiés et d'incurables indigens sont obligés de chercher au refuge dans les dépôts de mendicité.

Il n'existe en Belgique aucun établissement spécial pour les aveugles, mais il y en a deux pour les sourds-muets, à Grand et à Liège ; il est question aussi d'en ériger un à Bruxelles, où l'on recevrait également les jeunes aveugles indigens. Les sourds-muets et les aveugles indigens sont d'ailleurs assimilés aux autres indigens, et trouvent asile dans les hospices ordinaires et les dépôts de mendicité. Ce qui manque ce sont de bons établissemens d'instruction, où ils puissent recevoir une éducation qui les mette à même de connaître un métier, et de s'en faire un moyen d'existence.

L'état des aliénés en Belgique est à peu près le même qu'en France, en Angleterre, et en Allemagne. Pour l'apprécier on pourra consulter un rapport publié en 1832 par M. l'Instituteur des Prisons, sur L'Etat des Aliénés en Belgique, et sur les Moyens d'améliorer leur Sort.

2. Les aliénés sont dans certaines localités enfermés dans des établissemens appropriés à cet effet ; dans d'autres on les met en pension chez des cultivateurs. Les aliénés du Brabant et d'une partie de la province d'Anvers sont envoyés dans la Campine, dans la commune de Gheel, où, de tems immémorial, les habitans font de l'entretien des aliénés une branche de spéculation.

3. Les pauvres ne sont tenus de subvenir à l'entretien de leurs parens, estropiés, incurables, sourds-muets, aveugles et aliénés, que pour autant que le degré de parenté de ceux-ci soit de nature à leur imposer cette obligation. Nous avons déjà indiqué la règle suivie à cet égard, à propos de l'entretien des indigens valides.

VIII. Les établissemens de bienfaisance en Belgique, quoique n'étant pas tous également irréprochables, procurent aux pauvres un soulagement réel, sans avoir les inconvéniens des institutions charitables de l'Angleterre. En effet, chez nous nul ne peut exiger de secours en vertu d'un droit ; généralement bornées d'ailleurs, les ressources des bureaux de bienfaisance, pour les distributions des secours à domicile, ne sont pas de nature à provoquer, à exagérer les espérances du pauvre : il sait qu'il est de son intérêt d'épuiser tous les moyens de se tirer d'embarras par lui-même, avant de réclamer l'assistance des maîtres des pauvres. Cependant les fonds des bureaux de bienfaisance ne sont pas partout également bien administrés, et de l'administration vicieuse de ces fonds dans quelques localités, résultent des abus qui se rapprochent à quelques égards des abus qui naissent du système Anglais, ainsi, p. e., on fait parfois aux indigens des distributions sans avoir convenablement constaté au préalable leur défaut absolu de moyens d'existence. On encourage ainsi la paresse et l'imprévoyance ; et il n'est pas sans exemple, que tel ouvrier s'abstient de travailler uniquement parcequ'il croit pouvoir compter sur la charité facile et aveugle du maître des pauvres chargé de la distribution des secours dans son quartier.

Mais ces abus ne sont pas très fréquens, et forment l'exception : il s'en suit qu'ils n'ont qu'une influence très faible, très indirecte sur l'industrie et sur l'activité des journaliers et des ouvriers, sur leur manière de voir, leur frugalité, sur l'âge auquel il se marient, etc. ; on pourrait peut-être cependant reprocher aux hospices pour les vieillards et aux maisons d'enfans trouvés, d'avoir pour tendance de diminuer la dépendance, et d'affaiblir l'affection mutuelle des parens, des enfans, et des autres membres des familles ; mais d'autres avantages recommandent ces établissemens et balancent ces inconvéniens.

En somme, en Belgique, la condition des ouvriers valides qui subviennent par eux-mêmes à leur subsistance est sous tous les rapports préférable à la condition des individus entretenus par la charité publique, ou vivant d'aumônes ; ces derniers d'ailleurs deviennent moins nombreux de jour en jour, et leur métier est inséparable du danger des poursuites judiciaires et de la séquestration pour un terme plus ou moins long dans un dépôt de mendicité. Nous avons dit que les établissemens charitables de la Belgique n'étaient pas tous également irréprochables ; aussi le gouvernement prépare-t-il la révision successive des lois et des dispositions réglementaires qui les régissent. La loi du 13 Août 1833,* relative à l'entretien des indigens et mendiens dans les dépôts de mendicité ; l'arrêté du 29 Août 1833,† qui jette les bases de la réorganisation de ces derniers établissemens, sont destinés à préparer la réforme devenue indispensable de toute la législation relative à l'extinction de la mendicité. La législature ne tardera pas, non plus à s'occuper d'une loi relative à l'entretien des enfans trouvés d'une autre loi concernant la séquestration des aliénés, à la suite des quelles on s'occupera probablement de remédier aux vices et aux abus qui existent dans les établissemens destinés aux enfans trouvés et aux insensés. La prochaine discussion des lois provinciales et communales, indiquera probablement aussi les bases d'après lesquelles il y aura lieu à procéder à la révision et à la modification des dispositions concernant les hospices et les bureaux de bienfaisance. L'établissement des colonies agricoles est également l'objet dans ce moment d'un examen qui conduira probablement à leur réorganisation. L'amélioration du sort des aveugles et des sourds-muets, l'extension de l'instruction dans les classes laborieuses, et de l'institution des caisses d'épargne et d'assistance mutuelle compléteront cette série de mesures bienfaisantes qui sont déjà mises en discussion, préparées ou seulement projetées, et dont l'accomplissement ne sera probablement pas très éloigné.

REGLEMENT pour la tenue des Ecoles de Pauvres de la ville de Louvain.

La Section des Secours, faisant les Fonctions de Curateurs des Ecoles des Pauvres, Vu l'arrêté du Conseil-général d'administration des hopices et des secours du 12 Juin 1819, portant institution de cinq écoles pour l'instruction gratuite des enfans indigens, ledit arrêté approuvé par le collège des bourgmestre et échevins de la ville, le 2 Juillet suivant.

Considérant, qu'aux termes de l'Art. 8 dudit arrêté, elle doit proposer, à la sanction du même collège, un règlement, sur le mode de l'enseignement, l'admission des enfans, la police des écoles, etc., et qu'il importe de s'acquitter de ces devoirs, vu la prochaine ouverture des écoles dont il s'agit ;

Arrête le Règlement suivant :

MODE DE L'INSTRUCTION.

Ecole des Garçons.

Art. 1. L'enseignement simultané sera suivi dans l'école des garçons pauvres, d'après le mode établi dans celle du dépôt de mendicité à la Cambre, en y apprenant à lire, à écrire, et les règles de l'arithmétique.

Ecoles des Filles.

Art. 2. Le même mode sera suivi, autant que possible, par chacune des directrices des 4 écoles des filles, pour ce qui regarde la lecture, l'écriture et les règles de l'arithmétique ; à cet effet, le directeur de l'école des garçons se rendra fréquemment aux écoles des filles, et au moins trois fois par semaine, pour instruire les directrices dans l'enseignement simultané, et les familiariser promptement avec ce mode d'instruction ; il fera rapport, au moins tous les trois mois, des progrès de l'instruction au conseil-général, qui, d'après ce rapport, décidera l'époque à laquelle l'enseignement simultané pourra être introduit dans chaque école. Le conseil se réserve d'accorder une gratification au directeur de l'école des garçons, d'après la promptitude et le zèle qu'il aura employés pour l'introduction de l'enseignement simultané dans toutes les écoles des filles. Le conseil-général se réserve aussi d'accorder une gratification à la directrice de l'école des filles qui, la première, se sera rendue apte à instruire par l'enseignement simultané, et l'aura pratiqué avec succès.

Livres à l'Usage des Ecoles.

Art. 3. Indépendamment des livres, dont on se sert dans l'école du dépôt de mendicité, qui sont joints au présent, sous les Nos. 1, 2 et 3, le directeur et les directrices employeront le catéchisme de l'Archevêché de Malines, au moyen duquel, les garçons et les filles s'exerceront la mémoire.

TRAVAIL.

Garçons.

Art. 4. Les enfans qui fréquentent l'école des garçons, et qui n'auront pas encore choisi un métier, apprendront à éplucher les laines, à l'atelier de charité, jusqu'à ce que leurs parens y pourvoient.

Art. 5. Les enfans qui apprennent un métier hors de l'établissement, devront rapporter un certificat de leur maître, avec lequel, le directeur se concertera pour fixer, d'un commun accord, les heures pendant lesquelles ils pourront se rendre à l'école.

Filles.

Art. 6. Les filles recevront l'instruction pendant une heure le matin, et une heure l'après dîner ; le reste du tems sera employé, à la couture de préférence, au tricotage, et à la fabrication de la dentelle, suivant les dispositions particulières de chaque enfant.

Ouverture et Cloture des Ecoles.

Art. 7. Les écoles, tant celles des garçons, que les 4 écoles des filles, s'ouvriront depuis le 21 Septembre jusqu'au 1^{er} Avril, à 8 heures moins un quart du matin, et du 1^{er} Avril au 31 Août, à 7 heures moins un quart. L'ouverture sera suivie immédiatement de l'appel nominal, après lequel les enfans se rendront à l'église, comme il sera dit ci-après.

Art. 8. De retour de la messe, les enfans auront récréation pendant un quart d'heure, pour prendre la nourriture, et aussitôt après commenceront les écoles.

Art. 9. L'heure de l'instruction écoulée, les filles travailleront pendant le reste de la matinée, jusqu'à midi.

Art. 10. L'école des garçons finira le matin à 10 heures.

Art. 11. Les écoles, tant des filles que des garçons, se rouvriront l'après dîner à 2 heures précises.

Les filles recommenceront par une heure d'instruction, et seront, pour le reste du tems, employées au travail, savoir, pendant les 6 mois d'hiver, jusqu'à 5 heures, et pendant les 6 mois d'été, jusqu'à 6 heures du soir.

Art. 12. L'école des garçons finira l'après dîner, pendant toute l'année, à 4 heures du soir.

Devoirs Religieux.

Art. 13. Le matin, immédiatement après que l'appel nominal aura été fait, les enfans de

Art. 24. Messieurs les maîtres des pauvres délivrent à chaque enfant, qu'ils admettront aux écoles de leurs paroisses respectives, un bon d'admission, suivant le modèle joint au présent, sous le No. 4.

Art. 25. Ils tiendront un registre particulier pour les garçons, et un autre pour les filles, sur lesquels ils inscriront, par ordre des dates, les bons d'admission, qu'ils délivreront aux enfans.

Le modèle de ce registre est joint au présent, sous le No. 5.

Art. 26. Les directeur et directrices tiendront de leur côté pareil registre, sur lequel ils inscriront les bons d'admission, délivrés par les maîtres des pauvres, au moment que les enfans le présenteront à leurs écoles respectives : ils placeront ces bons dans un carton, par ordre de No. d'admission, et y joindront la déclaration du médecin et chirurgien de la paroisse, concernant leur état sanitaire, dont l'examen préalable est prescrit par l'Art. 20 du présent.

Art. 27. Les directeur et directrices n'admettront aucun enfant dans leurs écoles respectives, sans le bon d'admission, la déclaration du médecin et chirurgien, concernant leurs état sanitaire, et le bulletin de leur naissance.

Art. 28. Ceux-ci retourneront à Messieurs les maîtres des pauvres les bons d'admission des enfans, aussitôt qu'ils quitteront leurs écoles, soit après avoir fait leur première communion, soit par renvoi, soit en quittant l'école librement.

Art. 29. Le retour de ces bons chez les maîtres des pauvres, leur servira d'avis qu'il y a une place vacante, qu'ils conféreront aussitôt, en observant aussi, qu'ils ne pourront jamais outre-passer le nombre fixé par l'Art. 23.

POLICE.

Art. 30. Messieurs les maîtres des pauvres, et particulièrement Messieurs les Curés, sont priés de surveiller les écoles de leurs paroisses respectives, ainsi que d'informer la section des secours par écrit, toutes les fois qu'ils y découvriraient des abus, afin qu'elle puisse prendre de suite les mesures nécessaires pour les faire cesser.

Art. 31. La section des secours nomme les membres chargés de la surveillance spéciale de chaque école.

La section y fera annuellement une visite, et toutes les fois qu'elle le trouvera convenir.

Art. 32. La police intérieure de l'école s'exerce immédiatement, par le directeur ou la directrice respective de chaque école.

Art. 33. Ils veilleront à ce que les enfans soient journellement lavés, qu'ils aient la tête propre, et qu'ils conservent leurs habillemens.

Art. 34. Lorsque les élèves commettent des fautes graves, les directeur ou directrices en font part au membre de la section spécialement chargé de la surveillance de l'école.

Celui-ci autorise d'infliger les peines prescrites, ou en réfère à la section des secours, suivant la gravité des cas.

La section seule prononce le renvoi des enfans.

Art. 35. Les peines que le directeur ou les directrices peuvent eux-mêmes infliger aux enfans, sont :

De les faire mettre à genoux au milieu de la classe, pendant un quart d'heure, une demie heure, et une heure au plus, de leur attacher au dos, ou placer sur la tête une marque humiliante, et ce suivant la gravité des fautes.

Art. 36. Il est expressement défendu au directeur ou directrices, de battre ou de maltraiter les enfans : ils doivent se borner aux peines ci-dessus.

Le directeur ou les directrices éviteront, autant que possible, la punition des enfans ; ils employeront toujours de préférence les moyens de douceur, les menaces, et seulement les peines de rigueur, lorsque le cas l'exigera.

Art. 37. Les peines à infliger par le membre surveillant, sont, la retenue d'une partie du gain des filles, et la prison pour les garçons.

Art. 38. La section des secours prononce le renvoi des enfans qui commettent des fautes graves et qui, soit à cause de méchanceté, soit à cause d'indocilité ou défaut d'application, donnent de mauvais exemples aux autres enfans.

Le renvoi pourra être limité pour un, deux, trois mois, même pour un an.

Il sera définitif, si les fautes sont extrêmement graves et pour récidive.

Art. 39. Lorsque le directeur ou les directrices s'apercevront qu'un élève est atteint de la galle, de la teigne, ou de toute autre maladie contagieuse, ils feront venir aussitôt le médecin ou chirurgien de la paroisse, et sur la déclaration affirmative, en font rapport au membre surveillant, qui ordonne le renvoi de l'enfant jusqu'à guérison parfaite.

Art. 40. L'enfant ainsi renvoyé ne rentrera de nouveau en classe, que muni d'une déclaration par écrit, portant qu'il est parfaitement guéri.

RECOMPENSES.

Art. 41. Les récompenses pour les garçons consisteront :

1°. En des places distinguées dans l'intérieur de l'école et en allant à l'église.

2°. En des habillemens, que Messieurs les maîtres des pauvres délivreront, conformément à l'invitation de la section des secours, et sur le rapport favorable du directeur ou des directrices des écoles. Et

3°. Dans une marque distinguée, que les plus sages porteront sur la poitrine, après avoir mérité les habillemens complets.

Art. 42. Les récompenses pour les filles consisteront :

- 1°. En des places distinguées dans l'intérieur des écoles et en allant à l'église.
- 2°. En le payement de ce qu'elles gagneront, déduction faite des retenues, dont il sera parlé ci-après.
- 3°. En des habillemens, que Messieurs les maîtres des pauvres délivreront de la même manière qu'il a été dit à l'article précédent.
- 4°. Et finalement, dans la marque distinctive qu'elles porteront au col, après avoir mérité les habillemens.

DU TRAVAIL ET SON PRODUIT.

Art. 43. Les vêtemens, chemises, bas, etc., qui seront mis à l'avenir à la disposition de Messieurs les maîtres des pauvres, seront confectionnés ; savoir, les étoffes à l'atelier de charité, où les garçons éplucheront les laines, et par les filles, dans leurs écoles respectives.

Art. 44. La section des secours prendra, à l'égard de l'exécution de l'article précédent, les dispositions nécessaires, pour en assurer le prompt succès.

Art. 45. Les directrices tiendront un registre, dans lequel chaque enfant aura son compte, et où sera annoté le produit de son travail.

Le modèle de ce registre se trouve joint au présent, sous le No. 6.

Art. 46. Tous les trois mois, il en sera fait un décompte.

La directrice prélèvera sur ce produit 40 p. 0.

La moitié de ce prélèvement est destiné à l'achat des fils à coudre et à dentelle, et à l'entretien des métiers, chaises, etc.

L'autre moitié appartiendra à la directrice, pour prix d'encouragement.

Le reste du compte de chaque enfant lui sera remis en récompence, si elle l'a méritée ; sinon, ce produit appartiendra à la masse, et sera destiné à une réjouissance annuelle.

REJOUISSANCES ANNUELLES.

Art. 47. Le directeur et les directrices se rendront tous les ans, un après-dîner, hors d'une des portes de la ville, et y procureront une récréation à leurs élèves.

Les écoles ne peuvent jamais se réunir à cet effet.

Le directeur pourra disposer pour la récréation annuelle d'une somme de f. 15-0-0 et chaque directrice de f. 8-0-0.

Le directeur portera cette somme dans son compte mensuel, et les directrices la prélèveront sur la masse, dont il est question à l'article précédent, et à défaut de masse, elles la porteront en compte comme le directeur.

DISPOSITIONS GENERALES.

Art. 48. Le présent règlement sera affiché dans chaque école, et il en sera fait lecture tous les ans, par le secrétaire de l'administration, le jour de l'ouverture solennelle des écoles, qui aura lieu en présence du Conseil-général d'administration des hospices et des secours, et de Messieurs les curés et maîtres des pauvres de toutes les paroisses de la ville.

Art. 49. A cet effet, le premier Lundi, qui suivra le 21 Septembre de chaque année, les directrices des écoles des filles se rendront, à 10 heures du matin, à l'école des garçons, où ceux-ci seront présens.

Le secrétaire y donnera lecture du présent règlement.

Le président du conseil fera connaître le membre de la section des secours, qui sera chargé de la surveillance immédiate de chaque école, pendant l'année.

On proclamera le nom des élèves de chaque école qui, par leur application et leur progrès, auront été reconnus avoir le plus de mérite. Ces élèves seront décorés d'une marque distinctive, qu'ils porteront dans l'intérieur de la classe, pendant toute l'année : le président prononcera ensuite l'ouverture du cours.

Art. 50. La cérémonie terminée, toutes les écoles, accompagnées de leur directeur et directrices respectives, se rendront à l'église de St. Pierre, et y assisteront à la messe d'onze heures, de la manière qu'il est prescrit à l'Art. 13 du présent règlement.

REGENCE DE TOURNAY.

ORDONNANCE portant Règlement sur la Distribution des Secours à Domicile aux Indigens.

NOUS, Bourgmestre et Echevins de la Ville de Tournay,
Vu l'Ordonnance du Conseil de Régence dont la teneur suit :

Le Conseil de Régence de la Ville de Tournay,

Vu la loi du 7 Frimaire, an 5, portant création des bureaux de bienfaisance, et réglant une partie de leurs attributions ;

Vu l'arrêté de Sa Majesté du 27 Février 1818, qui autorise les diaconies, bureaux de bienfaisance et autres institutions de même nature, à se faire aider par des commissions, pour connaître exactement l'état des pauvres et améliorer leur sort ;

Vu les propositions adressées par le bureau de bienfaisance de cette ville au collège des bourgmestre et échevins, tendantes, en exécution de l'arrêté précité, à apporter, dans le mode actuellement suivi pour la distribution des secours à domicile, des changemens que l'expérience a fait juger nécessaires ;

Considérant que, si la centralisation en matière d'administration des biens des pauvres a produit les plus heureux résultats, il n'en n'est pas de même de celle des secours, dont les inconvéniens se font sentir sous le rapport essentiel du défaut de règle certaine dans leur répartition ;

Considérant que ce défaut résulte évidemment d'une difficulté inhérente à l'institution d'un bureau de bienfaisance composé de cinq membres seulement, pour une ville dont la population indigente s'élève au nombre considérable de douze mille individus ; qu'il est impossible à chacun de ces membres, quels que soient son activité et ses soins, de bien connaître par lui-même la position et les besoins des nombreuses familles qu'il est chargé de secourir ;

A ordonné et ordonne ce qui suit, pour la réorganisation des secours à domicile :

Titre I.—Comités de Charité.

Art. 1. Il y aura dans chaque paroisse un comité de charité, dont les membres porteront le titre de maîtres des pauvres.

Il sera composé de sept membres dans les paroisses de St. Brice, de St. Piat et de Ste. Marguerite ; de cinq membres dans les paroisses de Notre-Dame, St. Jean et St. Jacques, et de trois membres dans les paroisses de la Madeleine, de St. Quentin et l'annexe de St. Nicolas.

Si l'expérience démontre que le nombre des maîtres des pauvres est insuffisant dans un ou plusieurs comités de charité, il pourra être augmenté sur la proposition des comités, adressée au bureau de bienfaisance, ce qui néanmoins ne devra pas avoir lieu avant 1827.

Il est en outre facultatif dès à présent aux comités, de charger des personnes zélées, même du sexe, bien que ces personnes n'aient pas la qualité de maîtres des pauvres, de visiter les indigens et leur donner des secours au nom du comité ; le tout en se conformant aux dispositions du présent règlement, et bien entendu que les comités seuls auront la gestion directe des secours, chacun dans son ressort.

Art. 2. MM. les curés seront de droit membres des comités ; ils pourront se faire remplacer dans leurs fonctions par un de leurs vicaires.

Les autres membres seront nommés par le bureau de bienfaisance, parmi les habitans notables de chaque paroisse.

Art. 3. Après la première nomination, il sera pourvu aux places vacantes, sur la présentation, par chaque comité, d'une liste triple de candidats formée suivant l'ordre alphabétique des noms.

Art. 4. Les membres éligibles seront renouvelés chaque année, par tiers, dans les comités composés de sept membres ; par quart, dans ceux composés de cinq, et tous les deux ans, par moitié, dans les autres comités.

La première sortie aura lieu en 1828, le second Lundi après Pâques. Elle sera déterminée par le sort.

Art. 5. Le sort désignera également, pour les comités des deux premières classes, les membres qui devront être renouvelés dans les sorties subséquentes. A cet effet, il sera, à chaque révolution d'élection partielle, procédé à un tirage entre ceux qui auront fait partie de la première nomination.

Après le renouvellement complet, l'ancienneté réglera l'ordre de sortie.

Art. 6. Les membres sortans seront rééligibles. S'il survenait, dans l'intervalle des sorties ordinaires, des places vacantes, les vacances compteront pour sorties.

Art. 7. Les membres des comités devront avoir leur domicile dans la paroisse pour laquelle ils seront nommés.

Ils cesseront de droit d'en faire partie, s'ils vont demeurer dans une autre paroisse.

Titre II.—Attributions.

Art. 8. La taxation, la distribution des secours à domicile et leur meilleure direction possible, sont confiées aux soins des comités.

Leurs membres feront de fréquentes visites chez les pauvres, veilleront sur leur éducation morale et religieuse, s'assureront de la décence et de la salubrité de leurs maisons, leur inculqueront l'amour du travail, obligeront les enfans de fréquenter les écoles, et leur faciliteront les moyens d'apprendre des métiers. Ils s'attacheront aussi à prévenir l'abandonnement ou l'exposition des enfans.

Art. 9. Les comités sont autorisés, par subrogation dans les droits du bureau de bienfaisance, de quêter dans les temples, et même d'en confier le soin à toutes personnes sans distinction de sexe, qui voudront bien seconder leur dévouement.

Ils sont également autorisés de faire placer, dans tous les lieux où l'on peut être excité à faire la charité, des troncs destinés à recevoir les aumônes que la bienfaisance individuelle voudrait y déposer.

Ils auront la libre et entière disposition des produits de ces quêtes, troncs et aumônes.

Ils s'entendront avec Messieurs les curés et marguilliers pour la distribution des pains qui se donnent les jours de funérailles et d'obits, ainsi que pour celles en argent à la suite des baptêmes et des mariages.

Art. 10. Sans devoir recourir à des autorisations spéciales, selon que le prescrit l'arrêté Royal du 22 Septembre 1823, les comités de charité sont investis, dès à présent, du pouvoir de faire des collectes pour les pauvres dans leurs paroisses respectives.

L'observation du dit arrêté est plus que jamais recommandée à toute autre institution, à tout individu quelconque.

Art. 11. Chaque comité nommera dans son sein un président, un vice-président et un receveur; il donnera à ce dernier ses instructions par écrit.

Le receveur ne sera responsable qu'envers le comité; et celui-ci rendra compte de la manière qui sera indiquée à l'article 14 ci-après.

Art. 12. Les fonctions des membres des comités, même celles de receveur, seront purement honorifiques.

Titre III.—Conseil de Charité.

Art. 13. Deux fois au moins par an, le bureau de bienfaisance se formera, sous la présidence de son président ordinaire, et avec les délégués des comités, en conseil de charité.

Chaque comité nommera, à cet effet, un de ses membres pour l'y représenter pendant une année.

Art. 14. Les comités, par leurs délégués, apporteront au conseil leurs observations, vues et projets d'amélioration, et en général tous les renseignemens propres à éclairer les délibérations du bureau sur la division ou répartition des revenus disponibles entre les divers comités, sur les besoins généraux, sur les abus et le remède à y appliquer, etc. etc.

Ils y apporteront aussi, dans la première session ordinaire de chaque année, un compte moral de leur gestion de l'année précédente, et les comptes sommaires de leurs receveurs.

Art. 15. Les deux assemblées ordinaires du conseil de charité se feront dans la seconde semaine qui suivra la fête de Pâques, et dans la première semaine d'Octobre. La première session aura lieu en Octobre 1826.

Titre IV.—Bureau de Bienfaisance.

Art. 16. Le bureau de bienfaisance conservera dans ses attributions toute la partie administrative, la délivrance de toutes espèces de certificats et déclarations, et tout ce qui pourrait compliquer ou surcharger les fonctions des comités.

Il continuera en conséquence de délivrer les certificats d'indigence, de se charger de l'exécution des lois et réglemens sur la vaccine, de placer en nourrice les enfans des indigens, lorsque la mère est reconnue hors d'état d'allaiter, et de faire admettre aux écoles gratuites ceux qui auront atteint l'âge requis.

Finalement, il continuera de passer les marchés et adjudications pour la fourniture des médicamens et des secours en nature, tels que bouillons, pains, combustibles, lits et vêtemens, et de faire fournir les objets nécessaires aux inhumations.

Art. 17. Il informera les comités de charité des mutations de domicile, de celles d'état civil, des admissions dans les établissemens de la commission des hospices, et de tous autres renseignemens de cette nature, qu'il aura pu recueillir des administrations de fondations particulières.

Art. 18. Nulle pétition de personnes portées sur la liste des pauvres, ayant pour objet une demande de place dans une fondation ou un hospice quelconque, ne sera plus admise par l'administration des hospices, si elle n'est appuyée d'un certificat délivré par le comité de la paroisse, constatant la moralité, les besoins, ou les droits du pétitionnaire.

Il en sera de même à l'égard des bourses de métier ou autres fondations quelconques qui sont à la collation du bureau de bienfaisance.

Titre V.—Livre ou Table des Pauvres.

Art. 19. Le livre actuel des pauvres sera divisé en autant de cahiers qu'il y a de paroisses: ces cahiers, qui contiendront l'indication de l'espèce et de la quotité des secours que reçoit chaque famille, seront remis aux comités, lors de leur entrée en fonctions.

Art. 20. Le premier soin des maîtres des pauvres sera de s'enquérir, d'après les errements du bureau de bienfaisance, de tous les indigens qui se trouvent dans leurs paroisses respectives, et d'en former une liste générale, conforme au modèle imprimé qui leur sera remis.

Art. 21. Leurs recherches et examens porteront sur l'âge, les infirmités, le nombre d'enfans, les causes de la misère, les ressources personnelles, et la conduite de chaque individu.

Art. 22. Leur liste générale, dont un double devra être remis au bureau de bienfaisance, sera divisée en trois parties :

La première, pour les indigens admis seulement aux visites gratuites des officiers de santé et à l'obtention des médicamens : elle comprendra les indigens valides exerçant, par eux-mêmes, leurs femmes ou leurs enfans, un état ou profession qui suffit aux besoins ordinaires ;

La deuxième, pour les indigens temporairement secourus : y seront compris les blessés, les malades, les femmes en couches et autres individus qui se trouvent dans des cas extraordinaires ;

Et la troisième, pour les indigens secourus habituellement : y seront portés les aveugles, les paralytiques, les infirmes, les vieillards et les chefs de famille surchargés d'enfans en bas âge.

Pour la formation de ce travail, le bureau de bienfaisance mettra des copistes à la disposition des comités qui le désireront.

Art. 23. Vu l'impossibilité de secourir tous les pauvres de la ville, et attendu que les plus nécessiteux ne peuvent souvent l'être que dans une proportion inférieure à leurs besoins, les maîtres des pauvres apporteront, dans la formation de ces listes, une indispensable sévérité ; et, lorsqu'il y aura un choix à faire, il le sera selon les règles de la justice et de l'humanité, en faveur des plus malheureux.

Indépendamment des renseignemens voulus par l'article 21, il sera tenu note des enfans qui ont été vaccinés, de ceux qui apprennent des métiers, et de ceux qui fréquentent les écoles.

Art. 24. Les listes seront renouvelées chaque année et envoyées au bureau de bienfaisance, pour qu'il les contrôle avec le tableau de population, et s'assure si l'indigent inscrit pour être secouru a le domicile de secours voulu par la loi du 28 Novembre 1818, et s'il est porté, en vertu du règlement du 31 Juillet 1824, au tableau des habitans domiciliés.

Art. 25. C'est d'après ces listes ainsi vérifiées, que les comités feront la taxation des secours ; et nul ne pourra en obtenir provenant de la dotation des pauvres, s'il n'y est inscrit, sauf le cas prévu par l'article 8 de la loi du 28 Novembre 1818.

Cependant, conformément à la disposition contenue dans le 3^e paragraphe de l'article 9 ci-dessus, il est loisible aux comités de secourir qui bon leur semble, sur le produit des quêtes, des tronc, des collectes, des dons et aumônes de la bienfaisance individuelle.

Art. 26. Les motifs qui auront fait admettre un indigent aux secours publics seront consignés sur le livre des pauvres de chaque comité. Ces motifs n'existant plus, les secours cesseront. Ils cesseront également, s'ils sont plus nécessaires à d'autres.

Titre VI.—Secours.

Art. 27. Les secours seront distribués au domicile des pauvres.

Autant que possible et aussitôt que faire se pourra, ils seront donnés en nature aux pauvres valides, et consisteront en pains, vêtemens, lits, et combustibles, ainsi qu'en dispositions de propreté et de salubrité dans leur demeure.

Les secours de cette espèce, vu la comptabilité qu'ils exigent, seront délivrés aux comités par le bureau de bienfaisance, sur des propositions particulières signées en assemblée par tous les membres de chaque comité.

Art. 28. La dotation des pauvres figurera dans le budget annuel du bureau de bienfaisance en divers chapitres. Il y en aura nécessairement un pour les secours en nature ; un second pour les secours en argent ; un troisième pour un fonds de réserve destiné aux événemens extraordinaires, aux temps calamiteux, et à la création de nouveaux établissemens de charité, si les moyens le permettent et que l'utilité publique le réclame.

Art. 29. Les allocations des secours en nature et en argent seront portées chaque année à la connaissance des comités, et répartis entre eux en raison de la population et des besoins des pauvres de leurs paroisses respectives.

Titre VII.—Audiences et Séances des Comités.

Art. 30. Les comités fixeront eux-mêmes les jours et heures de leurs séances.

Ils tiendront séance publique au moins une fois chaque quinzaine, afin d'entendre les pauvres dans leurs demandes et réclamations.

Ils prendront les mesures convenables pour que ceux-ci puissent en outre s'adresser à eux dans les cas urgens.

Ils feront connaître aux habitans de leurs paroisses, les lieux, jours et heures des séances publiques.

Art. 31. L'administration de la ville, après s'être concertée avec le bureau de bienfaisance et la commission des hospices, mettra à la disposition de chaque comité qui le désirera, un emplacement convenable et situé dans sa paroisse, ou à proximité, pour ses assemblées.

Titre VIII.—Dispositions générales.

Art. 32. Le présent règlement ne sera pas applicable au cas où des donateurs auraient réglé, par leurs dispositions en faveur des pauvres, un mode particulier pour l'administration ou la distribution des biens donnés.

Art. 33. Le bureau de bienfaisance est chargé de l'exécution du présent règlement, qui devra être mis en vigueur à compter du 1^{er} Janvier 1826.

REGLEMENT concernant la Réorganisation du Service des Officiers-de-Santé, chargés du Traitement des Indigens de la Ville de Tournay.

NOUS, Président et Membres de la Commission-Administrative des Hospices-Civils et du Bureau de Bienfaisance de la Ville de Tournay, réunis expressement pour la formation du Règlement ci-après, dont l'objet concerne les deux Administrations, Vu la nécessité de régler le service des Médecins et Chirurgiens de Section, de manière à ce qu'il soit en harmonie avec l'Ordonnance du Conseil de Régence, en date du 7 Octobre 1825, sur les secours à domicile.

Après nous être concertés sur les dispositions les plus convenables pour atteindre le but indiqué ci-dessus ;

Avons arrêté et arrêtons :

Art. 1. A partir d'une époque qui sera déterminée ultérieurement, le service des médecins et chirurgiens de section, sera devisé par arrondissemens de paroisses, ainsi qu'il suit :

Le premier arrondissement comprendra la paroisse de Saint Piat.

Le deuxième, celles de Sainte Marguerite, de Saint Quentin et de Notre-Dame.

Le troisième, les paroisses de Saint Jacques et de la Magdelaine.

Le quatrième, celle de Saint Brice et sa succursale Saint Nicolas.

Finalement, le cinquième arrondissement comprendra la paroisse de Saint Jean et le hameau d'Halain.

Art. 2. Il y aura pour chaque arrondissement un médecin et un chirurgien ; celui-ci sera aussi chargé de la partie des accouchemens.

Leur nomination et la fixation de leur traitement seront l'objet de dispositions spéciales prises par le bureau de bienfaisance.

Art. 3. Les médecins et chirurgiens d'arrondissemens sont placés sous l'autorité du bureau de bienfaisance, dont la surveillance est secondée par les comités de charité des paroisses, et appuyée par l'administration des hospices, qui, d'après la nature de leurs fonctions, peuvent contribuer respectivement à l'amélioration du service sanitaire en général.

Art. 4. Ils seront tenus de donner tous leurs soins aux individus ou familles, à la charge de l'administration de bienfaisance, munis d'une déclaration conforme au modèle (A), signée du président et contre-signée par le secrétaire.

Ces déclarations ne seront délivrées qu'aux individus ayant leur domicile de secours à Tournay, aux termes de la loi du 28 Novembre 1818 ; elles contiendront autant que possible, des indications telles, que les officiers de santé pourront reconnaître l'identité des individus qui se présenteront à eux pour réclamer leurs soins.

Art. 5. Les officiers de santé d'arrondissemens et le pharmacien de l'Hôpital, exigeront la représentation de la déclaration prescrite par l'article 4.

Ils prendront alors toutes les précautions possibles pour éviter que des individus, porteurs de déclarations qui ne leur seroient pas personnelles, n'obtiennent des secours et des médicamens auxquels ils n'auroient point de droit.

Art. 6. Aucun officier de santé ne pourra, au cas d'absence ou de maladie, se faire remplacer dans le service de son arrondissement, que par un de ses collègues chargé du même service dans un autre arrondissement.

Art. 7. Les chirurgiens qui auront des élèves en chirurgie, ou dans l'art des accouchemens, ne pourront en aucune circonstance se faire aider par eux, qu'après s'être conformés aux dispositions prescrites par les instructions pour les chirurgiens et les accoucheurs, approuvées par Sa Majesté, le 31 Mai 1818.

Ils devront transmettre au bureau de bienfaisance, des copies certifiées des attestations obtenues par leurs élèves, en conformité de l'article 13 desdites instructions.

Art. 8. Les médicamens seront délivrés à la pharmacie centrale de l'Hôpital Civil, sur la remise d'ordonnances signées des officiers de santé traitant, et la représentation du bulletin (A.)

Ces ordonnances seront écrites sur papier uniforme, semblable au modèle (B) ; elles seront remplies avec exactitude, et contiendront les nom, prénoms et domicile des malades qu'elles concernent ainsi que leur genre de maladie.

Art. 9. Les médecins et chirurgiens se refermeront pour leurs prescriptions, dans l'espèce des remèdes indiqués par le formulaire actuel, modifié d'après les circonstances ; en attendant le formulaire à l'usage des administrations de charité, dont le gouvernement s'occupe.

Ce formulaire sera imprimé et remis aux médecins et chirurgiens d'arrondissemens, et au pharmacien de l'hôpital, chacun pour leur direction respective.

Art. 10. Nul

Tournay.

Art. 10. Nul autre que les médecins et chirurgiens d'arrondissemens ne pourra prescrire aux indigens des médicamens à fournir par le pharmacien de l'hôpital.

Art. 11. Pour faciliter mutuellement aux indigens et aux officiers de santé les rapports qui doivent exister entre les uns et les autres, il y aura tous les jours, de midi à une heure, un bureau de consultations gratuites, composé d'un médecin et d'un chirurgien, qui seront désignés à tour de rôle, pour donner leurs soins aux indigens qui voudront les consulter, sans distinction d'arrondissement.

Ce bureau de consultations se tiendra à l'hôpital civil.

Cette nouvelle mesure ne dispense pas les officiers de santé de donner journellement les secours de leur art aux pauvres qui iront les consulter chez eux, ni du soin de les traiter à domicile.

Chaque médecin et chirurgien fixera lui-même pour tout le courant de l'année, une heure de la matinée à laquelle les pauvres de son arrondissement pourront se présenter et il en informera le bureau de bienfaisance.

Art. 12. Le tour de rôle sera fixé par semaine et déterminé par le bureau de bienfaisance, qui fera afficher dans le salon de ses séances et dans celui du bureau de consultations, un tableau indicatif des médecins et chirurgiens, et de leur semaine de service.

Ceux-ci, au cas d'absence, de maladie ou d'empêchement, devront pourvoir à leur remplacement, en se conformant à l'article 7 du présent, sans cependant que ce remplacement puisse intervertir le tour de rôle établi par le bureau de bienfaisance.

Art. 13. Afin d'éviter les inconvéniens qui pourraient résulter du traitement ordonné à un malade par le bureau de consultations, qui ne serait plus composé, d'une semaine à une autre, des mêmes officiers de santé, ceux-ci tiendront un registre sur lequel seront inscrites les prescriptions délivrées par le bureau, avec l'indication des individus qu'elles concernent.

Ce registre restera déposé dans le salon de consultations, pour que les médecins et chirurgiens puissent y avoir recours au besoin.

Art. 14. Les indigens malades ou blessés qui ne pourront être traités à domicile à cause de la gravité de leur maladie, ou de leurs accidens, seront reçus à l'hôpital civil, à l'exception toute-fois de ceux atteints de la gâle, de cancer, de dartres, de la petite vérole et de la maladie vénérienne; ceux-là ne pourront être traités qu'à domicile, à moins que la commission des hospices par dispositions nouvelles n'autorise leur admission dans un hospice spécial.

Art. 15. Dès qu'un médecin ou un chirurgien jugera qu'un malade ou blessé de son arrondissement doit être transporté à l'hôpital, il lui délivrera une déclaration conforme au modèle (C.) dont il remplira avec soin toutes les indications.

Cette déclaration sera remise à l'économe de l'hôpital, qui recevra immédiatement le malade, à moins qu'il n'y ait point de lit vacant, auquel cas, il devra sur-le-champ en informer l'officier de santé qui aura délivré ladite déclaration.

Art. 16. Les individus envoyés à l'hôpital par les médecins et chirurgiens d'arrondissemens, ne seront considérés reçus définitivement, qu'après la déclaration des médecins et chirurgiens de l'établissement, qui les auront vus et visités; auquel effet, l'économe de l'hôpital fera placer ces individus dans une salle de dépôt, jusqu'à la première visite des officiers de santé de la maison, qui décideront en consultation, le cas échéant, si tel ou tel malade est admissible ou non, soit à raison de la nature de sa maladie, ou de son accident, soit à raison de sa gravité.

L'économe pourra cependant placer de suite au nombre des individus définitivement reçus, ceux blessés, ou dans un état tel que leur admission ne pourrait présenter aucun doute.

Art. 17. S'il arrivait que des médecins ou chirurgiens d'arrondissemens aient envoyé à l'hôpital des individus qui ne devraient point y être reçus, soit à cause du genre de leur maladie, soit à cause de son peu de gravité, les médecins et chirurgiens de l'établissement renverraient ces individus à leur domicile.

Avis en serait donné au médecin ou au chirurgien chargé de les traiter, par l'économe de l'hôpital, qui en outre serait tenu d'en faire part au bureau de bienfaisance.

Art. 18. Les médecins et chirurgiens d'arrondissemens ne pourront délivrer de billets d'entrée à l'hôpital, que pour les indigens qui auront obtenu de l'administration de bienfaisance, des déclarations ou certificats dans la forme déterminée par l'article 4, sauf le cas d'accidens graves, conformément à l'article 8, de la loi du 28 Novembre 1818.

Art. 19. Les fonctions de médecin et de chirurgien de l'hôpital sont déclarées incompatibles avec celles de médecin et chirurgien d'arrondissement.

Art. 20. Le présent arrêté sera mis à exécution à une époque ultérieure; des expéditions en seront adressées, savoir, par l'administration de bienfaisance à Messieurs les médecins et chirurgiens d'arrondissemens, et par l'administration des hospices, à Messieurs les médecins, chirurgiens, pharmacien et économe de l'hôpital, pour leur information et direction respective.

Fait, arrêté et signé en double par les Président et Membres des Administrations réunies de la Commission des Hospices-civils et du Bureau de Bienfaisance, à Tournay, le 14 de Juin 1826.

Nous, Président et Membres de l'Administration de Bienfaisance de la Ville de Tournay, Vu le règlement organique du service médical et chirurgical pour le soulagement des pauvres de la ville, arrêté le 14 Juin dernier par les deux administrations des hospices et de bienfaisance expressément réunies à cet effet.

Vu notre résolution du 5 de ce mois qui fixe le traitement annuel attaché à l'exercice des fonctions de médecin et de chirurgien-accoucheur dans chaque arrondissement, suivant son étendue et sa population indigente.

Revu le premier paragraphe de la dite résolution, portant qu'il sera procédé le plutôt possible à la nomination des officiers de santé chargés du soin des pauvres dans les cinq arrondissemens, actuellement formés par paroisses, laquelle nomination ne sera valable, pour cette fois, que jusqu'au 31 Décembre 1827.

Considérant qu'il importe en effet de réorganiser promptement le personnel des médecins et chirurgiens des pauvres, afin que le service soit en harmonie avec l'ordonnance du Conseil de Régence du 7 Octobre 1825, ainsi qu'avec le règlement du 14 Juin ci-dessus rappelé ;

Considérant en même temps, que les médecins et chirurgiens de section actuellement en exercice ont généralement justifié la confiance de l'administration, et qu'il n'y a lieu à remplacer que ceux qui à cause de l'incomptabilité prononcée par l'article 19 du règlement organique, ont opté pour le service de l'hôpital-civil ;

Avons arrêté et arrêtons ;

Sont nommés médecins et chirurgiens-accoucheurs des pauvres dans les arrondissemens de paroisses ci-après indiqués ; savoir,

Premier Arrondissement, (Paroisse de Saint Piat.)

Médecin, - - M. Casterman.

Chirurgien-accoucheur, M. Garin.

Deuxième Arrondissement, (Paroisses de Notre-Dame, de Sainte Marguerite et de Saint Quentin.)

Médecin, - - M. Doignon.

Chirurgien-accoucheur, M. Roty.

Troisième Arrondissement, (Paroisses de Saint Jacques et de la Magdelaine.)

Médecin, - - M. Tonnelier.

Chirurgien-accoucheur, M. Hebbelinck.

Quatrième Arrondissement, (Paroisses de Saint Brice et de Saint Nicolas.)

Médecin, - - M. Vanclèer.

Chirurgien-accoucheur, M. Leclercq.

Cinquième Arrondissement, (Paroisse de Saint Jean et le Hameau d'Halain.)

Médecin, - - M. Bougnelle.

Chirurgien-accoucheur, M. Smolders.

Les officiers de santé compris dans la nomination qui précède, entreront en fonctions le premier Septembre prochain ; ils se conformeront en tous points aux dispositions du règlement du 14 Juin dernier.

La stricte exécution de l'article 7 du dit règlement concernant les chirurgiens qui ont des élèves, leur est particulièrement recommandée sous peine de révocation.

La présente délibération sera imprimée à la suite du règlement organique sur le service sanitaire, et un exemplaire sera adressé à chacun de Messieurs les médecins et chirurgiens-accoucheurs y dénommés, ainsi qu'au comité de charité de chaque paroisse, pour leur information et direction respective.

Fait et arrêté en séance les jour, mois et an que dessus.

Etaient signés : Le Comte B. de Béthune, Président ; F. Cuvelier, J. B. Bonnier, Aug. Lefebvre, F. Du Bus, aîné, et Rutteau-Camarte, Membres ; Bajard Lefebvre, Secrétaire.

(Extrait.)

Loi relative à l'Entretien des Indigens dans les Dépôts de Mendicité.

LEOPOLD, Roi des Belges,

A tous présens et à venir, Salut.

Nous avons, de commun accord avec les chambres, décrété et nous ordonnons ce qui suit :

Art. 1. En attendant la révision des lois sur la mendicité, les frais d'entretien dans les dépôts de mendicité des mendiants et vagabonds, envoyés dans ces établissemens en vertu des articles 271, 274 et 282 du code pénal, et les indigens qui y seront reçus sur leurs demandes, continueront d'être à la charge des communes du domicile de secours, et à la charge de l'état lorsque le domicile ne pourra être établi.

2. Le prix de la journée d'entretien à payer par les communes sera fixé annuellement pour chaque dépôt, par le gouvernement, après avoir pris l'avis des députations des états provinciaux.

3. Les provinces sont tenues d'accorder des subsides aux communes qui seraient dans l'impossibilité de subvenir à tout ou partie de cette dépense; en cas de contestation, le Roi décidera.

4. Les communes sont tenues au paiement des pensions arriérées qu'elles doivent aux dépôts de mendicité.

Dans les deux mois, à compter du jour où la présente loi sera obligatoire, les communes proposeront les moyens de faire face à cette dépense; à leur défaut, il y sera pourvu par la députation des états provinciaux, et à défaut de la députation, par le Roi.

5. Dans le cas où les communes chercheraient à se soustraire au paiement des dépenses mentionnées aux articles 2 et 4, l'allocation sera portée d'office au budget communal par la députation des états provinciaux, et à son refus, par le Roi.

6. Si une administration municipale refusait ou différerait d'ordonnancer le paiement des dépenses dont il s'agit, la députation des états l'ordonnera d'office sur la caisse communale.

Dans ce cas, le mandat délivré par la députation sera transmis au receveur de l'établissement intéressé, chargé d'en opérer le recouvrement, lequel aura lieu par la voie de contrainte contre le receveur de la commune.

Mandons et ordonnons que les présentes, revêtues du sceau de l'état, insérées au bulletin officiel, soient adressées aux cours, tribunaux et aux autorités administratives, pour qu'ils les observent et fassent observer comme loi du royaume.

Donné à Bruxelles, le 13 Août 1833.

ARRETE concernant l'Entretien des Indigens dans les Dépôts de Mendicité.

LEOPOLD, Roi des Belges,

A tous présens et à venir, Salut.

Vu la loi du 13 Août 1833, relative au recouvrement des frais d'entretien des indigens reclus dans les dépôts de mendicité;

Nous avons arrêté et arrêtons :

Art. 1. Les députations des états des différentes provinces veilleront à ce que le montant des journées d'entretien mises à la charge des communes, soit acquitté régulièrement par trimestre. Le paiement devra avoir lieu dans les deux mois à compter de l'envoi de l'avertissement, qui sera transmis à cet effet à l'administration municipale; si elle n'y satisfait, elle y sera contrainte conformément à la loi.

2. Les propositions qu'il y aurait lieu de nous adresser, dans les cas prévus par les articles 3, 4 et 5 de ladite loi, nous seront faites de commun accord par nos Ministres de la Justice et de l'Intérieur.

3. Les députations des états des six provinces où les dépôts de mendicité sont situés, signaleront, dans le plus bref délai, à notre Ministre de la Justice, les améliorations dont le régime de ces établissements est susceptible.

Dans l'enquête qui aura lieu à cet égard, ces collèges se feront assister par le conseil d'inspection de chaque établissement.

4. A l'avenir et immédiatement les conseils d'inspection des dépôts de mendicité seront présidés, autant que possible, soit par le gouverneur de la province où le dépôt est établi, soit par un membre de la députation des états, à ce délégué.

Ils ne pourront être composés de moins de sept ni de plus de onze membres.

Le commissaire du district et un membre de l'administration locale de la commune voisine, qui a ordinairement le plus d'indigens réclus au dépôt, seront appelés à faire partie du conseil d'inspection.

Les autres membres seront choisis parmi les citoyens connus par leur zèle et leurs lumières.

A l'exception du président et du commissaire du district, les membres des conseils d'inspection seront renouvelés par tiers tous les deux ans, et seront nommés par nous sur une liste triple, présentée par les députations des états à notre Ministre de la Justice.

Les membres sortans pourront être réélus.

5. La recomposition des conseils d'inspection des dépôts de mendicité aura immédiatement lieu de la manière indiquée à l'article précédent.

Un secrétaire sera attaché à chaque conseil d'inspection. Il sera proposé par le conseil et nommé par la députation des états. Il figurera au nombre des employés du dépôt.

6. Ces commissions s'occuperont, dès leur installation, des moyens d'organiser les dépôts de mendicité de manière à y classer, autant que possible séparément; 1° les indigens infirmes ou invalides; 2° les indigens valides entrés volontairement; 3° les individus condamnés damnés comme mendiants ou vagabonds ; et elles subordonneront à cette classification la division des sexes et des âges.

7. Elles proposeront en même temps, relativement à l'admission des indigens qui se présentent volontairement, les mesures les plus propres à prévenir les abus qui pourraient résulter de la faculté accordée par l'art. 1^{er} de la loi.

Toutefois elles prendront pour règle que, lorsque des indigens qui seront obligés de chercher un asile dans les dépôts de mendicité s'y présenteront volontairement, et sans la demande préalable de l'autorité municipale de la commune du domicile de secours, ils pourront y être reçus ; mais dans ce cas, leur admission ne sera que provisoire. L'administration communale intéressée en sera aussitôt informée ; si elle offre de les entretenir au lieu de leur domicile, ils y seront renvoyés, sinon ils demeureront au dépôt et à la charge de la commune.

8. Les directeurs des dépôts de mendicité seront nommés par nous sur la proposition des députations des états des provinces où ces établissemens sont situés.

Les officiers de santé et les instituteurs seront présentés par lesdits collèges et nommés par notre Ministre de la Justice.

Il sera pourvu à la nomination des autres employés par les députations des états, sur la proposition des conseils d'inspection.

9. L'administration de chaque établissement ne négligera aucun moyen de fournir du travail à tous les reclus que l'âge ou les infirmités ne mettent pas dans l'impossibilité absolue de s'occuper.

A l'exception de ces derniers, tous les reclus seront astreints à un travail quelconque, et ceux qui s'y refuseront, encourront les peines déterminées par les réglemens particuliers.

10. Les députations des états aviseront au moyen de créer un crédit permanent, qui sera spécialement destiné à alimenter le travail dans les dépôts de mendicité.

11. Tous les vêtemens et objets de casernement des reclus devront, autant que possible, être confectionnés dans ces établissemens.

Les administrations qui les dirigent dans les différentes provinces se mettront en correspondance à cet égard, afin de se seconder mutuellement, de manière que tel effet qui ne pourra être confectionné dans un établissement, le soit dans un autre, ainsi que cela a lieu dans les prisons.

L'administration centrale des établissemens de bienfaisance et des prisons servira d'intermédiaire à cet effet.

12. Si le travail des reclus produisait en outre des marchandises fabriquées susceptibles d'être vendues dans le commerce, le prix de vente sera destiné à alimenter le crédit mentionné à l'art. 10.

Le produit des cantines, ventes de hardes, déchets, etc. recevront la même destination.

13. Au profit du fonds à créer en vertu de l'article 10, pourra également être reçu, conformément aux articles 910 et 937 du code civil, toute libéralité que des personnes charitables feraient, par acte entre-vifs ou de dernière volonté, dans le but de coopérer à l'extinction de la mendicité.

14. Les dispositions qui précèdent serviront de bases aux réglemens particuliers de chaque dépôt de mendicité.

Une nouvelle rédaction de ces réglemens sera en conséquence soumise, le plutôt possible, à notre Ministre de la Justice.

15. En transmettant la loi du 13 Août 1833 aux administrations des villes et communes, les députations des états auront soin de leur rappeler qu'il dépend des autorités locales d'alléger la charge qui résulte pour elles de l'entretien des indigens dans les dépôts de mendicité, et dans ce but, les moyens suivans leur seront indiqués comme les plus efficaces ; savoir,

La distribution bien entendue des secours à domicile ;

L'organisation de comités chargé de surveiller les indigens et de rechercher les causes de leur misère ;

La création d'hospices spéciaux pour les incurables, les insensés, les sourds-muets et les aveugles ;

L'établissement d'ateliers libres de travail pendant les mois d'hiver, et de salles d'asile pour les jeunes enfans.

Les communes dont les ressources financières sont individuellement insuffisantes, seront invités à se cotiser pour contribuer à l'établissement d'institutions de ce genre, par arrondissement ou par canton.

16. Les arrêtés, instructions et réglemens antérieurement existans, relatifs à l'administration des dépôts de mendicité, sont maintenus, pour autant qu'ils ne sont pas contraires aux dispositions qui précèdent et à la loi du 13 du courant.

17. Notre Ministre de la Justice est chargé de l'exécution du présent arrêté, qui sera inséré au bulletin des lois.

Donné à Bruxelles, ce 29 Août 1833.

Observations.—Nota. Il n'existe pas de Monts-de-piété dans la province de Luxembourg.

Les relevés qui précèdent constatent la diminution progressive du nombre des gages déposés aux Monts-de-piété. Le nombre des gages déposés en 1831 est inférieur de 85,288 à la moyenne des dix années antérieures. Le nombre des dépôts faits en 1832 présente également une différence en moins de 56,461 sur le chiffre de 1831. Si ces résultats sont principalement dus à l'abolition des loteries Génoises et Hollandaises dans notre pays, ils ne sont pas moins en même temps un indice certain que l'aisance du peuple augmente, loin de diminuer. Il est surtout digne de remarque que le nombre des gages retirés dans le courant de 1832 est à peu près équivalent à celui des gages déposés pendant cet exercice.

Enfants Trouvés.

LORS des premiers débats qui ont eu lieu au commencement de Mars dernier, à l'occasion du projet de loi sur les enfans trouvés, l'on a fait remarquer que quelques erreurs assez graves existaient dans les états statistiques présentés à l'appui de ce projet. L'administration, ayant constaté que les renseignemens qui leur servaient de base offraient effectivement plusieurs contradictions, a renvoyé ces états aux autorités provinciales pour rectification. Les nouveaux états imprimés ci-dessous doivent être considérés comme très exacts, puisqu'ils sont le résumé fidèle des documens transmis par les autorités provinciales et communales, scrupuleusement examinés et vérifiés.

EXPOSE de la Situation des Institutions de Bienfaisance pour les Pauvres, dans le Royaume des Pays-Bas, pendant l'Année 1829. Par M. le Comte J. Arrivabene.

POOR COLONIES
NETHERLANDS.

PENDANT plusieurs siècles, les hommes d'une charité vulgaire satisfaisaient aux besoins des pauvres qui leur adressaient des prières et leur tendaient la main, en distribuant des aumônes. Mais ces aumônes, faites sans discernement, assurant aux oisifs et aux fainéants un moyen tel quel d'existence, étaient cause que le nombre de ceux qui les sollicitaient, fut toujours très-grand. La voix de quelques philosophes s'éleva de temps en temps contre cet état de choses. Quelques lois d'une sévérité barbare furent portées contre les mendiants. Mais la voix des premiers ne fut point écoutée, ni les dispositions de ces lois observées ; et les mendiants continuèrent à être nombreux, et furent même considérés dans les mœurs presque comme sacrés. Toutefois on s'est tant élevé, et dans le siècle passé, et dans le siècle actuel, contre les maux engendrés par les aumônes ; l'on a si souvent répété que la mendicité devait être défendue et punie, et que les mendiants devaient être renfermés, contraints au travail, et rendus industriels, que nous sommes aujourd'hui témoins, dans presque toute l'Europe, d'une espèce de croisade contre eux.

Le pays cependant qui a poursuivi les mendiants avec le plus de persévérance, est sans contredit le royaume des Pays-Bas. Là, au lieu de les renfermer dans des maisons au sein des villes, et de donner à ces maisons le nom de refuges ou ateliers, ainsi qu'on l'a fait ailleurs, les mendiants ont été transportés sur des terres incultes, forcés à les cultiver ; et ces terres ont été appelées Colonies. C'est ce qui attira l'attention de plusieurs philanthropes sur ce royaume, et ce qui en porta quelques-uns, frappés peut-être de cette nouveauté, à déclarer que ces colonies étaient le meilleur moyen possible de réprimer et d'extirper la mendicité.

Nous aussi, accoutumés, depuis long-temps, à prendre à cœur tout ce qui concerne et touche de près les classes indigentes de la société, nous avons constamment fixé nos regards sur ces colonies, lu en grande partie ce que l'on a publié à cet égard, interrogé des personnes qui les avaient visitées, et enfin, cette année, nous les avons visitées nous-mêmes. Et tout ce que nous avons lu, entendu et vu, nous le résumons ici brièvement, et après cette espèce de compte rendu, nous portons sur ces colonies le jugement qui nous paraît le plus juste et le plus convenable.

La disette des années 1816 et 1817, et la misère qui s'ensuivit, furent les causes qui, pendant l'année 1818, donnèrent naissance, dans les Provinces Septentrionales du royaume des Pays-Bas, à une société de bienfaisance, dont le but était de mettre à exécution de nouveaux projets philanthropiques. Les membres de cette société s'obligèrent à payer chacun par semaine un sou, et cela pendant tout le temps qu'il leur conviendrait de faire partie de la société. Le nombre des souscripteurs s'éleva bientôt à vingt mille ; et la société, au moyen d'administrateurs choisis dans son sein, conçut le projet de fonder des colonies destinées à servir d'asile à différentes espèces de pauvres, dans les bruyères dont le pays abonde : Colonies pour réprimer la mendicité, colonies d'indigents et de vétérans, colonies ordinaires ou libres, colonies de surveillants aux travaux de l'agriculture, colonies d'orphelins et d'enfants-trouvés, et enfin colonies d'industrie agricole.

Dans l'année même où la société prit naissance, elle établit avant tout une colonie ordinaire naire ou libre, sur les bruyères situées entre les provinces de Drenthe, de Frise et d'Over-Yssel: cette colonie fut nommée Frederiks-Oord. Elle se composait de cinquante-deux petites fermes, exploitées en partie auparavant par la société, d'un magasin pour les objets nécessaires aux colons, de plusieurs fabriques, d'une école, etc. Elle fut peuplée au moyen de familles indigentes, mais qui ne vivaient pas tout-à-fait d'aumônes. La dépense pour la fondation de cette colonie s'éleva à 68,000 flor., produit des souscriptions annuelles et des donations des membres, qui, pour assurer aux colons du travail pendant cette époque de l'année où la campagne n'en offre point les ressources, s'engagèrent à leur acheter vingt-six mille aunes de toile.

En 1819, la société offrit aux directeurs des institutions d'orphelins de tout le royaume, de se charger, moyennant une rétribution annuelle, d'un nombre d'orphelins de l'âge de 6 ans qu'ils voudraient bien lui confier, en leur laissant le droit d'exercer une juste surveillance. La société, pour faire face à cette nouvelle dépense, fit un emprunt de 280,000 flor. Elle plaça d'abord les orphelins dans de petites maisons séparées, à raison de six dans chacune, et deux personnes âgées pour leur servir de parents. Mais ensuite elle les réunit presque tous dans de grands édifices. Dans cette même année, le nombre des membres s'éleva à 22,500 et leurs souscriptions à 82,500 fl., ce qui permit à la société d'établir deux autres colonies ordinaires ou libres, et d'y placer cent cinquante familles.

En 1820, elle emprunta de nouveau 100,000 flor. qui, réunis à 78,000 fl. qui lui furent donnés, lui offrirent les moyens d'établir pendant cette année un même nombre de familles.

En 1821, elle réunit une somme de 421,000 flor., produit d'un emprunt de 300,000 flor., et de 121,000 fl. provenant des souscriptions; et elle possédait sept colonies ordinaires ou libres, composées de 500 petites fermes, et autres établissements dont nous avons parlé.

En 1822, elle fonda la première colonie pour réprimer la mendicité; et dans le mois de Novembre de la même année, elle s'engagea envers le gouvernement à recevoir et placer dans d'autres colonies 4,000 orphelins, 2,500 indigents, et 1,500 mendiants. Le gouvernement aurait à payer 45 flor. par an pour chaque orphelin, pendant 16 années, et rien pour les autres pauvres, ce qui faisait 22 fl. 50 cents pour chaque individu du nombre total. Mais jusqu'à présent la société n'a pu remplir qu'une partie de ses engagements. Elle établit néanmoins toutes les espèces de colonies que nous avons énumérées.

C'est dans le courant du mois d'Août de l'année 1829, que nous avons visité toutes les colonies de la société. Partis d'Amsterdam le premier jour, nous arrivâmes à Zwol, chef-lieu de la province d'Over-Yssel: la distance qui sépare les deux villes est de trente lieues, et nous la parcourûmes en diligence en moins de 15 heures, sur une de ces belles et bonnes routes Hollandaises, construites en briques au milieu, et bordées de gazon. Le deuxième jour, nous prîmes une voiture de louage, qui nous conduisit en cinq heures, par un chemin détestable, à travers un pays triste et marécageux, à Frederiks-Oord. Nous descendîmes à une belle auberge au milieu des champs. Nous présentâmes nos lettres d'introduction au directeur; et, après en avoir obtenu un guide, nous commençâmes à parcourir les colonies. Elles s'étendent sur un espace de deux lieues, et les petites fermes sont placées le long de chemins bordés d'arbres, et le long de canaux qui coupent les colonies en différentes sections. Chaque maison est composée d'une grande chambre, dans les murailles de laquelle sont pratiquées des espèces de larges tiroirs où couche la famille, selon l'usage des paysans Hollandais; une étable, une grange, et tout ce qui est nécessaire à une famille d'agriculteurs, se trouve annexé à la ferme. Près de la maison, est situé le jardin, puis les terres cultivables. Toutes les fermes ont trois bonniers et demi.

Tout chef de famille, dès son entrée à la colonie, fait une déclaration par laquelle il s'oblige à en observer les réglemens, en ce qui concerne l'obéissance aux supérieurs, sa conduite religieuse ou morale, celle de sa famille, la manière dont les travaux doivent s'exécuter, l'habillement uniforme des colons, etc.

Lorsqu'une famille de huit individus s'établit dans une ferme (et c'est de ce nombre que l'on compose ordinairement les familles), la société lui ouvre un compte de 1,700, flor., répartis de la manière suivante:

Pour l'acquisition des 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ bonniers* de terre	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	fl.	100
Pour les exploiter	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	400

La somme donnée par anticipation pour les meubles et les habillemens est retenue dans la suite au colon sur ses propres gages; et aussitôt que la ferme est entièrement exploitée, le chef de la famille est débité de 60 flor. pour intérêts du restant du capital, et pour loyer de la ferme même.

Pendant trois ans au moins, les colons cultivent les terres en commun; leur travail est rétribué par des gages; et ils ne disposent nullement du produit de la ferme, mais de celui du jardin et des vaches. Les produits des fermes (et ils nous ont paru bien médiocres), qui consistent principalement en seigle, pommes de terre, sarrazin, etc., sont transportés dans les les magasins de la société, où on les conserve pour les distribuer ensuite aux colons en à compte du prix de leur travail, partie en comestibles préparés, partie en simple nature.

Aussi long-temps qu'une famille ne parvient pas à se procurer par son travail tous les produits nécessaires à son entretien, elle reçoit journellement sa subsistance de la société ; mais, lorsqu'elle gagne quatre florins par semaine, elle peut préparer sa subsistance dans l'intérieur de sa maison ; et quant aux ustensiles qui lui sont nécessaires, le colon peut les acheter à la société ou ailleurs.

La société distribue trois sortes de médailles, les unes en cuivre, les autres en argent, les troisièmes en or. Les premières servent de récompense à ceux que distinguent un travail régulier et une bonne conduite ; elles donnent, à ceux qui les ont obtenues, le droit de sortir de la colonie les Dimanches et jours de fête, sans en obtenir la permission des supérieurs. Les secondes récompensent ceux qui, par leur industrie active, gagnent par eux-mêmes tous les moyens de subsistance ; elles donnent le droit de sortir de la colonie sans permission, non-seulement les Dimanches et jours de fêtes, mais tous les autres jours de la semaine, aux heures qui ne sont point consacrées au travail. Enfin les médailles d'or sont distribuées à ceux qui ont déjà obtenu celles en argent, dès que leurs fermes produisent annuellement pour une valeur de 250 fl., et, en les obtenant, le colon n'est plus soumis au régime colonial, et il ne diffère d'un fermier ordinaire que par certaines conditions qui lui sont imposées. De même que le colon obtient une médaille par sa bonne conduite, de même il la perd, pour un certain temps ou à jamais, et avec tous les privilèges qui y sont attachés, par sa mauvaise conduite. Les médailles sont solennellement distribuées et retirées tous les quinze jours.

Après un séjour de trois ans dans la colonie, les colons sont distribués en trois classes : 1^o. Celle des hommes laborieux qui ont reçu la médaille d'argent ; ils peuvent, ou cultiver la ferme pour leur propre compte, en en payant le loyer à la société, et en acquittant les dettes qu'ils ont contractées à leur entrée ; ou la cultiver en commun comme auparavant. 2^o. Celle des colons qui ont reçu la médaille de cuivre, et peuvent en conséquence, en cultivant leur ferme à part, disposer d'une partie des produits ; mais l'autre partie doit être rapportée aux magasins de la société, en compensation du loyer de la ferme, des avances qui leur ont été faites, et pour créer un fonds commun. Cependant une partie de ce rapport leur est distribuée en pain. Si les colons, pendant l'année, ne recueillent pas sur leurs champs une quantité déterminée de pommes de terre, ou s'ils demandent à la société des secours extraordinaires, ils doivent restituer la médaille, et passer à la troisième classe. Cette dernière est composée de ceux qui n'ont obtenu aucune médaille, et qui en conséquence doivent verser dans les magasins de la société une plus grande quantité de produits, de sorte qu'ils en ont moins à administrer par eux-mêmes, tout en ayant à remplir les mêmes obligations que les autres.

Les colons cultivent en commun une certaine étendue de terrain, dont le produit est destiné à suppléer au déficit de récolte spéciale de chaque ferme, et à pourvoir aux dépenses occasionnées par l'école, l'hôpital, et l'administration. Chaque chef de famille est obligé d'y travailler trois jours par année, pour lesquels il reçoit un salaire. Les salaires en général sont payés au moyen d'un papier-monnaie, qui n'a cours que dans la colonie, et avec lequel les colons peuvent acheter tout ce que bon leur semble, à l'exception des boissons spiritueuses, dont l'usage et la vente sont prohibés. Il y a dans les colonies diverses boutiques, et le prix des objets est fixé par l'administration de la colonie.

Pendant l'été, les colons envoient leurs bestiaux dans des pâturages communs.

Quelle que soit la durée du temps pendant lequel un colon ait résidé dans la colonie, il ne peut jamais devenir propriétaire de sa ferme. Il peut cependant acquérir la propriété des meubles, dont il dispose comme chose à lui, soit en les vendant, soit en les emportant, lorsqu'il quitte définitivement la colonie.

Il n'est pas permis au colon de se marier, à moins qu'il ne soit veuf, ou fils d'un veuf, et en possession d'une ferme ; et lorsque ses enfants sont parvenus à l'âge de 16 ou 18 ans, ils choisissent un état, avec le consentement de leurs parents et des supérieurs, état qu'ils peuvent exercer soit dans le sein de la colonie, soit ailleurs.

Il y a, par vingt-cinq fermes, un surveillant, qui les visite tous les jours, qui dirige les travaux, et les distribue entre les divers colons. Dans ce partage des 25 fermes et la distribution des familles qui les occupent, la société a soin de faire entrer des individus exerçant des métiers différents. En raison de la bonne conduite de chaque famille, la surveillance diminue de jour en jour, et elle cesse presque entièrement, lorsque le colon a restitué la valeur des avances qui lui ont été faites. Pour cent fermes, il y a un sous-directeur, qui donne ses instructions au surveillant, tient les registres, et dirige les manufactures.

Les colons paresseux et d'une conduite irrégulière sont traduits devant un conseil de surveillance, dont quelques colons font partie ; ce conseil les renvoie devant un autre, dit de Discipline, qui peut les faire transférer à Ommerschans (colonie pour réprimer la mendicité, dont nous parlerons ensuite), dans un endroit qui leur est particulièrement destiné. Ils y séjournent pendant un temps déterminé, soumis à un travail plus rigoureux que de coutume. Les colons laborieux et honnêtes sont commis à la surveillance des travaux dans les colonies pour réprimer la mendicité, et dans celles d'orphelins et d'indigents.

Dans ces colonies de Frederiks-Oord, la plupart des familles sont Protestantes ; il y en a cependant plusieurs Catholiques, et deux Juives.

Wateren.

La matinée du troisième jour, nous nous sommes rendus à Wateren, qui est à deux lieues de Frederiks-Oord. Wateren est la colonie d'industrie agricole, où sont envoyés les orphelins qui se distinguent le plus dans leurs colonies. Les orphelins, au nombre de soixante, y apprennent la théorie de l'agriculture, au moyen d'un maître, et la pratique, en cultivant une ferme de quarante-deux bonniers, partagés en champs cultivés, en pépinières, et en pâturages. Le même maître leur enseigne en outre l'arpentage, l'histoire naturelle, la botanique, les mathématiques, la chimie, l'histoire de la Hollande, leur explique la Bible, et leur fait faire des exercices gymnastiques. Ces orphelins sont destinés à devenir surveillants dans les colonies ordinaires ou libres. Ils sont mieux habillés que les autres, et portent un chapeau orné d'un ruban sur lequel est écrit le nom de la colonie privilégiée à laquelle ils appartiennent. Cette colonie gagne à la société à-peu-près 900 fl. par an.

et

Le même jour, après une course de trois lieues, nous arrivâmes à Veenhuisen, où il y a une colonie pour réprimer la mendicité, deux d'orphelins, une d'indigents et de vétérans, et une de surveillants aux travaux d'agriculture. Deux grands édifices quarrés, à la distance d'un demi-mille l'un de l'autre, contiennent dans la partie qui donne sur les cours, le premier, des mendiants; le second, des orphelins; et tous deux, dans des chambres qui donnent à l'extérieur, des indigents et des vétérans. Un autre édifice pareil, à deux milles de distance, contient également ces trois classes d'individus; et, entre ces trois édifices, sont situées deux églises, l'une Catholique et l'autre Protestante, vingt-quatre maisons formant une colonie de surveillants aux travaux d'agriculture, et un même nombre de maisons habitées par les employés de ces colonies.

Les enfants ont ainsi été placés dans le voisinage des hommes, afin que les travaux de l'agriculture et ceux des arts et métiers pussent être distribués plus convenablement. Ces colonies sont aussi entrecoupées par des grands chemins, bordés d'arbres, et par des canaux, qui les mettent en communication avec la ville d'Amsterdam.

L'intérieur des trois grands édifices est partagé en deux; d'un côté demeurent les hommes, de l'autre, les femmes: il se compose de grandes salles au rez-de-chaussée qui contiennent de 40 à 50 individus, et qui sont séparées l'une de l'autre par une cuisine.

Au-dessus du rez-de-chaussée, il n'y a que des greniers, qui servent de magasins. Ces salles sont éclairées au moyen de quinquets suspendus au plafond, chauffées par des poêles, et l'air y est constamment renouvelé par des ventilateurs. Hommes et enfants dorment dans des hamacs, suspendus, le jour, au plafond, et descendus, le soir, presque au niveau du plancher, de manière que les mêmes salles servent tout à la fois de dortoir, de réfectoire, et d'atelier. Des bancs, fixés à la muraille, servent de siège et d'armoire.

Les individus de la colonie pour réprimer la mendicité reçoivent, à leur entrée, un habillement neuf, complet et uniforme, et, pendant quelque temps, sont entretenus en toutes choses, sans que l'on exige que, par leur travail, ils gagnent au prorata de ce qu'on leur a donné. Ils travaillent, ou à l'extérieur, à la culture des champs, à la fabrication des briques, à l'exploitation des tourbières, ou à l'intérieur, dans les manufactures, et plus souvent à la tâche qu'à la journée. Le prix du travail est fixé par l'administration de la société.

Les terres de ces colonies sont partagées en fermes, de trente-deux bonniers chacune, moitié champs cultivés, moitié pâturages. A chacune de ces fermes sont attachés quarante ou cinquante colons, qui travaillent sous la direction d'un surveillant, instruit auparavant par le sous-directeur quant à la manière de les cultiver. Les dépenses annuelles pour l'exploitation de chacune de ces fermes sont fixées à 1,680 flor.

La comptabilité entre la société et les colons est tenue suivant le système militaire. Chaque colon est porteur d'un livret sur lequel sont inscrits la somme des travaux qu'il a exécutés chaque jour, celle des fournitures qui lui ont été faites, des dépenses générales auxquelles il doit prendre part, et tout ce qu'il a reçu en papier-monnaie.

Si les gains du colon excèdent les dépenses qui ont été faites pour lui, ce qui arrive, dit-on, communément, un tiers de cet excédant lui est donné en papier-monnaie, un second tiers est versé dans une caisse d'épargne, pour lui être rendu à sa sortie de la colonie, et le dernier tiers est retenu par la société pour faire face à des dépenses imprévues.

Des gardes à cheval, et qui circulent autour de la colonie, des primes accordées à ceux qui reconduisent les colons qui ont tenté de s'échapper, un habillement uniforme, tels sont les moyens employés pour empêcher que la colonie ne soit désertée. Les colons y sont retenus pendant six ans, à moins que, dans un plus court espace de temps, ils n'aient épargné 12½ flor.: ils sortent alors immédiatement.

Les orphelins sont conduits dans les colonies qui ont été fondées pour eux, dès qu'ils ont atteint l'âge de six ans. S'ils sont atteints de maladies contagieuses, ils sont logés séparément, jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient guéris. Une partie de la journée est employée par eux au travail dans les champs ou à l'intérieur; l'autre partie est consacrée à l'instruction élémentaire, au dessin et au chant. Le directeur eut la complaisance d'en faire chanter quelques-uns devant nous, ce qui nous fut très-agréable. Les orphelins sortent des colonies à l'âge de dix-huit ans, et la plupart prennent du service soit dans la marine, soit dans l'armée.

Les colonies d'indigents et de vétérans servent de lieux préparatoires avant de passer aux colonies ordinaires ou libres. Les vétérans et les indigents demeurent avec leurs familles dans les appartements extérieurs des grands édifices habités par les mendiants et les orphelins. De même que ceux-ci, ils sont considérés comme des journaliers, et sont payés en raison de leur travail.

Dans toutes ces colonies, les fournitures aussi bien que les gages varient en raison de la différence d'âge, de force, de sexe des individus. Les hommes sont divisés en cinq classes, et les femmes en sept. La première classe d'hommes doit gagner un florin 70 c. par semaine; la seconde 1-35; la troisième 1-06; la quatrième, composée d'enfants, de 8 à 16 ans, 1-01; la cinquième, composée d'enfants au-dessous de cet âge, 67½ c. La première classe de femmes doit gagner par semaine 1 flor. 51; la seconde 1-26; la troisième 98 c.; les quatrième et cinquième, composées d'enfants, 95 c. et 75 c.; les sixième et septième, composées également d'enfants, mais plus jeunes, 63 c. et 55 c.

Le même jour (c'est-à-dire le troisième de notre départ d'Amsterdam) nous quittâmes

 Ommerschans.

Veenhuisen, et, après trois lieues de chemin, nous nous arrêtàmes à une petite auberge située sur la grande route entre Zwol et Groningue, et nous y passâmes la nuit. La matinée du quatrième jour, nous nous rendîmes à Ommerschans, qui est à sept lieues de Veenhuisen. On y trouve, comme dans toutes les colonies et le reste de la Hollande, de bonnes auberges.

A Ommerschans il y a une colonie pour réprimer la mendicité et une d'indigents et de vétérans. La première est composée d'hommes et d'enfants; et, dans un lieu séparé, sont placés les colons ordinaires ou libres, envoyés en expiation de quelque faute commise dans leurs propres colonies. L'édifice, qui peut contenir mille individus, ressemble sous plusieurs rapports à celui de Veenhuisen, si ce n'est que l'eau qui l'environne, et les barreaux de fer aux fenêtres, lui donnent une bien plus grande apparence de prison que l'autre, et qu'au lieu d'un seul rez-de-chaussée, il est surmonté d'un étage. Sont également semblables les dispositions des salles, les occupations des colons, la discipline, etc. Au milieu de la cour, il y a des boutiques de serruriers, de menuisiers, et d'autres métiers, et des fabriques de fil et de toile. En dehors, se trouvent l'église qui sert aux cultes Catholique et Protestant, et d'école en même temps; la maison du sous-directeur, l'hôpital, et d'autres locaux à l'usage des colonies; et vingt maisons, éparses dans les terres, forment une colonie de surveillants aux travaux d'agriculture. Il y avait peu de malades à cette époque dans l'hôpital; mais, en 1826, le nombre en fut très-grand; et l'épidémie qui, pendant l'année 1827 à 1828, désola la ville et la province de Groningue et des pays environnants, étendit ses ravages sur ces mêmes colonies. Pour prévenir les maladies contagieuses, et empêcher de feindre celles qu'on n'a point, les colons qui tombent malades sont obligés de se transporter dans les 24 heures à l'hôpital.

De cette colonie pour réprimer la mendicité, sortent tous les ans 150 individus à-peu-pres.

Les vétérans et les indigents sont également logés à la partie extérieure de l'édifice.

Les pommes de terre nous parurent le produit le plus beau des champs de la colonie.

De tout ce qui se fait dans ces deux colonies, et dans toutes celles dont nous avons parlé, compte exact est rendu par la société à tous ses membres et au public, dans un journal mensuel, intitulé, De Vriend des Vaderland (L'ami de la Patrie.) La première année, ce journal lui rapporta 33,000 florins.

A Ommerschans se termina notre visite aux colonies de la Société de Bienfaisance des provinces septentrionales; et la soirée du quatrième jour, nous revînmes à Zwol, qui est à quatre lieues d'Ommerschans.

Les travaux de cette société stimulèrent l'émulation des habitants du midi du royaume; et, dans l'année 1822, ils formèrent aussi une Société de Bienfaisance pour les provinces méridionales.

Elle compta bientôt seize mille membres, et ne se proposa que d'établir des colonies ordinaires ou libres, et des colonies pour réprimer la mendicité, qui devaient contenir aussi des orphelins.

En 1823, elle en fonda deux ordinaires ou libres dans la province d'Anvers.

Près de celle-ci, elle établit, en 1825, une colonie pour réprimer la mendicité, et elle s'obligea envers le gouvernement à y recevoir mille mendiants, envoyés par lui, sous la condition de payer à la société pendant 16 ans, 35 flor. par an et par chaque mendiant valide, 28 flor. par invalide, et flor. 17 $\frac{1}{2}$ par chaque enfant au-dessous de treize ans. Les seize années écoulées, la société s'engage à recevoir un égal nombre de mendiants, sans que le gouvernement ait à lui payer une autre indemnité que 12 flor. par individu, et une fois payés, pour subvenir à la dépense de l'habillement.

Un décret du roi du 16 Novembre 1822 fixe les conditions selon lesquelles les pauvres peuvent être placés dans ces colonies, soit par les institutions de bienfaisance déjà existantes, soit par des communes. Les conditions sont de payer 35 fl. par an pour chaque personne adulte; 45 fl. pour un enfant au-dessus de six ans; mais si on en envoie huit à la fois, la société est tenue de recevoir trios adultes gratuitement; 40 flor. pour un enfant au-dessous de six ans, et 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ pour chaque membre d'une famille composée de huit individus. Des particuliers peuvent, soit seuls, soit conjointement, placer des familles dans les colonies ordinaires ou libres, à charge de payer ou la somme de 1,600 flor. à la fois pour chaque famille, ou 15 flor. par an pour chaque individu pendant seize ans.

Pour nous rendre à ces colonies, nous partîmes d'Anvers par la diligence à sept heures du matin, et nous arrivâmes à Turnhout à midi. Nous louâmes une voiture, et après une route de deux heures, à travers les sables, les bruyères et les bois, nous arrivâmes à la colonie pour réprimer la mendicité, dans les communes de Merxplas et de Ryckevorsel. L'édifice ressemble à ceux d'Ommerschans et de Veenhuisen; il n'a qu'un rez-de-chaussée, et il peut aussi contenir mille individus; mais il est beaucoup plus beau que les autres, et, au centre, il y a un grand et vaste logement pour le directeur.

Après que les mendiants sont arrêtés par la gendarmerie, on leur laisse le choix ou d'être traduits devant les tribunaux comme vagabonds, ou bien d'être transférés dans cette colonie, où ils doivent rester au moins un an. Le gouvernement cependant, ou spontanément, ou à la suite d'une demande de la société, laisse d'ordinaire sortir avant ce temps ceux des mendiants qui semblent disposés à ne plus vivre d'aumônes.

Ici les colons valides ne sont partagés qu'en trois classes, sans distinction de sexe, et doivent gagner par leur travail une somme équivalente aux objets qu'ils reçoivent. La valeur des objets pour la première classe est de 1 fl. 55 c. par semaine; pour la seconde, 1 fl. 40 c., et pour la troisième 1 fl. 18 c. Les colons n'y travaillent qu'à la journée, et le salaire est de 1 fl. 80 c. par semaine pour la première classe: 1 fl. 50 c. pour la seconde; 1 fl. 20 c. pour la troisième. On dispose de l'excédant du bénéfice sur les dépenses de la même manière que dans les provinces septentrionales. C'est une récompense pour ceux qui travaillent avec activité pendant une semaine que de passer d'une classe inférieure à une supérieure, et une punition que de descendre à une classe inférieure.

Cette colonie est sise sur 500 bonniers de terre; elle est composée de quatre maisons, situées à une égale distance de l'édifice. Dans ces maisons demeurent les chefs des travaux d'agriculture; et les étables et autres bâtiments d'exploitation y sont annexés. Plusieurs autres maisons sont éparses sur ces mêmes terres. Les premières sont bâties en briques, couvertes d'ardoises, et coûtèrent chacune 2,000 fl. de construction. Les secondes ont été bâties avec des matériaux moins coûteux; elles sont préférées aux premières, et servent maintenant de modèles à celles que l'on bâtit de nouveau. Une pareille distribution des maisons facilite le transport des fumiers, qui se doit faire ici à mains d'hommes, à cause du nombre de personnes qu'on doit nécessairement employer. Le seigle, le blé sarrazin, les pommes de terres, les trèfles, tout y était d'une végétation aussi belle et aussi vigoureuse, dans ces terres pauvres et à peine livrées à la culture de l'homme, qu'elles eussent pu l'être dans des champs fertiles et depuis longtemps entretenus avec soin et diligence. Les champs sont entourés de haies et de fossés; les chemins bien entretenus et bordés d'arbres; tout nous sembla respirer ici un air d'aisance et de prospérité.

Après avoir consacré trois heures à visiter cette colonie, nous nous mîmes de nouveau en voiture, et après un trajet de deux milles, nous nous trouvâmes sur une grande place, qui est le centre des colonies ordinaires ou libres, situées dans la commune de Wortel. De là nous renvoyâmes la voiture à Turnhout. Sur différents points de la place, sont situés l'église, l'école, le logement du sous-directeur, une filature et un magasin. De cette même place, divergent différents chemins, le long desquels sont bâties toutes les fermes, comme à Frederiks-Oord. Dans ces colonies, on assigne à chaque famille de huit personnes un capital de 1,600 fl., réparti de la manière suivante :

Pour l'achat du terrain	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	50	-	„
Pour bâtir la maison	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	550	-	„
Pour meubles	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	250	-	„
Pour dépenses communes	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	50	-	„

Pour lin et laine	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	150	-	„
								1,600	-	„*

Nous sommes entres dans plusieurs maisons, et les avons trouvées propres et bien fournies.

Cependant, ces colons jouissent dans leurs actions d'une liberté moins grande que ceux de Frederiks-Oord. Les familles ne cultivent jamais les terres des fermes qu'elles habitent, et ne disposent d'autres produits que de ceux du jardin. On les traite tous comme des hommes travaillant à la journée, et on les envoie cultiver tantôt les terres d'une ferme, tantôt celles d'une autre. Les produits de ces terres étaient on ne peut plus mauvais; et comme la plupart des colons ignoraient à leur arrivée les occupations champêtres, et négligeaient leurs vaches, elles leur furent retirées.

Dans ces colonies, au lieu de papier-monnaie, on a créé une monnaie de plomb de 5 et 10 cents; mais, en cas de maladie, ou de circonstances extraordinaires, on donne de l'argent aux colons, afin qu'ils puissent se procurer hors de la colonie ce dont ils ont besoin. Non-obstant le contrat fait avec le gouvernement, et l'arrêté du Roi ci-dessus rappelé, ces colonies sont peu peuplées, et il y a plus de trente fermes qui ne sont point occupées.

Les maisons et les édifices, construits par la société, sont exempts d'impositions pendant l'espace de quinze ans.

La société des provinces méridionales publie, comme celle du nord, un journal sous le titre de Philanthrope.

Le soir de cette même journée, en nous promenant sur les chemins de la colonie, nous nous trouvâmes près d'Hoogstraate, où nous passâmes la nuit, et d'où nous nous rendîmes à Bréda.

Suivant un rapport, présenté aux Etats-Généraux par le Ministre de l'Intérieur, sur la situation des Sociétés de Bienfaisance pendant l'année 1827, il résulte que :

1° La société pour les provinces septentrionales comptait à cette époque	-	-	-	-	-	-	12,900	23,200 membres.

Jamais peut-être aucune Société de Bienfaisance n'entreprit et n'exécuta autant de choses en aussi peu de temps que celles dont nous venons de tracer le tableau. Mais tout ce qu'elles ont fait est-il bien ? Nous ne le pensons pas.

Et d'abord, nous voudrions que toute institution humaine, avant d'être mise à l'épreuve de l'utile, le fût à celle du juste. Or, dans ce cas-ci, nous nous sommes demandé : est-il juste que l'on poursuive des hommes qui ne font d'autre mal que d'implorer le secours de leurs semblables ? est-il juste que, pour prémunir la société humaine contre un dommage résultant d'une action innocente par elle-même, et pour éloigner de ses yeux des objets désagréables, l'on prive ces hommes bon gré mal gré du bien le plus précieux, et du seul peut-être dont ils jouissent, de leur liberté ? qu'on les enlève à leur pays natal, à leurs affections ; qu'on les sépare de leurs parents ; que l'on en dispose enfin comme autant d'êtres sans volonté et sans sentiments ? Nous ne le pensons pas.

Dans les colonies pour réprimer la mendicité, les pauvres sont sans doute mieux logés, nourris, vêtus, qu'ils ne le sont d'ordinaire, traités avec humanité ; et en conséquence nombre de personnes veulent et croient qu'ils doivent être contents. Mais le contentement, chacun l'entend à sa guise ; et les pauvres de ces colonies manifestent assez leur mécontentement, par le désir qu'ils ont d'en sortir et par leurs efforts pour reconquérir leur liberté.

Nous voudrions qu'à cette époque où les aumônes étaient faites sans discernement, en eût succédé une autre où elles fussent distribuées avec choix et jugement ; une époque où la mendicité eût été réglée (et nous croyons une semblable mesure indispensable, surtout dans les grandes villes) ; mais où des invocations à la charité faites par celui qui est malheureux sans sa faute, ne fussent pas confondues avec celles de l'imposteur, et enveloppées dans un même arrêt de proscription. Cette manière de secourir les pauvres nous paraît plus convenable, plus digne d'hommes civilisés, plus juste que les autres, et propre en même temps à empêcher leur multiplication. Mais puisque nous en sommes encore à espérer et à prédire la naissance de cette époque, au lieu de la pouvoir considérer comme existante, que les lois actuelles contre la mendicité soient exécutées autant que possible, mais par les administrations publiques, et non par des Sociétés de Bienfaisance. Le bienfait, pour être tel, doit être offert et accepté librement : soutenu et accompagné de la force, il est justice, il est utilité peut-être, mais il cesse d'être bienfait.

Ceux qui se proposent d'extirper la mendicité, ne réfléchissent point à l'étendue de cette entreprise. S'ils y pensaient bien, ils verraient qu'elle est gigantesque, au-dessus des forces de toute société, du pouvoir de toute législation. En disant aux pauvres : " Vous ne demanderez pas l'aumône sous peine d'emprisonnement," il faut que l'on soit prêt à secourir tous les invalides, et en même temps que l'on dise aux valides : " Voilà de l'ouvrage, pour tous tant que vous êtes, pour toujours, et dans toutes les circonstances !" Mais les sociétés humaines, dans leur état ordinaire, et surtout celles où la civilisation est ancienne, ont déjà un nombre de pauvres tel qu'il leur est bien difficile de tenir de pareilles promesses. Une mauvaise récolte, une crise commerciale, en augmentent le nombre, au point qu'il est même absolument impossible de remplir ces engagements. Et puis, comme chacun sait, les lois ne peuvent pas à leur fantaisie ériger en crimes les actions des hommes. Les lois, pour être exécutées facilement, et respectées, doivent, avant tout, commander le possible, et ensuite punir les actions vraiment contraires à la conscience humaine. Mais les hommes, au contraire, satisfont aisément, à l'aide de quelques aumônes, à ce besoin que presque tous éprouvent et sentent parfois de faire un peu de bien ; et la voix du malheureux, vraie ou fausse, pénètre d'ordinaire et résonne trop profondément dans leur cœur, pour qu'ils n'en soient pas touchés.

Afin d'étayer cette opinion, prenons pour exemple le royaume même des Pays-Bas. Suivant le rapport cité ci-dessus, il y avait, dans ce royaume, en 1827, 11,440 institutions de bienfaisance, qui, au moyen d'une dépense de 12,821,359 florins, 04 c., avaient secouru 1,214,55 d'individus, tandis que la population totale du royaume n'était que de 6,166,854 âmes. Parmi ces secours, à la vérité, étaient compris les dépenses pour l'instruction de 172,761 individus ; les prêts du mont-de-piété faits à 217,133 personnes ; le travail procuré à 20,457 ; mais 803,704 pauvres avaient reçu des secours en argent. Le premier Janvier de la même année, il y avait, dans les dépôts de mendicité et dans les colonies pour réprimer la mendicité, 5,324 pauvres ; et dans le cours de l'année, on en avait arrêté 2,528. La cinquième partie à peu près de la population de ce royaume reçoit donc des secours d'une manière quelconque. Des lois sévères, et exécutées autant que possible, y répriment et punissent la mendicité. Et cependant, l'on y rencontre un grand nombre de gens qui demandent l'aumône, plus, il est vrai, dans les provinces méridionales que dans les septentrionales, plus dans les campagnes que dans les villes.

Selon nous donc, les Sociétés de Bienfaisance du royaume des Pays-Bas, en établissant les colonies pour réprimer la mendicité, se sont écartées des principes de toute institution de bienfaisance, et ont pris une marche diamétralement opposée à leur nature : elles ont substitué au bienfait les rigueurs de la législation. Mieux eût valu laisser traiter cette matière scabreuse de la mendicité par les administrations publiques ; et si ces administrations, forcées, par la nécessité actuelle des choses, de faire exécuter les lois existantes contre la mendicité, avaient placé les mendiants dans des dépôts situés à la campagne, et non dans les villes, et leur avaient fait pratiquer les travaux de l'agriculture aussi bien que ceux des arts et métiers, si elles avaient enfin fait pour ces malheureux cette espèce de bien que les sociétés sont parvenues à faire, elles eussent rendu, selon nous, un grand service à l'humanité.

NETHERLANDS.

Quant aux colonies d'indigents et de vétérans et aux colonies ordinaires ou libres, si ceux qui y sont admis s'y rendent spontanément, et se soumettent volontairement à la discipline intérieure, nous n'avons dans ces cas qu'une seule objection à leur faire du côté moral, c'est l'empêchement apporté au mariage des colons. Nous pensons, à la vérité, que les mariages précoces et irréfléchis sont nuisibles aux classes inférieures de la société; mais nous voudrions que la prévoyance leur fût inculquée, et non commandée. Ensuite, la discipline nous paraît trop rigide et trop vexatoire; et il nous semble qu'il eût été plus convenable de bâtir les maisons sur diverses échelles, et de partager le terrain en lots d'une étendue variée. Il est impossible que les familles puissent toutes être composées d'un nombre d'individus proportionné à l'uniformité de dimension des maisons; et soit qu'on les réduise à ce nombre, en les augmentant ou en les diminuant, soit qu'on les laisse dans l'état où elles arrivent, la chose est également mauvaise. Et puis, quelques familles égales ou inférieures en nombre à d'autres, pourraient ou par une plus grande aptitude aux travaux des champs, ou par plus de connaissances et de bonne volonté, être plus capables d'exploiter une grande ferme que les autres. La possibilité et l'espoir de passer d'une ferme plus petite à une plus grande, eût été un stimulant et une récompense pour toutes les familles. Enfin, nous croyons mal entendue cette espèce de vanité à laquelle il nous a paru que les administrations se livraient, et qui consiste à se glorifier de produire, dans les colonies, la plus grande quantité des objets que l'on y consomme, comme si elles étaient placées hors du monde commercial; comme s'il n'était pas possible et plus utile de n'y produire que les objets qui offrent le plus d'avantages, et de les échanger avec ceux dont la production est plus avantageuse ailleurs!

En considérant ces colonies sous le point de vue économique, nous les estimons une mauvaise spéculation. Il nous semble impossible, si c'était chose profitable que d'exploiter les bruyères du royaume des Pays-Bas, qu'il ne se trouvât point des individus ou des compagnies qui l'entreprissent (et sans doute ils le pourraient faire avec plus d'économie et d'avantages que les Sociétés de Bienfaisance), dans un pays où l'on emploie les capitaux à moins de 2 % d'intérêt, et dans un siècle aussi entreprenant et aussi adonné aux spéculations que le nôtre. Les administrations des sociétés soutiennent le contraire; et nous n'avons que des inductions à leur opposer. Nous pourrions toutefois nous étayer ici d'une autorité de grand poids, si un sentiment de délicatesse ne nous imposait le devoir de garder le silence à cet égard. Mais ces administrations se font peut-être illusion sur le présent, et n'apercevront leur erreur que plus tard.

Quelques-uns pensent qu'il est nécessaire d'exploiter les bruyères, afin de mettre de niveau les produits de la terre et l'accroissement de la population. Mais l'opinion qui nous fait juger qu'il n'est pas profitable de cultiver les bruyères, conduit naturellement à croire que cette exploitation n'est pas nécessaire. Que la population augmente dans le royaume des Pays-Bas, c'est ce qui est indubitable; mais il faut cependant que les progrès lents que fait l'agriculture dans un état progressif de civilisation, et que ces petites exploitations partielles de bruyères entreprise par les propriétaires qui les avoisinent, suffisent pour subvenir aux besoins de la population croissante. Si l'on sentait le besoin d'une nouvelle masse considérable de produits agricoles, ce besoin serait proclamé d'une tout autre manière que par la voix des écrivains et des faiseurs de phrases: le prix de ces produits augmenterait continuellement. Les prix élevés sont le plus grand stimulant et la meilleure récompense que puisse recevoir la création de tous les produits, bien supérieure à celle que peuvent donner les gouvernements et les Sociétés de Bienfaisance. Or les nouveaux besoins des hommes se manifestent par l'élévation des prix, et tous, même les plus frivoles, sont aussitôt satisfaits, s'il est possible; et le plus pressant de tous, le besoin de la subsistance, ne le serait pas! Mais chacun, pour peu qu'il ait vécu, a été témoin des effets que produit la moindre pénurie des grains; leur prix augmente hors de mesure, et la culture des terres reçoit une telle impulsion, que deux ou trois années après, à la pénurie succède la surabondance, et les cris de détresse des cultivateurs se font entendre, jusqu'à ce que survienne une seconde pénurie qui les console. C'est par ces alternatives que passe le commerce des grains. Tant donc qu'il sera possible de produire des grains, cette production aura lieu de préférence à toute autre; et une semblable possibilité, disons-le pour tranquilliser les craintifs, durera aussi long-temps que toutes les terres cultivables du globe n'auront pas été exploitées, et aussi long-temps qu'on n'aura pas exécuté toutes les améliorations dont l'agriculture est susceptible.

Si nous ne craignons point que l'établissement des colonies d'orphelins, avec leurs formes grandioses, et revêtues pour ainsi-dire d'un caractère public, ne fût naître parmi les hommes l'idée que tous les orphelins, de quelque nature qu'ils soient, y seront accueillis et traités avec soin, et ne contribuât ainsi à relâcher de plus en plus les liens moraux que les institutions d'orphelins ont déjà une tendance à affaiblir, nous y donnerions bien volontiers notre assentiment. Cependant, nous ne pouvons nous empêcher de payer notre tribut d'éloges à la Société de Bienfaisance des provinces septentrionales, pour le soin qu'elle prend de ses orphelins, et l'instruction qu'elle leur fait donner, instruction qui, à leur rentrée dans la société société générale, peut servir de compensation à ce relâchement des liens sociaux, et contribuer elle-même à en créer de nouveaux.

Pour obvier en partie au mal que les colonies d'orphelins, telles qu'elles sont établies actuellement, peuvent faire au pays, la Société de Bienfaisance pourrait imiter l'homme charitable, actif et instruit en même-temps, qui cherche et choisit lui-même les individus sur lesquels il veut répandre ses bienfaits : elle pourrait donc faire elle-même le choix des orphelins, au lieu de les recevoir indistinctement du gouvernement, et le porter sur les plus malheureux. Elle pourrait établir, dans le voisinage de ses colonies d'orphelins, des fermes de différente étendue, qu'elle louerait à des paysans qui aidassent les enfants dans les travaux des champs. Pour engager des cultivateurs à louer ces fermes, elle pourrait leur faire l'avance de quelques meubles et instruments d'agriculture, à payer à des époques déterminées, et donner à leurs enfants une instruction gratuite en tout ou en partie. Ces avantages, joints à la certitude d'avoir toujours du travail dans les colonies, feraient naître sans doute une grande concurrence ; et si la société mettait de préférence en culture cette partie des bruyères qui est la plus malfaisante au pays et en enlaidit l'aspect en même temps, elle ferait une œuvre vraiment utile et méritoire.

DE LA SITUATION des COLONIES AGRICOLES en BELGIQUE, en l'Année 1832, par
Ed. Ducpétiaux, Inspecteur-Général des Prisons et des Institutions de Bienfaisance de la Belgique.

ON s'occupe depuis quelque tems en France du projet de fonder des colonies agricoles à l'instar des établissemens créés il y quelques années en Hollande et en Belgique.

M. Huerne de Pommeuse a publié récemment sur ce sujet un ouvrage * qui renferme des renseignemens intéressans, non-seulement sur les colonies Hollandaises et Belges, mais encore sur plusieurs institutions pénitentiaires et charitables, qui se rapportent spécialement au but qu'on se propose en demandant la création d'établissemens coloniaux.

Le gouvernement Français n'est pas demeuré sourd à cet appel. Le Moniteur du 7 Novembre dernier contient un rapport fait au Roi par le Ministre du Commerce et des Travaux Publics, dans lequel ce fonctionnaire se propose de rendre commune à la France une institution qui s'est, dit-il, depuis 1822, acclimatée avec bonheur en Belgique, et qui, conduite avec soin et intelligence, peut agir puissamment sur la prospérité morale et matérielle du peuple.

Certes, je n'ai pas l'intention de diminuer le moins du monde la bonne volonté, et de refroidir le zèle des partisans du système des colonies agricoles ; j'ai la conviction, au contraire, que des établissemens de défrichemens et de culture, bien dirigés, seraient de nature à accroître jusqu'à un certain point la prospérité de la France. Mais il ne sera pas inutile, je pense, de réduire à leur juste valeur les résultats obtenus jusqu'ici en Belgique, dans les colonies de Wortel, et de Merxplas-Ryckevorsel. La nature des fonctions que j'exerce m'a mis à même de recueillir à cet égard quelques renseignemens peu ou point connus, qui, en indiquant les écueils contre lesquels sont venus se briser les efforts les plus consciencieux et les plus persévérans, contribueront peut-être à éclairer la marche de l'administration Française dans l'œuvre de la fondation des colonies agricoles.

La Société de Bienfaisance fondée dans les provinces méridionales du ci-devant royaume des Pays-Bas, à l'instar de la Société fondée en Hollande en 1818, a commencé ses opérations au commencement de l'année 1822.

Ces opérations consistèrent dans l'achat de cinq cent trente-deux bonniers vingt-six perches de bruyères sous la commune de Wortel, et la construction de cent vingt-neuf petites fermes et de quatre bâtimens centraux qui formèrent les colonies libres, N° 1 et 2 †.

En 1823, la Société entra en arrangement avec la gouvernement pour la fondation d'un nouvel établissement agricole, destiné à recevoir une partie de la population valide des dépôts de mendicité ; un contrat fut passé, cette même année, pour l'admission de mille mendiens à la colonie dite de Répression. Le prix convenu pour frais d'entretien de ces mille mendiens devait être payé tous les six mois à la Société, à raison de flor. 17.50 par tête, par conséquent flor. 17,500 par semestre. Ce paiement devait avoir lieu pendant seize ans ; sans que la diminution du nombre des mendiens pût donner droit à diminuer le montant de la somme convenue. Après l'expiration de ces seize années, le gouvernement devait conserver le droit de placer le même nombre de mendiens dans les établissemens de la Société, sans ne plus rien devoir payer de ce chef.

En conséquence de cette convention, la Société fit l'acquisition de cinq cent seize bonniers trente-six perches de bruyères, sous les communes de Merxplas et de Ryckevorsel, pour y établir la colonie pour la répression de la mendicité ; un dépôt pour mille mendiens, et quatre grandes fermes furent bâties sur ce terrain, et commencèrent à être habitées dans les derniers mois de 1825 ‡.

 BELGIAN
 POOR COLONIES.

Depuis l'époque de sa fondation jusqu'à ce jour, la Société a fait face aux dépenses de ses établissemens,

1. Par le produit des contrats passés avec quelques administrations communales et hospices civils pour le placement de familles ou d'orphelins aux colonies libres * ;
2. Par le produit des dons et des souscriptions volontaires des habitans ;
3. Au moyen d'emprunts ;
4. Au moyen de l'allocation de 35,000 fl. payés annuellement par le gouvernement pour l'entretien de mille mendiants reclus, du dépôt de Merxplas-Ryckevorsel ;
5. Par le produit des colonies, récoltes, ventes de bestiaux, retenues faites aux colons, etc. ;

Les dépenses de la Société peuvent être rangées sous les titres suivans :

1. Achat de terres ;
2. Constructions de bâtimens ;
3. Défrichement ;
4. Administration centrale et coloniale ;
5. Mobilier et vêtemens, fabrique ;
6. Vivres et entretien en général ;
7. Achat des bestiaux, chevaux, etc. ;
8. Culture ordinaire, engrais, ensemencement, journées, etc. ;
9. Dépenses diverses, assurances, etc.

Pour apprécier les opérations de la Société jusqu'à ce jour, et porter un jugement sur son avenir probable, il faudrait pouvoir non-seulement comparer le relevé annuel de ses recettes avec ses dépenses, mais encore calculer les frais de défrichement, la valeur progressive des récoltes, etc. ; malheureusement les renseignemens manquent à cet égard ou sont incomplets.

Cependant les comptes-rendus et les autres pièces qui m'ont été communiquées par M. le secrétaire de la commission permanent renferment quelques documens précis dont les conséquences seront faciles à saisir.

D'après les comptes-rendus, les relevés des dépenses et des recettes annuelles des établissemens coloniaux, depuis leur origine en 1822 jusqu'au 31 Décembre 1831, ont présenté les résultats suivans :

—			RECETTES.	DEPENSES.
1822	-	-	70,600 55 $\frac{1}{2}$	61,200 23 $\frac{1}{2}$
1823	-	-	163,216 02 $\frac{1}{2}$	121,044 74 $\frac{1}{2}$

1829	-	-	255,435 50 $\frac{1}{2}$	245,464 75
1830 †	-	-	155,784 79 $\frac{82}{100}$	168,134 71 $\frac{7}{100}$
1831	-	-	142,235 57 $\frac{1}{2}$	145,127 55 $\frac{1}{2}$
Total pendant 10 ans			1,742,397 71	1,738,330 58 $\frac{1}{2}$

Dans le chiffre des recettes est compris le montant des emprunts contracté par la Société, s'élevant à la somme de fl. 803,000. Sur cette somme, il a été remboursé 134,000 fl. ; de sorte que la Société demeure encore chargée d'une dette principale de fl. 669,000.

La somme que la Société devrait rembourser chaque année, pour satisfaire aux conditions de ces divers emprunts, est de fl. 37,000, non compris l'avance de 80,000 fl. faite par l'ex-roi, dont l'époque de remboursement n'a pas été fixée.

Les remboursemens se sont effectués, aux termes des contrats, jusqu'au 1 Octobre 1830 ; depuis cette époque ils ont été suspendus en partie, par suite des circonstances politiques et de la pénurie des ressources de la Société. On s'est contenté de payer les coupons des obligations dont les porteurs habitaient la Belgique : de sorte qu'au lieu de payer annuellement fl. 33,450, montant actuel des intérêts de la dette sociale, la commission permanente s'est bornée à ne payer annuellement de ce chef que la somme de fl. 6,475. Les autres obligations se trouvent dans des portefeuilles Hollandais, et entre les mains du roi Guillaume et du prince Frédéric des Pays-Bas.

Il résulte de là que les intérêts des emprunts dont les paiemens sont arriérés, depuis le 1 Octobre 1830 jusqu'au 1 Juillet 1832, s'élèvent à fl. 47,393. 98, non compris le remboursement des capitaux, montant à fl. 37,000 par an, et qui s'opère en suivant les conditions des contrats.

Non-seulement

* Le produit des contrats passés entre des hospices civils et la Société, pour l'entretien de personnes aux colonies libres, s'élève annuellement à fl. 1,400.

† Le compte-rendu pour 1830 ne comprend que 9 mois ; du 1^{er} Avril au 31 Décembre. Antérieurement à cet exercice, le compte annuel commençait le 31 Mars jusqu'au 1 Avril.

Non-seulement la Société n'a pu satisfaire aux engagements qu'elle avait contractés, mais encore elle n'a pu subvenir, particulièrement depuis deux ans, à toutes les dépenses relatives à l'administration et à l'entretien des colonies: la direction de ces établissemens était, le 1 Juillet 1832, débitrice envers divers créanciers d'une somme de fl. 49,627. 43, tant pour fournitures, livrées à crédit, que pour traitemens arriérés, dus à des employés.

En résumé, la dette totale de la Société s'élevait, au 1 Juillet 1832, à fl. 776,021. 41.

La récolte sur pied, au 1 Juillet 1832, pouvait être estimée à fl. 25,000, ce qui porterait l'inventaire à cette époque à fl. 536,250.

En déduisant cette somme du montant de la dette à la même époque, on voit que la Société était, au 1 Juillet 1832, en déficit bien constaté de fl. 254,771. 41.

A côté de ce résultat positif, il serait difficile, si non impossible, de trouver des élémens sur lesquels on pourrait asseoir raisonnablement l'espoir, je ne dirai pas d'un bénéfice futur, mais seulement de l'entière extinction des dettes de la Société.

Cet espoir ne pourrait résulter que de la réduction progressive de la dépense, comparée au nombre des colons; de l'augmentation et de l'amélioration des produits des colonies; de la création de débouchés, etc. Le Tableau qui suit fera voir, par l'expérience du passé, ce que l'on a droit d'attendre, à cet égard, de l'avenir:

 BELGIAN
 POOR COLONIES.

En ajoutant aux fl. 135,405. 81 envoyés aux colonies en 1831, les dépenses faites par la commission permanente à Bruxelles, pour paiement d'appointemens aux employés de l'administration centrale, frais de bureau, assurance contre l'incendie, intérêts à des prêteurs Belges, etc., s'élevant à fl. 9,721. 74,

On aura, pour 1831, un totale de dépenses générales de - - fl.	145,127 55
La recette de la même année a été de - - - - -	82,578 81
De sorte qu'il y a eu un excédant de dépenses de - - fl.	62,548 74

Et remarquez encore, que dans le chiffre des dépenses ne sont compris, ni le paiement des intérêts des emprunts, ni le remboursement d'une partie de ces emprunts, ni les dettes contractées en 1831 pour le service des colonies, vu l'insuffisance des fonds mis à la disposition de la direction.

C'est à cet excédant des dépenses sur les recettes qu'il s'agit de pourvoir, et pour cette année et pour l'avenir.

Aurait-on recours à cet effet aux emprunts? mais cette ressource est plus qu'épuisée; les garanties manquent; le protectorat a disparu; les terres et les bâtimens, les meubles et les immeubles, sont déjà chargés d'une dette qui dépasse de beaucoup leur valeur, et qui va chaque jour en s'accroissant: quelle hypothèque offrirait-on désormais aux prêteurs?

Compte-t-on sur les souscriptions, les dons volontaires des particuliers? mais le nombre des souscripteurs a jusqu'ici été en décroissant*. La foi dans l'œuvre entreprise par la Société a disparu ou s'est refroidie; on réussira difficilement à ranimer l'intérêt du public en faveur d'une institution en décadence.

Espère-t-on peut-être que l'état des colonies deviendra avec le tems de plus en plus prospère, que les nombreux bonniers exploités ou à exploiter finiront par être en plein rapport, et suffiront alors à la nourriture des habitans des colonies qui paieront la Société par leur travail? Mais ce bien-être futur est bien hypothétique; l'expérience qui devrait nous mettre à même de porter un jugement motivé à cet égard nous manque, ou dépose contre des résultats qu'on ne peut nous montrer que dans un avenir éloigné et incertain.

Se reposera-t-on sur le gouvernement du soin de soutenir les colonies? mais les sacrifices qu'il s'impose en faveur de ces établissemens sont déjà bien considérables, eu égard surtout aux faibles avantages qu'il en retire. En effet, en réduisant de moitié le nombre des mendiens qu'il aurait droit d'envoyer à la colonie de répression, aux termes de son contrat, il a diminué les charges de la Société et augmenté d'autant les siennes. Il a continué à payer, en 1831, la somme de fl. 35,000 pour l'entretien de quatre cent soixante-cinq mendiens valides, ce qui fait par tête fl. 78 annuellement, ou près de 22 cents par jour; tandis que les mendiens invalides, qui demeurent oisifs dans les dépôts, ne coûtent au plus que 16 à 17 cents par journée d'entretien. Et en supposant même que le gouvernement consente à accorder un subside additionnel aux établissemens coloniaux, dans aucun cas ce subside ne couvrirait l'excédant très-constaté des dépenses sur les recettes.

Cependant les besoins sont pressans; le deficit est là; il est positif: loin de s'améliorer, la position de la Société deviendra plus critique encore lorsqu'il lui faudra aviser aux moyens de payer les intérêts de sa dette avec l'arriéré dû aux prêteurs Hollandais, et d'effectuer les remboursemens aux termes des engagemens contractés.

L'ancien gouvernement avait bien compris tout ce que cette position avait de fâcheux; aussi, dans l'intérêt de la Société, et plus peut-être encore dans l'intérêt des protecteurs qui avaient garanti les emprunts, avait-il conçu un projet d'extension à donner aux entreprises de la Société, calculé de manière à la mettre à même de faire face, au moins pour un certain tems, à ses nombreuses obligations.

Ce projet consistait à supprimer tous les dépôts de mendicité dans nos provinces, et à en placer la population dans les établissemens coloniaux, en payant chaque année:

fl. 35 00	pour un individu valide.
72 50	- dito - - invalide.
65 00	pour un enfant au dessous de 13 ans.
85 00	pour un aveugle.
15 00	pour l'équipement de chaque individu à son entrée au dépôt de mendicité.

Les dépôts de mendicité ne renfermaient plus guère que des individus invalides; en évaluant leur nombre à trois mille, à raison de fl. 72.50 par tête et par an, la Société aurait reçu, de ce chef seulement, une somme annuelle de fl. 217,500.

Quant aux mendiens valides qui pouvaient encore se trouver dans les dépôts, ils auraient complété le nombre de mille individus, pour lesquels le gouvernement avait déjà contracté avec la Société de Bienfaisance.

Grâce à ce projet, les recettes des établissemens coloniaux devaient s'élever annuellement à fl. 280,500 pour l'admission de quatre mille cinq cents individus, tandis que les dépenses n'auraient pas dépassé fl. 278,125.

Il est vrai de dire cependant que la mise à exécution de ce projet nécessitait un nouvel emprunt de fl. 300,000, ce qui aurait porté la dette des colonies agricoles à près d'un million de florins.

Il serait tout au moins inutile, je pense, de discuter le projet d'extension à donner aux opérations de la Société de Bienfaisance, conçu par l'ancien gouvernement. L'agglomération de toute la population indigente, disséminée aujourd'hui dans les dépôts, aurait été une entreprise, non-seulement onéreuse, mais encore en opposition directe avec le but principal, les règles fondamentales de la charité administrative : soulagement de l'indigence opéré autant que possible sans déplacement des indigens, efforts constans pour rendre les particuliers et les associations locales capables d'exercer la charité sans tutelle, et abdication volontaire de la part du gouvernement le jour où l'émancipation devient possible.

Au mal signalé il importe de trouver un remède plus efficace ; peut-être le rencontrerons-nous, en remontant aux causes qui devaient amener ou tout au moins hâter la décadence des établissemens coloniaux.

Lorsqu'il s'est agi de fonder les colonies, il y avait, ce me semble, de graves questions à soulever et à résoudre avant de prendre à cet égard une décision définitive. Il importait d'examiner si les frais de l'entreprise n'auraient pas dépassé ses bénéfices probables ; s'il n'était pas préférable d'abandonner cette entreprise à l'intérêt, ordinairement mieux entendu, des particuliers ; si les sommes destinées au défrichement des bruyères, à l'aide des bras indigens, ne pouvaient pas recevoir un emploi plus utile, plus favorable à la réforme et à l'émancipation successive de cette même classe indigente.

Ensuite, en admettant que le principe de l'institution des colonies agricoles eût triomphé des objections, il fallait agir avec prudence, avancer lentement pour atteindre plus sûrement le but proposé.

Mais on fut séduit par l'apparence de prospérité des colonies Hollandaises ; on crut pouvoir imiter un essai comme on aurait profité d'une expérience acquise par un succès longuement constaté. L'exploitation fut donc entreprise sur une vaste échelle ; on partagea le terrain, avec une régularité toute géométrique, d'après un plan tracé dans le cabinet, sans aucun égard pour la qualité des terres ; chaque lot des trois bonniers et demi eut sa ferme, et chaque ferme fut construite de la même manière, eut la même dimension, comme si toutes les familles des colons admis devaient justement être composées d'un nombre d'individus proportionné à l'uniformité des habitations.

Le résultat de cette manière de procéder était facile à prévoir ; isolées à l'extrémité d'une province, sans moyens de communication et de transport, les colonies nouvelles durent nécessairement manquer d'engrais suffisans pour une exploitation d'une aussi vaste étendue, et de débouchés pour l'écoulement régulier de leurs produits. Sur un total de mille soixante-douze bonniers de bruyères, il n'y en a encore que trois cent dix mis en culture ; on en a planté deux cent quatre-vingt-neuf en sapins, et les quatre cent quatre-vingt-huit restans sont encore incultes. Plusieurs fermes demeurent inhabitées, soit à cause de la stérilité du terrain sur lequel elles avaient été construites à grands frais, soit à cause du manque de colons. Au 1^{er} Juillet 1832, cinquante-six fermes seulement sur soixante-dix étaient occupées dans la colonie libre N^o 1, et vingt sur cinquante-cinq dans la colonie N^o 2 ; le capital employé à la construction de quarante-neuf fermes reste donc improductif, et décroît chaque année par la détérioration des bâtimens abandonnés.

Quelques familles, égales ou inférieures en nombre, pouvaient, ou par une plus grande aptitude aux travaux des champs, ou par plus d'activité et de zèle, être plus capables d'exploiter une grande ferme que les autres ; la possibilité et l'espoir de passer d'une ferme plus petite à une plus grande eût été un stimulant et une récompense pour toutes les familles. La règle d'uniformité adoptée pour la répartition des lots fut une occasion de calamité pour les colons incapables ou paresseux, et enleva une source puissante d'émulation aux colons plus aptes et plus laborieux.

Mais ces inconvéniens n'étaient rien encore à côté des inconvéniens résultant de l'admission aux colonies de familles qui, arrivant des villes, ignoraient les travaux de l'agriculture, et n'étaient pas habituées à la vie réglée des champs.

Au commencement de l'établissement des colonies libres, chaque famille de colons était indistinctement admise à cultiver les trois bonniers et demi de terre qui entouraient son habitation, et en retirait à son profit la moisson et le fourrage pour la nourriture de deux vaches et des moutons que la Société lui fournissait, lors de son admission dans ses établissemens. Elle fournissait de même tout ce qui pouvait manquer à ces familles, tant pour leurs vêtemens et leur subsistance, que pour la nourriture de leur bétail. Ces avances étaient portées au compte du chef de la famille, et, comme on devait s'y attendre, occasionèrent une dette énorme, qui augmentait chaque jour, et qui eût causé la ruine de la Société, sans même que les grands sacrifices qu'elle faisait pour la prospérité de ses colonies lui donnassent l'espoir d'atteindre la moindre partie du but de ses vues bienfaisantes.

Il résulta donc de l'erreur faite dans le mode d'admission des colons libres, une dépense considérable pour la Société, sans aucun bien-être réel pour les colons : le bétail qui leur était confié périssait faute de soins et de nourriture ; leur terrain était mal cultivé, malgré la surveillance qu'exerçait à cet égard la direction des colonies. Enfin la mécontentement général aurait peut-être causé de grands désordres dans ces établissemens, si la Société ne s'était rendue, en 1828, à l'avis du capitaine Van den Bosch, inspecteur des colonies, en changeant les vices d'administration qu'une expérience chèrement acquise avait fait decouvrir, et en suivant, autant que possible, pour les colonies libres, le système plus avantageux introduit dans la colonie pour la répression de la mendicité.

D'après ce changement, le bétail, dont l'entretien causait particulièrement la dette considérable des colons libres, fut repris par la Société, et placé dans des étables, à des distances calculées de manière à diviser l'engrais nécessaire aux différentes parties de terrain; on employa les colons à la journée, sous les ordres de la direction, pour tous les travaux des champs. Chaque famille de colons libres gagne ainsi de 3 à 7 florins par semaine, et même quelquefois plus, à proportion du nombre des personnes qui composent la famille; la moisson appartient à la Société, et sert à approvisionner ses magasins.

C'est dans ces magasins et dans les boutiques établies par la Société, que les colons se procurent tout ce qui est nécessaire à leur nourriture, à leur habillement, et généralement à tous leurs besoins. Les colons émancipés seuls ne furent pas compris dans la nouvelle organisation, et continuèrent comme auparavant à diriger leurs fermes d'après leurs propres connaissances, à leurs risques et périls. Mais il est à remarquer que les obstacles contre lesquels ils ont à lutter sont tels que plusieurs familles qui avaient obtenu l'émancipation ont été obligées de rentrer sous la direction des colonies; il n'en reste plus que quatre qui jusqu'ici n'ont pas succombé sous le poids de ces obstacles.

Les principaux avantages que l'on a retirés de cette modification, apportée au principe constitutif des colonies libres, consistent en ce que les colons ne font plus de dettes, les terres sont mieux cultivées, et les vaches et les moutons convenablement nourris et entretenus. Mais si, d'une part, on a obtenu ainsi une amélioration relative, de l'autre, la Société s'est mise dans l'impossibilité d'atteindre le but primitif de son institution. En astreignant les familles des colons à se faire journaliers, et à cultiver les terres en commun, pour un temps illimité, on s'est exposé à éteindre chez elles cet esprit d'émulation, cet attachement à la propriété individuelle, ce désir de l'améliorer et de l'embellir, qui seraient nés dans quelques-unes, si l'on avait pu laisser à chaque famille, à son entrée dans la colonie, le soin de cultiver une ferme en propre. Arrivé à la colonie avec l'espoir de devenir fermier et de demeurer indépendant, le colon doit se résigner à rester ouvrier et dépendant; la seule différence qui existe entre sa position et celle du mendiant reclus consiste en ce qu'il demeure en famille, et qu'il fait lui-même son petit ménage, tandis que les mendiants reclus habitent ensemble, et que l'on pourvoit pour eux à leur entretien.

Astreint ainsi à des obligations envers la Société, qui lui enlèvent la presque totalité de sa liberté, sans espoir d'affranchissement pour l'avenir, le sort de l'habitant des colonies dites libres est assez semblable à celui des serfs du moyen âge et des paysans Russes; il est un peu moins avantageux que celui des paysans de l'Irlande, qui, s'ils n'ont souvent, comme lui, que des pommes de terre et du pain grossier pour assouvir leur faim, ont du moins la faculté de pouvoir disposer librement de leurs actions, de se déplacer et d'émigrer, lorsque bon leur semble.

De même que le mode d'exploitation adopté d'abord a nui aux colons, de même aussi la condition actuelle de la population coloniale sera un obstacle permanent à la prospérité des établissements agricoles. Il doit y avoir, là, la même différence qu'ailleurs, entre le travail de l'homme libre et celui de l'esclave; jamais l'exploitation d'une terre en Russie n'équivaudra à l'exploitation d'une ferme Flamande. Avec des travailleurs énervés par le vice et la mendicité, les colonies agricoles ne pourront jamais donner des résultats aussi satisfaisants que ceux que l'on obtiendrait avec des travailleurs exercés, laborieux, qui seraient directement intéressés au succès de leurs travaux.

Certes à des vices aussi nombreux, aussi radicaux, il serait tout au moins présomptueux de vouloir assigner un remède efficace, surtout en conservant aux colonies leur destination actuelle; c'est, je pense, cette destination qu'il faudrait modifier d'abord avant d'introduire les réformes dont l'expérience aura indiqué la nécessité.

Les colonies agricoles sont encore aujourd'hui distinguées, au moins de nom, en colonies libres et colonies forcées. Avant la révolution, la colonie libre était plus spécialement soutenue à l'aide des dons et des souscriptions volontaires, et la colonie forcée à l'aide du subside annuel du gouvernement. Les emprunts pourvoyaient indistinctement aux besoins des deux établissements. Depuis la révolution, le fonds destiné au soutien des colonies est devenu commun; l'allocation de 35,000 florins accordée pour l'entretien de mille mendiants au dépôt est également affectée à l'entretien des colons libres. Je ne vois pas, dès-lors, ce qui pourrait s'opposer à ce que les deux colonies fussent réunies en une seule, sous une même dénomination, avec une administration commune, et courussent les chances d'un même avenir.

Cette réunion faciliterait les moyens de substituer à la règle actuelle pour l'envoi et l'admission des indigens et des mendiants à la colonie, une règle nouvelle, mieux en harmonie avec les intérêts et les besoins véritables de la Société et de la population indigente dont le soulagement fait l'objet de ses efforts.

Il importerait d'abord, je pense, d'aviser aux moyens de renvoyer à leurs communes les colons libres, peu aptes aux travaux agricoles, dont la Société n'a pas de services à attendre, et envers lesquels elle n'est pas liée par un contrat. Sur soixante-seize familles, placées aux colonies libres, douze seulement l'ont été en vertu de contrats; ces douze familles ont jusqu'ici un droit à invoquer, auquel cependant elles peuvent renoncer volontairement, ou que la Société peut racheter avec leur consentement. Quant aux autres, la plupart habitaient des villes où elles exerçaient des métiers qu'elles pourront reprendre, et qui, le plus souvent, leur procureront des moyens d'existence plus abondants que ceux qu'elles possèdent aujourd'hui.

Un septième environ de la population du dépôt est composé d'invalides; ces invalides

coûtent à la Société sans rien lui rapporter; c'est une charge pour elle, au lieu d'un bénéfice; aux termes du contrat de 1823, la Société a droit de les renvoyer; on pourra leur donner asile dans les dépôts provinciaux.

Sous l'ancien gouvernement, tous les mendiants valides pouvaient indistinctement être envoyés à la colonie de répression; mais, en arrachant ainsi ces malheureux au lieu de leur domicile, en les exilant en quelque sorte à l'extrémité du royaume, en les séparant de leurs familles, en les isolant loin de leurs soutiens naturels, on fermait la porte à l'humanité et à la bienfaisance, pour l'ouvrir à l'arbitraire le plus illimité; il s'ensuivait presque toujours pour l'état ou pour les communes une charge onéreuse et perpétuelle, alors qu'une avance modique et temporaire eût remédié beaucoup plus efficacement aux maux que l'on voulait prévenir ou soulager. En effet, on n'a vu que bien rarement, je pense, un mendiant, après avoir été séquestré à la colonie, revenir se placer parmi ses concitoyens, artisan laborieux, homme indépendant. Le plus souvent il n'existe plus pour lui de domicile; ses relations de famille sont rompues ou oubliées, et, s'il obtient sa mise en liberté, c'est en quelque sorte sous la condition de venir se reconstituer reclus, après avoir épuisé en quelques jours la faible somme d'argent qu'il est parvenu à recueillir à l'aide d'un travail de plusieurs mois et même de plusieurs années. Ces considérations ont déterminé le gouvernement actuel à suspendre provisoirement tout transport de mendiants et d'indigens valides des dépôts de mendicité à la colonie de répression.

D'un autre côté plusieurs communes, invoquant l'art. 2 du décret organique du 5 Juillet 1808, relatif aux dépôts de mendicité, qui dit que les mendiants de chaque département doivent être conduits dans le dépôt de mendicité du dit département, ont refusé et refusent encore de payer les frais d'entretien de leurs mendiants reclus à la colonie de Merxplas.

Il est facile de prévoir, d'après ce qui précède, que la population des colonies, au lieu de croître, ira en diminuant. Elle était en 1827 de 1,431 individus; elle n'était plus au 31 Décembre 1831 que de 982; et ce nombre a encore été sensiblement réduit depuis. Après le renvoi des colons libres incurables, des mendiants invalides, et des mendiants valides, dont les communes refuseraient de payer l'entretien, ou dont elles réclameraient le transport dans les dépôts provinciaux, il n'y aura probablement plus assez de bras pour les travaux ordinaires de culture. Comment la Société s'y prendra-t-elle alors pour combler ce déficit et continuer l'exploitation de ses colonies?

Peut-on aussi raisonnablement supposer que le gouvernement se résigne non-seulement à continuer le paiement du subside annuel de 35,000 fl., mais encore à fournir un supplément quelconque pour soutenir un établissement qui ne serait plus désormais d'aucune utilité pour le pays, et pour préserver l'hypothèque de créanciers étrangers?

L'appui du gouvernement, ce me semble, ne peut être accordé aux colonies qu'à la condition d'une modification dans les réglemens et dans le but primitif de la Société; modification de nature à rendre aux établissemens agricoles l'utilité qu'ils ont perdue.

1^o En premier lieu, on pourrait continuer d'y envoyer les mendiants de profession en état de récidive et vagabonds, les individus, en un mot, qui, sans domicile et le plus souvent sans famille, n'auraient rien à perdre, et tout à gagner au contraire à cette sorte de relégation temporaire dans un établissement où l'on s'attacherait particulièrement à leur inculquer les idées d'ordre, les habitudes de travail et d'économie qui seules peuvent les mettre à même d'obtenir un rang dans la Société et de s'y rendre utiles.

2^o On admettrait à la colonie les détenus libérés qui, pour la plupart, poursuivis par le préjugé, repoussés par leurs parens ou par leurs communes, se voient dans la presque impossibilité de pourvoir à leur subsistance d'une manière honorable. En leur ouvrant ainsi un asile temporaire, jusqu'à ce que le souvenir de l'offense et de la punition qui l'a suivie, soit effacé, ou tout au moins affaibli, on tarirait la source la plus fréquente des récidives. Entrés volontairement à la colonie, les détenus libérés y jouiraient de toutes la liberté compatible avec l'ordre institué dans l'établissement. Cette sorte de quarantaine volontaire n'aurait aucun des inconvéniens signalés dans le régime des maisons de refuge, qui ne son effectivement que des prisons déguisées, où le condamné, après avoir déjà subi sa peine, est astreint à une nouvelle captivité.

3^o La colonie offre également toute facilité pour y fonder un établissement dont l'absence se fait vivement sentir aujourd'hui. Ce serait une prison spéciale, ou plutôt une école de réforme pour les jeunes délinquans âgés de moins de dix-huit ans, détenus provisoirement à Saint-Bernard et disséminés dans les autres prisons du royaume. Ils pourraient y recevoir une éducation tout à la fois morale, agricole et manufacturière, de manière à être mis à même, à leur départ de la colonie, d'exercer un état lucratif et de se conduire en bons citoyens.

4^o La colonie pourrait également offrir un asile et préparer une honorable carrière aux enfans trouvés, qui, sans domicile et sans parens connus, peuvent être, sans inconvénient, réunis dans un même établissement, quelle que soit d'ailleurs sa situation.

On peut estimer que l'entretien annuel de chaque enfant trouvé s'élève, à Anvers, à fl. 30; dans le Brabant, à fl. 37; dans les provinces de Namur, Flandre orientale, et Liège, à fl. 38; dans le Hainaut, à fl. 41; dans la Flandre occidentale, à fl. 44; dans le Limbourg, à fl. 56; et dans le Luxembourg, à fl. 58. On paie pour ces enfans, jusqu'à l'âge de douze ans; à partir de cette époque, ils restent ordinairement chez les cultivateurs avec lesquels on a contracté d'abord pour l'entretien de leurs premières années, et qui sont tenus de les entretenir à l'avenir, en retour du bénéfice qu'ils retirent de leur travail: ils reçoivent cependant des vêtemens jusqu'à dix-huit ans, âge de leur émancipation. Environ la moitié des enfans entrés dans les hospices y meurent, et le sixième est réclamé par les parens.

En Hollande, les enfans trouvés, dont l'entretien, à Amsterdam où se trouve le grand hospice, coûtait annuellement 96 fl. par tête, sont admis à la colonie de Veenhuyzen, moyennant une allocation de 45 fl. par enfant et par an ; payable seulement pendant le tems limité de seize années. Par chaque enfant on admet en outre un indigent ou un mendiant gratuitement. Le plus grand nombre des enfans trouvés envoyés à la colonie doit avoir au moins six ans accomplis ; cependant on en admet quelques-uns de deux à six ans. Ces enfans demeurent à la colonie jusqu'à dix-huit ans, époque à laquelle ils entrent dans l'armée, ou choisissent un état.

Les enfans trouvés que l'état jugerait à propos d'envoyer à la colonie, lorsqu'ils seraient en âge d'y rendre des services, devraient pouvoir, ainsi que les jeunes délinquans et les détenus libérés, être compris au nombre des mille individus que le gouvernement est en droit de placer, en vertu du contrat passé en 1823, et pour son subside annuel de 35,000 florins.

Indépendamment des individus que le gouvernement aurait droit d'envoyer à la colonie, la Société pourrait encore y admettre des indigens, des enfans abandonnés, des orphelins, par suite d'arrangemens qu'il lui serait loisible de pendre avec les communes et les établissemens de bienfaisance. Chacune de ces catégories de colons serait astreinte à des réglemens différens ; le traitement et le régime varieraient dans chaque division, et seraient, autant que possible, appropriés aux antécédens et aux besoins actuels des individus qui y seraient compris.

La colonie, ne formant plus désormais qu'une seule exploitation, pourrait être partagée en lots de dix, vingt et trente bonniers, que cultiveraient des agriculteurs libres et capables, sous la direction desquels on placerait un certain nombre de colons. On emploierait de préférence, en qualité de surveillans et de directeurs, les anciens colons libres qui seraient demeurés à l'établissement, et qui seraient reconnus aptes à remplir ces importantes fonctions.

On pourrait aussi donner à ferme, à des cultivateurs des environs, quelques lots de terrains, à charge d'employer pour leur culture les colons de l'établissement.

Pour utiliser les constructions et empêcher la détérioration des bâtimens, on devrait, autant que possible, répartir la population libre de la colonie dans les fermes qui ne seraient pas occupées par les surveillans, les chefs de l'exploitation et les fermiers. Comme en Hollande, on pourrait former des ménages d'enfans trouvés, d'orphelins, etc.

Pour stimuler le zèle des jeunes colons, il serait aussi utile peut-être d'affecter un lot de terrain à l'établissement d'une école d'industrie agricole, comme celle qui existe à Watezen, en Hollande, où l'on admettrait ceux de ces jeunes colons qui se distingueraient par leur aptitude et leur bonne conduite. Dans la petite colonie de Watezen il y a soixante orphelins qui apprennent la théorie de l'agriculture au moyen d'un maître, et la pratiquent en cultivant une ferme de quarante-quatre bonniers, partagés en champs cultivés, en pépinières et en pâturages. Le même maître leur enseigne en outre l'arpentage, l'histoire naturelle, la botanique, les mathématiques, la chimie, l'histoire du pays, leur explique la Bible, et leur fait faire des exercices gymnastiques ; ces orphelins sont destinés à devenir surveillans dans les colonies ordinaires ou libres. Cette colonie gagne à la Société environ 900 fl. par an.

Par suite des modifications introduites dans les statuts et le régime intérieur de l'établissement colonial, il est évident que le gouvernement devrait pouvoir participer à sa direction et exercer une surveillance plus active et plus continue qu'aujourd'hui sur les opérations de la Société. Tout ce qui concerne cette direction et cette surveillance pourrait faire l'objet d'un arrangement à conclure avec la commission permanente de la Société.

Grâce aux mutations introduites dans la population de la colonie, avec des colons jeunes et vigoureux au lieu de reclus éternels, avec un système d'encouragement bien entendu, avec une division et une direction plus rationnelle et plus favorable de l'exploitation agricole, avec l'extension que l'on donnerait certainement à l'industrie manufacturière, de manière à la faire, autant que possible, concourir au bien-être de la colonie et à l'amélioration du sort des colons, on obtiendrait, j'en suis convaincu, des résultats beaucoup plus favorables que ceux que l'on a obtenus jusqu'ici. Alors, mais alors seulement, le gouvernement aurait un intérêt direct à continuer le paiement de l'allocation annuelle de fl. 35,000, et même à accorder au besoin des subsides extraordinaires, proportionnés aux avantages qu'il retirerait de la nouvelle destination donnée à la colonie.

Les détails dans lesquels je suis entré sur l'organisation primitive des établissemens de Wortel et de Merxplas, et sur les moyens de remédier aux vices de cette organisation, étaient indispensables pour bien faire apprécier leur situation actuelle.

L'expérience faite en Belgique exercera probablement quelque influence sur l'exécution du projet formé récemment par le ministre du commerce et des travaux publics en France, pour l'établissement de colonies agricoles dans ce dernier pays.

Cet établissement peut-être envisagé sous un double rapport, sous le rapport économique et sous le rapport moral.

Considérée sous le point de vue économique, la création de colonies agricoles devrait, ce me semble, être abandonnée d'abord à l'intérêt ordinairement bien entendue des particuliers ou de compagnies qui se formeraient dans ce but. L'état, les communes ou les propriétaires qui ne seraient pas eux-mêmes cultivateurs, pourraient céder les terrains à défricher à des colons qui se présenteraient volontairement à cet effet, et qui obtiendraient la jouissance de ces terrains gratuitement, d'abord à charge de les mettre en valeur, puis moyennant une rente proportionnée au produit croissant de l'exploitation. C'est ainsi que les abbayes et les anciens possesseurs de fiefs ont fait défricher jadis d'immenses propriétés.

Sans provoquer directement le défrichement des terres incultes, l'état pourrait néanmoins alléger les charges des cultivateurs, en exemptant ces terres de toute contribution pendant un certain nombre d'années, jusqu'à l'époque de leur entière mise en rapport. Il pourrait aussi ouvrir des communications pour faciliter les transports et créer des débouchés pour l'écoulement des produits des exploitations nouvelles.

Que

Que si, malgré ces encouragemens, les particuliers ni les associations ne jugeaient à propos d'entreprendre des défrichemens, cela pourrait dépendre de plusieurs causes :

De ce que les terrains incultes sont, par leur situation ou leur qualité, hors d'état d'être mis en culture ou de payer l'intérêt des sommes employées aux défrichement ;

De ce que les capitaux trouvent un emploi plus utile, plus lucratif que celui qu'ils recevraient si on les consacrait à exploiter des bruyères ;

Ou bien de ce que la population, à peu près de niveau avec les produits de la terre, ne réclame pas encore impérieusement une augmentation de ces produits.

Dans aucun de ces cas, je ne conseillerais au gouvernement d'entreprendre l'œuvre devant laquelle reculeraient les particuliers et les associations.

Mais il peut arriver que l'ignorance et le préjugé prévalent dans certaines localités sur l'intérêt bien entendu du pays et des propriétaires des terres incultes eux-mêmes ; il peut arriver aussi que le but moral l'emporte sur le but économique, et que l'exploitation de certaines parties de bruyères soit de nature à être considéré moins comme une spéculation que comme une œuvre de bienfaisance ou de politique. Alors, mais alors seulement, le gouvernement peut se croire appelé à intervenir plus directement, et quelquefois même exclusivement, dans l'établissement de colonies agricoles.

Pour que cet établissement, dans ce cas, ait des chances de succès, il est indispensable d'avoir égard aux conditions suivantes :

1^o Les terrains doivent être aussi bien choisis que possible ; il ne faut pas que l'on s'expose, comme en Belgique, à construire des fermes d'exploitation sur une terre tout-à-fait stérile ou bonne tout au plus à être convertie en plantations de sapins et de genêts. Il conviendrait même, avant d'entreprendre des constructions coûteuses, de s'occuper des premiers travaux de défrichement.

2^o Les terrains à défricher doivent être divisés de manière à faciliter autant que possible la culture, et à l'opérer d'une manière économique ; on partagera l'exploitation en fermes de différentes grandeurs, et l'on évitera ainsi les inconvéniens de la division symétrique, qui a été l'une des causes de la décadence de la colonie de Wortel.

3^o On encouragera les colons, en leur offrant l'espoir et les moyens d'améliorer progressivement leur condition : aux uns, on pourra accorder, au bout d'un certain tems, et à certaines conditions, la ferme et même la propriété des terrains qu'ils auront mis en rapport ; aux autres, on inculquera des habitudes d'ordre, de travail, qui contribueront à les faire rentrer dans la société citoyens utiles, ouvriers laborieux.

4^o Pour peupler les colonies, on ne déplacera pas, comme on l'a fait en Belgique, l'indigent qui a une famille, un domicile, pour le transporter à l'extrémité du pays ; on ne transformera pas les colonies en prisons, et les colons en criminels et en esclaves ; on ne fera pas de ces établissemens charitables les auxiliaires et les soutiens de la législation répressive de la mendicité, législation qui viole de la manière la plus monstrueuse le principe sacré de la liberté individuelle. On y admettra de préférence les individus qui, sans domicile actuel, sans famille, n'ont aucun intérêt à résider dans tel endroit plutôt que dans tel autre ; des hommes, des adolescens aptes aux travaux des champs. Elles serviront d'écoles de réforme aux jeunes délinquans, d'asile aux détenus libérés, de lieu de correction et d'épreuve aux mendiens de profession et aux vagabonds, de pension aux enfans trouvés, lorsqu'ils auront atteint l'âge de se rendre utiles. Des colons libres, des surveillans entendus, des cultivateurs auxquels on pourrait donner à ferme certaines parties de l'exploitation, serviront de guides et d'instructeurs à cette population qui, d'ailleurs devisée par catégories, sera dirigée avec ensemble, sans froisser aucun intérêt, vers un même but d'amélioration et de progrès.

ANSWERS to the QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS ; enclosed in Baron de Hocheplé Larpent's Despatch of 21st July 1834.

Antwerp.

VAGRANTS.

1. UNDER the French Government mendicity was extirpated in Belgium by an Act of the National Convention, dated the 24th Vendemiaire, an^o 2, which dispositions have been maintained by later Acts.

There are no vagrants (that may be called such), neither in Antwerp nor in the whole kingdom ; and those that are found begging are arrested as vagabonds, and are prosecuted as such according to the Articles 269 to 282 of the code penal ; and at the expiration of their penalty are conducted to the free colony of repression, if able-bodied and fit for agriculture, or to the depôts of mendicity, if invalid.

By a Royal Arrêté or Act of the 24th March 1824, the foreign vagrants who have not obtained domicile in the country, and received relief there, must, immediately after their arrestation, be sent beyond the frontiers, (as a banishment).

2. The indigent travellers, foreigners or denizens, who pass through Antwerp, are received there at an establishment called St. Julien's Hospital, where they are lodged and boarded for three nights at the expense of the establishment, which provides their wants for the moment.

BELGIUM.

Antwerp.

The foundation of this hospital, which yearly receives about 1,000 individuals, dates from the beginning of the 14th century. It subsists by itself, under the direction of a private charitable administration, by means of some fixed revenues, and also by the liberal donations of philanthropic persons.

The same poor travellers, when Belgians, receive at Antwerp an indemnity of 15 centimes, or 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling per league and per head for travelling expenses to the first town in the neighbourhood, where this relief is continued to them. These travelling expenses are at the charge of the town, and paid out of the municipal funds, in virtue of a Royal Act of the 10th May 1815. The foreign poor travellers are sent to their Consuls to obtain the necessary relief to continue their journey.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders? 2. Or boarded with individuals?—These questions are not at all applicable to Belgium, where soldiers alone are billeted or quartered with the inhabitants in places where no barracks exist to quarter them in.

Necessitous individuals of the labouring and indigent class, who do not attempt to go a begging, and who, for want of work, are without means of providing for the necessities of life, and also the members of their families, are provided for at their own dwellings, by the care of the Bureau de Bienfaisance, by the means or revenues of this establishment, and the subsidies which the town grants it yearly out of the municipal funds, in order to supply what may be necessary to continue its service. The amount of this grant varies annually, according to the real wants of the establishment, by reason of the circumstances that either augment or reduce its expenses.

The succours distributed by this establishment consist in money, bread, potatoes, fuel and clothing, &c.

Besides, there exists at Antwerp, under the direction of the same Bureau de Bienfaisance, a workhouse, where carpets of cow-hair and other articles are made. This workhouse is established especially to procure work to the indigent and working class who are without employ. The population of this establishment varies according to the different seasons and other circumstances. It is most frequented during the winter, when the navigation is interrupted, and the stagnation of several branches of industry cause the number of indigent to augment. Those who come to work in this establishment remain there the whole day, and receive their meals, besides a salary in cash, proportioned to the work they are employed at.

If, through the effects of a hard winter, the wants of the labouring and indigent class are excessive, there are formed at Antwerp private societies for relief, who, by means of donations, collections and voluntary subscriptions, efficaciously assist the unfortunate by distributions of money, food, fuel, &c.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—The dépôts of mendicity in Belgium are instituted by a Décret of 5th July 1808. Every province has its own. The one of the province of Antwerp is situated at Hoogstraeten, in an ancient manor bought for that purpose by the former department administration. It is a spacious establishment of agriculture, possessing a great number of acres of arable, pasture and wood land, and a still greater number of heath, (bruyère) which they cultivate successively to render it productive.

Those individuals who are destitute, and who desire to be admitted in this establishment, are received as free men; the vagrants are brought there by force. Both are employed there at sundry works of agriculture, of manufacture, or in the household establishment, according to their physical strength. The impotent and aged alone are kept without working in a separate place. Besides their food and clothing, those that work earn a salary, of which a part is retained to form a reserve fund, which is paid to them when they leave the establishment. Their sortie, or demission from this place, is granted to them on their demand, whenever they give the positive hopes that, in re-entering society, they will render themselves worthy of their liberty, by diligently endeavouring to gain their own livelihood by honest means, which this administration endeavours, by all means, to inculcate during the time they are in the dépôt.

As the number of individuals admitted (of which the greatest part are invalid or not able to work), is always out of proportion with the resources at the disposal of the dépôt for their maintenance, the additional expenses must be provided for. This additional expense has been covered by the execution of a Royal Arrêté or Act of the 12th October 1819, which orders this extra expense to be charged to the communes where the vagrants have their respective dwelling or domicile. This Domicile de Secours was established by a law of 28 November 1818.

The rate of the maintenance charge is not the same for every dépôt; but by an Arrêté of the Regent, dated 9th April 1831, the maximum rate has been fixed at 17 cents, or 36 centimes, (say 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling) per head and per diem, instead of 15 cents, or about 32 centimes, (3 d. sterling) as it was fixed by the Royal Arrêté of 18th January 1823.

For several years the expense for the maintenance of individuals of the dépôt at Hoogstraeten has not amounted to more than 32 centimes per individual, (or 3 d. sterling).

On the 1st January 1834 the number of persons entertained at the provincial dépôt, on account of the city of Antwerp, was 153. The population of this establishment generally amounts to 250 or 300 individuals, all belonging to the province.

Following

Following the plan adopted in Holland, in the province of Drenthe, a charitable society was formed in Belgium in 1821, to establish a colony of agriculture, with the view to procure to indigent paupers the means of subsistence by their own labour, in rendering heath land (bruyères) productive by cultivation.

This colony has been established on a part of the territory of the communes or villages of Wortel, Merxplas and Ryckevorsel, situated in the district of Turnhout, which belongs to this province.

By means of a loan and a contract passed with the Government, and also by the produce of voluntary contributions, the society bought several thousand acres of heath, constructed a spacious building, as a central establishment, appropriated for the lodging of 1,000 to 1,200 individuals; built two large model farms, and a great number of small farms. It is to this colony that are sent the able-bodied vagrants, to be kept there until they are considered fit to return again into society, and to mix with the general population, gain their livelihood, and employ themselves in agriculture.

The indigent paupers who have maintained a good conduct, and who express their desire to fix themselves permanently in the colony, obtain the use of a small farm, with the land adjoining it, and the necessary instruments to cultivate it. All that the society furnishes to the settlers for their maintenance, such as food, clothing, furniture, utensils, &c., is considered as an advance made to them, and becomes their property, after having repaid, by their work, the amount of it, which payments are made from time to time at their convenience. They have only the use or occupation of the land and farm, buildings, &c., which they cultivate as tenants, the whole remaining the property of the society.

In this colony the maintenance expense amounts to 35 florins, or 73 fr. 07 c., (2 l. 18 s. 4 d. sterling) per year and per head. These expenses are at the charge of the towns or villages where the individuals have their Domicile de Secours.

4. Do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms? 5. Is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves? 6. Is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works? 7. Are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families?—These questions are not applicable to Belgium, or at least not to the province of Antwerp.

Those persons who have a trade at their own dwelling, and who actively attend the work which is procured to them, such as weavers, cotton-spinners, lace-makers, (dentellières), &c., are relieved by the Bureau de Bienfaisance, if the produce of their work is found insufficient to enable them to entertain their families. It is the same rule with regard to individuals who are without work, and who cannot procure any work, either direct or indirect.

The distributions of relief, in money, fuel, &c., are always proportioned to the real wants of each household.

As to those who neglect to procure themselves work, or who will not work, although they have the opportunity of gaining sufficient money to procure themselves honestly the necessities of life, it would be encouraging idleness and all the vices it engenders, if relief was allowed to such individuals. Such persons are consequently few in number, because, for want of relief from any institution, they have no other means of living than by mendicity, vagabondage or stealing; and these offences soon conduct them, either to the depôt of mendicity, to the colony of agriculture, or a prison, three places where they never like to go to.

8. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—The children of the working class or indigent are received, without any distinction, in the public schools established gratis. Those children abandoned to the public charity, or of whom the parents are entirely unable to bring them up, and who request to be relieved of them from inability to maintain them, are sent to a hospital established for that purpose, or else placed in the country under the direction of the civil hospital, or the Bureau de Bienfaisance.

There exist at Antwerp three public schools for the poor, of which all the expenses are borne by the town. There are several others especially appointed for the instruction of girls of indigent parents, administered by a private society of ladies, who, by their liberal donations, provide for the expenses of these institutions.

There also exists in Belgium a great number of foundations of bourses d'étude, instituted by charitable persons in favour of young men who desire to study, (confined either to their relations or to natives of their place of birth), and for whom the parents have not the necessary means to provide for the expense of their study or education. These bourses, or purses, are given by the administrators or collectors of foundations for classical learning, or for medical study, or to study in law or theology, according to the special destination given by every founder.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—According to the law in force in Belgium no one is obliged to assist or succour a member of his family or relation, whatever may be their degree of relationship. But what the law does not enforce, humanity and charity supply; and it is very uncommon in Belgium to see a person who possesses fortune remain insensible to the distress and privations of a near relation, become unfortunate and destitute by the effects of accidents entirely independent of his will, which he could not prevent. This case is quite the reverse with parents in regard to their children, even the illegitimate, as will be explained further.

10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—This article is not applicable to Belgium, and especially to the city of Antwerp.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence? 2. Is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes? 3. Are they boarded with individuals? 4. Are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—There are at Antwerp 26 private hospitals, founded and established for many centuries by charitable persons in favour of a stated number of aged persons, of both sexes, and of decent and respectable families; but in preference for members of the founders' family, and which persons, without being entirely destitute, have, notwithstanding, no sufficient means to provide for their subsistence. Those persons inhabit a small house in the hospital, where they keep their own household separately, and subsist by what they can earn personally by any hand-work, and by the weekly succour which they receive from the revenue of the foundation. These men and women reside in separate hospitals.

Destitute persons, of both sexes, who are impotent through age, but have not claims to be admitted into the before-mentioned private hospital, are maintained by the administrations of the poor, the sick, incurable and impotents, in the civil hospital, and the others in the country, where they are boarded with the farmers at the expenses of the public establishment of charity; that is to say, of the administration of the civil hospitals and Bureau de Bienfaisance. Besides, there is at Antwerp a special establishment as a refuge to the impotent through age, of decent and respectable families, who are without means of procuring a livelihood. This establishment is administered by a private society of christian charity, which provides for all the expenses of the institution, by donations and by private collections and gifts.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—See the negative Answer to Question No. 9, of DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

SICK.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—In Belgium every town has its civil hospital for the maintenance of destitute sick. That of Antwerp is open to all the unfortunate, without distinction, whenever their social position does not afford them the means of being attended by a physician at their dwellings, who are deemed proper objects for admission.

Are also admitted, in a private room in this hospital, (upon payment of a small daily retribution), all individuals who, although not entirely destitute, prefer to be treated in the hospital rather than at their own houses; such as men and female servants, who are commonly sent there by the persons who have them in their employ.

Indigent persons, born at Antwerp, are treated at the hospital at the expense of the establishment. Those who are not of the town, but are of the country, are treated there at the expense of the commune (town or village), where they have their Domicile de Secour (where they reside, and are relieved by the authorities.)

These expenses are fixed at the rate of 62 cents, or 1 franc 31 centimes (1 s. 0½ d. sterling) per diem, whatever may be the sickness. The expenses, for the treatment of foreigners, who have no residence of relief (Domicile de Secour) in the country, are repaid by government out of the treasury funds. The town provides for the insufficiency of the private revenue of this establishment, in the same manner as it does for the Bureau de Bienfaisance, by means of "subsidies in aid," paid out of the municipal funds. This amount of "subsidies" varies annually according to the wants of the administration of the hospital.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—Persons of the indigent and necessitous class, whose sickness or complaint is not severe enough to require their entering the hospital, receive medical and surgical relief at their own homes. To that effect, there are several physicians and surgeons appointed and attached to the Bureau de Bienfaisance, who give their assistance to the sick who require it, every one in the district or section for which he is appointed. These physicians and surgeons, who receive a fixed salary from the administration of the poor, also receive at their domicile, at fixed hours of the day, indigent persons who want to consult them on the state of their health; and it is on a ticket delivered by them, that such sick persons are received at the civil hospital. The Bureau de Bienfaisance also has a special pharmacy, situated in the centre of the town, where medicine is given gratis to the indigent, on a prescription signed by a physician of the poor establishment.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—As it is already explained in the Answer to No. 1, concerning Destitute Able-bodied. The administration or direction of the Bureau de Bienfaisance procures to the indigent at their dwelling all the relief their situation requires. Besides, charitable persons contribute by their donations to alleviate the sufferings of these unhappy persons.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There is a special room at the civil hospital appointed appointed and established for the women in child-bed. Women of the indigent and needy class, who desire it, are admitted in this place to be delivered at the expense of the establishment, if they belong to the town.

Those women that do not belong to the town, and the unmarried women, are also admitted there, but if they have the means to pay, they contribute the expense of their lying-in to the administration of the hospital; if not, these expenses, which are fixed at the rate of 25 florins, or 52 fr. 91 c. (2*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* sterling), for the whole time of their stay in the hospital, are respectively charged to the towns or villages where they are domiciled for relief.

Those indigent and needy classes of women who lie-in in their houses, are attended there by the physicians and surgeons appointed for the poor, and of the administration of the Bureau de Bienfaisance, and receive all the relief which their situation requires. Besides, a private society of motherhood, composed of respectable and charitable ladies of this town, procures to the indigent women in child-bed special relief and care.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—As to what regards the indigent sick, this article is already answered by the above Answers to Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. And as to the rich, there exists at Antwerp, and in the other principal towns of Belgium, a private religious institution of Black Nuns or Grey Nuns, of which the members consecrate their lives and existence in attending the sick at their homes, provided they receive their meals and a retribution per diem, which is paid to the community or convent. These nuns attend the sick of both sexes. There are also some men, old members of a religious association, called Frères Cérites, who also devote themselves to attend the sick men; but these friars are become few in number, by the suppression of their religious order in the time of the French domination.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate, Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

By the Articles 762 and 763 of this code, it being stated that children born in adultery, or from incestuous connexion, have a right to their food, which is fixed according to the means of the father and mother, and the number and quality of the legitimate heirs; so much the more the father and mother of an illegitimate child are bound to provide it with food and maintenance, at least until it is able to provide for itself.

But the fathers and mothers of illegitimate children who have the means, are commonly not those persons who abandon them to the public charity. If the mother has not the means, the father, if he has any resource, furnishes mostly the subsistence for the child; whereas the mother, even when she is abandoned by the father, takes care of her child if she only has the least resource, and her misconduct has not already extinguished in her all the feelings of nature.

These observations apply to fathers of illegitimate children who have acknowledged the paternity. But by the law, the woman alone is held responsible for their maintenance, as a woman cannot swear a bastard to a man as in England.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—There is no law in Belgium that compels the relatives of the father or mother of such children to contribute to their maintenance.

Whereas it is impossible to verify the legitimacy or illegitimacy of foundlings; those abandoned to the public charity in Belgium are divided into two classes, foundlings and abandoned children. The foundlings are those who have been deserted, and whose parents are unknown, or those that are abandoned by unmarried women (Filles Mères), and the abandoned children are those who have been abandoned by their parents, in whom extreme misery has eradicated the feelings of nature.

In this last class are also included the children abandoned to the public charity through the death of their indigent parents.

The articles 347 and 353 of the Code Penal (Criminal Code) inflict severe punishment against those who expose or desert children.

There are several laws (Arrêtés and Décrets) concerning the administration of foundlings and abandoned children.

The special Décret of 19 July 1811, forms the last legislation on this important head.

By this Décret, and former resolutions which are still in force in Belgium, this service is entrusted to the care of the administration of the civil hospitals.

These young children are boarded and entertained in a private hospital until their age admits of their being placed with the farmers or artisans.

At the time when this country was under the French government, the male children that had reached their 12th year, and who were able to serve, were to be placed at the disposal of the minister of the marine. This regulation is not executed in Belgium at present.

At Antwerp, all these children, without distinction of class, are placed as much as possible in the country, where the amount of their boarding decreases every year, as they become more or less useful to those with whom they are placed, and the administration of the hospital continues to provide them with clothing.

At the age of 16, the children who are able to provide for themselves are emancipated and dismissed by the administration of the hospital, who provide them with an employment as servants, &c. either with the same farmer with whom they boarded, or in some other town or village.

As long as the children are under the control of the hospital, the said administration keeps a strict and active inspection over them. A special inspector is appointed to ascertain, by his own experience, that the persons with whom such children are placed treat them with all the regard that their unfortunate situation requires, and that they are in want of nothing which is deemed necessary.

As to the impotent and disabled, who cannot be placed as before mentioned, and who are by their infirmities unable to provide for themselves, those continue to be maintained by the hospital.

The foundlings or abandoned children who are claimed by their father or mother are delivered up to them whenever they prove the identity. If the parents have the means, they reimburse the expenses of maintenance to this establishment; if they have not the means, they are given up to them gratis.

The expenses incurred for foundlings and abandoned children, whose parents are known to reside elsewhere than at Antwerp, are brought in account to the commune (town or village), where they have their Domicile de Secours, according to the law of 28th November 1818, and the Royal Act of the 1st August 1823.

The expenses of maintenance of abandoned children, whose parents are known to belong to the city of Antwerp, remain at the charge of the town. It is the same case with the foundlings whose parents are unknown, except that the town receives for this last class a "subsidy" in aid on the provincial funds, in virtue of a Royal Act of the 27th June 1823.

On the 1st January 1823, the number of abandoned children and foundlings entrusted to the care of the administration of the civil hospital at Antwerp, was - - - 1,250

Every large town of Belgium has its hospital for foundlings and abandoned children. In the province of Antwerp there are only two establishments of that kind, one at Antwerp and one at Malines. In this last town the number of foundlings and abandoned children is much smaller than at Antwerp. In all the other towns and villages the maintenance of those children, which are very few in number, is entrusted to the care of the administrations of the Bureaux de Bienfaisance, who also place them with the farmers.

The orphans of genteel families, but without means, are placed in two private hospitals, one for the boys and one for girls. Those hospitals are ancient foundations, but of which the revenues are far from being sufficient to balance the expenses incurred by the number of orphans which they receive. The town grants supplies to it by a general subsidy in favour of the administration of the civil hospitals, which has the direction of it.

As soon as their age allows it, they are placed in apprenticeship with artisans of the town. They are lodged and boarded in the hospital; some of the eldest are especially appointed to attend burials; they carry the corpses from the houses to the church and from thence to the burial ground. This transport is done upon the payment of a tax, which profits the establishment, except a portion which the men receive. Besides, in the same hospital where the boys reside there is a general bakehouse established, which furnishes all the bread which is necessary for all the poor establishments, and which answers very well.

The girls learn in their hospital all the works which their sex require, such as sewing, knitting, &c. This establishment takes in needle-work, &c. for private account, of the produce of which the establishment benefits. All that these girls can earn thus by extra work, after the regular hours fixed for their day's work, is their private property, wherewith they form a purse or fund for themselves.

The

The children of both these establishments remain there until they can be conveniently placed, or that they are found able to gain their existence.

Besides these two hospitals, there exists at Antwerp a private foundation, under the name of Terninck's School.

This establishment, entirely independent of the administration of the poor, is administered by a special direction in conformity with the will of the founder.

This establishment is rich, and principally founded for the education and maintenance of girls, of whom the parents are, by misfortunes and unforeseen accidents, deprived of the means of giving their children a good education.

CRIPPLES.

The indigent cripples whom their infirmities render unable to provide for their subsistence, are assimilated to the impotent through age, &c., and treated in the same manner, as heretofore explained.

DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

There is no special establishment at Antwerp for deaf and dumb, nor blind. The unfortunate individuals of this class, especially the blind, are maintained by the administration of the civil hospital, or of the "Bureau de Bienfaisance," if they are indigent and left to themselves. If they reside with their parents, and these have not the means to provide for them, the Bureau de Bienfaisance allows relief.

At Ghent, there are two establishments for the education of the deaf and dumb; the one for boys, which is administered by a religious laïque association of Friars of the Christian Charity, and the other for the girls is governed by nuns, called Sœurs de Charité. These institutions, which exist since a few years, do not possess means enough to allow them to receive gratis children that are deaf and dumb, and those children are only admitted (very few excepted) by paying a yearly pension for their boarding, &c., which is at the charge of the parents, or the administrations of public charity that place them there.

There exists in Belgium no special institution for the blind.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

In Belgium, no distinction is made between idiots and lunatics. All the unfortunate individuals attacked by derangement are denominated senseless whenever they are entrusted to the administration of the poor.

In Belgium every town of some importance has its hospital for the senseless.

At Antwerp the senseless may be ranged into three distinct classes:

1. Those who possess personally more or less fortune, or of whom the parents are wealthy, are generally placed in boarding, &c. in a private institution, administered by persons who were formerly friars, named Frères Cérites, who have always taken charge and boarded, &c. the idiots, senseless and mad, upon a yearly or monthly payment, fixed by private agreement.

2. Those that only possess little property or means are commonly placed, upon their own account or that of their parents, in the village of Gheel, a large village situated in the district of Turnhout, where, since time immemorial, the greatest part of the inhabitants receive in board the unfortunate senseless which are entrusted to their care.

There the senseless enjoy all the liberty that can prudently be allowed to them. They are perfectly subdued, and acquire manners that very often cause them to be considered as members of the family with whom they reside.

3. Those that have no means, the indigent and needy, and especially the foreign individuals, are admitted at the hospital of the senseless, under the care of the administration of the civil hospitals.

The foregoing explanation concerning the mode of reimbursement of the expenses for maintenance of the persons admitted in the civil hospital, is also applicable to the hospital for the senseless, where the unfortunate who belong to the town of Antwerp are entertained at the expense of the establishment, and the others at the expense of the town or village where they have their Domicile de Secours, established by the law of the 28th November 1818.

On the 1st January 1832, there were in the Hospital of the Senseless, and in the establishment of the Frères Cérites, 189 individuals; 88 men and 101 women. The number of those pensioned at the Frères Cérites was 13.

Out of the number of 185, there on the 1st January 1831, 37 left the place cured; 14 men and 23 women.

Of the 189, who were there on the 1st January 1832, 59 were considered curable, and 130 as incurable; 98 of them were of a quiet conduct, and 91 more or less furious or mad.

The causes of the loss of sense of these 189 individuals were; viz.

- 37 hereditary, or by birth.
- 6 by the effects of severe illness.
- 5 the effects of old age.
- 2 by debauchery.
- 3 through drunkenness.
- 2 by the effects of political disturbance.
- 6 through religious "fanaticism."
- 6 through the effects of family grievances.
- 1 by the loss of fortune.
- 3 through ambition; and
- 118 of whom the real causes were unknown.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

BELGIUM.

Antwerp.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,—1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—The indigent persons relieved by the “Bureau de Bienfaisance” receive only the strict necessities of life to feed and support their families, and no more, so that they have nothing to satisfy their private wants or fancies, nor can they procure themselves any luxuries or other comforts; and they always lead a life, that, although protected against the most pressing wants, is notwithstanding a very miserable one. It is thus the interest of those individuals that are able to work, (and this they perfectly comprehend), to seek to maintain themselves. It is only those persons who are totally depraved, and who give themselves entirely up to drunkenness and every other excess, who feel assured that, after having wasted and spent the little they possess, and abandoned the work that maintained them, there always remains to them the resource of the distributions made by the administration of the poor.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible?—(See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law “Extracts.”)—In Belgium, and especially at Antwerp, the situation of a workman, whatever may be the class he belongs to, and who maintains himself solely by his work, is by all means preferable and better than that of a person who only subsists by relief or public charity. The existence of those who reside in the depôts of mendicity and at the Charity Colony of Agriculture, excepting only the loss of their liberty, is even in many respects preferable to the situation of the latter, who are maintained by general charity.

LABOURERS, &c.

Boom.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—In the commune of Boom, a parish in the district of Contich, province of Antwerp, there are three sorts of workmen: 1°. Those that make bricks; 2°. Those employed with the farmers; 3°. Watermen. The salary of a brickmaker in summer (without his food) is 275 francs, or 10*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, and in the winter 90 francs, or 3*l.* 10*s.* 10½*d.*, or 14*l.* 7*s.* 6½*d.* a year. The salary of a workman employed with the farmers, receiving his food, is, in summer, 120 francs (4*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*), and in the winter 50 francs (1*l.* 19*s.* 4½*d.*), or 6*l.* 13*s.* 10½*d.* a year. The watermen navigating on the interior waters are paid by the week, at the rate of 7 fr. 25 c. (5*s.* 8¾*d.*) besides their food. During the winter season they are without employ several months.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is uncommon in this country, and is only employed by shoe and boot makers.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A labourer might gain per year 350 francs (13*l.* 15*s.* 7½*d.*) if he works daily summer and winter.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—The greatest part of the workmen or labourers have no other expenses but for their food, house-rent, and clothing, &c. Their children being instructed gratis in public schools established to that effect.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—At Boom, where several brick manufactures exist, women and children are employed in loading or unloading bricks, wood and other articles, by transporting them with wheelbarrows, and are also employed at other works.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—The women who are employed in the brick manufactures as aforesaid, gain in summer 4 francs (3*s.* 1¾*d.*) per week; and children of 16 years of age, employed as labourers, gain in summer at least 3 fr. 50 c. (2*s.* 9½*d.*) per week. In the winter they are very seldom employed.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A woman employed with her children as aforesaid, and working, with her son, aged 14 years, can gain 250 fr. per annum (9*l.* 16*s.* 10½*d.*)

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—Such family can subsist by their earnings only with bread, potatoes and milk.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—A careful family, the members of which are daily employed, may easily lay by 25 cents (2¾*d.*) per day; this is, however, very seldom case with the working class, who very often spend more than they gain, and thereby contract debts.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—There are labourers' habitations to which no land is annexed, others have five to six verges. But the greatest part of the labourers hire land separated from their habitation, which they cultivate for their own use, and which consists of 30 or 40 verges decimal or metrique système.*

11. What

* A verge is the four-hundredth part of a bonnier; a bonnier is equal to 2 $\frac{45}{100}$ English acres. Forty verges are about a quarter of an acre.

Boom.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The usual owners of labourers' habitations are master brickmakers and other traders of the burger class (classe bourgeoise).

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—The rent of a labourer's habitation is from 40 fr. to 50 fr. (1 l. 11 s. 6 d. to 1 l. 19 s. 4 ½ d.) per year, and the price on sale from 600 fr. to 700 fr. (23 l. 12 s. 6 d. to 27 l. 11 s. 3 d.)

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—The quantity of land let to labourers is from 30 to 40 verges (¼ of an acre), as mentioned in answer No. 10; and the yearly rent of it is 60 c. to 65 c. per verge, (say 5 ½ d. to 6 d.); about 4 l. an acre.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The population of the commune of Boom is 6,500 individuals; in the year 1833, the deaths amounted to 186, so that the proportion of deaths, compared to the whole population, is 35 on 1,000 individuals, or 1 in 28 5/10.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—In the same commune the births in 1833 were 234, so that the proportion is 28 on 1,000 individuals, or 1 in 36.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The annual marriages in the same commune are about 40, so that the proportion is about 10 or 11 in 1,000 individuals, or 1 in 95 2/10.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—The average number of children to a marriage is five.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—In the above-named commune of Boom, in 1833, the births were 234, of which 10 only were illegitimate, so the proportion of legitimate births to illegitimate is 21 to 1.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—The number of children that died before the end of their first year is 47, in the year 1833, so that the proportion to the whole population is the fifth child.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—In the same proportion, 85 children died before their 10th year, or 1 in 17.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—In the same proportion, 93 died before their 18th year, or 1 in 18 6/10.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—The men marry generally at the age of 26 to 30, and women at the age of 20 to 25.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—The causes of delay of marriage are generally the bad result of business, which renders the situation of a family unfavourable.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—The savings of unmarried persons may amount to 30 centimes per day (3 ¼ d.); and that of married persons 25 centimes (2 ½ d.)

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—The savings are generally placed on annuities, on mandates or obligations, in the Caisse d'Epargne.

Further answer to questions 14, &c.—By the last vérification made in 1829, the population of the city of Antwerp and its suburbs was 73,233 individuals.

The years 1830, 1831 and 1832, cannot be taken for comparison, on account of the political events of which the town has been the theatre, and the ravages of the cholera.

This is the result of the "Statements" of the Population-office for the year 1833.

Antwerp.

BIRTHS:

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Legitimate children - - - - -	916	901	1,817
Legitimated bastards - - - - -	52	36	88
Illegitimate children - - - - -	113	135	248

Dead born - - - - -	98	82	180
Total - - - - -	1,210	1,195	2,405 or 1 in 30 4/10
Deaths (including 160 deaths known to be the effects of the cholera) - - - - -	1,160	990	2,150 or 1 in 34
The births have exceeded the deaths - - - - -	50	205	255

The number of marriages has been 520.
The results of this Statement are, that the proportion of deaths, compared to the whole population of 73,000 individuals, has been about 3 per cent., taking the average amount.
That of the births, taken the same way, a little more than 3 ½ per cent.
That of marriages, ditto, about 7 per 1,000.
That of legitimate children, in comparison with legitimated bastards, illegitimate children and foundlings, have been about one illegitimate child on five legitimate, including as legitimate the dead born.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent, and under what form, does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Mendicity is considered in Flanders as an offence. The number of vagrants, who are punished as such, is commonly 150 in both the Flanders, or one for 8,000 inhabitants.

The "Code penal" considers mendicity as an offence, and it is punished with from one to six months' imprisonment (Art. 269 and following). The same penalty is extended towards vagrants and common beggars.

When a beggar leaves his parish, pretends to any infirmity, disguises himself or carries arms, special punishments are inflicted on him, after which he is put at the disposal of the government (Art. 282.)

This law is common both to Belgium and France; but its severity has been mitigated by the mild character of the people of Flanders.

Thus the old, the impotent, the cripple, &c. &c., are by a common consent or feeling of compassion towards them, excepted from this law of the Code, and are never imprisoned.

The churches also offer a privileged asylum to the destitute, who do not fail to claim the charity of the pious. The tribunals have cleared the country of the able-bodied destitute and the vagrants, and it is only in particular hard seasons or times of calamity that they are still to be found.

Much care is also taken to provide well for able-bodied destitute under confinement; with the exception of his not being allowed to leave at pleasure, the prisoner is at liberty to work, with the necessary means provided, for whatever business he can follow. The gain of his industry is left for his own benefit (see Answer 3 on Destitute Able-bodied.)

It is difficult to ascertain the exact number of mendicants in the two Flanders, from the interruption of employment during the winter months; but the nearest calculation brings it to about 600, which is one mendicant to every 2,000 of the population.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—Every pauper going to his native place, or from thence to another point, on reasonable causes, as inheritances, lawsuits, &c. (but not to seek work, which is merely considered as a loose pretext), is entitled to relief of 15 centimes per French league (one halfpenny per mile), and every parish situated on his way pays it. The foreign pauper returning to his country is entitled to the same favour; but this is often evaded.

Some abuse is the result of this mode of relief. The destitute often make business a pretext for travelling during the fine season at the public expense, by which means they gain fr. 1. c. 50 (1 s. 2 d.) per day.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders? 2. Are they boarded with individuals?—The only legal mode of lodging the destitute able-bodied is to send them to the depôt of mendicity, where they are treated as paupers. There existed formerly agricultural colonies, on the same principles as those in Holland, to which the parishes could send their able-bodied destitute and their families; it was found in vain to attempt making cultivators or proprietors of them.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—The depôt of mendicity, which receives also the able-bodied destitute, is a workhouse, where they are entirely maintained for 32 centimes (3 d.) per day, which is paid by the parish to which the pauper belongs; when they work they earn money.

The destitute able-bodied, but quite indigent, of the two Flanders, and the vagrants who have been tried as such, compose altogether a population of about 300 persons (the destitute able-bodied of Ghent excepted). For each of these 300 poor, his parish pays a contribution of 32 centimes (3 d.) per day (men and women equally). They are collected together at the depôt of mendicity, a kind of workhouse established by Napoléon in 1808, and which at its origin was dreaded by the poor on account of the ill-treatment they received there. Even at this moment, a similar establishment situated at Brussels is so dreaded, that the poor will commit robbery to be sent in preference to the common gaol. The depôt for both the Flanders established at Bruges has gradually overcome this dread by the mildness of its administration. The directors have banished all rigour, not even enforcing work on the destitute; but as they are paid according to their industry, that inducement to work is found sufficient. This establishment is remarkably prosperous, having already saved fr. 80,000 (3,200 l.), all expenses paid. It is not found necessary to have any armed force in the neighbourhood to keep this large number of destitute in order, this being attained by gentleness and good usage. On any of the poor leaving the establishment, improved in their moral conduct, they receive a part of their own earnings, which enables them to seek some employment.

Besides this dépôt, there is at Ghent a workhouse where employment is given to the destitute, but without their being maintained. The number of labourers in this establishment, which was erected by voluntary subscription, has been as many as 1,900, in time of great distress.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—Every church has its masters of the table of the poor, or distributors of assistance. Such funds proceed from collections made in the church, voluntary alms, and assignments from the “Bureau de Bienfaisance” (see lower). Weekly distributions of bread or fuel, sometimes money or clothing are made.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves? 6. Is work provided for such persons in agriculture or in public works?—The measures intended by the decree of the 24th Vendemiaire, 11th year of the French Republic, never could be put into execution. There are but few parishes where it has been tried to give out flax to be hackled, spun or twisted, to the poor, who return it transformed into linen.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations, are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—Every parish is to assist its own poor; and the administration of this assistance is entrusted to the most respectable inhabitants, who take this charge gratuitously. They form a committee of five persons in the country, and seven persons in the towns, which is called “Bureau de Bienfaisance.” These bureaux distribute assistance in proportion to the wants of their poor; but this assistance is generally discontinued in the summer months, on account of the abundance of work during that season. In the towns the relief consists principally in money (about 32 centimes per man and per day, or 3*d.* sterling). In the country the rule is not to give money, but assistance in kind.

A general law is expected, as the preceding one has been abolished since the Revolution; but when public instruction was first organized, the masters of public schools being pensioned by their respective parishes, were obliged to instruct gratuitously the children of the destitute of their parish. This is only done here and there at present; but there are still some municipal or particular gratuitous schools, where children are given clothes as prizes for well receiving instruction. There are also schools for girls where women's works are taught, for which work they are paid; and there are houses where the education of boys is attended to, and from which some of the pupils are put out as apprentices, gratuitously; but, generally, there is felt a want of coercive measures to force the parents to send their children to school, and to allow them to be put out as apprentices.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Ascendants are compelled to feed descendants, and vice versa; (fathers and mothers-in-law are to feed their sons and daughters-in-law, and reciprocally,) but the spirit of the code tends towards nothing special for the poor.

10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—No loans, with one exception, which was made by the national treasury to the parishes during the calamitous year 1817.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—There are almshouses throughout the kingdom, where the impotent through age are maintained and taken care of. These institutions are so far profitable to the parishes, as that it would cost them more money to assist these persons separately. Some have been endowed by deeds of gift, others are supported by the inhabitants of the towns. The number of them is increasing in the country, and most towns are well provided in that respect.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—The assistance afforded is in clothing, bread, fuel twice a week, and 75 centimes in money (7*d.*) every Sunday.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—In places where there are no almshouses their maintenance is publicly adjudicated to the householders who propose the most reasonable terms.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—This is never done; but several parishes and all the towns possess houses which they are allowed to inhabit, when they can live without being under the care of guardians.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—As other subjects. (See Answer 9 on Destitute Able-bodied.)

SICK.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—Some parishes and all the towns have hospitals where the sick are received. These hospitals are managed by the committee for almshouses, an institution equal to the Bureaux de Bienfaisance.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—

3. To what extent and under what regulations, are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—They are provided at home with the necessities by the Bureaux de Bienfaisance. In the hospitals they receive every thing from the committee of the almshouses.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—In each principal town of the province there is a house called Maternité, where women and girls in a state of pregnancy are received; they are elsewhere received under the denomination of sick poor, or they are sent to the almshouses of the towns, where one franc (10d.) per day is paid for them; but the parishes in the country give no assistance to the pregnant unmarried women.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—Formerly every tradesmen's company clubbed to support its sick members; although the tradesmen's companies exist no longer, there are still voluntary associations or fraternities for the same purpose.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The abode of the illegitimate child is the parish of its mother. If the father recognizes it, which is always voluntary and never forced upon him (as forbidden by the code), he is bound to bear a part of its maintenance, according to the decision of the court. But when the father himself is poor, the child falls exclusively on its mother and her parish.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—The relatives are in no way compelled to maintain bastards.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—As other destitute children, and at the expense of the parish of their mothers.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they taken into establishments for their reception? 5. Are they billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Are they boarded with individuals?—The bureaux de bienfaisance of the parishes take charge of all orphans, deserted children and foundlings; (these latter are at first received in a special establishment in the principal town of every province, where care is taken to provide them with necessities.) There is no appropriated institution exclusively for bringing them up, nor are they quartered on householders, but their maintenance is publicly adjudicated, as in No. 3, of Impotent through Age.

The maintenance and apprenticeship of a child in the country, costs in the north about 90 francs (3*l.* 12*s.*) a year. In Bruges the average cost on three years has been only half that sum. In the south of the province it is still something less. The same children brought up in almshouses would cost 200 francs (8*l.*), and mortality would be double.

7. Are their relatives compelled to support them?—As other subjects.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?—There exists in Ghent only, for both the Flanders, an establishment for the instruction of the deaf and dumb, and blind; they are treated elsewhere as other impotent. The cripples are nowhere the object of a special institution.

2. Are they billeted or quartered on householders?—Does not take place.

3. Are they boarded with individuals?—Their maintenance is publicly adjudicated when their infirmities do not require them to reside in an almshouse.

4. Are their relatives compelled to support them?—As other subjects.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?—There is in West Flanders a central establishment, where all the destitute idiots and lunatics are admitted on the payment of 300 francs a year (12*l.*) by their parish. A similar establishment exists in East Flanders. Idiots and lunatics not destitute are equally received in these establishments, and there are in both the Flanders several other asylums for them.

2. Are

2. Are they billeted or quartered on householders?—Does not take place.
3. Are they boarded with individuals?—Their maintenance was formerly adjudicated, but is now no longer; they are now too often left to the charge of distant relatives, and allowed to be neglected.
4. Are their relatives compelled to support them?—As other subjects.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any and what effect,

1st. On the industry of the labourers?—The receipt of relief, especially in the towns, propagates idleness amongst labourers, and the only mode of remedy would be to take charge of the children and not to allow them to be brought up by the poor themselves.

2d. On their frugality?—Relief is nowhere so abundant as to affect their frugality, save in the cases which will be hereafter mentioned.

3d. On the age at which they marry?—Early marriages are encouraged by the certainty of relief, in case of want.

4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—Although the public relief causes mutual help to be less necessary, yet its bad effects are more than balanced by a strong religious principle which induces mutual assistance.

5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter as to food and freedom from labour more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—There exists between the self-supporting labourers and the persons subsisting exclusively on alms or public charity, a very numerous intermediate class, consisting of those who live partly on relief and partly on labour, so that the two extremities only of the scale can be compared. An able-bodied but not labouring man receives only about the half what the last of those who do labour and are not assisted would earn; the legal relief being 32 centimes (3d.), and the lowest day's work more than 64 centimes (6d.). As to liberty, nobody is forced to work, not even at the depôt of mendicity; they are only not allowed to go out at will. Food is almost equally distributed, and many destitute poor prefer the depôt to free labour, when they are not sure of being employed every day; but in no other instance.

The grievances which result from this system arise from the neglect, the ignorance or the corruption of the local authorities, and although numerous, they are not very striking.

2dly. Those grievances arise from the want of proper conditions with which lands or houses are bequeathed to the Bureaux de Bienfaisance. Wherever a revenue is bequeathed it is shared equally by the poor, even when they may be beyond need; for instance, a beggar will receive 1 fr. 50 c. (1s. 2d.) per day for her maintenance, which would not have cost more than the fifth part of that sum, if paid by the depôt of mendicity. To obviate this abuse, and to increase the power of useful charity, the revenue of the Bureau de Bienfaisance of each parish should be added to the sum principal of the province when the revenue of the bureau exceeds the wants of its locality. 3dly. Grievances arise from the liberty of parents to neglect their children and allowing them to beg alms for their own benefit. This last appears to be the root of the evil, and the great cause of the augmentation of pauperism in these towns.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—A skilled artisan earns in summer 1 fr. 50 c. to 1 fr. 80 c. per day (1s. 2d. to 1s. 5d.). An unskilled, 75 c. to 1 fr. 20 c. (7d. to 1s.). In winter, the first has 1 fr. 10 c. to 1 fr. 40 c. (10d. to 1s. 2d.); the second, 55 c. to 82 c. (5½d. to 8d.). An agriculturist earns in summer 1 fr. 25 c. (1s.); in winter, 1 fr. 10 c. (10½d.); when boarded, 55 c. (5½d.) is deducted from his wages. Very little difference is made between skilled and unskilled agriculturists. Wages are higher in the strong lands of the north, and lower in the sands of the south of the province.

2. Is piece-work general?—Yes, for certain works, such as threshing corn and digging dikes.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—The man who has only his day's work, and who earns 350 fr. (14l.) is rather above than under the average rate in the country. The skilled artisan (a mason) may reach 500 fr. (20l.) in a town. But it should be observed that most of the labourers in the country have resources besides their wages, either a small piece of land, a weaver's frame, &c. in which they employ their resting hours for their benefit.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—Neither civil nor religious instruction costs anything to this class of people. House-rent, food and clothing are their chief expenses. House-rent varies from 40 to 60 fr. per annum (1l. 12s. to 2l. 8s.) Food is at least 55 c. (5½d.) per day for a man; 45 c. (4½d.) for a woman; and 28 c. (2¾d.) for a child of 10 to 14 years; but they economize by living together. Sixty fr. (2l. 8s.)

Appendix (F.)

for a man's clothing and 40 fr. (1 l. 12 s.) for a woman's, may be considered as the minimum, making together for a man alone about 300 fr. (12 l.) per year; for man and wife 510 fr. (20 l. 8 s.), and 110 fr. (4 l. 8 s.) more per child; yet in the large towns this sum would not be sufficient.

5. Is there any and what employment for women and children?—Women are employed in the towns in making lace, thread, or working in the manufactories; they work per day in the country or spin flax. Children are equally occupied in the country to keep cattle, &c., but occupation is less easy to be got for them in the towns.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—A woman who goes out a day's work in the towns, earns 1 fr. 10 c. (10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.), and is fed besides; or 1 fr. 82 c. (1 s. 5 d.) without food. In the country she earns in summer 91 c. per day (8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.), and in winter 82 c. (7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.) without food, or 45 c. (4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.), and 36 c. (3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.) being fed. Children of 11 years may earn their food in the country, besides 15 c. (1 $\frac{1}{4}$ d.) per day, but not in the winter. It is almost impossible to state anything correctly beyond this information. The time of harvest does not increase wages considerably.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years, respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—The wife and the two elder children may expect to earn during the summer their food, and 160 to 180 fr. (6 l. 8 s. to 7 l. 4 s.) The third child may earn its food. Nothing can be specified respecting winter earnings. If, however, the wife and her children can spin or work at home, and that none of them are ill, they may support themselves until the summer without relief. This cannot be the case in towns, excepting those where manufactories are very flourishing.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—It can in the towns, eating only potatoes and rye-bread; the father being an unskilled artisan and the town possessing no manufactories. In the country the same family would consume a little butter, some vegetables, and perhaps sometimes a piece of pork.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Not in the towns. In the country the overplus of the father's earnings beyond his expenditure amounting to about 100 fr. (4 l.), but then it would have a bare existence, and there is scarcely such an instance.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—The sixth part of an acre is about the average quantity, but it varies greatly. Some labourers' habitations may be met with without any land.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—Nothing determinate in this respect. Many labourers' habitations belong to the Bureaux de Bien-faisance, or almshouses. Some labourers in the country rent a small quantity of land and build themselves a cottage of fence, of which the hearth only is in bricks; they enlarge it by degrees, and if prosperous, they make at last a complete house, which is often the case.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—The rent of a labourer's habitation in a town is from 50 to 60 fr. (2 l. to 2 l. 8 s.); in the country, 40 fr. (1 l. 12 s.), including the sixth part of an acre of land. The first may be worth from 800 to 1,000 fr. (32 l. to 40 l.); the second, 500 fr. (20 l.), on account of the deficiencies in the out-lettings and of the continual repairs which are incumbent upon the proprietor.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Land property being divided into very small parts, labourers may easily rent a small piece of land, and most of them do so. They commence by half an acre, and the increase of their culture has no fixed period, several becoming little farmers, and some great farmers; (a farm of 100 acres is considered a large farm in Flanders.) They rent land at prices beyond the power of farmers, and sometimes at 50 per cent. above the current price. They also under-lease from farmers.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population is $2\frac{33}{40}$ to 100, or 1 in $35\frac{4}{10}$.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—The proportion of annual births to the whole population is $3\frac{13}{37}$ to 100, or 1 in 31.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population is $6\frac{33}{40}$ to 1,000, or 1 in $146\frac{5}{10}$.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—The average number of children to a marriage is 4.72.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—The proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births on the whole population is not known. At Ostend the number of legitimate births was 442, and of illegitimate 51, during the year 1833.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year is 175 deaths to 1,000 births, or 1 in $5\frac{7}{10}$.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their tenth year?—The proportion of children that die before the end of their tenth year is 412 deaths to 1,000 births, or 1 in $2\frac{4}{10}$.

21. Before the end of their eighteenth year?—The proportion of children that die before the end of their eighteenth year is 450 deaths to 1,000 births, or 1 in $2\frac{2}{10}$.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—The average age of marriage is for males from 25 to 30 years, and for females from 18 to 22.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—In the towns there are less obstacles to the marriages of the poor than to those of a higher class, where want is more feared. In the country, farmers' sons and those who have the means to become farmers will delay their marriage marriage until they get possession of a farm. Labourers (agriculturists) are sometimes restrained by the want of an habitation, but not so often as in the first case.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—It seldom happens in the towns that artisans do save, although there exists a savings' bank, which has its agents in the principal localities. Servants are the persons who most usually economize; a man-servant may save 100 fr. (4 l.), and a woman-servant 50 fr. (2 l.) per year. It is the opposite in the country, where servants save very little, the cost of their clothing requiring very near all their earnings except 25 fr. (1 l.) But if a servant becomes an artisan he may save 150 fr. (6 l.) However this is a maximum rarely attained.

As to those who are married, they only save what they can earn over their day's work by renting a small quantity of land, by weaving linen, &c.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—The use of savings' banks is but little known to the lower orders, except at Ghent. In the towns few artisans ever expect to become their own masters, but they save against marriage to enable them to possess a house.

The agricultural labourer begins to save on his marriage. All his savings are directed to the increase of a farm, which he often succeeds in acquiring, particularly in the south of the province; but when he succeeds in the north his prospects are better. Thus a labourer, who with a capital of 600 fr. (24 l.) has become the father of five children, has in the space of twelve years raised his capital to 6,000 fr. (240 l.), and already employs two horses. Another in the space of 25 years has become the proprietor of a farm with six horses.

PORTUGAL.

PORTUGAL.

RETURN to the QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS, circulated amongst His Majesty's Consuls.

AS many of the Questions contained in this Paper have little reference to the social condition of Portugal, it is conceived that it will be more clear and satisfactory to condense the replies into one general answer to each separate head of inquiry, embodying in such answer, as far as may be possible, every distinct point on which information is desired.

Although poverty prevails to a great extent in Portugal, still the frugal habits and very limited wants and desires of the lower classes of the population in the northern provinces, prevent mendicity from showing itself in those offensive and distressing forms which it assumes in many other countries. The very limited provision which has been made for the poor by the Government, or by public regulation, throws them on their own resources, and makes them careful and provident. Although, during the late siege of Oporto, we issued at one period gratuitously, from a soup society, upwards of 6,000 rations of soup each day, the number of absolute mendicants who were relieved fell greatly short of 1,000. The remainder of the applicants were principally families reduced to distress by the circumstances of the times, who withdrew their claims so soon as the termination of the blockade opened to them other resources and means of support.

Persons destitute of resources, who may be travelling in search of work or otherwise, can claim no pecuniary relief; but the different religious establishments are in the habit of affording a temporary asylum and succour to strangers. There are also houses of refuge for the poor, called "Misericordias," at various places, which are supported by royal gifts, bequests by will, and private donations.

None but the military can be billeted on private houses; and even this right is now contested by the camara (municipality) of Oporto, as contrary to the constitutional charter. Nor are there any houses of industry for receiving destitute able-bodied, or their families, except at Lisbon, where I understand there are royal manufactories where the poor are employed, as well as at a rope-walk called the Cordoario. The different religious establishments are, as I have already observed, in the habit of affording pecuniary relief, as well as of giving food and medical aid to the destitute of every description; but the political changes, by suppressing some and diminishing the resources of all these establishments, must have greatly reduced this description of charity.

In most towns and large villages there are schools to which the poor may send their children free of expense; but they receive neither food nor clothing, and the instruction is extremely limited. The masters are allowed a small stipend by the Government.

Relatives are forced to aid each other, in the degrees of father, mother, child, brother and sister, in cases of want: for persons impotent through age, there are houses of charity, called "Recolhimentos," in most cities and considerable towns, where a limited number of aged or infirm poor of both sexes are lodged, clothed and fed. These establishments are supported in part by royal gifts, and in part by the different municipalities; but no provision is made for the attendance of the sick poor at their own dwellings, nor are they in any case boarded with individuals, or billeted on private houses; but if they have relatives in the degrees above mentioned, these are bound to assist them, if able to do so.

There are public hospitals in most cities and towns, where the sick poor are received and treated gratis. There are also lying-in hospitals, which receive pregnant women (without inquiring as to their being married or not) without any charge; but I am not aware of the existence of any regulation which obliges the medical officers of these establishments to deliver women at their own dwellings, although this is frequently done voluntarily.

CHILDREN.

A law or decree issued in 1772, imposes equally on both parents the duty of maintaining their children, whether legitimate or illegitimate, where they have the means of doing so; and the parentage in the latter case, if the father can be ascertained or is acknowledged. Brothers and sisters are equally bound to assist each other.

But in cases where the parents either have not the means or want inclination to support their illegitimate child, a ready resource is offered by the "Casas dos Expostos" which exist in most towns. These establishments for foundlings are provided with rodas, or revolving boxes, into which the infant is placed, and is received without inquiry. The practice of thus abandoning infants to be reared by public charity, prevails, I am assured, to a painful extent in Portugal. In many cases they are subsequently claimed; and with a view to identify them, they have generally some particular mark attached to them when placed in the roda. These marks, together with the description of the dress in which they are found, and the date of their reception, are registered at the hospital. They are then put out to nurse with female peasants, who are paid monthly a small sum for the maintenance of the child, on producing it either to the officer at the establishment, or to the juiz de forra of the district in which they reside.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

At Lisbon there is, I understand, an establishment for the reception of the deaf and dumb.

ID10 RS

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

At Lisbon there is an establishment for lunatics, called the Hospital of St. Joseph, where lunatics and idiots are received and supported gratuitously, if without means. Better treatment and greater comforts may be obtained for patients able to pay for the same. This institution is partly supported by the Government, and partly by voluntary contributions, in the same manner as the misericordias in provincial towns.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

The unfortunate state of the country since my first arrival in Portugal, and the very limited view I have been able, in consequence, to take of its social condition, make it impossible for me to offer an opinion as to the effects of its institutions, further than what is stated in the observation I have already made. The greater part of the able-bodied male population has been under arms; and the military service offers a constant resource to such as have no other means of getting employment.

LABOURERS, &c.

Male labourers are paid according to the nature of their work. Those employed in the cultivation of the vine, and in the vintage, are well paid, particularly in the district of the Upper Douro. A male labourer so employed may get from 1s. 8d. to 2s. 6d. per diem, according to circumstances and the demand for labour at the time. In the wine country provisions are furnished to the labourer, but not in cities. Labour in Oporto itself is well paid. Piece-work, as well in the cultivation of the soil as in buildings, &c., is very common.

Women and children are very generally employed in the north of Portugal, in all the occupations which the state of its industry offers; in the cultivation of the land; in the silk manufactory; in spinning flax, &c. The price of labour differs greatly, according to situation and the nature of the work. A female labourer in the field may, during harvest, earn from three to five vintenes, from 3½d. to 6d. per diem, besides coarse food. The food of the lower classes consists generally of a little bacalhao (salt fish), broth made of vegetables, rendered palatable and nutritive by the addition of a little oil or lard, and bread made of maize (Indian corn). Considering the low rate of wages, it is impossible for a peasant to lay by money to any extent. Whenever they collect a little, it is generally expended in gold chains or ornaments for the women.

Although, in some instances, labourers own the cottages they inhabit, the greater number are the property of the larger landed proprietors, and are rented by the occupiers; their value depends greatly on situation, and the conveniences they afford. A cottage consisting of four rooms, in a small town, may be worth three or four moidores per annum. It is very seldom that a labourer holds more land than the small garden or orchard attached to his cottage.

As no statistical tables have latterly been published in Portugal, it is difficult to form an opinion as to the average number of births, marriages or deaths in proportion to the population.

It may be observed generally, that in Catholic countries, the care of administering to the wants, both physical and moral, of the poor, being left in a great degree to the clergy and religious establishments, the action of the civil government, as well as of private benevolence in their favour, is much less visible, and far more confined than in Protestant states.

Oporto, 24 April 1834.

THE AZORES.

REPLIES to the QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS, by the Consul-General.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent, and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—In the Azores mendicity is limited to the aged and infirm poor, and to the crippled and blind, for whom there is no legal provision; they are therefore dependent on the charity of the wealthy, to whom they make a weekly application and receive alms. There are no houses for their reception, or asylum of any description, but they obtain a distribution of victuals from the convents, of whatever surplus food remains after the friars and nuns have dined.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—Vagrants are not allowed; such people are liable to be imprisoned, and on conviction may be shipped off to India, Angola, &c., or employed on public works, by decrees of the 16th May 1641, 19th May 1684, 4th March 1688, 7th March 1691, and 4th Nov. 1755. Those decrees, though severe, have had a good effect in exterminating vagrancy in the Azores. No relief is given to persons seeking work.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—There are no laws for granting relief to the poor of any description, excepting the sick. Able-bodied men in want of work can always find employment on seeking it.

2 to 7.—Nil.

8. To what extent, and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—Public schools for teaching reading and writing are established in each municipal district, where the children of the poor are taught gratis. A small tribute on wine produce of the country is levied for payment of these schools, called the Literary Subsidy, and public professors are paid out of it also, who teach Latin, grammar, rhetoric and philosophy to all who choose to attend.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—The laws of Portugal oblige the proprietors of entailed property to give alimentary allowances to their children and brothers and sisters, in proportion to their own means and the wants of the applicants. Children coming into possession of property are obliged to assist their parents and brothers, if in necessity. The poor, however, are left to themselves, and to the stimulus of natural affection; and cases are very rare in which appeals are made in vain; but lawsuits are very common to oblige the rich heir of entailed property to give aliments to a brother or sister, as the elder brother takes the whole estate, and the younger branches are entirely dependent on him, if the father has not left money or unentailed property to distribute amongst his other children.

10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—Nil.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

To what extent, and under what regulations

1. Are there almshouses or other institutions for their reception? 2. Is relief afforded them at their homes? 3. Are they boarded with individuals? 4. Are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—Nil.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—By law of 29th August 1776, if such persons have any relatives capable of assisting them, they may be compelled to do so on application to the magistracy of the district. This obligation extends from grand-children upwards, in a direct line, and to brothers and sisters, but not to uncles, aunts or cousins.

SICK.

To what extent, and under what regulations

1. Are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—In every municipal district there is a public hospital called the Misericordia; i. e. house of mercy, for the reception of the sick poor, supported by endowments of land, and bequests of money from pious people long since deceased, and voluntary contributions of living persons, where the sick are well treated, and when cured are sent to their families, and if in great distress a small sum of money is given to assist them. These hospitals contain generally from 200 to 300 sick, and are, generally speaking, well conducted by the governors, stewards, medical attendants and nurses. Foreign seamen are also admitted on the respective consuls paying 1s. 6d. per diem for diet and attendance.

2. Are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—In cases where the hospitals are full, and cannot accommodate any more patients, medicines are given to applicants, and surgical and medical advice gratis from the hospital practitioners.

3. Are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick? 4. Is assistance given to lying-in women? 5. Are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—Nil.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

The laws of Portugal, entitled Ordinances, book 1, c. 88, s. 10, and book 4, c. 99, with reference to the Ordinances of King Manoel, book 1, c. 67, s. 9, and book 4, c. 68, are very ample on the subject of illegitimate children, but too numerous for insertion here, and may be briefly stated as follows; viz. That the mother shall not be obliged to denounce the father of the child against her will, as the mother must support it in case she chooses to suckle the child herself; if, on the contrary, the sense of shame overcomes her maternal feelings, and she takes it to the misericordia, where there is a private place to receive the infant, it is immediately taken care of, and put out to nurse at the expense of the municipality until seven years of age, when it is apprenticed (if a male) to some trade or handicraft, or to a farmer; if a female, to domestic service in some family, where they are fed and clothed until of an age to earn wages: in this manner perjury and infanticide (so prevalent in some countries) is prevented. As there is no parochial relief, so also there is no temptation to commit perjury by swearing the child to a wrong person. In nine cases out of 10, the practice is to take the child to the misericordia, as pregnancy is more easily concealed here than in other countries, by the peculiar dress of the common class of women. The municipality are at the expense of maintenance of the children, and if their funds are scanty the State pays the deficiency.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

Orphans.—Various laws have been promulgated in favour of orphans, for whom the respective local magistrates were appointed judges and protectors, which duty now devolves on the justices justices of the peace. If any property belongs to them, proper guardians are appointed to take care of it, and to educate the children; if none, they are under the municipal protection until of age to be put apprentice to some trade or calling, service, &c. in cases where their relatives are unable to take charge of them.

Foundlings.—Foundlings are taken charge of and treated as orphans; there are several funds set apart for their support by express decrees of former sovereigns of Portugal; they are received into the misericordias, and supported by the chamber of municipality.

Deserted Children whose Parents are known.—Deserted children are also reputed as foundlings or orphans, and have similar care taken of them by the municipal authorities; the instances are extremely rare of children being deserted by their parents, which is justly held in abhorrence by all classes of persons.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

Cripples.—There are no establishments whatsoever of any kind; they live on the alms bestowed weekly by the benevolent. It is much to be desired that a better mode of giving relief to the indigent should be adopted than that of their being obliged to go personally to receive their alms at the houses of the wealthy, which they are at present necessitated to do, with great inconvenience of the applicants, many of whom are obliged to be carried on asses to receive their alms; this, however, is more to prevent imposition than from ostentation on the part of the donors. If the crippled, blind, &c. have wealthy relatives in the direct line of ascendancy or descendancy, they may be obliged to contribute to their support by law.

Deaf and Dumb.—Neither for the deaf and dumb, of which few instances ever occur.

Blind.—There are no establishments for the blind. Ophthalmia is very prevalent amongst the poor past the middle age, but instances are very rare of blindness from infancy. Blindness in adults is often caused by extremely hard labour and sickness amongst artisans and husbandmen in the remote districts at a distance from medical aid.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

To what extent, and under what regulations

1. Are there establishments for their reception?—There are no establishments whatsoever.
2. Are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Are they boarded with individuals?—Nil.
4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—By the law already cited, of the 29th August 1776, they are equally entitled as the cripple, lame, blind, &c. to some support from their relatives when those have it in their power to afford it.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any and what effect,

1st, On the industry of the labourers?—As there is no parochial relief, every labourer endeavours, by personal exertions, to support himself and family.

2d, On their frugality?—The poor at the Azores are extremely economical and frugal in diet, clothing, &c.

3d, On the age at which they marry?—Poverty does not appear to check matrimony; in general the poor people marry at an early age, according to the physical temperament of the parties.

4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—In general there prevails much love and affection between parents and children, and from the children much obedience and respect towards their parents, to which they are exhorted by the clergy, who inculcate great subjection to their parents on all occasions.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity?—Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible?—(See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The poorest able-bodied labourer abhors begging; his utmost exertions are therefore employed to support himself and family; and it is only in cases of sickness, or other corporeal impediment, that he ever has recourse to alms.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—6d. to 8d. per diem for agricultural labourers, with gratification of breakfast and dinner in times of hoeing corn and harvests of all kinds, vintage and cutting wood in the mountains, which is considered good wages. A skilful carpenter, mason, tailor, blacksmith, or other handicraft, gains from 15d. to 20d. per diem, with which they are contented.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is not done by agricultural labourers, but sometimes agreed upon by masons, carpenters, &c. with their employers, but daily pay is generally preferred.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-

Appendix (F.)
 Foreign
 Communications.
 PORTUGAL.
 The Azores.

work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—As is above stated, a labourer in the field gains 6*d.* to 8*d.* per diem, but as there are a great number of saints' days and holidays in the year, they do not count upon more than 250 working days in the year; their pay is not more than from 6*l.* to 8*l.* per annum, exclusive of their casual gratification of a breakfast and dinner at harvest.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—Labourers and workmen of every description expend the whole of their weekly earnings in support of themselves and families; they pay nothing towards schooling, as their children may be taught gratis, nor towards religious instruction, as the clergy are paid by the government. In the time of Lent they pay about 2*d.* sterling for the Bull of Confession, which is delivered to them by the priest; and in the course of the year they give voluntary offerings of a trifling amount for the celebration of mass.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Some women are employed in harvest-work, particularly in gathering in flax; also children are employed, but generally they are occupied in domestic work, in carding, spinning and weaving cloth for home use and to sell; almost every cottage has a loom.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Women earn in field-labour 4*d.* to 5*d.* per day; boys from 14 to 16 years, the same; boys from 10 to 14 years 3*d.* to 4*d.* per diem; from 7 to 10 years 2*d.* to 3*d.* per diem: the younger are employed in vineyards weeding and carrying stones; in the orange gardens, gathering oranges; packing preparing the corn, leaf, &c.; the older in more laborious field-labour.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years, respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A woman with three sons of 14, 11 and 8 years old, may earn in the course of the year, if constantly employed for 250 days; viz.

The woman, 250 days, at 4 d. per diem	4	3	4
One boy, 14 years old - ditto -	4	3	4
One boy, 11 years old, at 3 d. per diem	3	2	6
One boy, 8 years old, at 2 d. per diem	2	1	8
	£.	13	10 10 sterling.

For children of 5 years of age there is no employment.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—With the above earnings they may subsist pretty well, with sufficiency of Indian corn, bread, vegetables, potatoes and fruit, seldom any meat, but in the summer time fish when abundant, such as mackarel, sardinhas, smelts, bonitas, abacore and dolphin.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Nothing can be laid by on such moderate earnings.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—From half a rood to one rood English measurement.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—Labourers in general have cottages of their own, either tiled or thatched; some petty farmers own such cottages, and other persons in middling circumstances are proprietors.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—From 24*s.* to 40*s.* a year rent; such cottages are not worth more than 8*l.* to 12*l.* sterling.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—A great number of day-labourers rent from one to two acres (English measure) of land from the morgados or farmers, from 30*s.* to 3*l.*, 4*l.*, and even so high as 5*l.* rent for each acre, according to the quality of the land and local situation, such as being near or distant from the chief cities and towns or villages which they inhabit.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—One to 48 of the whole population.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—One to every 19 persons.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—One to every 42.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Three to four children to each marriage; some have 10 to 15 children, others have none, but such instances are rare.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—100 legitimate children to every 15 illegitimate.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—They die in proportion of one to every 100 persons of the whole population.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—They die in proportion to one for every 1,000 persons of the whole population.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—They die in proportion to one for every 2,000 persons of the whole population.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—

Males living in the country marry at the average age of 20 years.

Females - - - ditto - - - ditto - - - 17 -

Males living in cities and towns - ditto - - - 28 -

Females - - - ditto - - - ditto - - - 24 -

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—The inhabitants of cities and large towns, where luxury and dissipation prevails more than in the country, and artificial wants are more felt, generally marry at a later age than the country people, these are more easily satisfied with but little arrangements of household goods prior to marriage; the citizen, on the contrary, wishes to acquire something to pass his future state of marriage with more ease and convenience. This causes more bastardy in the cities and towns. The country inhabitants, generally speaking, are more robust, hard working, easily satisfied, frugal in diet and drink, and obey sooner the dictates of nature in marrying than the citizens.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Those that live single may have something, if they have not an aged parent, or orphan brothers or sisters, to help with their earnings.

The married, on the contrary, cannot save anything; if they can manage to support their families, and buy a few extra comforts, they think themselves happy.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—There are no banks of any kind in which a poor person can deposit any saving; if they can gather together a little money, they buy a cottage if they had none before, or a small piece of land, vineyard or pasture, &c.

In the Island of St. Mary's wheat and barley are chiefly cultivated, but little Indian corn; much waste land is to be seen, arising from the absence of the great proprietors, who live in St. Michael's or at Lisbon.

At Terceira more wheat than Indian corn is to be seen under cultivation; much land lying waste from the want of capital or spirit of enterprize in the proprietors.

At St. George's, being a volcanic soil, there are more vineyards and pasture land than arable.

Gracioza being flat in surface, and having a strong clay soil, much barley and wheat is grown, but little Indian corn; the poor subsist chiefly on barley-bread, pulse, &c.; it also produces much brandy from the low-priced wines.

Pico being very mountainous and volcanic, the whole island is one continued vineyard; little soil for corn; the inhabitants depend upon the other islands for supplies of bread.

Fayal, partly vineyard, the rest corn land and pasture; all the principal proprietors of Pico living at Fayal; the poor of Pico are chiefly supplied from thence by their landlords.

Corvo produces grain, &c. for its consumption only.

Flores; some wheat and Indian corn is exported from thence, also bacon and hams, as large quantities of hogs are bred in that island.

A great deal of land is still uncultivated throughout the Azores, so that no able-bodied labourer can want employment, and for two centuries to come will give employment to the increasing population. The temperature of the climate, ranging from 55° to 78° of Fahrenheit, reduces the physical wants of man as to clothing, fuel, &c.; and the abundance of vegetables, fruits, &c. renders the poor man's lot easier than in colder climates. In the hospitals there is no limit of rations to the sick patients; they have bread, meat, poultry, milk, &c. in abundance. The state of criminals in the prisons is however dreadful; they are not fed by government, and must die if not succoured by relatives, and the casual supply of bread sent them from the misericordia in cases of extreme need; this however is not obligatory on the part of the hospital. Criminals, after sentence to the galleys, are allowed a loaf of bread per day, but nothing more.

1. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—One to every 19 persons.
2. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—One to every 42.
3. The average number of children to a marriage?—Three to four children to each marriage; some have 10 to 15 children, others have none; but such instances are rare.
4. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—100 legitimate children to every 15 illegitimate.

5. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—They die in proportion of one to every 100 persons of the whole population.
6. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—They die in proportion to one for every 1,000 persons of the whole population.
7. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—They die in proportion to one for every 2,000 persons of the whole population.
8. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—

Males living in the country marry at the average age of 20 years.
Females	17
Males living in cities and towns	28
Females	24

LETTER from Sir Augustus Foster to Sir George Shee, Bart., dated Turin, 29 June 1834, enclosing Replies to Questions respecting Poor Laws in Sardinian States.

Sir,

Turin, 29 June 1834.

I HAD the honour to receive, on the 2d February, your circular despatch, transmitting to me, by direction of Viscount Palmerston, a set of questions, in duplicate, which had been drawn up by the Poor Law Commissioners in England, relative to the condition of the Poor, and to the legal or charitable provisions for their support subsisting within this kingdom; to which you request me to obtain the most accurate and comprehensive answers, to be transmitted to his Lordship's office as early as possible; directing me, at the same time, that I shall send one of the copies with its answers home, to keep the other in the archives of the mission.

I have also to acknowledge the receipt of the volume published by the Poor Law Commissioners, and referred to in the questions, and I have carefully perused the same with a view to study the exact bearing of the queries applicable to Sardinia. There are, however, no poor laws in the Sardinian States at all analogous to those of Great Britain; there are mendicants in this and other towns, who are allowed to beg; and those of Turin are, if natives of the city, distinguished by numbered brass plates on their coats; but there are no paupers provided for by law, and the land in general is divided differently from what it is in Great Britain, there being but few cottages to be seen, and most of the farms in the plains of Piedmont being held on the "metayer" system, under which one half of the produce of every description belongs to the tenant; while there are innumerable small freeholders throughout the country, scarcely an acre of land, in the mountain districts especially, belonging to a large proprietor; 80,000 heads of families in the Duchy of Savoy alone, which contains about 500,000 inhabitants, are possessed (each individual in his own right) of a portion of the soil.

What poor exist are assisted by private charity, or from funds arising out of legacies which have been left to particular parishes, and are administered by a council or "congregazione," consisting of the syndic, curate, and two or three others, in each village or country town; but the amount of such legacies in general is very trifling, 20*l.* or 30*l.* a year, according to the size of the place.

There was an additional centime levied with the land-tax in the time of the French conquest, applicable to the removal of beggars, who were classed with criminals under the French laws, but since the Restoration this centime has been poured into the Treasury, and mendicity has revived, and is even sanctioned at Turin, by the individuals wearing a numbered plate, as above stated.

Private and public establishments of hospitals, through the Sardinian dominions, are numerous, and are a great credit to the country, as I had the honour to report in my despatch to Mr. Backhouse, dated 2d October 1833; and I have now to lay before you some additional information on the subject, consisting of a report on the establishment at Turin for the insane, which is, I am sorry to say, on a very indifferent footing for want of funds, though great efforts have lately been made to raise additional means from private sources for the completion of another hospital more convenient for them.

I also send enclosed to you the translation of a report that has been drawn up for me at Genoa upon the state of a celebrated institution for the deaf and dumb that exists in that city, as well as a translation of an account of that for orphans, in the same place.

In the questions which you forwarded to me, I have, through the obliging assistance of the Minister of the Interior, of M. de Vignet, who is a senator of Chambéry, the late syndic of Genoa, Marquis Brignole Sale, the syndic of Turin, and his son M. Camille Cavoar, obtained a series of replies, in as far as was practicable, but I doubt their containing much information that may be useful in Great Britain.

A great check is every where in this country put to the application for relief, by a knowledge being given to applicants of the positive limits of that which can be afforded, the promise of a bed for a sick person at a hospital in case of a vacancy occurring, or of being placed next on the list for assistance when the state of any particular fund will admit, being frequent answers to requests for admissions, except in cases of sudden accident, when the rules are overstept; and such a maximum of relief is strongly recommended, as affording a barrier against unreasonable demands, as well as preventing the increase of pauperism, and leaving a wide field for the private exertions of the humane; besides that the hope of obtaining eventual relief is of itself a great stimulus to good conduct in the poor, and serves to render the charge of supporting them for a while more bearable to their friends.

I have

STATE of the Establishment for the INSANE at Turin, 1834.

THE establishment for the insane at Turin was founded in 1728, under the reign of Victor Amadeus the 2d, by the Brotherhood Della Madonna delle Grazie. They demanded and obtained permission from H. S. Majesty to build the hospital, and to fit it up for the cure of the mad, and it will contain nearly 350 individuals. A new building is to replace it capable of containing 600.

The Turin hospital is placed under the direction of twelve persons, forming a council, with the prior of the confraternity to preside. These directors are named by the King, and their office, which is one of pure charity, lasts but for a year, though renewable. The prior is named every year by the confraternity out of those persons who are proposed by the council, over which he presides by right of office.

The administration is under the inspection of the King, represented by the second president of the senate, who has no deliberative voice in the council, his duty consisting in the verification of the accounts.

Nobody can be admitted to the hospital without a decree of the vicarius of the city of Turin, and to obtain this, the case of madness must be judicially proved, as well as certified in due form by a declaration of the doctor; and the decrees of the vicarius are subjected to the inspection of the member of the council on duty.

The council meets every Sunday morning to deliberate upon what may be wanting in the establishment.

The director on duty makes report, and gives an account of the sick who have entered or left the establishment, the dead, &c.

Two physicians are attached to the establishment, and are, as well as two surgeons, lodged in it.

The head doctor has the general inspection of the hospital, and he, as well as the second doctor, are bound to make four visits a day to the sick in general, and six to the infirmary.

The inspection of the female department is intrusted to the Sœurs de la Charité, who have under their orders a sufficient number of guardians to take charge of the linen, &c. of the hospital.

The means of repression for the raving mad, and the evil-inclined, are ordinarily the belt of Hallam, the straight waistcoat, and sometimes chains; violence and threats are severely prohibited.

The mad who have once entered into the establishment cannot leave it but by virtue of a doctor's certificate in regard to their being cured, or on their being claimed by their relations, and provided they are not in a state of frenzy, as also on those relations entering into an engagement in writing to take care of, and have a guard over the individual, and to report him in case of renewed frenzy.

The practice of obliging proprietors to maintain or take care of madmen, does not exist in Piedmont; on the contrary, it is expressly prohibited to any kind of persons to have a private establishment. This prohibition, however, does not extend to relations who take care of their mad, on condition they treat them properly, and they do not suffer them to trouble the public tranquillity.

All the mad at the hospital pay a sum, more or less, according to their means, and receive a treatment conformable to the amount. The poor, whose poverty is well ascertained by the certificates of their parish, are maintained at the expense of their community and the province they belong to, in the proportion of four-fifths to the latter and one-fifth to the former.

Military men at the expense of the war-office; and the mad sent in by order of the Government, are at the cost of the office of the interior.

The director is guardian to all the mad, with right of superintendence over their estates, so as to prevent the possibility of their property being dissipated by their relations.

The annual sums required for the mad differ according to the circumstances of the individuals; that of the poor amounts to 200 francs, about 8*l.*, which would not suffice for the maintenance of an individual, if the establishment did not add something from the funds. The maximum of allowance is 2,400 francs, or about 95*l.* per annum, for a person in easy circumstances, and for this he is supplied with an apartment consisting of two rooms, and is fed at the table of the upper officers; the state of the establishment at present, however, will not admit of above two pensioners on such a footing.

In general, the amount required is 1,200, 800, 600, 400 and 350 francs per annum.

In this, however, is not included the expense of dress, linen, medicine or baths, which are at the cost of the pensioners.

Turin.

In general the nourishment of the poor inmates consists of two pounds of bread per diem, a soup, with a piece of meat and vegetables, and a small allowance of wine and water at each repast.

The dinner hour is 11 o'clock, that for supper, five o'clock.

It may appear extraordinary to allow wine to people out of their mind, but experience has proved that a Piedmontese cannot do without wine, his constitution requiring it; besides, strong wines are not allowed in the hospital, nor are the raving mad allowed to drink any.

The inmates who pay from 600 to 1,200 francs, have the right of occupying a separate room, and being attended by servants specially destined for their service.

Those who pay less are lodged in proportion less conveniently.

Those of the first class have three dishes to their dinner, two of them meat with vegetables, one of fowl and a dessert.

Their supper is of two dishes, one a roast and the other vegetables.

In fine weather all the patients, except the maniacs and the sick, are allowed to walk in the garden; those who are but slightly affected, may even go through the town, attended by their servants, or even go to the theatres, unless the doctor should decide otherwise.

The women, who are able to do so, work for the use of the establishment.

There are guardians especially appointed to the care of those who are epileptic, and who, by frequent observation of their change, when they observe the symptoms coming on of an attack, are frequently able to turn it aside, by seizing the patient and making him walk about, or diverting his attention to some other thing.

MEMOIRE SUR L'INSTITUT DES SOURDS ET MUETS à Gènes.

Organisation.—L'institut de Gènes, sous la protection immédiate du Roi, dépend du Ministère de l'Intérieur. Il y a dix-huit places gratuites, dont onze pour les garçons, et sept pour les filles. Le corps civique en entretient deux autres, dont il se réserve le droit d'y nommer; ainsi que le Roi, pour les premières, d'après la proposition qui lui en est faite par le Ministre. Il y existe aussi une école gratuite pour ceux qui sont inadmissibles à la communauté.

Fonds.—Pour ces places gratuites, pour l'entretien de l'école aux externes; pour les appointemens au directeur, à l'instituteur; à deux répétiteurs, à l'économe, à trois maîtres; au médecin, au chirurgien, au chapelain, et à six personnes de service, l'établissement tire annuellement 19,500 francs, dont 14,025 du trésor public, et 5,475 par la commune. Hormis ces fonds, et quelques largitions des souverains, et de la ville, l'institution n'a point encore en d'autres ressources.

Administration.—L'administration de ces fonds est confiée au directeur, qui en est comptable à une commission de six membres, nommés par le Roi.

Nourriture.—Le directeur et le maîtres partagent avec leurs élèves la même nourriture; qui consiste: en pur pain à déjeuner, en soupe et deux portions à dîner; en soupe et une portion à souper. Dans les solennités, on y ajoute un troisième plat. La nature des alimens n'est certainement pas trop recherchée; car, outre qu'elle n'est point compatible avec les moyens de l'établissement, elle ne conviendrait nullement à de jeunes garçons pour la plupart misérables. Mais dès que le gouvernement n'a garde de faire de cette institution un dépôt de mendicité, où l'humanité fut avilie; et dès qu'il y a des élèves pensionnaires assez remarquables, et qui doivent se tenir à la nourriture commune, l'on a établi de maxime, que les genres de première nécessité, comme le pain, le vin, l'huile, fussent de la plus parfaite qualité; et que quant au reste, c'était le prix courant qu'il fallait consulter. C'est en faveur de cette règle, que tout le monde est content.

Dépenses.—Une communauté, composée de 54 individus, où il n'y a que huit pensionnaires à six cent francs chacun par an, et qui n'a qu'un revenu de 19,500 francs, dont 7,948 fr. 33 c. sont absorbés par les appointemens aux employés, ne pourrait pas être imputée de peu d'économie, si, à la fin de l'année, tout son numéraire se trouve épuisé, ou s'il en reste très-peu en fond pour l'année d'après. Il n'est point d'ailleurs dans les vues de l'autorité de former une caisse au préjudice des malheureux garçons du jour, pour faire du bien à ceux à venir. On sait aussi, par expérience, que le bien-être des élèves est toujours en raison inverse du numéraire en caisse.

Admissions.—Tous les sourds et muets sont admissibles dans l'institut, pourvu qu'ils aient les qualités ci-après:

1. Religion Catholique.
2. Bonne constitution physique.
3. Avoir eu la petitevérole, ou avoir été vacciné.
4. N'avoir pas au-delà de 16 ans, ni moins de 10.
5. Une pension annuelle de 600 francs.
6. Trousseau, et renouvellement du même.

On

On entend bien, que les élèves nommés par le Roi, ou par le corps civique, sont exempts de la pension.

Occupations.—Les élèves, en quelque saison que ce soit, se levent à la pointe du jour, pour étudier jusqu'à 12 heures et demie, où l'on dîne. Ils s'amuse ensuite à jouer aux dames ; aux échecs ; à la boule au billard ; au volant. Il y en a qui vont à la leçon de dessein, ou de peinture ; d'autres à celle de cordonnier, ou de graveur sur bois, métaux, pierres ; et d'autres enfin à celle de ciseleur, ou de relieur ; tandis que les moins avancés continuent leurs leçons.

Les filles ont régulièrement une leçon de trois heures par jour, outre les leçons extraordinaires que le recteur juge à propos de leur donner ; après quoi, elles s'appliquent aux travaux propres à leur sexe. Dans les jours de fête, elles assistent à deux messes ; à l'explication de l'évangile, de la Bible, de la vie des Saints ; à la bénédiction du très-saint sacrement : l'après dîner, à la doctrine chrétienne.

Promenades.—Les garçons vont à la promenade deux fois la semaine, partagés par compagnies, dont chacune a, ou le directeur, ou l'un des maîtres. Les filles vont une fois la semaine, avec deux maîtresses, et une domestique.

Prix, Punitons.—Quoique une chambre de discipline soit portée par le règlement, le Père Assarotti cependant, fondateur, et son successeur, ont toujours été d'avis, qu'elle produirait un très-mauvais effet dans l'ame de jeunes garçons aussi sensibles, et aussi faciles à se dépitier. La plupart des punitons sont, par conséquent, morales. On les éloigne par exemple, ou on les repousse dans un coin de la table commune : on les réprimande avec chaleur ; mais toujours de manière qu'ils puissent entrevoir qu'il y a de la bienveillance par dedans. Voilà les moyens les plus efficaces, sans les effaroucher et les avilir.

Les recompenses sont très-legères et très-rares : on y substitue souvent un signe d'approbation ; un sourire ; une partie de campagne ; et cela fait, que les élèves sont très-attachés à leurs supérieurs.

Etudes.—Les études dependent entièrement du directeur, d'accord avec le président (l'archevêque). Elles sont au niveau de celles des autres institutions ; et embrassent en outre les langues Française, Anglaise, et Allemande, pour ceux qui ont assez de capacité pour en apprendre.

La méthode approche beaucoup de celle de France. Le Père Assarotti cependant y a fait de modifications si importantes et telles, qu'on peut bien dire, que c'est une méthode tout-à-fait particulière. Il a donné de si bonnes règles synthétiques de grammaire (étude la plus difficile pour celui qui n'a jamais entendu la parole,) que pour peu de réflexion que l'élève y fasse, il est impossible qu'il n'apprenne. Un jour, peut-être, ces règles verront-elles la lumière.

La meilleure méthode cependant, disait le Père Assarotti en plaisantant, c'est de n'en avoir aucune.

Enclosure (C.)

NOTICES sur l'Etablissement des ORPHELINS à Gènes.

QUELLES sont les autorités qui gouvernent l'établissement ; par qui sont elles constituées, et quelles sont leurs fonctions en général ?—L'établissement est gouverné par quatre administrateurs nobles, nommés à vie par le Roi, avec le titre de Députés, dont le plus âgé fait fonctions de président ; leurs attributions en général consistent à admettre dans l'établissement les orphelins qui y ont droit ; administrer les revenus, revendiquer les droits, et nommer les employés de l'établissement.

Les employés sont un recteur, un vice-recteur, deux préfets, un portier, un cuisinier, et trois personnes de service, qui vivent tous dans l'établissement. Il y a en outre quatre maîtres, qui viennent tous les jours donner leurs leçons aux élèves ; savoir, un de lecture et écriture et de premiers élémens de Latin ; un de grammaire et humanités ; un de langue Française et arithmétique ; et un enfin de calligraphie et de dessein. Il y a aussi quatre directeurs d'arts, qui viennent enseigner les élèves pendant toute la journée : ce sont un menuisier, un cordonnier, un tailleur, et un tricoteur. Il y a enfin un secrétaire d'administration, un computiste, et un bedeau. Le recteur, le vice-recteur, et les préfets, sont toujours des prêtres. L'établissement est pour les seuls garçons.

Quelle est la nature des rentes de l'établissement ; quelles sont les autorités qui les administrent ; comment en règle-t-on les dépenses, et sous quel contrôle ?—Les rentes se tirent des capitaux placés sur les Monts de Turin, de Rome, de Vienne, de Paris, et de Danemarck ; et de peu de fonds de terre, situés sur le lieu. La ville accorde aussi une subvention annuelle. Le total des revenus de l'établissement s'élève à vingt-sept mille francs environ. Ces revenus sont administrés par les quatre députés ci-dessus ; et les dépenses se font de la main du recteur, nommé par eux, et qui est leur procureur-général. A la fin de l'année, le recteur dresse un tableau général des revenus et des dépenses présumptives de l'année suivante, et il le soumet à la sanction des administrateurs réunis en séance. Dans le courant de l'année il fait les dépenses en conformité de ce tableau, et d'après les mandats qui lui sont délivrés par l'un des quatre députés, qui est particulièrement chargé de l'administration de la maison, et auquel le recteur remet tous les trois mois un état de l'entrée et de la sortie, en retenant un autre pour lui-même. Le premier de ces deux états passe à la secrétairerie de l'administration, pour y être enregistré.

Foreign
Communications.SARDINIAN

Genoa.

Quel est le nombre des orphélins; quels sont les titres pour y être admis; quelles les dépenses, et comment partage-t-on le tems pour l'étude, et pour les arts?—Le nombre des orphélins est actuellement de quatre-vingt. En 1824, époque qui a précédé l'entrée du recteur actuel, n'était que de trente-huit qui manquaient de tout. Les conditions pour y être admis, sont:

1. Être natif et habitant de Gênes; et que l'un des parens y soit né aussi.
2. Avoir sept ans accomplis, et n'avoir pas dépassé les douze.
3. Orphelin de père et de mère, ou de père seulement.
4. Certificat de pauvreté, délivré par son curé.
5. Avoir eu la petite-vérole, ou avoir été vacciné.

On ne dépense rien pour l'admission; au contraire, l'élève reçoit en sortant une gratification de 50 francs.

Il y a quatre classes pour ce qui regarde l'étude. La 1^{re} comprend la lecture, l'écriture, et la petite grammaire. La 2^e la grammaire Latine et Italienne, et les humanités. La 3^e la langue Française, et l'arithmétique. La 4^e la calligraphie et le dessin.

Il y a quatre classes aussi qui ont rapport à la mécanique. La 1^{re} comprend l'art du menuisier, partagé en ses branches de tourneur, graveur, &c. La 2^e celui du cordonnier. La 3^e celui du tailleur; et la 4^{me} celui du tricoteur.

Les orphélins se partagent en outre en deux autres classes à l'égard de la table. La première embrasse ceux qui sont au dessus de 12 ans, la seconde ceux au dessous.

L'heure du sommeil est depuis les 9 du soir, jusqu'à 6 du matin, soit d'été, que d'hiver. On dîne toujours à $\frac{3}{4}$ après midi. L'heure de l'étude est depuis les 8 jusqu'à 12 du matin; depuis les 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ jusqu'à 4 $\frac{1}{2}$; et depuis les 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ jusqu'à 7 du soir. Dans les jours de fête, il y a une heure et demie d'étude au matin et autant au soir. L'heure destinée aux arts, est depuis les 7 jusqu'à 12 du matin; et depuis une heure et demie jusqu'à 8 de l'après-dîné, en hiver; et jusqu'au soir en été. Les élèves de cette catégorie reçoivent, trois fois la semaine, un leçon de deux heures de lecture, écriture, et arithmétique.

L'heure de la récréation pour les élèves destinés exclusivement à l'étude, est depuis les 7 jusqu'à 8 heures du matin; depuis midi jusqu'à demi-heure; depuis 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ jusqu'à 2 $\frac{1}{4}$; depuis 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ jusqu'à 5 $\frac{1}{2}$; et depuis 7 jusqu'à 8 du soir.

Le tems consacré à la piété est réglé ainsi: depuis 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ on entend la messe; depuis 12 $\frac{1}{4}$ jusqu'à 12 $\frac{1}{2}$, et depuis 8 à 8 $\frac{1}{2}$, l'on prie. Dans les Dimanches, et dans les autres jours de fête, on assiste à deux messes, et à l'explication de l'évangile. Le Jeudi étant jour de repos, il n'y a qu'une heure d'instruction de catéchisme. On se confesse tous les 15 jours, dans les Jeudis, et on communique, si l'on est en âge.

Quelle est la nourriture?—La nourriture consiste en pain, vin, soupe, et une portion à dîner; en pain, vin, soupe, et dessert à souper; en pain, à déjeûner. Le pain est blanc; la soupe est fine; dans les solennités on y ajoute une portion.

La discipline et l'inspection à qui sont elles confiées?—La discipline ainsi que l'inspection sont exclusivement confiées au recteur, qui les exerce lui-même, en se faisant aider par les trois prêtres destinés à la garde et à l'éducation des élèves.

Quelles sont les punitions, et les prix?—On punit les élèves en leur otant le vin, ou la portion, et même l'un et l'autre. On les prive de la récréation, ou de la promenade, dont ils ne jouissent que dans les jours de fête; et on les renferme, s'il le faut, dans la salle de correction à pain et eau. Les incorrigibles sont expulsés de l'établissement. Les sages, et appliqués à l'étude, sont récompensés d'une décoration en argent, qu'on leur enlève s'ils s'en rendent indignes, pour la donner à ceux qui savent la gagner.

Jusqu'à quel âge les orphélins restent-ils dans l'établissement?—Jusqu'à seize ans. Avant 1814, on les renvoyait à 14.

Que deviennent-ils en sortant de l'établissement, et comment pourvoit-on à leur existence?—Les orphélins destinés exclusivement à l'étude, en sortant de l'établissement, sont, pour la plupart, employés dans de maisons de commerce, ou auprès de procureurs, ou dans des arts libéraux. Il y en a qui embrassent l'état ecclésiastique. Ceux qui ont été instruits dans les arts, sont placés chez les artisans respectifs de la ville. Le recteur s'occupe de tout son pouvoir pour leur assurer un sort à l'avenir. On trouve beaucoup d'élèves à Gênes, sortis de l'établissement, qui exercent honorablement la profession de notaire, de procureur, d'agent de commerce, et d'autres charges publiques.

Quelles réformes, et quels autres changemens a-t-on en vue?—Aucun changement, aucune réforme, qu'on sache, ne sont en vue. Il serait cependant à désirer: 1. Une école de géométrie, et une de navigation; la première serait d'un grand avantage aux artistes, et la seconde formerait d'excellens navigateurs. 2. Les élèves devraient s'arrêter dans l'établissement jusqu'à l'âge de 18 ans au moins, où les élèves artisans pourraient sortir instruits de manière à gagner entièrement leur vie, et à se conduire eux-mêmes dans la société; et les élèves qu'on destine aux études, pourraient recevoir cette instruction complète, qu'ils sont bien loin d'espérer au sein de leurs pauvres familles, et dont le manque n'est que trop souvent un obstacle à leur avancement. Cela exigerait absolument un école de philosophie.

Il serait enfin très-avantageux pour l'établissement, que le directeur fût du nombre des députés, comme celui, qui connaissant de plus près les besoins de l'institution, serait à la portée de proposer les réformes, et les modifications les plus nécessaires au bien-être des élèves.

ETAT de la MENDICITE et des PAUVRES dans les Etats Sardes.Foreign
STATES.

MENDIANTS.

1. Jusqu'à quel point, et sous quelles forms, la mendicité existe-t-elle dans les différentes provinces du pays?—La mendicité n'est point défendue par les lois : toute personne qui est censée être dans l'impossibilité de se procurer, par son travail, de quoi se maintenir lui et sa famille, peut s'établir dans les rues, et demander l'aumône aux passans. Le Gouvernement et les autorités des différentes localités ont plusieurs fois vainement tenté de réprimer les abus sans nombre qui naissent de cette faculté illimitée. Les réglemens qui ont été fait dans ce but, n'ont jamais pu être exécutés d'une manière efficace. Ils sont tous restés sans effet. On applique toutefois assez souvent la loi qui défend aux pauvres de mendier hors de leurs communes. Lorsque, dans une ville, les mendiants étrangers affluent en grande abondance, les autorités municipales les en expulsent en masse, laissant le soin à la gendarmerie de leur faire regagner leur pays natal, ou le lieu où ils sont censés avoir un domicile. Mais comme il n'y a aucune peine correctionnelle pour sanctionner cette loi, ils ne tardent pas à la violer de nouveau, en s'éloignant de chez eux, s'ils trouvent une trop grande difficulté à vivre.

Il n'existe aucun document qui puisse servir à fixer, même approximativement, le nombre total des mendiants. Il dépend d'ailleurs en partie de plusieurs causes qui varient continuellement ; telles que l'abondance des récoltes, la rigueur des saisons, les vicissitudes de certaines industries qui occupent un grand nombre de bras.

La mendicité est répandue, quoique à des degrés différens, dans tout le pays. Elle existe à peine dans les vallées des Alpes ; au contraire, dans les vallées des Appenins, le nombre des mendiants est fort considérable ; comme il l'est en général dans tous les endroits où les châtaignes sont la nourriture ordinaire des classes inférieures.

2. Y-a-t-il des secours destinés pour les personnes qui parcourent le pays, soit qu'elles s'en retournent chez elles, soit qu'elles cherchent de l'ouvrage, et soit même qu'elles mendient?—Il n'en existe pas. Toutefois, si un ouvrier, étranger au pays qu'il habite, vient, par suite d'accident ou de maladie, à se trouver dans l'impossibilité de gagner sa vie en travaillant, et qu'il soit hors d'état de s'en retourner chez-lui sans secours, les autorités municipales de l'endroit, et successivement celles de tous les pays qui se trouvent sur la route, sont tenues de lui fournir des moyens de transport. A Turin, on donne quelques légers secours pécuniaires à tous les ouvriers qui s'en retournent chez-eux : cet usage n'est pas général.

PAUVRES BIEN-PORTANS.

1. Sont-ils logés gratuitement dans des maisons particulières?—Cela ne se pratique nulle part en Piémont.

2. Sont-ils mis en pension chez des particuliers?—Même réponse.

3. Y-a-t-il des établissemens pour les pauvres bien-portans, et leurs familles, où on les fasse travailler en leur fournissant de la nourriture et des habillemens?—Il n'en existe pas. Le seul essai de ce genre qu'on a tenté il y a quelques années à Raconis a complètement échoué dès le commencement devant d'immenses obstacles, et des inconveniens de tous les genres. Il existe bien près de Turin un établissement, qui s'appelle l'Ergastolo, où l'on retire les jeunes vagabonds, et où on les soumet à un travail continuel : mais quoiqu'il suffise d'un simple ordre de la police pour y être renfermé, sans aucune forme de procès, on le considère plutôt comme une maison de correction, que comme une maison de travail.

Plusieurs institutions charitables ont des noms et des formes religieuses ; mais elles ne s'occupent que rarement des pauvres valides ; leur objet principal est de soigner les malades et les infirmes. A Turin et à Gênes, il y a deux compagnies de la miséricorde, qui ont pour objet unique de secourir les prisonniers : elles leur fournissent des vivres, des habillemens, et même des couvertures pour l'hiver, sans cependant s'ingérer de la discipline des prisons, qui depend entièrement des magistrats publics.

5. Jusqu'à quel point fournit-on de l'ouvrage à domicile aux ouvriers qui ont un métier?—Cela se pratique fort peu, même par les personnes charitables ; c'est tout au plus si elles s'occupent quelquefois de procurer à de pauvres femmes dans la misère, du lin, ou du chavvre, pour qu'elles puissent se gagner quelque chose en filant.

6. Jusqu'à quel point occupe-t-on ces mêmes ouvriers à des travaux d'agriculture, ou d'utilité publique?—Lorsqu'il y a beaucoup de misère à cause de l'insuffisance des récoltes, ou de la rigueur des saisons, les autorités municipales, soit spontanément, soit sur l'invitation et avec l'aide du Gouvernement, entreprennent pendant l'hiver des travaux d'utilité publique pour procurer de l'ouvrage à tous les pauvres valides. Cela a lieu surtout dans les grandes villes, comme Turin et Gênes.

7. Jusqu'à quel point leur distribue-t-on des secours en nature et en argent?—Ils ne reçoivent jamais, ni du Gouvernement, ni des municipalités, aucun secours; mais ils sont entièrement abandonnés à la charité privée. Dans les occasions solennelles cependant, telles que l'anniversaire de la restauration de la monarchie, ou la célébration de la fête du Roi, un certain nombre de distributions gratuites de comestibles et d'habillemens ont toujours lieu aux familles les plus nécessiteuses.

8. Leur accorde-t-on un secours en plaçant leurs enfans dans des écoles, pour leur faire apprendre un métier; et où on les nourrisse, et les habille?—Il existe un assez grand nombre d'écoles gratuites; mais il n'y en a aucune où les enfans soient habillés et nourris aux fraix de l'établissement. Cependant dans les nouvelles salles d'asile que des personnes charitables, suivant l'exemple généreux que leur a donné le M^s de Barolo, viennent de fonder, il est accordé chaque jour un repas gratis aux enfans.

9. Jusqu'à quel degré, l'obligation de secourir les parens dans la misère subsiste-t-elle; et comment ces secours sont-ils réglés?—Les pères et mères sont tenus à fournir à leurs enfans des moyens d'existence, soit en les tenant chez eux, soit en leur donnant une pension alimentaire. La même obligation existe pour les enfans vis-à-vis des auteurs de leurs jours, lorsqu'ils n'ont plus de moyen d'existence. La loi n'oblige à rien pour tous les autres degrés de parenté. Ainsi un homme dans l'opulence peut laisser périr son frère de misère, sans être forcé le moins du monde à le secourir.

10. Sont-ils secourus par des prêts, ou par des avances de capitaux?—Jamais par le Gouvernement, ni par aucune autorité publique: seulement il existe dans un grand nombre de villes des monts-de-piété, qui prêtent sur gage à six pour cent d'intérêt. Ces établissemens ont des réglemens fort rigoureux. Le malheureux emprunteur, s'il ne peut pas libérer avant le terme fixé l'objet engagé, on le met en vente quelle que soit souvent sa valeur comparée avec le montant de sa dette. Malgré cela, le nombre des personnes qui y ont recours est immense; et je ne crois exagérer en disant, qu'il n'y a que bien peu de pauvres ménagers qui n'aient quelques meubles, ou quelques hardes, parmi les dépôts des monts-de-piété.

DES PAUVRES RENDUS INCAPABLES DE TRAVAILLER PAR LEUR AGE.

1. Y-a-t-il des hospices pour recevoir ceux que l'âge a mis dans l'impossibilité de gagner leur vie en travaillant?—Il n'existe aucun établissement dans ce but; cependant comme il y a plusieurs hospices destinés aux incurables, on parvient quelquefois à y faire recevoir des pauvres gens dont la seule maladie est l'affaiblissement cause par un âge avancé.

2. Leur donne-t-on des secours à domicile, en nature, et en argent?—Le Gouvernement et les autorités municipales n'en donnent jamais; mais il y a plusieurs institutions charitables qui distribuent des secours à domicile. A Turin, par exemple, la congrégation de St. Paul a de très-grandes ressources. La loi établit en outre, que dans chaque commune il doit y avoir une congrégation de charité. Dans le fait, il n'en existe que dans un certain nombre de villages et de villes, presque toutes les communes rurales en étant privées. Là, où elles existent, leurs ressources se composent des revenus de fondations particulières, du produit de certaines quêtes, faites à diverses époques de l'année, soit dans les maisons, soit dans les églises, des dons faits par des personnes charitables. Ces congrégations font certainement beaucoup de bien; mais n'étant pas soumises à un réglemant uniforme, et à une direction centrale, il s'ensuit une grande diversité, et une grande irregularité, dans la manière dont chacune d'elles s'administre: source d'immenses abus, que, dans l'état actuel des choses, il est impossible non seulement de réprimer, mais même de constater.

Il se fait aussi une grande quantité d'aumônes par les mains des curés. Ce sont, sans aucun doute, les mieux distribuées et les plus efficaces; un grand nombre en est consacré aux vieillards impotens.

3. Le met-on en pension?—Jamais par les établissemens publics, et bien rarement par des personnes charitables.

4. Les loge-t-on chez des particuliers?—Même réponse.

5. Quels secours leurs parens sont ils obligés de leur accorder?—Comme nous avons déjà eu occasion de le dire, les enfans sont seuls tenus de pourvoir à la subsistance de leur père et de leur mère. Cette sainte obligation n'est que trop souvent bien imparfaitement remplie.

DES MALADES.

1. Quels établissemens y a-t-il pour soigner les malades pauvres, et quels sont leurs réglemens?—Dans toutes les villes, et même dans un grand nombre de gros bourgs, il y a des hôpitaux; ainsi tout individu atteint d'une maladie aiguë, ou ayant subi un accident grave grave qui nécessite une opération chirurgicale, est sûr de trouver un établissement public où il sera soigné jusqu'à son entière guérison. Il n'en est pas de même pour les maladies chroniques ou incurables : celles-ci ne sont pas traitées que dans un petit nombre d'hospices, ou il n'est possible de retirer qu'une bien faible portion des individus qui en sont atteints. La plus part de ces malheureux sont abandonnées aux soins de la charité privée. Les conditions d'admission varient beaucoup suivant les différens hôpitaux ; dans le plus grand nombre c'est la fièvre qui constitue la maladie aigue.

Les hôpitaux ont presque tous des revenus en fond de terre, ou des capitaux sur les fonds de l'état, ou prêtés à des particuliers. Ils reçoivent en outre, lorsque ces revenus sont insuffisans, des subventions sur les deniers des communes et des provinces, et de nombreuses aumônes des personnes charitables. L'administration des hôpitaux n'est pas uniforme ; elle varie suivant les endroits ; en général cependant c'est le Gouvernement qui y exerce, plus ou moins directement, une influence prépondérante. Dans quelques villes, l'autorité ecclésiastique, et les chapîtres de chanoines, ont une part dans l'administration des hôpitaux ; c'est ordinairement là qu'il y a le moins d'ordre et plus d'abus.

2. Les médecins de les chirurgiens visitent-ils chez-eux les pauvres malades ?—Dans le plus grand nombre des communes, il y a des médecins et des chirurgiens que reçoivent une subvention annuelle, soit des autorités municipales, soit des institutions de charité, avec l'obligation de donner gratuitement leurs soins à tous les malades trop pauvres pour les payer. A Turin, et dans quelques autres endroits, il y a en outre des pharmacies où l'on distribue gratis un certain nombre de remèdes les plus usuels et les plus nécessaires, à tous ceux qui sont munis d'un certificat de pauvreté du curé de leur paroisse, toutes les fois que les médecins l'ordonnent.

3. Quels secours, en nature et en argent, les pauvres reçoivent-ils chez-eux ?—Ils n'en reçoivent que des institutions charitables particulières et de la bienfaisance privée. En général les malades qui ne peuvent pas être admis dans les hôpitaux, sont dans un état pitoyable de misère et de dénuement.

4. Quels secours les femmes en couches reçoivent-elles chez-elles et dans les établissemens publics ?—Il y a à Turin, et dans d'autres villes, des hôpitaux pour les femmes en couches. On les y reçoit moyennant un certificat de pauvreté de leur curé.

A Turin, il existe une société, dite des Puerpère, que distribue des secours à toutes les accouchées pauvres. Ses moyens sont fort limités ; d'après les comptes des deux dernières années, il résulte que chaque femme n'a reçu que quatre francs en argent, une fois pour toutes.

5. Quels autres secours publics y a-t-il pour les malades ?—Il n'y en a aucun autre que je sache.

DES ENFANS :

Illégitimes.

1. Sur qui la charge de l'enfant illégitime tombe-t-elle : est-ce sur le père, sur la mère, ou bien sur tous les deux ? dans ce cas, quelle est la proportion suivant laquelle elle est répartie ?—Si une fille a eu un enfant d'un homme non marié, elle a recours devant le tribunal ecclésiastique, c'est-à-dire l'officialité de son diocèse, pour forcer le seducteur à l'épouser. Si elle parvient à établir sa bonne conduite antérieure, et à prouver qu'il a été usé envers elle de promesses ou d'autres moyens de séduction, le tribunal ordonne le mariage. Le défendeur peut s'y refuser ; mais alors la cause est portée devant les juges civils, qui, admettant comme constaté, sans besoin de preuves ultérieures, le fait de la séduction, arbitrent une indemnité en faveur de la fille, proportionnée aux circonstances particulières du cas.

Quant à l'enfant, la loi déclare qu'il a droit à une pension alimentaire, et qu'il peut la réclamer tant de son père que de sa mère. Il arrive donc que c'est tantôt le père, tantôt la mère qui supportent les fraix du bâtard. En général c'est le plus riche des deux, et par conséquent c'est presque toujours l'homme.

Il faut d'ailleurs observer que, grâce à la disposition constante des tribunaux ecclésiastiques à accueillir favorablement les réclamations des filles séduites dans le but de réparer par le mariage le mal qui a été fait, et à la grande facilité de se débarrasser des enfans illégitimes en les portant dans les hospices pour les enfans trouvés, le nombre des bâtards élevés dans les maisons particulières est extrêmement limité, même dans les plus basses classes de la société.

2. Dans quels cas, et jusqu'à quel point, les parens du père et de la mère de l'enfant illégitime, sont ils tenus de concourir aux fraix de la subsistance ?—Si le seducteur est fils de famille, et se trouve sous la domination paternelle, lors de sa liaison avec la fille qu'il a rendu mère, celle-ci a recours contre ses parens pour en obtenir l'indemnité voulue par la loi. De même, le fils naturel peut réclamer la pension alimentaire à laquelle il a droit, soit de son aïeul paternel, soit de l'hoirie paternelle ou maternelle, si son père et sa mère sont morts sans faire de provisions en sa faveur.

3. Quelles institutions y a-t-il en faveur des enfans illégitimes, et à quels réglemens sont elles soumises ?—Dans plusieurs villes, il y a des hospices où l'on reçoit tous les enfans en bas âge, sans rechercher ni leur origine ni leur nom. Les parens peuvent demeurer parfaitement inconnus ; pour cela ils n'ont qu'à déposer, à la nuit close, leur enfant dans une roue qui dans tous ces hospices communique de la rue dans l'intérieur de la maison, à sonner la cloche pour avertir la personne de garde, et à s'en aller. La roue tourne, on en retire l'enfant, on le reçoit dans l'hospice, en l'inscrivant suivant un numero d'ordre, et il ne reste plus de traces de la manière dont il y est entré.

Les enfans reçoivent dans les hospices une éducation complète ; on leur apprend à lire et à écrire, et on leur enseigne un métier. Lorsqu'ils sont en âge de gagner leur vie, les administrateurs tachent de les placer avantageusement ; ceux que quelque difformité naturelle rend incapables de gagner leur vie, sont gardés dans l'établissement, où l'on tâche de les employer, soit comme gardes-malades, ou de toute autre manière.

Des Orphélins, des Enfans trouvés, et des Enfans abandonnés.

1. Les reçoit-on dans des établissemens publics ? 2. Sont ils mis en pension chez des particuliers ? 3. Les loge-t-on dans des maisons particulières ? 4. Jusqu'à quel degré de parenté y a-t-il l'obligation de les secourir ?—Une seule réponse suffira aux quatre demandes ci-dessus.

Dans les hospices, on ne reçoit que les enfans en bas âge qu'on y apporte. Les autres enfans fussent-ils abandonnés de toute la terre, ne peuvent plus y être admis légalement. Je dis légalement, parceque les réglemens s'y opposent, quoiqu'en pratique on viole souvent en faveur de cas particuliers cette severe prescription.

Il y a des établissemens destinés pour les orphélins ; il y en a un à Gênes, tenu avec beaucoup de luxe ; et un autre à Turin, où les filles seules sont admises. Ils sont bien loin de suffire à cette classe nombreuse d'êtres aussi intéressans que malheureux.

Hors de ces établissemens, il n'y a aucun secours public pour les orphélins et les enfans abandonnés ; ils sont entièrement à la charge de la charité privée.

Quant aux obligations des parens, il n'y a que le grand-père et la grand-mère paternels des orphélins qui soient tenus à les secourir.

DES BOITEUX, DES SOURDS ET MUETS, ET DES AVEUGLES.

1. Y a-t-il des établissemens publics pour les recevoir ? 2. Les place-t-on dans des maisons particulières ?—De même que ci-dessus, une seule réponse suffira aux deux demandes.

Il n'y a aucun établissement pour les personnes estropiées ou difformes. Dans les hôpitaux même où l'on traite les maladies chirurgicales, dès qu'un individu cesse d'avoir besoin des secours de l'art, on le renvoie, quant il aurait perdu même l'usage de tous ses membres.

Il y a à Gênes un établissement pour les sourds et muets, qui jouit d'une juste célébrité ; on y admet gratuitement les enfans pauvres qui satisfont à de certaines conditions.

Il n'y a aucune institution pour les aveugles.

Hors des établissemens publics, le Gouvernement n'intervient jamais à faveur de ces malheureux ; ils sont laissés à la charité publique.

Ce qui a été dit plus haut sur les obligations des parens est applicable ici.

DES IDIOTS ET DES FOUS.

1. Quels établissemens y a-t-il pour les recevoir ? 2. Sont-ils placés en pension chez des particuliers ? 3. Les place-t-on dans des maisons particulières ? 4. Quelles sont les obligations de leurs parens ?—Nous ne répondrons qu'à la première question ; ce qui a été dit ci-dessus s'applique parfaitement aux trois autres.

Il y a deux grands établissemens pour les fous ; l'un est à Turin, l'autre est à Gênes. Dans tous les deux on paie une modique pension. Ceux qui sont hors de cas de le faire, sont admis tout de même, mais c'est leur comune ou leur province qui paie pour eux. Dans quelques cas rares, on reçoit sans rétribution des individus aliénés.

Il y a dans quelques pays de montagnes, dans la vallée d'Aoste surtout, un grand nombre d'idiots, qu'on appelle vulgairement Crétins. Ils sont pour la plupart doux et inoffensifs ; aussi sont-ils l'objet de la commisération et de la pitié de tous leurs concitoyens. Il y a une telle émulation à les secourir et à leur fournir ce dont ils ont besoin, qu'il n'arrive jamais qu'on soit obligé de retirer un de ces malheureux dans un hospice. On sait d'ailleurs par une touchante croyance populaire, que la protection du Ciel est attachée à la maison habitée par un crétin.

EFFETS DES INSTITUTIONS DE CHARITE.

1. Sur l'industrie des ouvriers ? 2. Sur leur frugalité ? 3. Sur les rapports de dépendance et d'affection entre les pères et mères, leurs enfans et les autres parens ?—Les institutions de charité ne faisant, comme on l'a vû, que soulager un petit nombre des infortunés les plus graves, et s'abstenant de rien faire pour le pauvre valide, mais sans travail, ne sauraient excercer aucun effet fâcheux sur l'industrie et les habitudes morales des classes les moins fortunées de la société. S'il existe malheureusement parmi elles une si déplorable imprévoyance et si peu d'émulation, ce ne sont point les institutions de charité qu'il faut accuser, mais bien plutôt la profonde ignorance dans laquelle on les laisse croupir.

4. Sur

4. Sur l'âge auquel ils se marient ? 5. Sur la condition du journalier faisant un travail ordinaire, comparée à celle des individus qui vivent d'aumônes et de la charité publique ?— De même ce n'est point aux encouragemens que donne la charité publique, qu'il faut imputer le grand nombre de mariages précoces et imprévoyans qui se contractent. Si on en excepte ceux qui ont lieu entre des mendiens de profession, ils sont dûs, pour la plupart, d'abord à la disposition bien naturelle à des gens grossiers et ignorans à se livrer aux impulsions des passions du moment, sans s'inquiéter des conséquences de l'avenir; et ensuite au zèle aveugle que le clergé, et les personnes dévotes, mettent à encourager toutes espèces de mariages, dans le but erroné de parer aux désordres de mœurs et aux scandales des liaisons illégitimes.

Les rapports de famille ne sont nullement affectés par les institutions de charité. Telles qu'elles sont, l'homme pauvre regardera toujours ses parens comme son unique soutien contre l'adversité. D'ailleurs la loi Romaine sur l'autorité paternelle existant dans toute sa plénitude, les unions de familles sont plus faciles et plus communes que partout ailleurs.

On ne peut pas comparer le prix du travail du journalier honnête et indépendant, avec le gain des mendiens : il y a une si immense différence entre l'existence honorable de l'un, et l'humiliation, l'avilissement, la dégradation morale de l'autre, que, quoiqu'il fut possible que certains individus, habiles à exploiter la pitié du public, gagnassent beaucoup au de là de ce que rapporte un travail ordinaire, néanmoins leur sort ne serait pas comparable.

DE L'ETAT DES CLASSES OUVRIERES.

1. Quel est en général le taux du salaire d'un journalier, soit qu'il travaille à la journée, au mois, ou à l'année, soit qu'il reçoive, ou qu'il ne reçoive pas de provisions en nature ?— Un ouvrier ordinaire travaillant à la campagne, pendant le quatre mois d'été, gagne de 20 à 25 sous par jour : pendant les mois d'hiver, il ne gagne plus que de 12 à 15 sous ; et dans la moyenne saison de 15 à 20 sous : il y a peu d'ouvriers à la semaine ou au mois. Les valets de ferme, les bergers, et d'autres encore ayant un service permanent, reçoivent des gâges annuels. On leur fournit en général la quantité des denrées strictement nécessaire pour leur subsistance et celle de leur famille, et on leur donne de plus une somme en argent que varie de 80 à 100 francs. Les ouvriers, pendant les récoltes, reçoivent un salaire un peu plus fort, qui varie annuellement, selon l'abondance du travail, comparée au nombre des ouvriers qui se présentent sur le marché. L'usage général est de les nourrir tout le tems. Dans plusieurs endroits, à Santena par exemple, on ne fait faire les récoltes par des ouvriers payés à tant la journée, mais on donne à ceux qui la font une part proportionnelle de ce que l'on récolte. Ce mode est infiniment plus avantageux pour les paysans.

Le nombre des journaliers est peu nombreux en Piémont comparé à ce qu'il est en Angleterre : cela vient, 1^o, de la grande division des propriétés, qui fait que beaucoup de propriétaires cultivent leurs terres eux-mêmes ; 2^o, de la culture à métayer qui existe généralement : le métayer travaille, lui et sa famille, les terres de sa ferme, et il a rarement besoin d'ouvriers étrangers. Les ouvriers des villes gagnent quelques sous de plus que ceux des campagnes ; mais cette légère différence est (pour les simples manœuvres) plus que compensée par la grande cherté des loyers, et le plus haut prix des comestibles. Quant aux artisans qui exercent une profession qui exige un apprentissage et de l'habileté, ils peuvent gagner depuis deux francs jusqu'à cinq par jour. Le premier chiffre est à peu près le taux de la journée du maçon et du garçon charpentier, le second celui de l'orfèvre habile.

2. L'usage de donner de l'ouvrage à la tâche, est-il général ?—Quoiqu'on ne puisse pas dire que cet usage soit général, néanmoins il est très-répandu. Il s'est encore étendu dernièrement pour l'introduction des tissages à domicile. En agriculture même, les ouvrages à la tâche sont usités. Il arrive souvent que plusieurs ouvriers s'associent pour entreprendre un ouvrage dont le prix a été fixé d'avance.

3. Quel est, somme totale, ce qu'un ouvrier ordinaire peut gagner dans une année, en travaillant à la tâche ? Que peut-il gagner en travaillant à la journée ?—J'estime qu'un ouvrier ordinaire, travaillant à la campagne toute l'année, peut gagner de 200 à 300 francs ; ce qui fait 5 à 6 francs par semaine. Le simple manœuvre ne trouvera guères dans les villes à exécuter des travaux à la tâche. L'artisan, au contraire, s'il est rangé et laborieux, en trouvera tant qu'il voudra. J'estime que dans ce cas, il peut gagner de 20 à 30 pour cent en sus de l'ouvrier travaillant à la journée.

Ce qui a été dit ci-dessus, suffit pour donner une idée de ce que peut gagner un journalier par jour. Pour les habitans de la campagne, il y a une autre espèce de profit dont il faut tenir compte ; c'est le produit des vers-à-soie. Quelque pauvre que soit une famille de paysan, il est rare qu'elle n'ait pas les moyens d'élever une once ou deux de ces précieux insectes, qui doivent lui rapporter un gain net de quarante à soixante francs. Ce produit varie beaucoup suivant les différentes provinces : dans les pays de collines il est plus élevé. Cependant il ne change pas le sort des paysans ; car j'ai observé que dans les endroits, où les vers-à-soie étaient plus productifs, le prix de la main d'œuvre est au dessous du pris moyen du pays.

de pain bis, et de quelques soupes de légumes, de pâtes, ou de riz, qui ne sont pas souvent assaisonnées avec du lard. Il ne mange de la viande que deux ou trois fois dans l'année, dans les occasions les plus solennelles, et, excepté dans les pays de vignobles, il ne boit que fort peu de vin, d'une qualité tout à fait inférieure. Dans quelques parties du Piémont les chataignes et le lait font la base principale de la nourriture des pauvres gens. L'usage des pommes de terre est borné, jusqu'à présent, aux pays de montagnes. L'ouvrier peut se procurer la nourriture dont nous venons de parler, moyennant six sous par jour, ce qui constitue une dépense annuelle de 110 francs. S'il est marié, avec des enfans, la somme nécessaire pour la nourriture de la famille, sera le double et au delà. Il y a ensuite les dépenses de l'habillement, du blanchissage, de la manutention des ustensiles du ménage, et le loyer de la maison qu'il habite. Toutes réunies, elles égaleront, s'il est célibataire, celles que lui cause sa nourriture, et ne seront que moitié, s'il est marié. Ainsi donc un ouvrier non marié, ne peut pas vivre à moins de 220 à 250 francs par an. L'homme marié avec une famille aura besoin de 500 francs au moins. D'après l'estimation que nous avons faite plus haut, des gains de l'ouvrier à la journée, et à l'année, on voit que la recette et la dépense se balancent assez exactement. Il suffit donc du moindre désordre, ou du moindre malheur, pour réduire l'ouvrier à la misère, et lui faire contracter des dettes.

5. Y a-t-il de l'ouvrage pour les femmes et les enfans?—A la campagne, les femmes ont de l'ouvrage une grande partie de l'année. Le prix de leur journée peut s'évaluer par approximation au deux tiers de celui de la journée d'un travailleur ordinaire. Il y a peu d'ouvrage pour les enfans au-dessous de quinze ans. On les envoie garder les troupeaux, mais il est rare qu'ils soient employés par d'autres que leurs parens.

Dans les villes, les femmes s'occupent des ouvrages qui sont propres à leur sexe; et elles sont presque toutes employées. Un grand nombre servent dans des maisons particulières; d'autres travaillent chez les marchands tailleurs; enfin il y en a plusieurs dans les manufactures, soit de soie, soit de draps, soit de cotons. Quelques manufactures commencent à employer des enfans. A peu près deux mille travaillent dans les filatures de soie. Le prix de leur journée s'éloigne peu de dix sous.

6. Qu'est ce qu'une femme, et un enfant au-dessous de seize ans, peuvent gagner par semaine?—Une femme peut gagner trois francs par semaine pendant huit mois de l'année. Pendant l'hiver elle n'a d'autres ressources que de filer des chanvre, ce qui ne lui rapporte guère au-delà de cinq sous ou 2 francs par semaine au plus.

Les gains de la femme sont employés à faire face aux dépenses du ménage. Peut-être en consacre-t-elle une partie à tenir ses habillemens en bon état, ou à s'acheter quelques uns de ces petits ornemens qui tiennent tant à cœur à la vanité féminine.

7. Qu'est ce que peut gagner dans le courant d'une année la femme d'un laboureur, assistée de quatre enfans, en les supposant respectivement âgés de 14, 11, 8 et 5 ans, et que l'aîné soit un garçon?—En tenant compte du produit des vers-à-soie, qu'une femme peut aussi bien élever qu'un homme, je crois que cette famille peut gagner de 250 à 300 francs dans l'année. Si l'on faisait cependant une commune de tous les ménages du pays, je crains qu'on ne trouvait ces chiffres trop élevés.

8. Un ouvrier ayant une famille telle que nous l'avons supposée ci-dessus, peut-il vivre sans secours?—Je crois qu'il le peut: toutefois il sera obligé de se contenter de la nourriture la plus simple et la plus grossière; il ne pourra point faire usage de la viande et ne boire que peu de vin: il sera obligé de consommer deux fois plus de farine de maïs que de farine de froment. Malgré toute l'économie possible, si les récoltes ont été mauvaises, et que par suite les denrées soient chères, il lui sera presque impossible d'arriver jusqu'à la fin de l'année, sans avoir recours à la charité de ses voisins, ou des habitans de sa commune; elle ne saurait lui manquer, s'il a toujours été honnête, s'il jouit d'une bonne réputation.

9. Peut-il faire des épargnes?—Cela me paraît absolument impossible.

10. Quelle est la quantité de terrain annexée ordinairement aux habitations des journaliers?—Une très-petite quantité. Les propriétaires et les fermiers accordent aux valets de ferme qu'ils emploient le tiers ou le quart d'un acre pour y cultiver quelques légumes. Les journaliers qui ne possèdent pas de maison, trouvent difficilement à louer des habitations avec un jardin de quelque étendue: cela arrive pourtant quelquefois.

11. A quelles classes de personnes les maisons de journalier appartiennent-elles?—Une partie appartient aux journaliers eux-mêmes; les autres sont pour la plupart à des petits propriétaires. Il est rare qu'un homme jouissant d'une grande fortune en possède un grand nombre; pour l'ordinaire, il n'a pas de quoi loger tous ceux qui travaillent sur ses terres.

12. Quel est le prix du loyer d'une habitation commune de journalier, et quel est leur prix de vente?—Un journalier peut se loger suivant l'usage du pays, c'est-à-dire, en ayant trois chambres, deux pour la famille et une pour le ménage, moyennant quarante à cinquante francs par an. Le capital employé à la construction de maisons de paysans ne saurait rapporter de bénéfices extraordinaires, dans un pays où les matériaux sont à la portée de tout le monde, et où il y a un nombre très-grand de maçons et de charpentiers.

13. Les journaliers trouvent-ils à louer de petites quantités de terre, et à quel prix?—Ce n'est guère l'usage en Piémont, excepté peut-être dans les pays de vignobles, où un ouvrier ouvrier loue volontiers deux ou trois arpens de vignes, à la culture desquels il emploie une partie de son travail. Les paysans, dès qu'ils possèdent quelques petits capitaux, ne se soucient guère de l'industrie du fermage : ils préfèrent se livrer à un petit commerce, ou à se faire les fonds nécessaires pour obtenir une bonne métairie.

Il est absolument impossible de faire la moindre réponse aux questions qui se suivent depuis le N° 14, jusqu'au N° 23, et qui ont rapport au mouvement annuel de la population ; attendu qu'il n'existe pas de registres de l'état civil ; et que le gouvernement ne s'est jamais occupé de recueillir le plus petit document statistique qui aurait rapport à ces questions, qui sont cependant d'une aussi haute importance.

23. Quelles sont les causes par lesquelles les mariages sont retardés ?—La conscription, qui oblige presque tous les jeunes gens vigoureux à un service militaire, plus ou moins suivi, jusqu'à l'âge de trente ans, a bien un certain effet, et tend à faire marier les jeunes gens un peu plus tard, qu'ils ne le feraient sans cela. Cependant il est moins puissant qu'on ne serait d'abord porté à la croire ; car malgré la douloureuse nécessité où sont les soldats mariés de quitter de tems en tems leurs femmes, je ne crois pas que les célibataires forment plus d'un tiers des contingens.

24. Quelles épargnes un homme marié, et un célibataire, peuvent-ils faire ?—Bien peu. Il y a d'ailleurs beaucoup d'improvoyance dans le peuple ; et il est rare que même les meilleurs ouvriers, ceux qui ont de gros salaires, ne dépensent pas tout ce qu'ils gagnent. Dès qu'on monte un degré dans l'échelle sociale, la question change complètement. En effet, les petits propriétaires, les petits commerçans, les petits industriels, sont tous extrêmement rangés, et ils augmentent pour la plupart leur fortune.

25. Comment les épargnes sont-elles employées ?—L'administration de Turin a vainement tenté, dans son zèle pour le bien du peuple, d'introduire l'inappréciable institution des caisses d'épargnes. Tous ses efforts sont restés sans résultats. L'ouvrier aime mieux, s'il ne dépense pas tout son profit au cabaret, thésauriser, dans le but d'amasser de quoi se rendre indépendant ; soit, s'il est à la campagne, en achetant un petit morceau de terrain ; soit, s'il est en ville, en fondant un établissement pour son compte.

Enclosure (E.)

LA MENDICITE A Gênes.

1. La mendicité publique, n'étant pas actuellement défendue, il est difficile de connoître et d'établir le nombre des individus qui se livrent à cet état. On peut cependant conjecturer qu'il existe au moins deux cent mendiants dans la ville de Gênes, ce qui, en ajoutant leurs familles, ou du moins ceux des membres de leurs familles qui vivent sur le produit de leur quête, peut en porter le nombre de six à sept cent.

2. Les pauvres non mendiants, et sans emploi, sont secourus à domicile par le magistrat de miséricorde, par les dames de miséricorde, et par d'autres administrateurs charitables, qui leur distribuent le revenu de beaucoup de legs pieux qu'elles sont chargées d'administrer.

3. Les enfans des pauvres, à quelque classe qu'ils appartiennent, sont instruits gratuitement dans les écoles publiques primaires, administrées par l'autorité municipale. Six de ces écoles sont destinées aux garçons, et deux aux jeunes filles.

4. Il y a à Gênes un mont de piété, où les pauvres peuvent emprunter sur gage, à l'intérêt de huit pour cent.

5. Les pauvres de tout âge depuis la première enfance, natifs de la ville de Gênes, sont reçus, logés, et nourris gratuitement, dans l'hospice des pauvres, jusqu'à la concurrence des moyens de cet établissement. On y reçoit aussi les autres pauvres du Duché, moyennant une rétribution modique.

6. Deux grands hopitaux existent à Gênes ; l'un destiné au traitement des maladies aiguës, l'autre aux incurables, et aux aliénés. On vient de commencer la construction d'un nouvel hôpital pour ces derniers. Il existe en outre, dans un des faubourgs de la ville, un petit établissement pour la lèpre et autres maladies de la peau.

7. Le conservatoire des sœurs de S. Joseph fournit, conformément à ses statuts, aux pauvres malades honteux, le médecin, le chirurgien, et les médicamens. Une association pieuse, sous le titre de N. D. de la Providence, a été érigée à Gênes il y a peu d'années, dans le même but.

8. Les femmes en couche pauvres, nées dans la ville, ou y domiciliées depuis trois ans, sont admises et traitées gratuitement, au grand Hôpital dit de Pammatone.

9. Les enfans illégitimes, et ceux qui sont abandonnés par leurs parens, sont reçus gratuitement à l'Hôpital de Pammatone, pourvu qu'on les place secrètement dans le tour qui y est établi à cet effet. Ces enfans trouvés restent à la charge de l'administration de l'hôpital, les garçons jusqu'à l'âge de 12 ans révolus, les filles pendant toute leur vie, à moins qu'elles ne se marient.

10. Les fous et les idiots natifs de Gênes et pauvres, sont reçus gratuitement à l'hôpital des incurables, et des aliénés. Ceux des autres parties du Duché, et les non pauvres, y sont aussi reçus, moyennant une retribution proportionnée à la nourriture qu'on leur donne.

11 et 13. Un laboureur gagne ordinairement pour son travail, 300 à 350 francs par année, et est obligé de se nourrir sur se gages.

Un ouvrier en manufactures ordinaires, peut gagner de 400 à 500 francs.

Un ouvrier en manufactures fines, peut gagner de 500 à 700 francs.

12. Les laboureurs et les ouvriers ordinaires, sont presque toujours payés à la journée. Les ouvriers en manufactures fines le sont quelquefois à la tâche.

14. A défaut d'autres ressources, un ouvrier ou un laboureur ne pourrait dépenser que ce qu'il gagne. S'il est marié, souvent la femme gagne quelque chose de son côté, et le tout ensemble peut fournir le moyen de mieux entretenir la famille.

15 et 16. Les ouvriers et les journaliers perçoivent, ainsi qu'on l'a déjà énoncé, un salaire en argent, pour prix de leur journée de travail. Celui qui les fait travailler, ne leur loue au reste, ni habitation, ni terrain.

17. Dans la province de Gênes le nombre des morts monte à peu près; année ordinaire, au trois et demi pour cent sur la population.

18. Les naissances peuvent être calculées en raison du cinq pour cent idem.

19. Le nombre des individus composants une famille, peut-être évalué à cinq, terme moyen.

20, 24 et 25. Les nombre des mariages est environ de six sur mille individus, par année. Depuis quelque tems les mariages paraissent être un peu moins nombreux, ce qu'on attribue à la misère du bas peuple, et en partie à l'immoralité. Les hommes se marient en général fort jeunes; les femmes le plus souvent avant leur vingtième année.

21. On manque de données pour répondre à cette question, même par approximation. Le nombre des enfans qu'on reçoit annuellement à l'hospice des enfans trouvés est de 280 environ, sur la population de toute la province, qui monte à 208,000.

22. Le nombre des enfans qui meurent dans la première année est environ de 26 pour 100.

23. Avant la dixième année, il en meurt environ 45 pour 100. Avant la seizième, environ 48 pour 100.

26. Il n'existe point à Gênes de caisse d'épargne, où les ouvriers puissent placer à intérêt le superflu de leur dépense. Ce superflu d'ailleurs est, comme on a vu, fort peu de chose, de sorte que, dans l'état actuel des choses, on peut craindre que l'établissement d'une caisse d'épargne n'obtiendrait pas facilement le but principal de son institution, celui d'augmenter les moyens, et d'améliorer le sort, du bas peuple.

REPONSES AUX QUESTIONS SUR LES PAUVRES, en tant qu'elles regardent la Savoye.

Savoy.

1. La mendicité est fort commune dans les environs de Chambéry et dans la haute Tarentaise. Dans les autres provinces, elle n'est pas plus repandue qu'en France, et bien moins qu'en Italie. Le nombre total des mendiants était de 3,688 en l'année 1789. Il s'éleva sous le régime Français à 4,360. Dès lors la mendicité est beaucoup diminuée, soit par suite de l'abaissement des charges publiques, soit à cause de la cessation des expropriations forcées qui étaient journellement poursuivies par le fisc Français contre les parens des conscrits refractaires, et par les prêteurs d'argent Gênois contre leurs debiteurs. On ne peut maintenant évaluer le nombre des mendiants à plus de 2,500, c'est-à-dire à de la population.

2. La mendicité errante étant prohibée par les lois, les mendiants n'ont droit à aucun secours. La ville de Chambéry renferme un dépôt de mendicité, où cent indigens sont recueillis, et où l'on essaye de les occuper à divers travaux.

3. Il existe dans le Duché environ 250 établissemens de charité, qui possèdent des fonds spécialement destinés au soulagement des pauvres du lieu où ils sont situés. Mais ces ressources sont tres-insuffisantes, surtout dans le années de mauvaise récolte. Mais les familles pauvres sont secourues par leurs voisins, leurs parens, les ecclésiastiques, et autres personnes charitables de la commune.

Ces secours sont distribués dans la ville de Chambéry d'après un système très-simple, et qui est peut-être ce qu'on peut trouver de mieux dans ce guere. Les pauvres sont classés en 24 quartiers, dont chacun est confié à la direction de trois dames de charité, dont la plupart appartiennent à la plus haute classe de la société. Chacun de ces bureaux recherche, enregistre, et surveille les besoins des indigens; donne de secours secrettement aux familles pour qui la publicité de leur situation serait un deshonneur; et retire les bienfaits de la charité à ceux qui s'en rendent indignes par leur immoralité. Cette œuvre n'a d'autres d'autres ressources que le 10^{me} du prix des billets de théâtre, qui se prélève en faveur des pauvres ; le produit des grandes quêtes de Noël et de Pâques, et quelques dons particuliers et secrets. Si elle était assez riche pour pouvoir fournir du travail dans l'intérieur des familles indigentes, cette institution serait bien supérieure à tous les autres établissemens de charité.

Ce que nous venons ci dire ne se rapporte qu'aux indigens en général, car lorsque la pauvreté est jointe à quelque circonstance particulière, elle est recueillie, et secourue dans plusieurs institutions. L'Hospice de Charité de Chambéry a 171 places destinées aux vieillards, aux orphélins, et aux personnes infirmes. L'Asyle de St. Benoît est aussi consacré, dans la même ville, aux vieillards des deux sexes, appartenans à la classe aisée de la société, qui n'ont plus de moyens d'existence, et la maison de orphélins y est destinée à recevoir les jeunes filles sans fortune de la classe moyenne, et des artisans, et à leur donner une éducation, qui puisse leur assurer un sort indépendant.

5. Il n'existe pas de mont-de-piété en Savoye.

6. Voir la réponse à la 3 question.

7. Chambéry renferme un Hôtel-Dieu de 80 lits, qui sont constamment occupés. Il y existe en outre des institutions spéciales pour les maladies incurables, ou contagieuses, et pour les voyageurs malades. Les autres localités du Duché où il se trouve des hôpitaux pour les malades sont Annecy, Thonon, St. Jean-de-Maurienne, Montmelian, Moutiers, Yenne, la Roche, la Motte-Servolex, et Thônes.

9. Parmi les nombreux établissemens de bienfaisance de la ville de Chambéry, il y existe un hospice, dit de la Maternité, spécialement destiné à recevoir les femmes en couche, mariées ou non mariées.

10. L'hospice des enfans trouvés de Chambéry, et celui de Thonon, étant destinées à recevoir tous les enfans abandonnés, qui peuvent même y être déposés clandestinement, la plupart des enfans illégitimes y est portée la première nuit après leur naissance, soit que leurs parens soient riches ou pauvres. Ceux qui naissent dans les provinces éloignées de ces deux villes, sont ordinairement élevés par leur mère, et partagent leur fortune, ou leur indigence.

11. Il existe à quelque distance de Chambéry un hospice pour 60 aliénés qui y sont gratuitement soignés. Mais jusqu'ici cette institution ne renfermait qu'une vingtaine de places, et comme elle était insuffisante les autres aliénés étaient à la charge de leur commune.

12. Le régime des maisons de charité est différent pour chacune d'elles, et il serait difficile de se procurer des détails exacte à cet égard. En général la dépense monte de 12 à 15 sous par jour pour l'entretien de chaque individu. Mais il faut observer, que l'entretien matériel des personnes admises dans ces établissemens ne forme guère que la moitié de la dépense annuelle. L'entretien des gens de service ; les fraix d'administration ; les réparations, manutentions, &c. exigeant une somme à peu près égale. Quant aux prisonniers, ils reçoivent journellement du gouvernement 24 onces de pain et une forte ration de soupe, qui revient à l'administration à 18 centimes, et se compose de légumes et pommes de terre. Ils reçoivent en outre des secours de la charité publique, et le général de Boigne a ajouté à ses nombreuses institutions philanthropiques une rente annuelle en faveur des prisonniers de Chambéry.

L'utilité des établissemens de charité destinés aux pauvres orphélins, aux pauvres vieillards, et aux pauvres infirmes, ne peut être revoquée en doute. Quant aux dépôts pour les mendiens valides, ils ne servent, à mon avis, que comme épouvantail pour décourager la mendicité volontaire, et engage les pauvres à chercher du travail. Le nombre des mendiens est toujours en proportion directe de la disposition des habitans à faire l'aumône ; et si tous les mendiens actuellemens existans dans une contrée étaient renfermés dans des dépôts de mendicité, d'autres indigens quitteraient tout travail journalier pour les remplacer aux portes des temples, et à celles des personnes charitables.

13. Un journalier gagne ordinairement 30 sols par jour en été, et 24 s. ou 20 s. en hiver, sans être nourri ; ou bien 12 s. avec la nourriture et un litre de vin ; pendant les labours des vignes, et les moissons, ils reçoivent souvent un litre et demi, ou deux litres de vin. Une femme gagne un tiers de moins. Les journaliers sont payés à la fin de la journée, ou de la semaine.

14. Il est impossible de répondre exactement à cette question, parce que le nombre de journées que peut faire un journalier de campagne, varie suivant la longueur de l'hiver, et le nombre des jours de pluie où il est sans travail. En général un ménage peut subsister sans secours étranger, lorsque deux des individus qui le composent peuvent travailler à la journée ; mais un journalier ne peut entretenir sa famille par son seul travail.

Savoy.

15, 16. La classe des journaliers, telle qu'elle existe en Angleterre, est très-peu nombreuse en Savoye, où la population presque entière est composée de propriétaires. Sur 102,000 familles que contient le Duché, on compte 85,000 chefs de familles propriétaires d'une portion quelconque du sol, dont 80,000 environ sont cultivateurs. Les journaliers ne peuvent par conséquent être beaucoup employés. Aussi les recensemens faits en 1789 et en 1801 ne portent que neuf à dix mille personnes, des deux sexes, soit artisans, soit ouvriers de campagne, travaillants à la journée, dans la partie de la Savoye qui formait, depuis 1789, le département du Mont Blanc, et qui donnerait un total de 14 à 15,000 pour tout le Duché. Généralement les journaliers prennent à bail, de quelque petit propriétaire, une portion de chaumière et un demi acre, ou un acre de terres labourables, au prix de 60 à 100 f. qu'ils payent en journées.

17. D'après les tables statistiques publiées sous le régime Française, les naissances peuvent être calculées au 29 de la population, et le nombre des décès au 42. D'après un mémoire publié récemment sur la province Maurdecure, et d'après plusieurs autres documens partiels, la proportion n'aurait pas changée sensiblement. Mais on doit observer, que plusieurs localités s'écartent beaucoup de la moyenne pour le nombre des décès. Quelques communes entourées de marais présentent une mortalité d'un 28, tandis que dans quelques communes des plus hautes Alpes, elle n'est que d'un 52 de la population.

18. Sur 1,000 habitans on compte en Savoye 127 enfans au dessous de 5 ans, 124 au dessous 10 ans, et 118 au dessous de 15 ans, en tout 369 individus qui n'ont pas accompli leur 15 année; d'où il résulte, que les mariages sont très-féconds, puisque les enfans d'un à 15 ans forment les $\frac{37}{100}$ de la population, et que le mortalité pèse considérablement sur l'enfance, puisque sur 1,000 habitans, 631 seulement dépassent l'âge de 15 ans.

22. Les mariages sont assez précoces. Les jeunes gens se marient ordinairement de 20 à 24 ans, et les femmes de 18 à 20.

Les épargnes sont une chose presque inconnue en Savoye. Chez les gens riches, comme chez ceux qui ne le sont pas, chez le gentilhomme comme chez le paysan, il est insolite et étrange de faire servir les revenus à un autre usage que celui de les dépenser. Quelques gens d'affaires et les usuriers sont les seuls qui songent à augmenter leur patrimoine. On voit aussi quelques négocians et artisans économiser leurs profits; mais dans l'intention seulement d'acquiescer une maison de campagne, à laquelle ils consacrent toutes leurs épargnes subséquentes.

24. Les lois civiles ne renferment aucune disposition sur ce sujet. D'après les lois ecclésiastiques, le mariage peut être contracté aussitôt après la puberté réelle, quelque soit l'âge des contractans.

25. Tout homme qui a 12 enfans est exempt des contributions directes. Avant la Révolution, il était même exempt des contributions indirectes; mais le Gouvernement a sagement commué cette immunité en une pension annuelle de 250 francs.

26. Les indigens ne s'adressent jamais à l'autorité, mais à la charité particulière, qui est inépuisable, car (excepté pendant la famine de 1817,) il n'est jamais arrivé qu'un homme soit mort de faim. Lorsque la conduite des indigens est suspecte, et qu'ils peuvent être considérés comme vagabonds, l'autorité les renvoie dans leurs communes, ou les chasse du pays, s'ils sont étrangers.

27. L'emploi des lègs de cette nature est assez ordinairement déterminé dans les Testaments. S'il n'y a pas de désignation spéciale, les conseils de charité disposent des fonds suivant leur conscience, et ils rendent compte au conseil général séant à Chambéry.

Note.—On a répondu indirectement aux questions 18, 20 et 21. On ne connaît pas le nombre des enfans au dessous de 18 ans. Mais les individus des deux sexes au dessous de 20 ans, et au dessus de 15 ans, sont dans la proportion de 110 à 100. Ce qui donne pour la population en général 479 personnes au dessous de 20 ans, pour chaque mille, soit pour 204 familles. Ce qui peut servir à calculer approximativement le nombre moyen d'enfans existans dans chaque famille. Quant au nombre d'enfans nés de chaque mariage, on peut l'évaluer en moyenne de 4 à 5.

On ne connaît point de recensement récent des enfans trouvés, ni des enfans illégitimes. En 1789 le nombre des enfans naturels, joint à celui des enfans légitimes abandonnés, était d'un 37 de la population. En 1801, cette proportion avait augmenté d'un quart; en 1806, elle était seulement d'un 34. Maintenant elle est un peu moindre, que sous le régime Français. Les villes sont pour près de la moitié dans le nombre des naissances illégitimes, tandis que dans une grande partie des communes écartées, il n'y a pas eu d'enfans naturels de mémoire d'homme.

VENICE.

REPORT on the State and Condition of the Poor at Venice, by Consul-General Money.

1. IS there any compulsory legal provision for the poor in Venice?—None.

2. In what manner are the funds arising from voluntary donations collected in Venice?—There is a commission of public charity, composed of the laity of the first rank and consideration in Venice, at the head of which is the patriarch.

All sums destined for the relief of the poor and the indigent, from whatever source, are placed at the disposal of this commission.

These funds arise from bequests, which are numerous, from voluntary contributions, from collections made by lay associations in each of the 30 parishes, which hold their meetings either at the church or at the house of the priest; sometimes from the produce of a lottery; and by a singular contrivance of the late patriarch, to render an old custom of complimentary visits on New Year's-day contributory to the purposes of charity, he had it announced, that all who would subscribe to the funds of the commission of public charity should have their names published, and be exempted from the costly ceremony above adverted to.

3. By what authority are they distributed?—By that of the same commission, which receives the reports of the state of the poor in the several parishes, and particularly inquires into the circumstances of every case.

4. What constitutes a claim to relief, and how is that claim investigated?—Among the lower classes, extreme poverty without the means of obtaining subsistence, or incapability from age or sickness to labour for it. This is certified by the parish priest to the association mentioned in answer to query No. 2, which makes itself acquainted with every case of distress. But there is great distress to be relieved among those who once constituted the higher classes of society, but whose families, since the fall of the Republic, have, from various causes, fallen into decay; these make their application direct to the commission, and are relieved according to their necessities and the state of their funds.

5. What is the amount of relief usually given in each case, and for what length of time is it usually continued?—The amount of relief given, according to the class and circumstances of the distressed, is from 10 cents. to 65 cents. per head per day (or from 3 s. 4 d. to 5 s. 4 d. sterling).

Sic.

These alms are continued as long as the parish priest certifies the need of those of the lower classes, or the commission, through its inquiries, are satisfied of the necessities of the others.

6. Is relief given by taking the poor into almshouses or houses of industry, or by giving them relief at home; and in the latter case, is it given in money or in food and clothing?—There are no almshouses in Venice, but there are houses of industry, where work of various descriptions is provided for those who are able to work. Relief is given to many at home, but to most upon their personal appearance before some of the members of the commission.

In winter relief is afforded by the commission both in food and clothing.

7. What is the number of persons in Venice usually receiving relief, and what is the least and greatest number known during the last 10 years?—The number usually receiving relief, and which is the least number during the last 10 years, is about 47,000; the greatest number in the last 10 years was about 50,000. The last year 42,705 received relief, either at home or by personal application to the commission, and the number in houses of industry and hospitals, 4,667.

8. Is there much difficulty in procuring sufficient funds for the support of the poor in times of distress, or is the supply so large as at all to diminish the industry and providence of the working classes?—It has been found impossible to procure sufficient funds for the support of the poor at Venice, and there never was so large a supply as at all to diminish the industry and providence of the working classes. When the funds prove insufficient, the commune contribute, and after their contributions, whatever is sufficient is supplied by the Government.

9. Do cases of death by starvation ever occur? Do the poorer classes afford much assistance to one another in time of sickness or want of employment?—Cases of death by starvation never occur. Even during the great distress caused by the blockade in 1813, and the famine in 1817, no occurrence of this kind was known. In fact, the more urgent the circumstances are, the more abundant are the subscriptions and donations.

The poorer classes are remarkable for their kindness to each other in times of sickness and need. Many instances of this have fallen under my own observation.

10. Is there a foundling hospital at Venice, and if so, what is the number of infants annually admitted into it?—There is a foundling hospital in Venice, which was instituted in 1346, and the number received into it annually is between 400 and 500. I have known seven found in the receptacle in one morning.

P. L. (F).

Each child is immediately given to a wet nurse; at the end of seven or eight days it is vaccinated, and sent to nurse in the country.

11. Do members of the same family, among the poorer classes in general, show much disposition to assist one another in distress, sickness or old age?—There is much family affection in all classes of the Venetians, and in sickness, distress and old age, among the poorer classes, they show every disposition to assist and relieve each other.

The clergy, who have great influence over the lower classes, exert themselves much to cultivate the good feeling which subsists among them towards one another.

12. Have you any other observations to make on the relief afforded to the poor at Venice?—Besides the voluntary contributions and the assistance of the commune and the Government, the several charitable institutions (of which there are no less than 10) in this city, have annual incomes derivable from various bequests in land and other property, amounting to 483,000 Austrian livres (or 16,000 l. sterling.) Last year the commune contributed 359,000 Austrian livres (or 11,970 l. sterling) and the Government 460,000 Austrian livres (or 15,330 l. sterling). The Government contributes annually for the foundlings and the insane of the eight Venetian provinces, 1,000,000 of Austrian livres, (33,000 l. sterling). I should remark, that among other resources which the commission of public charity have at their command, is a tax upon the theatres and other places of public amusement.

The total expenditure of the commission of public charity may be taken approximately at 3,000,000 of Austrian livres, or 100,000 l. sterling annually, for the city of Venice alone, which is now declared to contain a population of 112,000.

Mendicity is not permitted in the streets of Venice, and although distress does force mendicants to appear when they can escape the vigilance of the police, yet I do not believe that 20 beggars are to be met with in this large and populous city.

The poor in every parish in Venice have the benefit of a physician, a surgeon and medicines gratis; the expense of these is paid by the commune.

Every commune in the Venetian provinces is bound to support the poor and the indigent within its limits, whether they be natives of the commune or not. No commune or parish can remove from it a pauper, because he may have been born in another. Ten years' residence entitles a man to a settlement in a different parish from that of his birth. When a commune to which a pauper does not belong affords him relief, it is always re-imbursed by his own parish.

Every commune derives funds from local taxes; the commune of towns from taxes on certain articles of consumption; the communes in the country, where articles of consumption are not taxed, from an addition to the capitation tax, which is levied by the State, but all communes have, more or less, sources of revenue from land, houses and charitable bequests, which are very frequent in these states.

The number of foundlings at present in the country under the age of 12 years is 2,300. After that age the child is transferred from the family who have the charge of it, and apprenticed to learn some craft or trade, or servitude, but so kind-hearted are the people in the Venetian provinces, that in numerous instances, from attachment to the child which they have reared, they have begged, when the time arrived for its removal, to be allowed to keep it as their own.

GREECE.

REPLIES to the QUERIES of the Poor Law Commissioners. Enclosed in Mr. Dawkins
Letter, of the 1st May 1834, to Mr. Backhouse.

VAGRANTS.

Before the Revolution, two classes of vagrants existed in Greece: of these, one class consisted of those individuals who, having no property of their own, and being averse to labour, lived by robbery; the other class consisted of those persons who were indeed destitute, but refusing to labour, did not at the same time resort to robbery: the latter existed by the charity of their relations, and of other benevolent individuals, and the former were constantly pursued by the Turkish police.

In two provinces only of the new Greek State, viz. Thravari in Acarnania, and Cloutzinas of Kalavryta, does systematic beggary exist; in these places, many persons mutilated their new-born children for the express purpose of exciting the compassion of the public; but neither before the Revolution, during the Revolution, nor even now, is there any public establishment for the relief of either of the two above classes of vagrants; and notwithstanding that during the Revolution the number of these vagrants increased, it is now certain that their numbers have sensibly diminished, and it is to be hoped that as soon as the municipalities are regularly established, all these individuals will be obliged to labour for their subsistence.

There exists no public institution or decree organizing the relief to be granted to the poor in Greece; neither did anything of the kind exist before the Revolution, although the country was formed into municipalities. It was feared that the Ottoman authorities would appropriate to themselves any resources which might be set apart for the poor. Charitable subscriptions were therefore the only means by which the poor, sick, &c. obtained relief.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

No regulations for their relief existed either before or after the Revolution.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE, AND SICK.

No regulations ever existed on these heads. The aged who were destitute received, and still receive, assistance from the charitably disposed, and from the monasteries; but this assistance is voluntary, not obligatory.

With regard to hospitals, there are only two, one at Nauplia and one at Syra; the first is at present given up to the military service, and the second, belonging to the municipality of Syra, is maintained by a small duty levied on merchandize; the one at Nauplia was formerly supported in the same manner.

CHILDREN.

The support of bastards falls upon their fathers. With regard to foundlings, who are generally left clandestinely at the church doors, the local authorities take charge of them, and entrust them to nurses, whose expenses are defrayed by the Government; benevolent individuals likewise frequently take charge of them, and bring them up at their own expense. The number of foundlings supported by the Government barely exceeds forty throughout the whole State, by which it appears that depravity of morals in Greece is not great.

For the support of destitute orphans, an establishment (the Orphanotropheion,) exists at Ægina, where many are brought up at the expense of the Government, and are taught to read and write, and various trades. However, the nearest relations of the orphans generally consider it to be a religious duty to take care of them; so that in consequence of this praiseworthy feeling, they are seldom left entirely destitute, unless they have no relations, or unless the latter have no means of assistance at their disposal. Moreover, there are numerous benevolent persons who are in the habit of taking orphans into their houses, and bringing them up at their own expense.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

Individuals of these descriptions, who have no relations, live by charity. No institution or law exists for their relief.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

Individuals of this description, who have no relations, exist by charity. No institution or law exists for their relief.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

With regard to the result of the above-mentioned institutions, nothing can be said, as there are no grounds for forming an opinion. It is obvious however that the establishment of such institutions would be very beneficial to the poor

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—It is impossible to define the exact amount of the daily wages of labourers, as it differs in every place, according to the nature of the spot, the description of labour, the skill required, and the want of hands. The average of labourers' wages may however be estimated at two drachms a day (17 d.), without food.

2. Is piece-work general?—Labourers generally work by day-work; but sometimes also by piece-work.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—Every labourer can on an average earn about 600 drachms a year (18 l. 1 s. 2 d.)

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—It is difficult to state precisely the annual expenditure of a labourer, as it varies in most places; one may say, however, on an average, that it amounts to 600 drachms (18 l. 1 s. 2 d.)

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—The occupations of women and children are knitting, weaving and washing. Children generally learn some trade by which they earn their livelihood, or assist their parents in their labour.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—The average earnings of women, and children under 16 years, are about 7 drachms a week (4 s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.)

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A woman of this description can earn about two drachms a day (17 d.), without neglecting her domestic affairs.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—It can: its expenses may amount to about 40 or 50 drachms a month (1 l. 8 s. 4 d. or 1 l. 15 s. 5 d.)

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—Such a family can save something; but the exact amount cannot be stated, as it depends upon various circumstances.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—Calculated to be not less than 20, nor more than 300, square pikes (2 $\frac{1}{2}$ feet to a pike), or from 50 to 750 feet.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—Few labourers rent houses, as they have mostly habitations of their own.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Lands are farmed to labourers. The proprietor gives the seed, and takes half the produce, after deducting the expenses.

14. 15. 16. The proportion of annual deaths, births and marriages to the whole population?—In the absence of all returns on this subject, no positive answer can be given. All that is known on this subject is, that last year the deaths were far fewer in number than the births.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Four children to each marriage.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—Illegitimate children must be very few in number, as we have already seen the foundlings whom the Government maintains are not more than 40.

19. 20. 21. The proportion of children that die before the end of their 1st, 10th and 18th year?—No returns exist on this subject.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Males, at between 22 and 35; females, at between 13 and 25.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Want of means only delay marriages.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Unknown.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—They place them out at interest.

Labour hitherto has not much increased in Greece; the labourers are industrious, frugal, and attached to their relations.

The Government is at present occupied in the construction of prisons and penitentiaries. A central penitentiary will be erected at Monemvasia for the reception of those individuals who have been condemned to five years' imprisonment. Three other penitentiaries will be erected at Nauplia, Negropont and Missolonghi, for the reception of those condemned to from one to five years' imprisonment. There will be ten prisons, one in each province. Prisons will also be erected at the seat of every court of justices of the peace, for the reception of debtors and offenders: the organization of these prisons will take place hereafter.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE INTERIOR.

Foreign

GREECE.

Such only are the answers we can return to the questions of His Britannic Majesty's Government. It is well known that the organization of Greece has only just commenced under the auspices of His Majesty, and that the Government is occupied without intermission in laying the foundation of a general organization, and has not time to attend to each special branch of the public administration, the accomplishment of which is the work of years, and the result of the organization of municipalities. It is this difficulty which has obliged me to draw up the answers more upon supposition than on positive information. I may add, that in consequence of the vast extent of land in Greece in comparison with the number of its inhabitants, the latter apply themselves mostly to agriculture and the care of flocks, by which means they procure ample means of subsistence; and the few manufactures which exist in Greece being all made by hand, sufficient employment is to be procured by every individual. These are the reasons why the number of the poor is so limited notwithstanding that late events were so much opposed to the progress of arts and industry.

PATRAS, IN THE MOREA.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent, and under what form, does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—There are a few lame, blind and mutilated beggars in the towns, who receive casual alms from passers by. A blind priest sits all day long under my garden wall, silently imploring charity; he has no other means of subsistence.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—None.

Patras.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

No provision or regulation whatsoever of the nature referred to under this head exists.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

There is no provision of any kind for the aged poor; nor institution, nor almshouse for their reception.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—There is no existing law upon the subject.

SICK.

There are no institutions nor provision for the sick, or lying-in women, nor any medical or surgical assistance afforded to them, except at their own expense. There was a hospital at Syra; whether it exists at present, I do not know.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—There being no law on the subject, the burthen of maintenance falls on the mother.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—Not at all.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—None are so supported, except foundlings.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they taken into establishments for their reception?—There are no such establishments. The Orphanotrophe, founded at Ægina, for children whose parents fell in the Greek war, is not maintained by the present Government; and the building is converted to other purposes.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders?—They are never so quartered.

6. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—No provision for orphans or deserted children. Three drachmas, about 2s. 2½d., a week is allowed by the Government to the person who nurses a foundling.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—There is no law on the subject.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

There is no provision whatever for them.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

There are no establishments, nor any public provision for them. I have seen a crazy, half-naked woman, about the streets of this town for the last three years, who lives on the offal or scraps she can pick up or get by importunity ; when her conduct is violent, she is arrested and manacled by the police, but no lodging or sustenance is provided for her at other times.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—There is no law on the subject.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

It will be seen by the preceding answers that the case supposed does not exist in this country.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The ordinary daily wages of an agricultural labourer without provisions are, in summer, 1s. 2½d., in winter, 11d. An agricultural labourer, hired by the year, and provided with food, receives generally about 9s. per month, and shoes. A carpenter, smith, mason, &c., receive per day 2s. to 2s. 3d.; tailors, shoemakers, &c., about 1s. 6d. to 1s. 9d.

2. Is piece-work general?—Masons and carpenters frequently work by the job; and task-work is common among agricultural labourers.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—Deduction being made for the enormous number of festivals observed by the Greek church, there remain but about 248 working days; and the earnings of an average labourer, including all advantages, may be about 12*l.* in the year.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—I have no means of forming an estimate.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Carding cotton wool, spinning with the distaff, weaving coarse cloth in small hand-loom, knitting; assisting in harvest-work, when they receive half the wages of men.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and in harvest, and how employed?—About 6d. a day in harvest, in gathering and binding sheaves, picking grapes, currants and olives; something less in winter, at the work mentioned in previous answer.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy,) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—Perhaps about 23*l.*

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—They do so, living temperately, as these persons almost all do; using both maize and wheaten bread, olives, pulse, vegetables, salt fish, and occasionally meat on great festivals. Their usual drink is water, but the men take wine also moderately.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—They certainly may lay by something, and it is understood they do so.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—They have generally gardens about a rood in extent.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The labourers themselves.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—I am not aware of any rental in this neighbourhood.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—There is no restriction as to the quantity they may take; large tracts of national lands lying unoccupied, which they may cultivate, paying to the Government two-thirds of the produce.

14. 15. & 16. The proportion of annual deaths, births and marriages to the whole population? 17. The average number of children to a marriage? 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births? 19. 20. & 21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their first, tenth and eighteenth year?—I have been unable to procure from the public authorities any information upon these points, there being no returns.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Females of the poorer classes generally marry between the ages of 15 and 18, males from 25 to 30.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—The want of a marriage portion on the part of the female, or of a house on that of the male.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Habits of saving are general.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Either in the purchase of goats, sheep, or pigs, which feed on the hills and wastes, paying 1d. a head annually to Government; or the money is hoarded and buried, a common practice under the Turkish dominion, and not yet abandoned.

With reference to the question respecting dietaries, the only information I can supply regards prison allowance, which is 24 lepta per diem, 2½d., equal, at ordinary prices, to the purchase of 3 lbs. of wheaten bread.

REPLIES to the QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS, circulated amongst His Majesty's Consuls.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent, and under what form, does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—The average number of vagrants is calculated at 1 in 1,500. They are accustomed to stroll about the country and the streets of cities. In the latter they solicit alms of passengers, and also at the dwellings of the inhabitants.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging, and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—There is no stated provision or institution for the relief of such persons, who are wholly dependant for relief on the benevolence of individuals, but they are received in many religious establishments and khans, where they may remain several days, and where food is given to them.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—There are few or no destitute able-bodied men, as all such persons when disposed to work generally find employment, and as there are no institutions or regulations for their relief, necessity compels them to work. Billeting or quartering such persons on householders is a custom wholly unknown in this country.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—There are no regulations on this subject.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—No such institutions exist in this country.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—There are many religious establishments in which they find temporary relief, but there are no regulations in the country relating to the destitute poor; the relief afforded to such persons is voluntarily bestowed by the benevolent, by pecuniary or other donations.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—There are no regulations on the subject. Artisans work at their shops or dwellings, as may be.

6. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided for such persons in agriculture, or on public works?—As regards individuals employed in public works, the rate of labour is fixed by the local authorities; there are no regulations as respects the landholder and the day-labourer; they mutually agree on the terms.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations, are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons, or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—There are no regulations on the subject; persons under such circumstances depend on the bounty of individuals.

8. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—At Constantinople, and throughout the country, there are schools attached to mosques, where children of all descriptions are taken and instructed gratis in reading and writing, and in the principles of their religion, but are not fed or clothed.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—There are no regulations on the subject, but it is unusual for persons to abandon their destitute relatives.

10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—There are no regulations on the subject.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—There are no almshouses or institutions for their reception.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—There are no regulations on the subject.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—Individuals are not obliged to board them by any regulations.

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.EUROPEAN
TURKEY.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—There are no regulations to quarter or billet them on householders.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—There are no regulations on the subject. The assistance or relief afforded is voluntary.

SICK.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—There are no such institutions.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—There is no medical relief afforded to the poor at their homes, unless it is voluntary.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There are no regulations or institutions for affording any relief to the sick.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There are no public establishments for lying-in women, nor any regulations for affording them assistance at their houses. The charitable accoucheurs or midwives attend gratuitously in case of need.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—The only mode of affording assistance to the sick is by voluntary charitable donations.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—There are no regulations for the support of illegitimate children. Such cases seldom occur; and when they do, so much shame and infamy attaches to the mother (Mahomedan woman) as the child is seldom allowed to live, and is strangled at its birth, but more frequently they have recourse to methods for procuring abortion.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—There are no regulations whereby relatives to mothers or fathers are compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—There are no regulations for the support of illegitimate children at the public expense.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—There are no regulations or establishments for their reception.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—There are no regulations for billeting or quartering them on householders. Orphans are assisted by their relations or by charitable persons. Cases of foundlings hardly ever occur, and when they do, the magistrate or authorities of the district provide for their support. Parents who have deserted their children, on their discovery are compelled to contribute to their support.

6. To what extent, and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—There are no regulations on the subject.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—There are no regulations to compel any degree of relationship to support them.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—There are no regulations or establishments for their reception.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—There are no regulations for billeting or quartering such persons. They are either assisted by their relations, or seek for subsistence by asking charity in the streets and at the dwelling-houses.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—There are no regulations for boarding them with individuals.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—There are no regulations to compel any degree of relationship to support them. The assistance given is voluntary.

IDIOTS

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.EUROPEAN
TURKEY.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—There are madhouses and prisons for their reception. In these establishments they are badly fed and miserably clothed, and without medical assistance. Their relations and friends are allowed to afford them any relief they are able.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—There are no regulations for billeting or quartering them on householders.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—There are no regulations for boarding them with individuals.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—There are no regulations to compel any degree of relationship to support them. The assistance rendered is voluntary.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—As no institution exists, nor any certain expectation of relief, certain effects cannot be expected.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The condition of the able-bodied self-supporting labourer is far preferable, inasmuch as he derives a certain subsistence, whereas the beggar is dependant on the casual benevolence of his countrymen.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The general amount of wages of an able-bodied skilled labourer in the districts nearest to the capital is about 1*l.* sterling per month with provisions, and 1*l.* 10*s.* per month without provisions. The able-bodied common labourer gets about 12*s.* per month with provisions, and without, about 1*l.* sterling, during nine months out of the year; in the winter, when they are employed, it is about one-third less. In the districts further in the interior the rates are a little more than half.

2. Is piece-work general?—In the districts nearest to the capital it is more general than in the interior.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—About 18*l.* sterling a year in the districts nearest to the capital; in the other districts about 8*l.* sterling.

The wages of artisans are about double those of the common labourer.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—About 13*l.* sterling in the districts nearest to the capital; in the others about the half. There are public charity-schools for children, with religious teachers; these of course afford education to children free of expense. The lower class of labourers spend less.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Women are employed in spinning, weaving, in making different sorts of cotton cloths, carpets, &c. and sometimes in the field. Children are employed as apprenticed labourers and as shepherds.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Women employed in the way stated in the preceding article can earn about 2*s.* per week, and children under 16 about the half.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy,) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—The average amount of her earnings in a year would be about 4*l.* sterling, a male child aged 14, about 2*l.* sterling; those under the age of 14 are generally employed in household work at their own homes.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Such a family can subsist on their aggregate earnings; their food principally consists of bread, rice, greens, dried beans and peas, olives and onions, and meat about once a week.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—They do lay something by, out of which a large portion is paid for taxes and other impositions. It is impossible to state how much, as their savings vary very considerably.

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.EUROPEAN
TURKEY.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—All labourers have not land annexed to their habitations; some have a garden, others a field, and others no land at all.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourer's habitations?—The habitation of a labourer, generally speaking, belongs either to himself or to his wife.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—As the labourer's habitation is his own, he does not pay any rent, but he pays taxes and impositions, which absorb nearly all his savings. The average value of their houses is from 5*l.* to 30*l.* sterling.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—It seldom happens that land is let to labourers. The landholder either has it worked for his own account, or allows the labourer for his labour a portion of the produce. The prices of land in the districts nearest to the capital are,—average land at about 10*s.* per acre; bad land at about 7*s.* per acre; in the interior about half.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The proportion is about 2,000 to 100,000, times of extraordinary plague, &c. excepted, or 1 in 50.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—The proportion is about 3,200 to 100,000, or 1 in $31\frac{2}{5}$.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The proportion is about 1,500 to 100,000, or 1 in $66\frac{6}{10}$.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—The average number is four to a family.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—There are few or no illegitimate births, for the reasons explained under the article "Children, Illegitimate," No. 1.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—The proportion is about 17 to 100, or 1 in $5\frac{9}{10}$.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—The proportion is about 25 to 100, or 1 in 4.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—The proportion is about 30 to 100, or 1 in $3\frac{3}{10}$.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—The males generally on an average marry at the age of 25, and the females at 17.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Great poverty and wretchedness are the only causes by which marriages are delayed.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—The extent of the savings of both sexes are small; it is impossible to state how much.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Some invest them in gold trinkets, others hoard them.

UNITED STATES.

NEW JERSEY.

LETTER from Mr. Senator Southard to Sir Charles Vaughan.

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.

UNITED STATES.

New Jersey.

Sir,

Washington, 29 April 1834.

I TAKE pleasure in sending you a pretty full statement in regard to the poor laws in New Jersey. It is probably more voluminous than you desire; but I do not venture to make it shorter, lest I might leave out something which you desire to see.

The system of New Jersey was derived from England, and has been only so far altered as was necessary to reconcile it to our institutions and habits. In practice it is burthen-some or otherwise, according to the skill and fidelity with which it is managed. Our officers for the care of the poor are elected annually by the people, in township meetings; and as they have to bear the burthen, they are generally careful to select discreet men. The practice of having poor-houses with farms adjoining them has extended rapidly within a few years, and it is probable that there will soon be one in each township or county.

By a wise superintendence of the paupers, requiring them to be regular and temperate in their habits, and compelling them to labour, under proper direction, as much as their comfort and health will mercifully justify, the expense of their support is greatly diminished, and in some instances altogether avoided. I do not doubt that it ought to be so in all cases, if skill and economy prevailed. Such of them as are really objects of charity, and worthy of kindness, are rendered more comfortable in this mode than in any other which has been tried in our State.

I am, &c.

(signed) Saml. L. Southard.

NEW JERSEY POOR LAWS.

THE system of poor laws in New Jersey is closely assimilated to that of England, and is derived from the same common source, the celebrated statute of Elizabeth; with a few modifications (and those principally in the practical administration of the system), the statutory enactments are nearly the same on both sides of the Atlantic. Const's edition of Bolt's Poor Laws, Burrow's Settlement Cases, and Burn's Justice, are as often referred to in the Supreme Court of this State as in the courts of Westminster, whenever disputes respecting pauper settlements arise for adjudication.

To our state of society, to our sparse population, the great demand for labour, and the facility of procuring a livelihood, we chiefly owe it that a system so much complained of in England is here not felt to be onerous.

In this township (Morris, in the county of Morris), containing about 100 square miles, and a population, by the census of 1830, of 3,536, the average number of paupers annually supported by the town for the last eight years is 25, and the average annual expense to the town for their maintenance is 715 dollars, or a little upwards of 161 l. sterling. This statement is taken from the books of the township committee, who settle with the overseer of the poor, and may be relied on as correct. The township of Mendham, also in this county, and adjoining this township, containing a population of 1,315 persons, has this year, 1834, but one single pauper to support. A number of the agricultural townships in this State present the same result. In the mining and manufacturing districts pauperism increases in a greater proportion to the number of inhabitants.

In this township, notwithstanding the increase of population, the number of paupers, and the cost of maintaining them, are regularly decreasing. This fact, remarkable in the annals of pauperism, is accounted for by the operation of moral causes co-operating with an improved administration of the system.

The moral causes are the increase of the means of primary instruction of the people, and the happy influence of temperance societies in banishing dissolute, and consequently improvident, habits among those classes which furnish the most numerous subjects of these laws.

The improved administration of the system consists in,

1st, The more careful selection of overseers of the poor; appointing men to this office of intelligence, industry, firmness and humanity; men who will investigate the cases which come before them; not easily duped, and who will not recommend unworthy and improper applicants for relief. More depends upon the character and qualifications of an overseer of the poor than a mere statesman or theoretical inquirer into the system would suppose.

2, In the collection of paupers into poor-houses. While they were maintained in the houses of those willing to receive them, they considered themselves, and were regarded by others, rather in the light of pensioners than paupers.

3, In attaching farms to these poor-houses, on which the paupers may labour so far as their strength and health will permit; the lighter labours of husbandry are not found injurious to their health, and contribute mainly to their support, while the idle and profligate are deterred from seeking the poor-house as a refuge for indolence. This township has for some years past employed their paupers on a farm which they have purchased, and this circumstance will account for the small sum they raise by tax for the support of the poor. The greater number of inmates, at present, are idiots, whose physical powers, under a humane and skilful overseer, are sufficient to provide, or nearly so, for their own maintenance. The plan of having county poor-houses, where large numbers of paupers are collected, with farms of proportionate extent attached to them, have in some counties (Warren and Sussex) been found to be more economical than township poor-houses; probably because the division of labour can be carried to a greater extent. This plan of farms attached to poor-houses has in every respect fully answered the expectations of its projectors; no better proof can be given of this than the fact, that after repeated experiments, it has always been found to diminish the poor-rates, and has already been adopted by most of the counties in the northern and eastern parts of this State. Upon the whole, the pauper system of this State cannot be regarded as a failure, as the statistics of each county on this subject will prove; and that it is not regarded by the people with disapprobation, is evidenced by this, that while almost every statute in our code has been repealed or modified by a capricious and mutable legislation, the main provisions of this statute, though very early adopted, have remained unchanged; and it may well be doubted, whether in the country from whence we have derived our statutes on this subject the defects attributed to the system should not rather be laid at the door of the parish officers charged with the practical administration of these laws.

NEW JERSEY POOR LAWS.

1. The several counties in this State are divided into townships, each of which is, for some purposes, a distinct political incorporation, possessed of powers and charged with duties particularly specified in the statute. The support of the poor within the township is one of these duties. The inhabitants of every township are obliged to appoint officers for the management of paupers. 2. To provide funds for their maintenance.

Appointment of Overseers of the Poor.

The inhabitants of each township entitled to vote are, at their annual town meeting or other meeting duly held, empowered by a majority of votes to elect one or more overseers of the poor for that township.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 324 s. Pennington's Reports, 6. 136. 272; 1 Halsted's Rep. 118.

If the township neglects at their annual town meeting to choose such an officer, or if when chosen he dies, refuses to serve, removes from the township, or becomes incapable of serving before the next annual meeting, the electors of the township (inhabitants) are to be convened and choose another. If the electors neglect for 15 days after such omission to choose, or after the death, removal, refusal, &c. of the officer chosen, the township committee appoint a person to fill the vacancy.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 342, s. 13; 1 Green's Rep. 320.

Any person duly appointed overseer of the poor and refusing to serve forfeits $ 15, to be recovered by action of debt.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 345, s. 20.

Overseers are to take an oath of office, administered by a justice of the peace and filed by the clerk of the township.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 345, s. 20.

Support of the Poor, how provided for.

At the town meeting, the inhabitants qualified to vote are empowered to vote, grant and raise such sum or sums of money for the maintenance and support of the poor within their township as to them, or a major part, shall seem necessary.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 341, s. 11.

2. The money thus voted is assessed by the township assessor upon the inhabitants and estates within the township, agreeably to the law for the time being for raising money by taxation for the use of the State.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 341, s. 11; p. 319, s. 12.

Besides the money raised by tax for the support of the poor within each township, and which forms by far the larger portion of the fund for their support, the following statutes add to it by escheats and penalties, by fees for pedlars' licences, and by unclaimed estrays. When any person dies seised of personal estate within this State, without making any will thereof, or leaving any representatives capable of inheriting the same, any proper person may take out letters of administration upon the estate, and after the expiration of seven years, must pay the whole sum due and interest to the overseers of the poor of the township in which the intestate died, to and for the use of the poor of said township; and after the expiration of the said seven years, all persons, though otherwise entitled to the estate, are for ever barred.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 76, s. 1, 2, 3.

Penalties which go to the Overseers for the use of the Poor.

Penalties for killing deer out of season, setting traps for deer, &c., one half to the prosecutor, the other half to the overseer of the poor.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 28, s. 11.

Fine of $ 14 for fornication.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 248, s. 15.

Penalty of $ 20 for giving or selling spirituous liquors at vendues.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 271, s. 1.

Fine of $ 10 for recommending improper persons to the court of general quarter sessions for tavern licences.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 281, s. 3.

Penalty for housekeepers entertaining vagrants.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 36, s. 5.

Penalty of $ 6 for concealing estrays.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 290, s. 3.

Penalties under the Acts for the regulation of hawkers, pedlars, &c.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 294-297. Laws of New Jersey, passed 21st December 1824, 27th February 1830 and 17th February 1831.

Penalty on owner of slaves who suffers them to go about begging.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 371, s. 10.

Penalty of $ 40 for selling a slave to person unable to maintain him.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 371, s. 11.

Penalty of $ 30 for the owner of a slave neglecting to have him taught to read.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 372, s. 16.

Various penalties under the Act for the suppression of vice and immorality, labouring on Sunday, cursing and swearing, drunkenness, &c.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 378-385 552, s. 1; 664, s. 2.

Penalty for fixing nets and weirs across the Raritan River.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 452, s. 1.

Penalties under the Act to prevent horse racing.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 550. 553.

Penalties under the Acts to regulate the fisheries in the river Delaware.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 541-544, 569. Laws of New Jersey, passed 28th November 1822 and 15th February 1833.

Penalties under the Act for the inspection of flour and meal.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 565. 568.

Penalties under the Act to regulate the re-packing of beef and pork for exportation.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 514. 518.

Estrays claimed by no one are to be sold for the benefit of the poor.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 289.

Fees arising from pedlars' and hawkers' licences also appropriated to the use of the poor.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 295.

These fines and forfeitures, which it is the duty of the overseer to collect (New Jersey Revised Laws, 295), as well as estates escheating to the use of the poor, must be paid by the overseer to the trustees of the county poor-house (in all counties where county poor-houses have been erected).—New Jersey Revised Laws, 765, s. 5.

Poor-houses, how Built, &c.

The overseer of the poor of any township may, with the approbation and consent of the major part of the inhabitants of the township, being householders, given at any town meeting duly called, build, hire or purchase any house or houses within the township out of the money provided for the relief of the poor, where the poor are to be maintained and employed, and the benefits of their labour to go for their support; and where a township is too small or poor to procure a house, it may join with another township, with the consent of the major part of the inhabitants of both, and unite in procuring a house for the reception of the poor of both such townships. Any pauper refusing to be lodged in the poor-house to be struck off the poor-list, and to receive no support from the township.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 43, s. 21; 4 Halsted's Rep. 276.

The board of chosen freeholders of every county may purchase or build a poor-house for their county, which is wholly under their directions. The poor are to be kept in such poor-house at the expense of the county, where they are to be employed, and materials to be procured for their employment also, at the expense of the county; and the money required for this purpose is to be raised as other money is raised for county purposes.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 323, s. 30, 31, 32.

Two or more counties may unite and procure a poor-house at their joint expense for the reception of their paupers.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 323, s. 33. And the corporations of such counties to procure materials for their employment.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 324, s. 34. The expense of this arrangement is to be adjusted and apportioned by the said corporations between their respective counties in equal moities, or by the rate of tax which each shall be assessed to pay for the support of government, or in such other proportion as the said corporation shall deem just and proper; and the sum so ascertained to be paid by the county is to be raised by the county in such manner as the money for other county purposes is raised.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 324, s. 35. Each member of the board receives for his services $1 per day for attending to these duties, while so employed.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 324, s. 36.

If the board of freeholders of any county, at their annual meeting, refuse to go into the measure of procuring a poor-house for the county, being requested so to do by the chosen freeholders of any township who have been authorized to make such request, by a vote of their town meeting, such refusal shall be entered on the minutes of the board; after which, the township making such request may go and procure a poor-house for themselves, and be exonerated from contributing to a county poor-house, or the expense thereof, which may after such refusal be built by the board of freeholders of the county, unless by the consent of the majority of the inhabitants of that township, expressed by a vote at town meeting, or unless such board of chosen freeholders pay to said township the full value of all the lands, buildings, improvements, &c. which have been provided by the township for that purpose, in which case, the overseers of the poor are to convey the lands, &c. to said board of chosen freeholders.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 695, s. 5.

The board of chosen freeholders above named are two judicious freeholders, chosen by each township in the county at their annual town meeting.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 342, s. 12. These freeholders (two from each township) compose the board of chosen freeholders for the county; they are incorporated, and manage most of the public concerns of the county.—New Jersey Revised Laws 317. 655. 694. Laws of New Jersey of 1830-31, passed 2d February 1831.

The statutes referred to above point out, 1st, The officer charged with the care of the poor, his appointment, &c.; 2d, The source from whence funds for the maintenance of the poor are raised, and the manner in which they are lodged; they are next to consider who are the paupers entitled to relief. They may be divided into,

I. Those entitled to Relief, but not from the Township.

They are, 1st, Paupers who have relations bound by law to maintain them, which if they refuse to do, they may be compelled by the court of quarter sessions, who may allow any sum not exceeding $2. 50. per week. The father and grandfather, mother and grandmother, children and grandchildren, (of every poor, old, blind, lame and impotent person, or other person not able to work,) being of sufficient ability, shall relieve such poor person as aforesaid.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 764, s. 3.

2d, Bastards, whose putative father or whose mother is bound to maintain them by statute.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 171 s.; 1 s. Both of these statutes referred to under this head are transcripts from the English statutes, and the New Jersey decisions upon and practice under them correspond very nearly with the decisions and practice of the courts of that country. The next class of paupers are,

II. Those entitled to Relief from the Township.

They are persons who have gained a settlement by one of the following modes, or being casual poor accidentally overcome by sickness in a township where they do not belong are entitled to relief there, the township where they belong reimbursing the expenses to the town which administered relief.

1. Settlement by Birth.

The settlement of the parent is the settlement of the child; if the parent's settlement is unknown, the place where the child is born is prima facie his legal settlement.—1 Pennington's Rep. 289; 3 Halsted's Rep. 370. Bastard children are, however, settled in the last legal settlement of their mother.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 36, s. 4.

2. Settlement by Parentage.

The parent's last legal place of settlement is the settlement of a legitimate child.

3. Settlement by Marriage.

The settlement of the husband becomes immediately, by the intermarriage, the settlement of the wife.—3 Halsted's Rep. 370.

4. Settlement

New Jersey.

4. Settlement by Residence and Notice.

A person may gain a settlement on coming into any township, provided that such person, within 40 days after his or her coming into such township, shall give notice to the overseers of the poor (in writing) of the same, of the place where he lives, number of his family, &c., which notice is recorded in the town-book by the township clerk; in case such person is not removed by warrant, under hand and seal of at least one justice of the peace, by said overseers within 12 months after notice served, he shall be deemed to be legally settled in such township.—New Jersey Laws, 35 and 36, s. 2. (This clause does not, however, extend to persons coming into townships under certificates acknowledging them to have settlements elsewhere.—1 Pennington's Reports, 125.)

5. Settlement by Apprenticeship and Service.

Every person who shall have served an apprenticeship under indenture, and every indentured servant legally and directly imported from Europe, or brought in from the neighbouring States (servants from gaols, workhouses and hospitals excepted), shall obtain a legal settlement in the township in which such apprentice or servant shall first serve one full year; and if such servant or apprentice shall serve one full year in any other place, he shall obtain a legal settlement in the township where the service was last performed.—Revised Law, New Jersey, 35, s. 1, and page 36, s. 3; 1 Coxe's Rep. 289. 389; 1 Pennington's Rep. 130. 422. 442. 445; 1 Halsted's Reports, 169; 3 Halsted's Rep. 257; 4 Halsted's Rep. 39.

6. Settlement by Estate.

Every person who shall become seised of any freehold estate of the value of 50*l.* in any city, town corporate, township or precinct, and shall dwell upon the said estate, or in the city, town corporate, township or precinct in which such estate doth lie, for one full year, shall thereby obtain a settlement in such city, town corporate, &c.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 35, s. 1; Pennington's Rep. 1038; 3 Halsted's Rep. 319.

7. Settlement by Residence of Mariners and Foreigners.

All mariners coming into this State, and having no settlement in this or any of the neighbouring States, and every other healthy person directly coming from Europe into this State, shall be legally settled in the city, borough, township or precinct in which he or she shall first settle and reside for the space of one year.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 35, s. 1.

8. Settlement of Slaves and Children of Slaves.

Slaves not manumitted according to law must be maintained by their owners; but if their owners are insolvent and unable to maintain them, the legal settlement of the master is the settlement of the slave.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 375, s. 26; Pennington's Rep. 14. 136. 415; 3 Halsted's Rep. 52. 64.

Manumitted slaves are settled in the same township where the master was settled at the time of the manumission; after manumission, the slave may gain a settlement in the same manner as the whites.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 375, s. 25; 3 Halsted's Rep. 64.

Children of slaves born after the 4th of July 1804 (who are free after a few years' service), not bought out to service by trustees or overseers of the poor, shall, after the males arrive at the age of 25 years and the females at 21 years, be deemed settled in the township or place in which they were born; such children may, however, gain a settlement in any other place in the same manner as the whites; and the place where they last served with their master or mistress, for the space of seven years, shall be their settlement.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 765, s. 6.

Children of slaves born free bound to service by trustees or overseers of the poor, obtain a settlement under such indenture the same as whites.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 765, s. 7.

Children of slaves born free and their issue are capable of gaining settlements, in like manner as other persons.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 765, s. 8.

9. Those who have no settlement which can be discovered, and casual poor, who are taken sick away from the townships where they are settled, are entitled to relief in the townships where they are found; and the sums thus expended by the townships where they are taken sick is to be refunded by the township in which their legal settlement is.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 39, s. 9; Pennington's Rep. 78; 1 Halsted's Rep. 116. 120; 3 Halsted's Rep. 166.

No persons, except those coming within some one of the qualifications mentioned above, are entitled to a settlement in any of the townships in this State; and in order that the townships may not become burthened by those who have no legal claim to relief from them, our statutes further enact, that,

1. Servants procured from the gaols, workhouses or hospitals of the neighbouring States and brought here, acquire no settlement by virtue of such hiring and service.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 36, s. 3.

2. Bastards, though born in a township, are not settled there, but are removed to the place of settlement of the mother.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 36, s. 4; Pennington's Rep. 130, 131. 870. 1016; 3 Hal. 371.

3. Slaves not under the age of 21 years nor above the age of 40 years, if sound in mind and not under any bodily incapacity to obtain a support, may be manumitted either by deed or last will and testament; but the slave under 21 years or over 40 years cannot be manumitted, unless the owner or other person gives bond, with two freeholders' security, that the slave shall not become a charge to the town.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 372, s. 22, 23.

4. When ships arrive from foreign parts, having passengers on board, the overseers of the poor of the place where the vessel arrives, or any justice of the peace, may require of the master or commander of the vessel a bond, with security in $200, conditioned for the maintenance of any passenger sick, infirm or incapable, in the opinion of such justice or overseer, of providing for his support.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 655, s. 1. A penalty of $100 for each offence may be recovered from such commander who permits any such passenger to land without having first given such a bond.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 656, s. 2.

5. Overseers of the poor may, with the approbation of two justices of the peace, bind out any poor child or children who have no parents, or whose parents shall apply to the overseers for relief, or the child or children of any poor person who shall bring up their children in sloth, idleness and ignorance, and who for three months after the advice and direction of the overseers shall refuse or neglect to bind them out.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 41, s. 18; Southard's Rep. 555.

6. President of the board of trustees of every poor-house, with the consent of a majority of the trustees, may bind out poor children.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 763, s. 1.

7. Two justices of the peace may bind out the child of any beggar, vagrant, vagabond, common drunkard or common prostitute, or any person who shall not provide for such child.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 475, s. 5.

8. Estates of persons absconding, leaving their families a public charge, may be seized and sold by the overseers of the poor, for the maintenance of the family thus deserted.—New Jersey Revised Laws, s. 19, 20.

9. Vagrants, vagabonds and beggars are to be apprehended and sent to their settlement by a pass warrant, and if they return they are to be whipped.—Revised Laws of New Jersey, 48, s. 33; page 49, s. 34; page 473, s. 1, 2, 3, 4; page 763, s. 2. 1 Green's Reports, 290.

10. A housekeeper or inhabitant who shall take into, receive or entertain in their house any vagabond, vagrant, sturdy beggar or any idle, strolling disorderly person, who has not gained a legal settlement in some township within this State, and shall not give notice in writing, within the space of 10 days after his receiving such person, to the overseer of the poor, shall, on being legally convicted of such offence before any justice, forfeit 20 s., one-half to the poor, the other half to prosecutor; and if such person shall fall sick, the inhabitant entertaining him must support him, and if he die must be at the cost of his funeral.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 36, s. 5; 2 Halsted's Rep. 431.

To prevent any unqualified persons from obtaining a settlement, a power is given to the overseers, acting under the authority of two justices, to remove improper persons to the townships to which they belong.

1. If any overseer of the poor has any reason to believe that any person who hath not obtained a legal settlement in any township in this State is likely to become chargeable, he shall apply to two justices of the peace, who, by their warrant directed to a constable, are to bring such person before them, and examine him, on oath or affirmation, as to his last place of legal settlement, which when ascertained, they are to order such person to remove there by a certain day by them to be named; and if said person refuses or neglects to obey such order, they are to issue their warrant to a constable, directing him to convey said person to a constable of the next township, and so to the nearest and most direct way, from constable to constable, until he reach his place of settlement; for which services said constable receives such compensation as a justice of the peace and the overseer shall deem reasonable.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 44, s. 23; Pennington's Reports, 314. 475. 1058; Southard's Rep. 186; 1 Halsted's Rep. 405; 2 Halsted's Rep. 439; 4 Halsted's Rep. 276; Coxe's Rep. 75. 390.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 764, s. 4.

2. Any person returning after removal is to be punished by whipping or imprisonment, and sent back again, unless he give bond, with two sufficient securities, that he will not become chargeable to the town.—New Jersey Revised Law, 43, s. 24.

3. Overseers of the town to which such pauper is removed by virtue of this Act are bound to receive such pauper; if he refuses he forfeits 5 l. to the use of the poor.—New Jersey Revised Law, 45, s. 25.

4. No settlement, however, is gained by a removal by virtue of this Act, but the settlement of the pauper remains as it was before the removal.—New Jersey Revised Law, 44, s. 22.

5. Persons who remove from one township into another, and bring with them the certificates under the hands and seals of the overseers of the poor of their legal settlement, attested by two or more credible witnesses, and subscribed by two or more justices of the peace of the township from whence they remove, acknowledging the persons therein mentioned to be inhabitants legally settled in the township or city mentioned in the certificate, then such person, on the delivery of such certificate to the overseers of the poor of the township to which he removes, may reside there and follow any lawful employment; said certificate must be delivered to the clerk of the township to be filed.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 38, s. 6.

6. Persons under certificates as above becoming chargeable must be removed, together with their families, apprentices, &c., to the townships from whence their certificates were brought, and the overseers of that township are obliged to receive them.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 38, s. 7; Pennington's Report, 477; but every servant and apprentice who has gained a settlement in the township to which his master removed, and in which he resided by virtue of the certificate aforesaid, cannot be removed as aforesaid.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 39, s. 7; Coxe's Rep. 389.

7. No person required to bring such certificate shall by any act of his gain a legal settlement in the township during the time he resides there by virtue of said certificate.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 39, s. 8.

8. The above clauses relating to the obtaining temporary settlements by certificates does not extend to any person who has not already, or shall not hereafter obtain a legal settlement in some part of this State.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 39, s. 8.

Appeal from Order of Removal.

1. Every person aggrieved by warrant of removal may appeal to the next general quarter sessions of the peace of the county wherein such removal shall happen.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 46, s. 26; Cox's Rep. 75; Pennington's Rep. 477. No justice who resides in the township where the dispute happens shall sit in court on such appeal.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 46, s. 26; Pennington's Rep. 314. 477. No appeal is to be proceeded in by the court unless reasonable notice of the appeal is given by the overseer appealing to the overseers of the place from whence the poor person shall be removed.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 46, s. 26.

2. On such appeal defects of form are to be amended by the court, without charge to either party, and the appeal to be then proceeded in; and if the said court of quarter sessions shall not rectify such order or proceedings, and they be removed into the Supreme Court, then that court to amend them, on the same terms.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 46, s. 27; Pennington's Rep. 131. 313; 1 Halsted's Rep. 405.

3. To prevent vexatious removals and frivolous appeals, the court is empowered, when it determines in favour of the appellants, to award them a sum sufficient to cover the expense they have been put to from the time of the undue removal to the determination of the appeal; they are also to award costs, at their discretion, to the party in whose favour they determine the appeal.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 46, s. 28; Coxe's Rep. 76; 2 Halsted's Rep. 4.

4. The sum of money so awarded may be sued for in any court of record in any county in this State, by the person in whose favour the money is awarded. And a copy of the award and order, signed and sealed by the clerk of the court is sufficient evidence for the recovery of the money awarded.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 47, s. 27.

5. Although the appeal from the order of the removal be not made to the next court of quarter sessions, as heretofore enacted, but be made to the second term of said court, if the reasons given to said court for the delay be satisfactory, the appeal may be heard in same manner as if it had been made to the first term.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 49, s. 35; Coxe's Rep. 75; 1 Halsted's Rep. 405.

Mode of granting Relief to a Pauper.

This may be in two ways:—1. In counties where no county poor-house is established; and 2. In counties where there are.

1. Where is no county poor-house, but only a township poor-house, or none at all.

When any poor person applies to the overseer for relief, the overseer is to apply to a justice of the peace of the county to which the township belongs, and said justice and overseer, or overseers, shall inquire into the state and circumstances of the party applying for relief. If it appears to the justice that the applicant is in circumstances requiring relief, he gives an order in writing to the overseer to make such weekly allowance to the necessitous person as in his discretion he may think he requires. The overseer is to make no other allowance but what the order directs. The order is the overseer's voucher for payment of the money, and is allowed in the settlement of his accounts.—New Jersey Revised Law, 40, s. 11; Pennington's Rep. 77. 6. 136. 475. 806. 1,042; 1 Halsted's Rep. 116. 119. 121; 2 Halsted's Rep. 431; 3 Halsted's Rep. 170.

Where there is no county poor-house, when any poor person applies to any overseer for relief, he convenes two justices of the peace of the county in which such relief is required, who issue their warrant to a constable to bring such person before them; they then proceed to examine the pauper, on oath, touching his last legal place of settlement; they may also issue subpoenas for witnesses, to give evidence respecting the place of settlement of the pauper, and if they adjudge the legal settlement of the pauper to be in the township where the relief is applied for, and deem such relief necessary, they make an order of removal to the county poor-house, commanding the overseers of the poor-house to receive him, which order of removal, and a copy of the evidence on which the adjudication was made, are to be delivered with the pauper to the steward of the poor-house. The expense of the examination and the removal is paid by the overseers of the township where the application for relief was made. But if it appears on examination that the legal settlement of the pauper is not in the county where the application was made, the justices are to make an order of removal to his legal settlement, in manner aforesaid.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 764, s. 4; Pennington's Rep. 471. 475. 805.

The goods and chattels of any pauper applying for relief are to be inventoried by the overseer before granting any relief, and afterwards sold to reimburse the township out of the proceeds all the expenses they have been at; all sales of which by the pauper after he becomes chargeable are void.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 41, s. 15.

New Jersey.

1. It is made the duty of the overseers to collect the various fines and penalties given the poor by statutes, and in some cases he is liable to a penalty himself for neglect.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 295, s. 7.

2. Overseer is to keep a book, wherein the names of all poor persons applying for relief, and ordered the same, are to be registered, with the day and year when they were first admitted to relief, the weekly or other sum allowed by the order for their relief, and the occasion or necessity which brought them there. No person to be entered on the books, or to receive relief from the overseers without such orders. If the overseer enters in the books, and relieve any such poor person without such order, he shall forfeit and not be allowed for the money and goods paid or distributed to such poor person. And they are required to enter into the said books all monies received, laid out and disbursed by him or them for the use of the poor, and all matters and things transacted by him or them relating to the said office. And said overseer shall lay said poor books before the inhabitants of the township at their annual or other town meetings, that they may examine and look into the state of the poor accounts, and make such further provision for them as may appear on inspection to be necessary.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 40, s. 12.

Monies collected by the overseer of the poor from fines and forfeitures, and estates which have been escheated to the use of the poor and come into his hands, he on receiving it is to pay it over to the trustees of the county poor-house, (if there is one in the county,) and therewith render a statement certifying on what account the money has been received, a copy of which statement is also to be sent to one of the trustees of the poor-house; the said payment and account to be rendered yearly on or before the first day of March.—New Jersey Revised Laws, 765, s. 5.

For the estates of persons absconding from their families seized by the overseer of the poor he is accountable to the justices of the peace at their quarter sessions.—New Jersey Revised Law, 42, s. 20. Overseers are also liable to account to the board of freeholders for monies in their hands; New Jersey Revised Laws, 321, s. 21; and when they account to the board of freeholders, or the trustees of the poor-house, their accounts will be published among the annual accounts of the board of chosen freeholders, in one or more newspapers circulating in the county.—Law of New Jersey, passed 2d February 1831.

Massachusetts.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Mendicity is by no means prevalent; indeed very few instances thereof occur, and these are mostly confined to emigrants recently arrived. Beggars are liable to be taken up as vagabonds, and committed to houses of industry or of correction.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—Persons of this description, where there are workhouses, are received therein; in those towns (town in this country is synonymous with parish in England) where there are no workhouses they are relieved by the overseers, at the expense of the towns of their settlement, if inhabitants of this State; if they are foreigners, or domiciled in other States, 70 cents, or about 3 s. 1 ½ d. sterling per week, are allowed out of the State treasury for each person of this description who is supported. Sometimes they are given small sums of money to induce them to proceed out of the towns.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—In towns which have no almshouses, &c., the poor are sometimes let en masse to the lowest bidder, and sometimes boarded by various persons, with whom the overseers contract on as favourable terms as possible; and they are generally compelled to work, either for the benefit of those by whom they are boarded, or of the town, according to the nature of the contract. There is no distinction made in the poor laws between the able-bodied and the impotent.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—Such houses are now pretty generally established in all the larger towns of the State, where all who are able are compelled to work. As to the regulations of such houses, and the effects they have produced, I beg respectfully to refer to my Report relative to the poor laws of this country, and the Tables thereunto annexed, which I had the honour to transmit to Viscount Palmerston with my despatch of the 31st of December last, No. 23.

4. To

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—I am not aware that assistance is afforded by any religious institutions; and from the result of my inquiries, believe that no such practice exists.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—Few, if any instances exist; indeed, all here who are capable, and inclined to work, may find employment.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons, in agriculture or on public works?—The same answer as the last is applicable to this question.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—The custom of furnishing relief to the poor at their own houses is generally and justly reprobated, and does not prevail to any great extent. In Boston, where fuel is often enormously dear, coals and wood are distributed by the overseers to poor families. In the country wood is abundant. Very few, except the aged, the sick, and the impotent, are relieved at their own houses at any other times than during the winter.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved, by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—Every child has a right to receive instruction gratuitously at the public schools, which all the towns in the State are compelled to establish and support. As to food and clothing, these are furnished in conformity with the general provisions of the poor laws, relative to which I must refer to my above-mentioned Report. Children are, in a few instances, apprenticed by the overseers, and by the directors of houses of industry, &c.; the males till 21, females till 18 years of age.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—By statute of 1793, "the kindred of poor persons, in the line of father or grandfather, mother or grandmother, children or grandchildren, by consanguinity, living within the commonwealth, of sufficient ability, shall be holden to support such paupers in proportion to such ability; and the Court of Common Pleas is authorized to assess such kindred, and may order such paupers to be placed with such of their kindred as is judged proper.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—I know of no instance of such assistance.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

The poor laws of this State making no distinction between the able-bodied and the impotent, as has been before observed, the preceding answers are applicable to this class of questions.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—In Boston there is an hospital, called the "Massachusetts General Hospital," supported by voluntary contributions, and by several very large testamentary bequests, where all descriptions of sick and hurt persons belonging to the State are received; some on the recommendation of contributors and directors, gratuitously, others pay $3, or 13 s. 6d. sterling per week for board, medical attendance, &c., and some as high as $10 per week.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—There is no law in existence by which surgical and medical assistance are specifically required to be administered; it is, however, afforded under the general provisions of the poor laws. Medical practitioners are very numerous, and it is the general practice for the youngest to attend the sick poor gratuitously.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There are no distinct provisions or regulations relative to the sick poor.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There is a small establishment in Boston for the reception of lying-in women, where they are attended, gratuitously in some instances, and in others $3 per week are charged; but the number annually admitted is very small. Poor lying-in women are always attended gratuitously by the younger physicians; indeed, such attendance is never refused.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—See Answer to Question 3.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—Both father and mother are liable. The language of the statute rendering them so is singular; it enacts, that "when any woman who has been delivered of a bastard, or being pregnant of a child, which, if born alive, may be a

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.—
UNITED STATES.—
Massachusetts.

bastard, shall accuse any man of being the father thereof before any justice of the peace upon examination, on oath, and being put upon the discovery of the truth respecting the same accusation in the time of travail, shall thereupon accuse the same person of being the father of the child of which she is about to be delivered, and shall continue constant in such accusation, and shall prosecute him as the father of such child before the court of general sessions," (by subsequent statute the jurisdiction is transferred to the Common Pleas), "in the manner prescribed, in which she shall be a competent witness, her credibility being left to the jury, he shall be adjudged reputed father, and charged with the maintenance of such child, with the assistance of the mother, as the justices of the court shall order."—Stat. 1783.

The following points have been decided by the Supreme Court relative to the construction of this Act:—

1st. That the Court has no authority to order a putative father to pay lying-in charges, eo nomine, but if mother disabled by her lying-in from attending to her child, and be obliged to procure assistance, that the statute would authorize an order for the payment of a larger sum for the first week than for any succeeding week.

2d. That the mother has a right to the control of the child, and is bound to maintain it as its natural guardian.

3d. That such natural guardianship of mother devolves on her future husband on her marriage, durante conjugio, but ceases on its dissolution.

As the mother is not compelled to make any declaration relative to her pregnancy before the birth of the child, all the latter part of the statute seems nugatory. Very few instances occur of mothers complaining to the courts; the matter, in a very great majority of cases, being arranged by the parties out of court. There are no women here in such a degraded state as to render the publicity of their shame a matter of indifference, and all parties are, in general, anxious for concealment. The practice of procuring abortion is very prevalent, for which the law has provided no adequate remedy.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—Not at all.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—Same as other paupers.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments or their reception?—Only one or two very limited establishments exist, which are alike applicable to orphans and foundlings. No establishment for the reception of deserted children exists.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—To no extent.

6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Same as other paupers.

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Same as other paupers. See Answer to Question 9, under "Destitute Able-bodied."

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—No such establishments for cripples. No establishment for deaf and dumb in Massachusetts. There is a very excellent one in Connecticut. There is an excellent institution for the indigent blind, where they are supported and educated; it has only been recently established by subscription. One individual gave the house, worth $30,000, on condition that $30,000 towards its support were subscribed within a year, which was done. The number of blind received and maintained is now 20.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—Not at all.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Same as other paupers.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—See Answer to Question 9, under head "Able-bodied."

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception? 2. Are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Are they boarded with individuals? 4. To what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—Poor idiots are treated and provided for the same as other paupers. See letter of Dr. Woodward, No. 1.

Massachusetts.

Besides the lunatic hospital at Worcester, the Massachusetts General Hospital receives lunatics, on the same terms as other patients, at a separate establishment in Charlestown, two miles from Boston. As to the former, I have the honour to refer to the accompanying copy of Dr. Woodward's (the superintending physician) Letter to me, marked No. 1, and to the Report, marked No. 2.

As to the three last questions, the answers before given to the same, with reference to other paupers, are applicable.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect; 1st, On the industry of the labourers; 2d, On their frugality; 3d, On the age at which they marry; 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—The number of persons who receive permanent relief as paupers is so small, that it is impossible to estimate the effect which such relief, or the expectation thereof, has produced, relative to the matters which are the subject of the four first questions. The proportion of those who receive relief does not in the whole amount to five per cent. upon the population, and of these a very great majority only receive casual and temporary assistance. The permanent poor consist entirely of the aged and impotent. These facts will appear evident on reference to the tables annexed to my Report, before mentioned.

5. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts."—The few subsisting on alms and public charity are in every respect in a worse condition than the self-supported labourers, who, in general, live much better than the majority of English farmers. Very few earn less than 4s. 6d. sterling per day. They and their families are amply supplied with meat, fish or poultry every day. I have carefully perused the whole of the volume referred to, and am satisfied that most of the observations contained therein are perfectly correct as regards England, but very few are applicable to this country. There are here very few permanent charitable funds, and what few there are have been too recently established to have become liable to mal-administration.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—Overseers and managers of large factories receive from 1,500 to 3,500 dollars per annum. First-rate mechanics from 2 to 3 dollars per day; carpenters, masons, &c. 1 ½ dollar, or 6s. 9d. sterling per day; labourers, 1 ¼ dollar in Boston, and 1 dollar in the country per day. Agricultural labourers, in harvest time, from 1 to 1 ½ dollar per day; those boarded and lodged, from 14 to 18 dollars per month, for the six summer and autumn months, and some the same all the year; others from 10 to 12 dollars during winter, per month. Domestics in private families from 10 to 18 dollars per month, during the whole year.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece work is not general; when performed, the labourer earns about the usual wages.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—I am of opinion, and so are many of the best judges whom I have consulted, that labourers earn on an average from 250 to 300 dollars, or from 56l. 5s. to 67l. 10s. sterling per annum. Able mechanics more than double those sums.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—It is almost impossible to form a just estimate. Some spend all they earn, and very few less than $200 per annum. They are at no expense for schooling or religious teachers, unless they prefer sending their children to private schools, which few, even of the better classes, do.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Women are chiefly employed in the management of their domestic concerns. Some braid straw, and others work at the factories; children are generally employed at school; very few in agriculture, and scarcely any under 14 at the factories.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Women never do any harvest work. At the factories they earn from 2 ½ to 5 dollars per week.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—From what is above stated, it will be seen that this question does not admit of an answer. There may be a few labourers' families in which all the members contribute something to the general stock, and by such families from 350 to 450 dollars may be earned.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Certainly; there are very few who do not eat meat, poultry or fish twice or three times a day.

9. Could

Appendix (F.)

Massachusetts.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Many lay by from 50 to 100 dollars per year. The cashier of the savings bank at Boston assures me that there are many hundreds who do so, and that three-fourths of the deposits are made by Irish emigrants; a singular fact.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—Land in this State is generally poor and plenty. Except emigrants, there are very few to whom the word "labourer," in its usual English sense, is applicable. Most of the agricultural labourers are small farmers of their own land, and also work occasionally for others. No estimate of the quantity of land can be formed; it seldom exceeds 50 acres.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—There are so few labourers' habitations, properly so called, that it is difficult to answer this question; the smaller houses are generally owned by shopkeepers, innkeepers, &c.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—It is impossible to answer this question correctly; the smallest houses pay from 25 to 75 dollars rent.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers, if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—No definite answer can be given to this question.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—I think $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. would be a pretty correct average.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—About $\frac{1}{8}$ per cent. more than the deaths, but no means exist of forming a correct estimate.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—There are no means of ascertaining such proportion.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—About five.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—It is impossible to form any opinion upon this subject; scarcely one illegitimate birth in ten is publicly known, for the reasons before stated.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—No records of births being kept, this and the two following questions cannot be answered as respects the whole State. As to the city of Boston, some opinion may be formed from the accompanying Abstract of the Bill of Mortality.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their tenth year? 21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—See Answer to Question 19.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—I should think females from 18 to 22; males from 21 to 26.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Early engagements to marry are very common; but the men are generally cool and calculating, and often delay fulfilling such engagements from three to seven years, or until they feel capable of supporting a family; I know of no other cause by which marriages are delayed. The poor laws have no effect as to this matter.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—Both unmarried and married often save from 50 to 100 dollars per annum; but the majority of both spend all they earn.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Sometimes they are lent to their friends or relations, at 6 per cent., but most commonly invested in the savings bank.

Boston, 13 May 1834.

George Manners,

H. M. Consul in Massachusetts.

It has long been in contemplation to alter the poor laws, and particularly to abolish the State allowance, which measure has been recently recommended by a committee of the legislature; such allowance being justly considered as operating to encourage idleness. Some have proposed the total abolition of all poor laws, but, for the reasons stated in my Report, before mentioned, I think this would prove a very unwise experiment. It is, however, very desirable that no one capable of work should be supported in idleness. I have, as yet, been able to procure the dietaries of very few institutions, but have taken measures to obtain a more extensive list, which when completed I will have the honour of transmitting in a supplementary despatch.

CANARY ISLANDS.

CANARY ISLANDS.

My Lord,

Santa Cruz, 4 April 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the circular letter, dated 30 November 1833, signed by Mr. Bidwell, inclosing printed questions to be answered respecting the condition and management of the poor, the sick, and the helpless. These questions are for the most part inapplicable to the state of society as it exists in these islands; and as I should be obliged to place "nil" against most of the questions, I have drawn a Memorandum, in which is given, with reference to the different sections in the printed paper, information on the various points stated.

I shall not fail to keep in mind the wish of His Majesty's Government to collect intelligence on all statistical matters, and take care to note whatever can be procured, though my means are limited to what can be gathered from conversation, and some facts obtained from public offices as a favour.

I am, &c.

(signed) *Richard Bartlett.*The Right Hon.
Viscount Palmerston.

MEMORANDUM.

MENDICITY; VAGRANTS; DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED; IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

Mendicity does prevail to a great extent in the Canary Islands. There is no legal provision whatever for the relief or support of the poor included in the denominations stated above; casual charity is the only resource; but as the natives for the most part remain in the places where they were born, there are very few who have not some relations and acquaintance, from whom they receive occasional assistance. From the nature of the climate, the wants of the poor, when not suffering from sickness, are very limited; having food sufficient to satisfy their hunger, they are scarcely affected by the privations so sensibly felt by the poor in northern climates. "Goffro," (which is maize, barley or wheat, toasted and ground by the hand between two stones,) mixed with water or milk, potatoes and other vegetables, with sometimes a small piece of salt fish, constitute the general food of the peasantry throughout the islands. In the towns the artisans live better, obtaining bread, potatoes, salt fish, and sometimes butchers' meat.

SICK.

In Santa Cruz there is one hospital for the poor, but the accommodation is very limited, (24 beds), in no degree proportional to the wants of the population.

In the town of Laguna is one also, larger than Santa Cruz, and tolerably maintained. At Las Palmas, the capital of the island of Canary, is the largest and best hospital in the islands; near that town also is the hospital of St. Lazarus, exclusively for lepers, of which there are considerable numbers. This hospital is well kept up, and the building in a good state of repair, with a garden walled round. The unfortunate inmates are said to be comfortably provided for.

CHILDREN, ILLEGITIMATE; ORPHANS, FOUNDLINGS, DESERTED CHILDREN.

There are no legal regulations as to illegitimate children; their support therefore falls on the mother. There is a foundling hospital at Laguna in Teneriffe, and another at Las Palmas in Canary; in each a turning box, and a great number of children are by this means disposed of. In the hospital of Santa Cruz is also a turning box; the infants left are understood to be sent to Laguna. Children placed in the box have usually some mark by which they may be recognised, and they are given up to parents when claimed. There is no other provision for children.

CRIPPLES, DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND,

Live with their parents or relations, or subsist by casual charity. No provision.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

No particular establishment; live with their relations. When violent, they are placed in the hospitals or gaols.

DIETARIES

In the hospital of Santa Cruz the patients have for breakfast, slices of bread in weak broth; for dinner, besides bread, "fideos," (a common sort of vermicelle, of which much is made in the island) in broth, with a small quantity of meat; for supper, slices of bread and broth, the same as for breakfast. The allowance of bread is calculated at the rate of a pound for each person. This statement may be considered as applicable to all the hospitals in the island.

LABOURERS; ARTISANS.

Almost all the land in the Canary Islands is cultivated by agreement between the owners of the land and a class of persons called "medianeros (middlemen), intelligent husbandmen; the conditions are simple: that the medianero shall cultivate the land, and find half the seed, he retaining half the produce; the other half is delivered to the landlord in kind.

The wages of artisans are about 3s. a day; of day labourers from 14d. to 18d. a day. Piece-work is not common. At Santa Cruz semstresses are paid 6d. a day, with food, and 10d. without. Peasant women sometimes obtain a few "quarts" (8 are equal to 2½d.) for field-work.

Labourers must live on what they can earn or beg; but, as has been observed, they are satisfied with the commonest food, and their other wants are very limited, from the nature of the climate. The landlords are the owners of the labourers' cottages; the rent about 3s. a month.

Women marry from 15 to 25, and men at all ages. The women are very prolific. Many illegitimate children are born; and great numbers, both legitimate and illegitimate, are said to die young. There are no means of giving answers to the questions numbered from 14 to 22 in the printed paper.

The peasantry are a robust and hardy race, laborious and frugal. There is a great deal of family affection among them. Considerable numbers emigrate to the Havanna and Puerto Rico ostensibly, but it is believed that they are taken to Caraccas and other American countries, once dependencies of the Spanish crown.

MEXICO.

REPLIES to the QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS circulated amongst His Majesty's Consuls.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Mendicity is chiefly confined in Mexico to aged, infirm and disabled persons. In cases of this description it is tolerated. Able-bodied persons are not allowed to beg. Magistrates have the power of sentencing sturdy vagrants and mendicants to the public works, or to service in the army.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—There exists no regulation upon this subject, as far as I can learn, in any part of the Mexican Republic.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

The ten queries relating to destitute able-bodied persons may be best answered by stating that throughout the Mexican Republic the demand for labour exceeds the supply; consequently, that no person willing to work need be out of employment. In a few places, where manufactures have declined, owing to the competition of imported goods, some distress prevails; but this arises from an unwillingness on the part of the people to change their habits, occupations and place of abode, and not from a dearth of employment, either local or general. Those who choose to devote themselves to other industrious pursuits easily find a living. Owing, doubtless, to this state of things, it has never been thought necessary to introduce legislative or municipal regulations for the maintenance of able-bodied persons.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence? or, 2. Is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes? or, 3. Are they boarded with individuals? or, 4. Are they quartered or billeted on the householders? or, 5. Are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—In Mexico, and some other considerable towns of the Republic, there are houses of refuge for aged and infirm persons and orphans, supported by charitable bequests and donations. That of the city of Mexico is richly endowed, but its funds have from time to time been taken possession of by the government. The intentions of its founders and benefactors are accordingly but imperfectly fulfilled, and the establishment has been for some years very badly managed. Pains have, however, been lately taken to effect a reform, and it now affords an asylum to 80 aged and infirm persons of both sexes, and to 200 boys and girls. The latter are taught trades and domestic industry, and find no difficulty in providing for themselves when of an age to leave the establishment.

There are no regulations for supplying relief of any kind to aged or destitute persons at their own houses, or for quartering them on householders, or compelling their relations to provide for them.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—In Mexico, and other large towns, there are hospitals for the sick, into which applicants of all classes are indiscriminately admitted. These establishments are supported by charitable bequests, with the assistance in some places of a trifling local duty upon articles of general consumption. They all possess sufficient funds, if properly administered, to answer the object of their institution; but, owing to bad and dishonest management, they have most of them fallen into such disrepute that none but the very poorest classes of patients have recourse to them. The hospital of "Jesus," founded by Cortez, and continued by his descendants, as directed by his will, formed an exception to this observation; but it no longer exists, having been closed last year in consequence of the confiscation of the property of the family by a decree of the Congress.

In the country towns and villages there are no establishments for the relief of the sick.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes? or, 3. Are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There are no permanent regulations of the kind alluded to in these two queries. In times of unusual sickness or epidemics, subscriptions are occasionally raised, and temporary arrangements made for affording medical and other assistance to the poor at their own houses.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There is a department in the poor-house of Mexico set apart for lying-in women, and I imagine the same to be the case in other of the larger towns. Owing to the general mildness of the climate, such establishments are less required in this than in most other countries.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—I do not understand that there are any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick than those above described.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations? or, 2. Are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards? or, 3. Are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—By the laws of Spain, still in force in Mexico, the father is obliged to maintain his illegitimate offspring, but he cannot oblige the mother to part with the child until it has been nursed three years. Where no father is ascertained, the mother is obliged to support her child: in some cases, the obligation extends to the grandfather and grandmother in both lines. Great indifference, however, prevails as to the enforcement of these laws; and children, even at an early age, if abandoned by their parents, easily find employment in domestic service, or as apprentices or assistants to tradespeople.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—In Mexico, and other towns where such establishments exist, orphans and deserted children are received into the houses of refuge above described.

In Mexico, there is also an hospital expressly for foundlings.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, 6. Are they boarded with individuals? or, 7. Are their relatives compelled to support them?—There are no regulations for quartering them upon householders, or boarding them with individuals, or compelling their relations to support them.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception? or, 2. Are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, 3. Are they boarded with individuals? or, 4. Are their relatives compelled to support them?—Answers the same as to the four last preceding queries.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception? or, 2. Are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, 3. Are they boarded with individuals? or, 4. Are their relatives compelled to support them?—There are two hospitals in Mexico, one for male, and the other for female pauper lunatics; but neither in Mexico, nor in any other part of the country, do there exist regulations for quartering idiots and lunatics upon householders, or boarding them with individuals, or compelling their relations to take care of them.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

There being no system of poor laws in the Republic of Mexico, the queries under this head do not directly apply to this country. But it may not be out of place to observe, that the general facility of obtaining a livelihood; the high rate of wages, compared with the price of the necessaries of life; indifference to comfort and decency of appearance,—a consequence of the fineness of the climate, which may almost be said to render the lower orders independent of clothing, fuel and shelter,—all tend to produce in the Mexican population habits of idleness, profligacy and improvidence beyond what is observable in most countries: accordingly, their industry is limited to that which is necessary to providing a bare subsistence; the only stimulus to greater exertion being the desire to find the means of gratifying their vicious propensities.

MEXICO.

Frugality they have none. They marry whenever the fancy takes them; generally young.

From the foregoing observations, it will be readily understood that the condition of the self-supporting labourer in Mexico is, from choice, but not from necessity, in no way better than that of the person subsisting on charity.

On the contrary, the inmate of the hospital or poor house has to a certain degree the advantage in being provided with suitable apparel, a regular supply of food, better lodging, together with the comfort derived from habits approaching to order and civilization.

For the same reason of there being no system of poor laws in this country, there is nothing to be said upon the subject of a maladministration of charitable funds similar to that described in the volume published by the English Poor Law Commissioners; but in the management of the charitable institutions which do exist in Mexico, abuses of all sorts undoubtedly prevail.

DIETARIES, &c.

In the "hospicio de pobres," or poor-house of Mexico, the allowance of food is as follows: To grown-up persons, in the morning, either a cup of chocolate or a measure (containing something less than a pint) of maize porridge; dinner, eight ounces of meat and a measure of soup; supper, a measure of stewed beans or peas; wheaten bread for the whole day, 18 ounces. Children, in the morning, a small cup of chocolate or a measure of porridge sweetened; dinner, six ounces of meat and a portion of soup; supper, an allowance of stewed beans or peas; bread for the whole day, 14 ounces. The average daily expense of food for each individual, between grown-up persons and children, is about $7\frac{1}{2}d.$ of our money.

Formerly the allowance, particularly of meat, was more liberal; but in consequence of the reduced state of the funds of the establishment, it was found necessary to diminish it.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The wages of an able-bodied agricultural labourer vary, according to the locality and time of year, from 2 rials to $3\frac{1}{2}$ rials, without provisions; that is to say, from 1s. to 1s. 9d. a day of our money, the latter being the highest rate paid in the immediate neighbourhood of Mexico; but in every case the rate of wages far exceeds what is necessary for the support of the labourer and his family, according to the habits of persons of that class in this country; the surplus is spent in drunkenness and debauchery on Sundays and holidays. Among the Indian population, a good deal goes to the purchase of ornaments for their favourite saint, and other religious or superstitious offerings.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is not usual in field labour; but among artisans and tradesmen, such as tailors, shoemakers, smiths and carpenters, it is general, and the rate of remuneration high for the labour performed. In the mines a great part of the work is done by task.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—In all the settled parts of the country, an agricultural labourer, who is constant at his work, may be sure to earn on an average throughout the year from a dollar and a half to two dollars a week; 6s. to 8s. of our money. If in remote places, the rate is lower; the price of food is low in proportion. Artisans at least double that amount, with a certainty of constant employment whenever inclined to work.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—It is difficult to answer this question, owing to the great difference in the price of provisions; but I am sure I may safely say, as a general rule, that the labourer or artisan who chooses to work constantly will earn, except in times of extraordinary scarcity, at least twice as much as is necessary for the expenditure of his family in food and clothing, suited to the habits of the Mexican people. Schooling for children, where there is any, and such as it is, is generally provided gratuitously; in the towns, out of the funds of the municipality; in country places, by the curate of the parish.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—There is no want of employment for women, either in the towns or in the country, nor for children above 10 years of age.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—It would be very difficult to answer this query with precision; but it may be sufficient to say that women, with or without children, and with or without the assistance of the latter, can always earn enough for their support.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years, respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—Also difficult to answer with precision.

8. Could

Appendix (F.)Foreign
Communications.
MEXICO.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Most certainly. The common food of working-people in Mexico is maize, or Indian corn, prepared either as porridge (atole), or in thin cakes (tortillas), and beans (frijoles), like the white bean so much in use in France, with the addition of chile, a species of hot pepper, of which they eat enormous quantities by way of seasoning. In the towns, wheaten bread forms a part of the food of the lower classes, and meat occasionally.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—Such a family could certainly lay by something; but it never enters into the head of a Mexican to save.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation? 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations? 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale? 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—It is not customary for common labourers in this country to hold any land. Sometimes Indians who possess small patches of land of their own go to work at the large farming establishments in harvest or sowing-time, when wages are at the highest rate. At the "haciendas," or large farms, houses, or rather huts, are given free of rent to the labourers belonging to the establishment. The practice of building houses to let to labouring people does not seem to prevail in any part of this country.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population? 15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population? 16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population? 17. The average number of children to a marriage? 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births? 19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year? 20. That die before the end of their 10th year? 21. That die before the end of their 18th year? 22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females? 23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—No registers are kept in this country, from which it would be possible to answer these queries with any thing like accuracy; but, as a general observation, it may be said that population increases very slowly in Mexico, owing partly to the number of violent deaths, which is great beyond belief, among the lower orders, particularly in the large towns, and partly to the great proportion of deaths in infancy, owing to the careless habits of the poor, and the frequent occurrence of small-pox and other epidemic complaints, particularly among the Indians. Besides which, owing to causes which I will not attempt to determine, the average length of life in Mexico is not near as great (perhaps not by a fourth) as in the northern countries of Europe.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save? 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—I know no class of persons in this country at all addicted to saving. There are no savings-banks or other institutions to encourage the labouring classes to save.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—To a very limited extent, and is confined almost exclusively to cripples, the aged and the impotent.
2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—None.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

There is no provision for this class of persons.

To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—Parents are obliged to support their children whilst they are too young to support themselves, but beyond this no one is compelled to relieve his relatives.

To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—None.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

There is no provision for this class of persons.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—The hospital of the “Mizericordia,” established in this city, is the only receptacle for the sick in this province (as noted in the General Remarks, p. 694), and it will not accommodate more than 30 to 40 invalids.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—The municipal body or corporation of this city pays a small salary to a surgeon to attend on the sick at their own houses, and it is his duty to visit every destitute sick person that asks for his advice.
3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—None.
4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—None, except what is given voluntarily on the part of the medical men of the city.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are no other compulsory modes.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—On the mothers.
2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—They are under no obligation.
3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—The public is not compelled to contribute to their support.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—A few orphans are received into the “Recolhimento,” to be educated and supported, but the number is very limited. The trustees of the “Mizericordia” have lately established a Foundling Hospital in this city, and support it with their funds. Into it are received all foundlings; but, though they appear to be well treated, the greatest part of them die immediately. Parents who wish to abandon their children deposit them in the Foundling Hospital.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, 6. Boarded with individuals? or, 7. Are their relatives compelled to support them?—None.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

There is no provision for these classes of persons.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

There is no provision for these classes.

EFFECTS

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

As there is no compulsory relief given to the poor in this province, the questions do not apply to it.

LABOURERS, &c.

Foreign
Communications.

MARANHAM.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter? 2. Is piece-work general? 3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—Nearly all the labour in this country is performed by slaves, and they are generally employed by their owners. In the few cases where slave labourers are hired for agricultural purposes, the usual wages are six milreis, or about 17 s. sterling per month, besides their food. Stonemasons, carpenters, cabinet-makers, tailors, &c. can find full employment throughout the year, and gain on an average 400 reis, or about 1 s. sterling per day, but out of this they have to support themselves. Piece-work is not general.

To the six following questions I can only give a general answer. There are (as before remarked) few free labourers here, and these few regulate their expenses by their earnings, so that it is impossible to say what is their average expenditure. The necessities of life in this fine climate are few, and easily obtained; and the lower class of people are generally very indolent, working only as much as is necessary to enable them to obtain those few necessities.

White women and children never work.

In the country black women and children are employed in agriculture, and in town in washing and other domestic avocations.

An industrious family might find full employment either in town or country, and from their earnings might save greatly; but I can find no data on which to ascertain what might be the average specific amount of their earnings, spendings or savings.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation? 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations? 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale? 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—In town the owners of such houses are generally shopkeepers, and others of that class. To these houses little or no land is attached. In the country the peasantry generally build their own houses on some planter's property, and as land is of small value there, they are but little restricted as to the quantity they may annex to their habitations. The rent of a small house in town, suitable for a mechanic, is 40 milreis, or 5 l. 13 s. 4 d. per annum. Their sale price may be about 350 milreis, or 50 l. sterling. These houses are generally built of wood, and are not durable.

14 & 15. The proportion of deaths and births to the whole population?—Deaths, $\frac{1}{25}$, or four per cent. Births, $\frac{1}{20}$, or 5 per cent. I can find no data on which to form anything like correct answers to these questions, there being no general register kept in this city of the deaths, births, and marriages in the province; I have, however, got the best information I could on the subject, and on it form the answers given.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—No means of ascertaining the proportion, but it is small, compared with other countries.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Five.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—No means of ascertaining; but the proportion of illegitimate to legitimate births is very great here, compared with most places in Europe.

19, 20, 21. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year, 10th year and 18th year?—For the entire province I can give no answer to these questions; but I give annexed an extract from a table published of the deaths in this city last year (1833), and it may be considered as the average of the whole province for several years back.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—This I cannot ascertain; but I know that the females generally marry very young, and the males seldom until they have passed their 30th year.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—The principal cause of delay is the facility with which illicit intercourse is carried on between the sexes; to which intercourse, from the moral depravity of the people, little odium attaches.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Amongst the lower classes very little is saved.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—The few that save generally invest their savings in slaves, small cottages, and gold trinkets.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The only charitable institutions in this province are the "Mizericordia," and the "Recolhimento," both established in this city. The "Mizericordia" consists of an hospital for the general reception of the sick poor; an hospital for the reception of those afflicted with leprosy; a foundling hospital for the reception of foundlings. Its revenue is about 20,000 milreis, or about 2,835 l. sterling, arising from subscriptions, donations, and interest on legacies. The general hospital usually contains from 30 to 40 invalids, belonging to different parts of the province, supported entirely at the expense of the institution; besides which, medical advice and medicine are given gratis, daily, to all poor persons who apply for it at the hospital. The qualifications for admittance are poverty, combined with some curable disease. The incurable are not admitted.

Into the Leprosy Hospital only lepers are admitted, and of these the number is considerable, chiefly Africans. To this branch of the hospital government contributes 2,000 milreis, or about 300 l. sterling, per annum. In the Foundling Hospital is a box for the reception of such children as parents wish to abandon, without discrimination of colour or rank.

The "Recolhimento" is an establishment for the education of indigent female orphans, but it seldom contains more than 12 to 15 of these, there being considerable difficulty in gaining admittance into it. The government contributes 1,000 milreis, or about 150 l. sterling, a year towards its support, and about an equal sum is raised by contributions. As remarked under its proper head, mendicity exists but to a very limited extent in this country, and alms are seldom asked except on a Saturday. On this day almost every shopkeeper and housekeeper appropriates a certain sum for distribution amongst the blind, cripples and aged, that come regularly round to receive it. Thus the impotent and indigent are saved from great privations, and the evil effects of compulsory contributions are avoided. Persons capable of labouring never ask alms in this country, neither would they be relieved if they did. I have not been able to ascertain what is the average expense of supporting the sick in the hospital of the "Mizericordia," but I find that any person (not a pauper) who sends his slave or other dependant there pays at present 800 reis, or about 2 s. 4 d. per diem for his food, medical advice, and medicine; I would therefore conclude that this must be considered the average daily expense of each patient. For the support of the uncondemned prisoners in the gaol government allows 100 reis, or about 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling per diem; and for those condemned to the galleys, 80 reis, or nearly 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per diem. On these respective allowances the prisoners have to support themselves; and, by several of them messing together, they can on these allowances get a sufficiency of wholesome food, say rice and farinha, with occasionally a little fish or jerk beef.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Vagrants are not tolerated in the country districts, comprising about nine-tenths of the population of the kingdom; and in the country, as well as in towns, every one is bound, when called upon, to show, by passport or certificate, whence he comes and whither he is bound. Mendicancy is by law prohibited, but is nevertheless existing to some extent, especially in the larger towns, where persons of the lowest class are frequently seen hanging about the doors of the better houses, and, under pretence of offering some trifling articles for sale, seeking to interest the compassion of the inhabitants or passers by.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—Vagrancy being, as already noticed, prohibited in the country, all persons who upon inquiry cannot make good that they can maintain themselves all the year round, either out of their property or their lawful calling, are obliged to take year's service. By law, servants should never be hired for a shorter period than a twelvemonth. Employing labourers by the day, though often done in and about towns, is consequently illegal.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—

No relief is given to destitute able-bodied for their own persons; but if they have a helpless family to maintain, and cannot by their utmost industry procure for them the necessaries of life, they are assisted from the poor-rates. Whoever can, and will not work, is conveyed to the nearest workhouse, and there put to forced labour; and in that case also, such of the family as cannot support themselves, are allowed parochial relief, and billeted or quartered on land and householders in the parish.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—From what has been stated, it will have appeared that district houses of industry in the country are not absolutely necessary, nor are there indeed any such. In most market-towns there are poor-houses, and in the diocesan towns they have work-houses, which are found to answer their purpose well, and new ones are establishing. The assistance given to the poor in towns, in as far as the applicants are not admitted into the poor-houses, or sent to the work-house, is given in money.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—There are no religious institutions in Norway, giving assistance to the poor.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—The poor are seldom or never provided with work at their own houses; indeed, persons who can work at a trade, become rarely burthensome to the public; and if they do, they are assisted preferably with money.

6. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—No work is provided for them in agriculture, or on public works.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—The needful assistance is generally given in money. During severe cold or in very sickly seasons, food and clothing is sometimes distributed; this was particularly the case in this town during the prevalence of the cholera morbus last year.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—Their children have free access to the parish schools as day scholars; but they are rarely, for the sake of education, taken from their parents.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—From some old ordinances it would seem, that relatives are under some obligation to provide for the destitute of their family; but there is no positive law on this subject. In towns, such assistance is in most cases given gratuitously; and in the country, regard is had to relationship in the billeting or quartering of paupers on the house or landholders.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by Loans?—They are not assisted by loans.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

Foreign
Communications.
NORWAY.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—

Impotent through age, cripples and others who cannot subsist themselves, are in the country districts billeted or quartered on such of the inhabitants (house and landholders in the parish) as have the means of providing for them. By them they are furnished with clothing and food, and they are in return expected to perform such light services as they can. In the distribution, respect is had to the extent or value of the different farms, and to the number of the indigent, which varies greatly in different parishes. In some they have so few poor, that one pauper only falls to the lot of five or six farms, who then take him in rotation; whilst in other parishes they have a pauper quartered on every farm or estate all the year round, and on the larger ones several. In some instances, such objects are furnished with food and clothing in their own cottages, even in the country; and in towns, this mode of providing for them is generally preferred, except as respects impotent old females, who, on a vacancy offering, are admitted into poor-houses, or such, either males or females, who being still able to do some sort of work, are placed in the work-houses.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—

In most bailiwicks (Arntor) they have district-houses for the reception of the sick; and in the capital of every diocese they have a general hospital. The district-houses in the country are principally intended for the reception of indigent persons affected with chronical or disgusting diseases, such as erysipelas, scabeis, syphilis, herpetes, lepra, squamosa, &c. Every bailiwick has its medical officer, appointed and paid by government, who is bound to give his gratuitous assistance and advice to the poor; and the cost of the necessary medicines is defrayed out of the poor-rates. Duly qualified and examined midwives are also stationed in every bailiwick, who attend poor lying-in women at their own houses, without fee or reward; and to the General Hospital, as well as the Lying-in Hospital in this city, the poor have free access.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—

Both the parents of illegitimate children are bound in equal proportion to provide for the support of their offspring. The children remain with the mother, and the father cannot, under plea of wishing to have them under his care, avoid contributing his share towards their maintenance. If nothing can be got of him, he may be put to hard labour to indemnify the public for their temporary advance. Soldiers are deducted part of their pay, if they have no other means to provide for their bastards. The commander of the corps fixes the quantum, and as respects non-military, the magistrate of the district. The liability ceases on the child's attaining its fifteenth year. On the mother's side illegitimate children have in general full family rights, but the relatives, with the exception of the parents, are under no obligation to maintain them. On the public they have the same claim as other indigent children.

Orphans.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—

6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—

ORPHANS.

In Christiania they have an orphan-house; but most orphans are in towns quartered on and apprenticed to tradespeople, who are expected to teach them their business, and receive from the parish some compensation for their board and lodging. In the country they are in like manner billeted on the peasants.

Foundlings.

Foundlings and deserted children are not met with in Norway, or so rarely, that no separate provision has been made for them.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—

CRIPPLES.

There are no establishments for their reception; no distinct regulations, but they are dealt with as other impotent paupers.

DEAF and DUMB.

At Drontheim they have an establishment for the reception of deaf and dumb; such as cannot gain admittance there, are treated as other paupers.

BLIND.

There are no establishments for their reception, no distinct regulation for their maintenance, but they are provided for as other helpless poor.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—

LUNATICS.

There are several establishments for lunatics; one at Christiania, one at Arendal, one at Christiansand, one at Stavanger, one at Bergen, and one at Drontheim; they are all on a small scale, and are more depôts for the temporary or constant confinement of lunatics than establishments for their recovery, with the exception of the Asylum at Bergen, founded a few years since.

IDIOTS.

Idiots are billeted and quartered on house and landholders, and provided for as other paupers.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

1st. On the industry of the labourers?

2d. On their frugality?

3d. On the age at which they marry?

4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?

5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? [See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts."]

Although it is generally admitted that the expectation of parochial relief has a more or less hurtful influence on the working classes, in paralysing in some measure their exertions to provide by industry and frugality for their sustenance, little of this evil is as yet perceived in Norway. It is still considered disgraceful to have recourse to assistance from the poor-rates, and most that become burthensome in this respect are brought to it by particular circumstances. Age, sickness, an overburthensome family, drunkenness or other vicious habits are generally the more immediate causes. On the age at which they marry it has no perceptible influence in the country, owing to the regulation there in force, in virtue of which no one can marry, without showing to the satisfaction of the clergyman, that he is permanently settled in such a manner, as to offer a fair prospect that he can maintain a family a family all the year round; nor does it seem to weaken the mutual affection and dependence between parents, children and relatives. To destitute able-bodied the provision holds out no prospect of exemption from labour as regards the country districts. In towns this may now and then happen, owing to supineness of the managers or overseers of the houses of industry, and want of suitable labour to keep the inmates fully employed. But the utility of these institutions having been generally felt, and public attention having of late years been greatly directed towards them, they are getting better managed. Compared with the self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, the condition of the pauper is by no means eligible. Not the disgrace only attending his situation, but the coercion also in which he is placed, especially in towns, deters the able-bodied of the lower classes, except in extreme necessity, to apply for parochial relief.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—

2. Is piece-work general?—

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—

The wages paid to able-bodied male labourers in this town and neighbourhood is 30 skilling = $10\frac{1}{2}d.$ a day during the summer, and 24 skl. = $8\frac{1}{2}d.$ a day during the winter months. In Norway, the towns, as compared to the whole kingdom, are few in number, and of no great magnitude, about 9-10ths of the population residing in the country, and following agricultural pursuits. With the exception of the civil and military officers, whose calling obliges them to reside in the country, and a very few families of distinction, these 9-10ths of the population are peasants, and their dependents. The last returns published here state the number of landowners at 139,091; of these, 59,464 were freeholders, 30,921 copy and leaseholders, and 48,706 cottagers. The farms or estates, independent of the wastes and forests, being generally of no great extent, the owner shares for the most part the labours of the day in common with his domestic servants, which are always hired for a year certain, and with his cottagers (hunsmand), the former dining at his table, and receiving the necessary clothing, and a gratification of a few dollars at the close of the year. The cottagers are charged a small rent for the land they occupy, and on the produce of which they and their children subsist. This rent is not paid in money, but in a certain number of working-days for the landlord under whom they hold, the number of days being proportioned to the extent and value of the land. The few day-labourers met with in the country are found in victuals, and besides paid in money from to 12 or 16 skilling a day = $3d.$, $4d.$ and $5\frac{1}{2}d.$ An average day-labourer, obtaining an average employment all the year round, may in this neighbourhood earn about 65 dollars a year, equal to about $11l. 10s. 9d.$ Tradespeople are generally paid by the piece; if not, they are allowed by their masters $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 dollars a week, equal to about $5s. 4d.$ and $7s. 2d.$, with food and lodging, and are found with the needful tools.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—Generally speaking, the yearly expenditure consumes the whole of the above earnings, but now and then an industrious labourer, serving a liberal master, makes shift to save enough to purchase and furnish a small house. In the country, as already observed, the labourers consist of domestic servants and cottagers. The latter subsist on the produce of the land they cultivate, contrive to purchase a cow or two, sometimes a horse and some sheep, and improve their little farms. For schooling of children, and religious teachers, labourers pay nothing, or very nearly so.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—In the country women assist in hay-making, in laying and in taking up potatoes, and in general harvest work. In towns they earn something by carding, spinning and sewing, and by washing, and occasionally assisting in families. In laying and taking up potatoes children are also employed.

6. What can women and children, under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—In summer, and during harvest, and occasionally in winter, a woman can earn 20 skilling, or one dollar, equal to $3s. 6d.$ the week; and a child aged 14 and above, during part of the time eight skilling a day or 48, equal to about $17d.$ the week.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years, respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—The wife, it may be assumed, earns about 20 skilling a day during half of the year, is 25 dollars, equal to about $4l. 8s. 9d.$; and of the children aged 14, 11, 8 and 5, the two younger ones can earn nothing, but the two older ones about five dollars each the year, or both of them 10 dollars = $1l. 15s. 6d.$, making the yearly income of the wife and children equal to about $6l. 4s. 3d.$

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Except in case of illness, or other mishap, such a family can subsist on their aggregate earnings; viz.—

The father's	-	dollars	-	65
The wife's		"	-	25
Two of the children's		"	-	10

Dollars 100 = £.17. 15.

The

The labourers live on very simple food, salt herrings, oatmeal porridge, potatoes, coarse oatmeal bread, may be once a week a piece of bacon or salt beef; and along the coast and the rivers and lakes on fresh fish. Corn-brandy is in general use.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—With order, and in the service of a liberal master, they may, and frequently do, lay up a little.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—It is impossible to name an average quantity. In the country the cottagers (hunsmaend) have in general what will furnish them and their family with the means of subsistence; they keep one or more cows; some of them a horse, a few sheep and goats, and cut the necessary wood for repairing their habitations, for fencing and for fuel in the forests of the landlord under whom they hold, without any charge to them.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—In towns their habitations are generally owned by the labourers themselves; in the country they are more frequently the property of the landlord on whose ground they are situate; but if the occupant has children, one of them is generally put in possession on the death of the father.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—In the country the rent, as already observed, is paid by work done by the labourer during a number of days for his landlord, the number of days being proportioned to the quantity and value of the land attached to his habitation. The price on sale of labourers' habitations in towns varies from 1 to 200 dollars, and the rent is in proportion.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—This has been answered above.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—As 1 to 54.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—As 1 to 28.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—As 1 to 119.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Of married pair there were according to the last returns I have seen 181,260; but I have no means for ascertaining the average number of children to each marriage.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—As 14 to 1.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—	} The population of Norway in 1825, since which there has been no census, was 1,051,318, whereof died the year following 19,609; and of these

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—
	Under 5 years of age	6,817
	Between 5 and 10	- 602
	Between 10 and 20	- 761

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—As respects the country districts it is impossible to name the average age of marriage; for, while on the one hand, as already observed, no one is allowed to marry, unless he can make it appear that he can maintain a family all the year round, by agriculture, handicraft labour, or by fishing, which tends to retard marriage, such, on the other hand, who possess competent means, either in landed property or otherwise, marry early, 20 for males, and 16 for females, being the minimum of age at which marriage can be legally contracted. In towns the average age of marriage is for males 30, and for females 25.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—The causes by which marriage is delayed are, in the country, the just-mentioned control; and in towns want of means of supporting a family, or the holding an advantageous situation, which would have to be given up on the party marrying.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—Among labouring people there is little difference observed in this respect between the married and the unmarried.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—The little which, under favourable circumstances, labourers are able to save, is spent, as already observed, in building or purchasing and furnishing an habitation; or it is invested in a saving bank, of which they have one in most towns. At this place such a bank was established in 1822. The bank allows to the contributors 4 per cent. per annum on the sum deposited; the interest, if not taken out, being at the end of the year added to the principal. They lend out on security at 5 per cent., and discount good bills at 6%. It numbers at present about 2,800 accounts. Its capital stock, which has hitherto been gradually increasing, was on 1 January 1833 doll. 215,571, 1 January 1834, doll. 269,400, and on 1 March last 284,421, and its net earnings, being the surplus gained by loans on security and by discounting, were on 1 January 1833, dollars 14,251, on 1 January 1834 dollars 17,237, and on the 1 March last dollars 18,118.

 NORWAY.

Wednesday:—1 quart menage soup, being grits boiled in water, and made savory with vinegar and sugar.

Thursday:—1 quart white cabbages, or pea-soup, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. salt meat, and 4 oz. rye bread.

Friday:—1 quart milk-porridge, and for the rest the same as Wednesday.

Saturday:—1 quart of porridge, called “ollebröd,” made of boiled beer, milk and water, flour and a little sugar; 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. salt herrings, and 8 oz. rye bread.

Supper.

4 oz. rye bread, or in lieu thereof a pint of beer. Such as wish to exchange part of their bread for tobacco, are allowed so to do.

The above is the diet of labourers set to work within doors, in carding, spinning, weaving, &c.; such as are put to hard labour out of doors, and require more food, or can earn more, are allowed similar victuals, but in greater quantity, being rated, as the case may be, at 12 sk. 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., 14 sk. 5 d., 16 sk. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., or 18 sk. 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ d.

In this and the following dietaries, wherever a quart is mentioned, is meant a Norwegian pot, which, for brevity's sake, is assumed to be equal to an English quart; but this is not quite correct; for a Norwegian pot contains only 58.8971 English cubic inches, whereas an English quart holds 70.5 English inches, and the quantity allowed to the prisoners is consequently somewhat less than is stated above.

DIETARY of the PRISONERS in CHRISTIANIA WORKHOUSE, or HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Sunday:—1 quart (2 pints) pea-soup, and 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. bacon, free of bones.

Monday:—1 $\frac{1}{2}$ pint boiled barley meal, and 1 quart milk, and 1 quart potatoes.

Tuesday:—1 quart barley-grits soup, and 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. salt meat.

Wednesday:—1 quart beer porridge; 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. salt herrings.

Thursday:—as on Sunday.

Friday:—1 quart barley grits boiled in water, and 1 quart milk.

Saturday:—the same as on Wednesday.

They allow besides to every prisoner daily 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of rye bread, and five days in the week 1 quart of beer.

The convicts in the Castle of Christiania, of which they have at present 257, being felons condemned to hard labour in irons during their life-time, or thieves and lesser criminals, condemned to like labour, also in irons for a shorter period, are allowed daily in money 2 skilling, about $\frac{3}{4}$ sterl., and 2 lb. soft rye bread (2 lb. rye bread); and besides, while employed in labour for Government, 4 skilling, about three-halfpence; and in as far as they can be spared from public labour, and work for individuals, 8 skilling, being about 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. sterling.

DIETARY of the CHRISTIANIA PRISON.

(Arrest-Huus.)

The allowance for each Prisoner being at the rate of 12 skilling = 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. sterling a day.

Breakfast.

Bread for 3 skilling, about 1 d.; beer for 2 skilling, being nearly $\frac{3}{4}$ d.

Dinner.

Sunday:—1 quart pea-soup, and 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. bacon, free of bones.

Monday:—1 quart boiled barley grits and a pint of milk, or, in lieu of the milk, a pint beer and $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. moist sugar.

Tuesday:—1 quart broth or bouillon, and 2 oz. meat, free of bones.

Wednesday:—1 pot, so called, “sweet soup,” or “menage soup,” or, in lieu thereof, grits boiled in milk and water; and 4 oz. salt herrings, and a pint of potatoes.

Thursday:—as Sunday.

Friday:—1 quart grout, being flour boiled thick with water, and a pint of milk, or, in lieu of the milk, a pint of beer and half oz. of moist sugar.

Saturday:—“ollebröd,” being a porridge composed of beer, milk, water and flour, and a little sugar, and 4 oz. salt herrings.

Supper.

Bread and butter for 3 skilling, about one penny.

PROJECT of a LAW for the ADMINISTRATION of the POOR in the Country and Towns, drawn up by the Commission, instituted in virtue of the Supreme Decision of the 3d November 1829.

PROJECT of a LAW for the ADMINISTRATION of the POOR in the COUNTRY.

CHAPTER I.

Of what constitutes an Administrative District of the Poor.

§ 1. Ordinarily a parish constitutes a district of administration of the poor. When a parish includes both a town and rural district, or a district in the country forms part of the parish attached to the church of the town, without appertaining to the jurisdiction of the latter, the country parish constitutes a distinct district of administration of the poor.

Mines or other works, with the pits or fabrics and estates attached to them, which are either occupied by the proprietor personally, or are parcelled out among the officers and labourers employed, have likewise a separate administration of the poor for themselves distinct from the poor administration of the parish in which the works and their appurtenances are situated.

A ladested * is attached ordinarily to the parish in which it is situated, in as far as a single township in a parish or a ladested, or a single mine, or iron work, or fabric have constituted of themselves a distinct district of administration of the poor hitherto, they are to continue so until the districts concerned shall agree to unite for the administration of their poor.

In like manner the union which may now exist between single mines and that of any particular work, the poor administration of a district shall continue as long as those concerned do not come to an understanding for their disunion.

Whenever the State has formed, or may form a public establishment in a country district, the mode of proceeding relative thereto, as to the poor administration, shall assimilate to that of mines, in case the union with the country district is not formed by a mutual agreement as to the administration of the poor.

CHAPTER II.

As to the Directors of the Poor Administration.

§ 2. The administration of the poor in every district is to be superintended by a commission, consisting of the minister of the parish, the lensmand or lansmand † of the district, and as many chosen men as the amtmand ‡ may think necessary, in accordance with the representation of the minister of the parish, and proportionate to the extent of the poor administration. The number of these men to be fixed, so that every parish shall have at least one elected man in the commission.

§ 3. These men who are denominated overseers, are to be elected by those persons in the parish who are entitled, by the constitution, to vote at a meeting held by the lensmand. The election to be valid for four years; those going out may be re-elected, but they are not bound to accept the election until after the expiration of four years from their secession. No one who is 60 years old or above, is bound to abide by his election. The validity of hindrances and reasons urged, on account of which those elected refuse to abide by their election, or demand their dismissal before the expiration of the stated period, to be decided by the amtmand. The overseers are, as long as they continue in office, to be exempted from keeping watch for the properties on which they reside, and from attendance upon the courts.

The poor district to be divided into as many branch districts as there are overseers, and each overseer to have his district assigned to him by the poor commission.

§ 4. In ladesteds, which have their poor administration in common with the land district in which they are situated, one or several overseers (§ 3) for the ladested, to be nominated by those entitled to vote at an election held by the foged, § according to the number fixed by the amtmand, which as such, are members of the collective poor commission.

§ 5. As to mines. With the exception of Róraas, where the direction of the poor administration remains the same as hitherto, the poor administration to be superintended by the minister, who likewise is president; the proprietor of the mine or the person accredited by him as his representative, the lensmand and one of the officers of the mine named by the proprietor. In the other mines or iron works which have distinct administrations of the poor, the management to remain as hitherto.

§ 6. The overseer to have under him the superintendants of the “Lægd,” || or quartering of

* Ladested is a small town not possessing a separate municipal administration.

† A subordinate officer chosen from among the peasantry, who combines the duties of a tax collector, high constable, &c.

‡ Amtmand, the chief executive functionary in each amt or province. His powers and duties much resemble those of a French prefect.

§ Foged, an officer in the country, whose duties are chiefly those of collector of taxes.

|| A Lægd is a certain portion of property bound to furnish a pauper for a certain time with lodging, food and clothing, the owner enjoying the benefit of his labour. Such a pauper is called a Lægdslem, a Lægdslimb is said to be a Lægd, and a Lægdyder is the owner or occupier of a property subject to Lægd.

of the poor; the number of which superintendants is to be fixed by the poor commission in proportion to the number of "Lægds" or quarters a person can inspect conveniently. Such a number of lægds to compose a lægd's district. The first time, a farmer in each lægd's district is to be nominated by the poor commission, or superintendants of the lægd, who is to retain such appointment for the period of a year, after which the office is to be assumed annually in rotation by the farmers in the order in which the registered number of their farms or premises follow each other upwards. The age of 60 years exempts from this office. It must not be assigned either to an overseer, or other member of the poor commission.

§ 7. The incumbent of the parish, and in case of a vacancy or hindrance, the officiating minister, to be president of the poor commission and treasurer of the administration of the poor. If the benefice comprises several districts of administration of the poor, he is president and treasurer of each single commission. As respects mines, either the proprietor or the person he may nominate thereto, is treasurer and secretary.

CHAPTER III.

As to the Place of Settlement of the Poor.

§ 8. Every one who may require relief, shall receive it of the poor administration in the district where he resides, provided he has resided there regularly during the last five years. If this is not the case, the district in which he last resided during five successive years, is the one in which he is to acquire a settlement, and in case he has not resided so long constantly in any one place, then his native place.

By constant residence is to be understood, that he has had his home in the district during the whole of the stipulated period. However, the place of settlement of the wife in wedlock is regulated by that of the husband; children in wedlock, under the age of 18, by the father's; and in case of his death by the mother's; and illegitimate children, under the same age, by the mother's—always as long as the husband, father or mother live; but after their death, by the constant personal residence of the widow or child approximating nearest to five years. In the absence of so long a residence in any one place, the individual's proper place of settlement is his or her place of nativity. Instead of the place of nativity, when the birth only occurred there by chance, while the mother, at the same time, had her constant residence in another district, this, or if she has no stated place of abode, then the place of her nativity becomes the place of settlement and relief.

In those cases in which the proper places of settlement cannot be discovered, the individual is to be provided for in the district in which he has resided longest during the last five years. In as far as any one, in reference to the laws hitherto in force, has acquired the right to be relieved in a given place, by means of a shorter residence there than five years, this continues to be his place of settlement, until he has resided constantly for five years in another district.

§ 9. The time during which a person is confined in a place of punishment, is not taken into the account or considered, when the question is as to the place of settlement or relief, excepting when the individual is the father of a family—a wife in wedlock—or a widow with a family; in which cases, the individual is considered to have resided there, where the family have resided during the term of the punishment.

§ 10. Persons enlisted in the military service, their wives and children are provided for, in case of relief being required, from the military chest, and consequently do not acquire a settlement during the period of their continuing in the service. As a result hereof, the military authorities have a right to refuse permission to men who have enlisted to enter the married state. When these are dismissed from the service, and they or their family are in want of relief, the proper district to afford the relief to be that on which it would have devolved, supposing the enlistment and period of service of the individual or father of the family to be wholly disregarded, as if they had never occurred.

§ 11. A foreigner who becomes distressed without having resided during five years at any one place in the kingdom, has the needful relief given him until he is removed out of the district where he was resident at the time his necessity occurred; the expenses of his conveyance out of the kingdom, or to his home, to be borne by the national treasury; the competent department of the government to decide how far the reimbursement of the expenses for conveyance and relief afforded can be advisedly demanded from the place to which he belongs; and in case this shall be proper, to take the needful measures on the occasion.

§ 12. In case the necessity of relief to a single person or family arises at a place which is not that of his settlement, a reimbursement for the assistance afforded at the first named place can be demanded at the latter, in case the poor commission in the same has been informed, without delay, as to the relief advanced. Nevertheless, the assistance which is rendered essential, in consequence of a misfortune which has occurred casually, such as sickness, without the individual or family requiring relief, when the said simple cause of necessity is removed, shall neither form the object of reimbursement by another district, nor shall it empower the poor commission of that place to enjoin the individual or family to depart to their place of settlement.

§ 13. No person who does not apply for relief, shall be sent away from the poor district in which he is resident, for the assumed reason that, in process of time, he may possibly become a burden to the district. Nor may relief be rendered to or forced upon any one, but must first be asked for by the necessitous, before the latter can be regarded as a pauper; however, a person is to be regarded as such, either if he has been guilty of begging personally, or by his wife or children, either with his knowledge, or even without his being privy to it; if in the latter case, the sole reason has been that the father of the family obviously had not been able to, or would not, provide them with the needful.

§ 14. The single person or family which remove from his or their home to another parish shall bring a circumstantial certificate of their removal from the minister of the place where he or they may have resided, containing the particulars of his or their baptism, confirmation, marriage, last receipt of the sacrament, their previous deportment, and the avowed object of their removal.

This certificate is to be delivered by the new comer, under the pain of incurring a penalty of one specie dollar per week in default thereof, at latest on the first performance of divine service in the parish church, where he or they take up a fresh residence, to the minister of the parish there; after which it is to be received in charge by the same, as forming a supplement to the ministerial register, and retained as long as the residence in the place lasts; the time of residence in the place to be computed from the day of delivery, or the last day of the time in which it should have been so delivered. In case of further removal from the district, the certificate to be delivered to the person or head of the family, provided with the needful endorsement as to deportment, taking the sacrament, increase of the family there, &c. On removal from the parish to another place in the benefice, the single parishes of which have distinct administrations of the poor, or from one poor district to another, in a benefice in which there are separate administrations for ironworks and the mines, the new comer, under penalty of incurring the above fine in default thereof is to announce his removal to the minister of the parish, who signs the alteration in the ministerial register.

§ 15. In case it can be inferred with certainty from the certificate of removal brought by the party, or by means of other vouchers, where the person's or family's proper place of settlement is, the direction of the poor in the place where the individual or family became chargeable is entitled to remove by the lensmand the person or persons craving relief, if sickness does not prevent it, to his or their proper place of settlement, at the expense of the same. On the other hand, if no such certainty exists to serve as a guide, the pauper must not, upon mere conjecture as to the correct place of settlement, be sent to another poor district, but his or their removal must be delayed, until the needful certainty, either by correspondence or other means, or by the admission of the fact from the proper place of settlement, has been obtained.

§ 16. Disputes respecting the proper place of settlement and reimbursement between the administrations of the poor in different districts in the same amt, to be decided by the amtmand; but those between the districts in different amts, by the competent government department.

§ 17. In case a constant labourer in a mine or fabric having a distinct administration of the poor, is discharged, after having served three years, but less than five years, and in the course of the two following years he becomes chargeable, the half of his cost for the succeeding five years shall be made good by the mine or fabric to the poor district which grants relief.

CHAPTER IV.

Of the Poor Commission.

§ 18. The poor commission is ordinarily held only once a year, at the period which each commission finds most convenient for regulating the relief to the poor during the succeeding year. The time fixed for holding the general poor commission must not be altered, after it has been once fixed, unless two-thirds of the members of the commission find it necessary to do so. It is left to the majority of the commission to decide the extent of the poor administration, or, if other circumstances render it necessary, that several meetings should be held every year, which will also determine at what time they are to be held, and what matters, besides those of annual recurrence, shall be despatched at those meetings.

§ 19. The president to fix the day on which the yearly meeting is to be held, and to cause the same to be notified, at least 14 days previous thereto, in the several churches of the benefice, at the conclusion of divine service, for the information both of the other members and of every other person who may have any proposition to make to the commission.

§ 20. Every one who is specially desired by any member of the poor commission to attend the sitting of the latter, is bound to obey, provided the reason for which he has been summoned to attend, is previously reported, under penalty of being fined from half to three specie dollars in default thereof. The member of the commission who is absent at a meeting, without the notification of a legal hindrance (the validity of which is to be adjudged by the commission) to be fined three specie dollars.

§ 21. At every meeting the minutes of the proceedings, in such form as the amtmand may decide, are to be kept by the president; he shall be provided in like manner with a copy book and account book, equally approved, and a register, containing a specification of the several paupers, their admission to relief and dismissal. These documents, as well as the materials for writing, &c. are to be at the expense of the poor fund.

§ 22. In the yearly meeting, the needful measures for providing relief during the following year, which year is to be computed from the first day of the ensuing month, are to be settled; for which purpose, all those who are desirous of admission in future to, or participation in, the provision for the poor, either for their own person or family, will have to attend such meeting, in order to account for their need, the causes of it, &c.

§ 23. In the yearly meeting, the first proceeding is, to discuss the observations which any member may have to make with reference to the provision for the current year, in consequence of the measures adopted in the last yearly meeting. The president will then proceed with a detail of the occasional assistance which he has been obliged to give at different times in the course of the year; the other casual charges which the poor fund may have had to meet; the casual receipts which have accrued to the same, and the amount of the existing cash balance. A summary of this detail, in as far as regards the relief granted from time to time from the poor fund, and other its casual charges and the cash balance, is to be inserted in the minutes, with the remarks which any member of the commission may have to make relative thereto. After the members of the commission have stated and made a calculation of the decrease found to exist among those relieved, and deliberated as to whether any alteration should take place in the amount of assistance fixed at the last yearly meeting, it is to proceed, after investigation of the fresh cases of relief solicited, to determine which among the poor are to be selected to receive relief in future, and as to the mode and extent of the relief to be afforded them; after which, the needful re-regulating of the "lægd," or out-quarterings of the poor (§ 26.) assessments (§§ 44 and 45) shall be considered, whether any part of the existing cash balance shall be invested, and all such other matters as may still remain to be disposed of. As a guide to the regulation and assessments before alluded to, an exact list of the farmers who, according to § 44, are rateable, should be produced at every yearly meeting by the lensmand or officer.

§ 24. All measures to be determined at the meetings by a majority of votes; in case the votes are equal, the president to have the casting vote. Every member is entitled to enter a written vote on the minutes. When the proceedings are concluded, the minutes are signed by all the members, and remain in the custody of the president.

§ 25. The superior superintendence of the direction of the poor to be vested in the amtmand, to which end he is authorized to examine the minutes of the commissions; to demand the explanations he may find requisite, in order to carry on the chief superintendence, both as respects the benefit of the district, the efficiency of the relief afforded, and the regular course of the administration; also to give the commission instructions and admonitions, to which attention must be paid, unless they are relinquished upon due representations, or superseded by higher authority. In like manner, at their visitation, the bishop and dean are to cause the minutes of the administrations of the poor to be laid before them, and to demand explanations, in order to ascertain whether spiritual assistance is afforded to the poor, and they are bound, in default thereof, to give information to the amtmand, and to make the needful report in the return made of their visitation. The chief superintendence of the administration of the poor heretofore exercised on the part of the stift amtmand* is to cease.

CHAPTER V.

On the Modes of Relief.

§ 26. The main principle to be observed every where in affording relief is to maintain "lægd," or the out-quartering of the paupers, wherever they have existed or can be introduced, taking care to avoid the separation of families. The regulation of "lægd," when it has been once established amongst the farms, should be as durable and as little liable to alteration as possible; so that a fresh arrangement should be made only in instances where there exists a considerable decrease or increase in the number of the paupers quartered out, or a marked alteration in the condition of the occupiers upon whom they are so quartered. In the event of a fresh arrangement, it is desirable that the existing paupers hitherto provided for should, in as far as may be consistent with justice towards the parties upon whom they are quartered, continue to have "lægd" upon the same farm or farms where they have hitherto been relieved. Families not belonging to the class of peasants are bound to have paupers quartered upon them in "lægd," in case they cultivate land; however the overseer of the district is competent to grant permission to them, as well as to other "lægd's ydere," to let out the "lægd," when he finds that they individually are unable to provide for the pauper on their own lands, and the letting-out can be effected without considerable inconvenience to the latter. Necessitous, fatherless or deserted children are to be provided for by "lægd" in preference; in those cases which admit of it, after a reasonable distribution of the burden, this should be effected permanently with one and the same farmer, either without any indemnity, besides exemption from other "lægd," or against compensation by a contribution from the poor fund.

In other respects it is left to every poor commission to decide upon such mode or modes of providing for the poor as the same may think best suited to the wants of the poor and the interests of the "lægd's ydere," only that relief in kind is to be preferred to assistance in money, when the annual receipts of the funds applicable to the support of the poor independently of rates are not so considerable, that the poor could be supported by them, with the addition of the "lægd."

§ 27. When a new regulation of "lægd" takes place, or new "lægd" is established, a statement in writing of the "lægd," or out-quartering intended is to be issued by the commission, or by the overseer on its behalf, containing the name of the pauper to be out-quartered, and the farm or farms on which he shall receive "lægd," and in case it is on several, the rotation, and for what period, on each. In case the "lægd" is only to be during the winter, or during a certain part of the year, this likewise is to be stated. In like manner the houseless and others, who are provided with relief in kind from particular farms, are to be furnished with a note,

note, setting forth the quantity the individual has to demand of each farm, and the time at which he is entitled to demand the same. In default of the furnishing of these contributions in proper time, they are to be enforced by execution, through the lensmand. The assistance in money which, according to the orders of the commission is to be received from the poor fund, is only to be inserted in the minute of the proceedings, for the government of the president, who issues it himself, or else through the overseers.

§ 28. The burials of those who receive constant relief, as also of those who, without having had such provision, have left nothing from which the expenses can be defrayed, are to fall on the poor fund in case no person can be obliged to pay them (§ 50.), or will undertake them voluntarily. The nearest neighbours, upon their being desired by the superintendent of the "lægd," as respects those quartered out, or by the overseer, as respects those who have not been quartered out, are bound, without compensation, to cause the corpse to be carried to the grave, and to bury the same; the expense of digging the grave to be defrayed by the poor fund where there is no sexton on whom it is incumbent to provide graves for the poor without any compensation.

§ 29. When the poor commission may deem it adviseable, particularly in years of scarcity, in order to employ the house poor,* or to avert destitution, to provide raw materials for manufacture, or to purchase and distribute or lend corn to those who, without such aid, might soon become a burthen to the poor administration, it is entitled, with the approbation of the amtmand, to call in for a single year one-fourth part of the outstanding capital of the poor funds, and to apply the same with the cash balance in hand that may not be required for the regular relief of the poor; for the above purpose, however, in capitals thus resorted to, the legacies, the appropriation of which in such a manner would be inconsistent with the intention of the testator, must not be included. On the other hand, the commission must not, with a similar view, or for the establishment of poor houses or infirmaries for the poor, for which the appropriation of not exceeding one moiety of the poor funds can be applied with the approbation of the amtmand, levy any rate upon the district, without the consent of the farmers or that of the foremen in the Thinglang,† for the time being if then existing.

§ 30. When any person or family require relief, and a decision on the case is necessary before the poor commission meets, the applicant has to address himself to the district overseer, who, after having investigated his or the family's circumstances, and the state they are in, and assured himself of the applicant's distress, sends him, (in as far as sickness may not prevent) to the president of the commission, with his opinion as to the amount and kind of relief which should be provisionally granted, either by contribution from the poor fund, or in a vacant "lægd," or with grain or other assistance in kind, of which last the commission, especially by the rating of the farms which have not been subjected to "lægd," ought to have some at its disposal in cases of casual want.

In case the president approves of the proposal of the overseer, assistance or relief is granted accordingly; but if the contrary is the case, he may reduce the proposed contribution and fix the mode of relief, but he must neither increase the former nor refuse the same altogether, unless the lensmand of the parish agrees in his opinion. The consent of the lensmand is likewise required in case the president wishes to grant provisional relief to a person or family whom the overseer has not considered to stand in need of assistance. The president may afford relief, once for all, from the poor funds, to the extent of half a specie dollar, without obtaining the assent of any one.

§ 31. In general the administration of the poor is not bound to provide for sick house-servants; as it is incumbent on the master to support those he employs till their period of service expires, after previous legal notice; nevertheless the poor commission, or if that is not assembled, the president may, upon representation from the overseer, grant the needful assistance to the farmer, whose means do not admit of the supporting of a servant without receiving some assistance.

CHAPTER VI.

Of the Superintendents of the Lægd and Overseers, including the Inspection over and Discipline of the Poor.

§ 32. The superintendents of the lægd, have each in his lægd's district, to take care that the paupers quartered out, conduct themselves in an orderly (§ 35) and becoming manner towards those by whom they are supported, and that they willingly do such work as they are able for the benefit of the lægd ydere; and on the other hand, that those on whom they are thus quartered, furnish them with the needful food, lodging and clothes, and proper assistance in case of sickness. In like manner they have to take care that the removals in the lægd take place at the regular time. When a pauper who is quartered out, dies, the superintendant of the lægd has to superintend the burial, and to desire as many of the "lægd's ydere" as may be necessary, to attend to the burial of the corpse. He receives and lays by the clothes or other trifling things for daily use, that the deceased has left, and hands them over to the pauper who may take the place of the deceased. In case the deceased has left other articles of any value, they are to be delivered by the superintendent of the lægd, at the place fixed by the president of the commission, for the benefit of the poor funds.

§ 33. In case the "lægd ydere" or the paupers neglect their duty, the superintendent of the "lægd" is entitled to admonish the party concerned of the same, and if this reproof be disregarded, he is bound to report the same to the overseer to whom the lægd belongs.

§ 34. With respect to the house poor in the district, other poor that are not quartered out, and children who are provisioned out or quartered out, the special superintendence to rest with the overseer of the district, and consequently these are without the pale of the lægd superintendent's charge.

§ 35. In case the house poor and other poor who are not quartered out, conduct themselves improperly, are guilty of idleness, drunkenness, incivility, obstinacy, or quarrelsomeness, the overseer is entitled to give them a serious reprimand, and in case this is unattended with any effect, to propose in the poor commission the reduction of the allowance granted to the offender to the lowest scale possible. Should this prove equally devoid of effect, or the allowance not bear any reduction, he may, in conjunction with the president of the commission, report the case, at the same time stating the names of the witnesses to the sorenskriver,* who on the next general or monthly sitting of the court, after a brief inquiry, by an unappealable sentence, shall punish the guilty with imprisonment not exceeding 20 days, upon bread and water.

In case of a like report from the superintendent of the lægd, of such improper conduct on the part of the pauper quartered out as treated upon by § 33, the overseer shall give the said offending pauper a severe reprimand, and in case this likewise proves devoid of effect, the mode of proceeding to be the same as has been stated already in reference to the house poor.

§ 36. In case the person with whom a poor child has been quartered out, or any other party do not supply adequate relief, (§ 32.) or ill use the child or pauper so quartered upon them, and is regardless of the admonitions of the overseer, an appeal to the sorenskriver is to take place, and in other respects, the mode of proceeding is to be the same as is enacted in § 35; when all the conduct complained of, can be proved for which purpose, in default of other witnesses, the combined evidence of the superintendent of the lægd and of the overseer, is to be deemed sufficient, the offending party to be fined according to his circumstances and the nature of the case, from two to 20 specie dollars, and in case of ill usage, to be imprisoned on bread and water for from five to ten days; and in the event of a repetition of the offence, for from 10 to 20 days. The poor commission is entitled to change the place of abode of a child which is neglected or ill used, at the expense of the person with whom the child had been quartered, and is likewise entitled to compel the lægd yder, who acts thus towards a pauper "in lægd," and does not alter his conduct after being warned or punished, to furnish the compensation in kind to the other "lægd's ydere" while these last provide for the pauper, during the time the first named should have done so.

§ 37. It is the duty of the overseer to take care that none in his district receive any assistance or relief longer than is necessary; and to exert himself according to his means, to ease the burthens of the poor administration, by promoting diligence among the house poor, and others who are not quartered out and amongst the growing children; which last, however, must not be deprived of the time necessary to attend school.

§ 38. As soon as a poor child is confirmed, and is fit for labour or other employment, the relief is to cease. In case the confirmed person has not procured a situation, or other lawful means of support, it is the special duty of the lansmand, among the members of the poor administration, to take care that the individual obtains a servitude.

CHAPTER VII.

Of Mendicity and the Poor Constables.

§ 39. None may beg, but every person who is in such want, that he cannot provide for himself and those belonging to him, shall apply for aid to the competent poor commission (§ 22) or to the overseer. In case any one is guilty of begging, for the first offence he is to be seriously admonished by the overseer of the district in which he has begged, who is likewise to point out to him what consequences will follow a repetition of the offence. In case he offends afterwards he is to be punished according to the enactment set forth in § 35, and afterwards, in case of a repetition of the offence, with from two months to a year's confinement in the house of correction. When children who have not left home beg at the instigation of the father or mother or foster father, or with their consent, the offence is to be visited on those who have instigated or assented to it, as if they had begged in person; the child is likewise to be punished, if it has attained the legally accountable age. A person is not to be accounted a beggar who asks only for food, when it appears that his want of sustenance is so great, that unless he tried to procure immediate relief, he would be exposed to perish of hunger, provided he immediately afterwards applies to the overseer of the district for relief, or in case the poor administration is unable to relieve all the poor in years of scarcity, save in a very scanty manner, and the hungry mendicant then confines himself to the soliciting of food.

§ 40. When the poor commission deems it necessary under its direction, one or more constables paid from the poor funds are to be appointed in the parish, who are assiduously to search out and arrest beggars, and in case a beggar belongs to the parish, he is to be conducted conducted to the competent overseer, who will provide the needful as enacted by § 39; if belonging to another case, to the lensmand, who will act in the same manner as the president in the case of § 39, by administering either punishment or admonition, after which the offender, through the medium of the intervening lensmand is to be sent to his place of settlement, with a letter to the poor commission there, containing a statement of what has occurred. If the punishment has been labour in the house of correction, a statement of what has occurred is to be transmitted by the inspector to the poor commission of the place bound to afford the offender relief, as his proper settlement.

* Sorenskriver, an officer in the country whose duties are chiefly those of a registrar and judge in the lowest court.

§ 41. All the expenses incurred to punish paupers and mendicants within the parish, to be defrayed from the poor fund. The expense of arresting strange mendicants, their punishment and conveyance to be made good by their place of settlement.

CHAPTER VIII.

Of the Receipts of the Poor Fund and Administration of the Accounts.

§ 42. The ordinary resources of the poor fund are,—

- (a.) Interest of legacies, outstanding capitals, ground-rents or other annual payments.
- (b.) Stated annual tax of 12 skillings on each hunsmænd,* and each man servant, and six skillings each woman servant; however, the poor commission is competent to reduce or remit the duty to poor hunsmænd.
- (c.) A fixed annual duty on stills, equal to half what they shall pay to the National Treasury, according to the existing laws.
- (d.) The penalties which, in accordance with the laws, are adjudged and appropriated to the poor fund, and including all the penalties enacted by this law.
- (e.) The articles which may be possessed at the time of their death by the pauper admitted to receive constant relief, provided these persons do not leave spouse or children unprovided for.
- (f.) Communion and poor-box donations to the poor fund, and similar casual receipts.
- (g.) What may be raised by assessment for the poor fund.

§ 43. The receipts named under letters (a.) and (f.) in § 42, are to be received severally by the president of the poor commission; those under (b.) and (g.) are to be collected or enforced by the lensmand of the district, and that under letter (c.) by the fogd,† together with the duty payable to the State Treasury. The lensmand and fogd are to deliver the amount collected, with a statement annexed, to the president of the commission. As respects the receipts named under letter (d.) the competent functionaries, or court of reconciliation, are, at the expiration of every quarter, to furnish the president with attested copies of the resolutions taken, and the sentences or adjustments from which penalties have accrued to the poor fund; and announcing, in as far as respects the decisions, to what extent, as far as may be known, they are appealed against or not. In case the stipulated time of payment has expired without the penalties being paid, and in as far as respects any sentence not appealed against, the copies to be transmitted to the fogd, which functionary is to do what may be necessary and remit the amount collected, and in default of full payment, to send a certified copy of the minute of the act of execution to the president.

At the expiration of the twelve months' accounts, the president receives from the sórenskrivners, or courts of reconciliation, a suitable attestation, if in any quarter of the year no penalties have been adjudged to the poor fund. In case the competent functionaries or the court of reconciliation neglect to transmit the aforesaid documents, or to enforce the penalties in due time, they are to be individually responsible. In respect of the daily fines 1, 5, 15, of the law, no copies of sentences or adjustments are to be transmitted; but it is the duty of the fogd, when he enforces them, to remit the amount collected to the president of the commission, with a copy of the minute of the act of execution. The effects left by the poor referred to under letter (e.) (which does not include the clothes of paupers "in lægd," § 32.), to be received by the overseer, and deposited in a convenient place, under the directions of the president, who, as may be found most advisable, either distributes them to the poor who are then receiving relief, or causes them, when an opportunity offers, to be sold by auction by the lensmand for the benefit of the poor fund; whereupon that officer, after having collected the purchase-money, is to send it in, together with a certified copy of the auction minute, in as far as relates to the effects sold.

§ 44. In those parishes in which reside persons who, without being farmers, hunsmænd or servants, are established in a trade, or have an income which admits of their contributing something to the poor fund, such as men-servants in trade, assistants or clerks of iron-works, tutors, saw-masters, pilots and others, these persons are to be annually rated in money to the poor fund.

§ 45. Only in the extraordinary event that the means of relief adequate to the necessities of the poor, and the means of those on whom they are quartered out for the ensuing year, taking into the account the regulated lægd payments in kind, and the computed receipts of the poor fund, cannot be otherwise procured, is the poor commission entitled to levy what may be wanting, by equal assessment on the farmers, either in kind, or where this does not exactly accord with the object in view, in money. When the presidents in the the thinglångs shall be appointed, such an extraordinary levy may not take place without their consent, or, in case this is refused, without the approbation of the amtmand.

§ 46. Both the adjustment of "lœgd" and assessments on particular farms of contributions in kind to particular paupers, as also the general assessments to the poor fund treated of in §§ 44 and 45, should take place according to income and fortune.

§ 47. In every meeting of the poor commission at which the assessment or re-adjustment of lœgd has taken place, the lensmand concerned takes a copy of the minutes in as far as respects the first point, and notifies the same on the church of each hamlet at the conclusion of divine service, the first Sunday after the meeting. After this notification a copy is to be left with the lensmand for inspection during the period of four weeks.

In case any one considers himself unjustly dealt with by the assessment or regulation which has occurred, he is entitled to give in his complaint before the expiration of these four weeks, directed to the amtmand through the overseer of the commission, who, upon the expiration of the said four weeks, transmits the complaint or complaints which have reached him, together with his opinion on them, for the decision of the amtmand. This last is then authorized to make such reductions in the assessments, or alterations in the adjustment, as he may think just towards the complainants.

§ 48. Within three months after the expiration of every relief year, the president of the commission, under the liability enacted by law, transmits through the amtmand, for his revision, the account of the receipts and disbursements of the poor fund in the said year, annexing, as regards the receipts, designations, attestations, minutes of executions, letters from the fogd or lensmand, with remittances, and the copies of minutes of sales, as treated of in § 43; and as regards the expenses, an official certificate from the accountant of their correctness, and a certified copy from the minutes of the proceedings treated of in § 23, relative to the casual expenses of the year, and the observations which may have been made upon the same in the meeting. In the accounts it is to be stated how many poor are provided with lœgd or with assistance in corn, assessed equally upon the farmers.

CHAPTER IX.

Relating to some Rights and Privileges attaching to the Poor Administration.

§ 49. The poor commission has a right to refuse permission to a male receiving constant relief to contract matrimony, as long as he continues to receive relief; and furthermore, in case he renounce the same, in consequence of such prohibition, to require of him to make it appear that he and his family, in case he marry, will not become a burthen to the poor administration, or if he cannot do this (which is to be decided by the poor commission,) may make him give security that he shall not become chargeable.

§ 50. When the poor administration has been obliged to take under its charge a child whose father is living, it has the same claim against him, as by the laws is assigned to mothers of illegitimate children, or wives separated from their husbands. In case it has been obliged to take charge of or grant relief to necessitous persons, who have married parents, mother or grown up children, who have the means to support or assist, without being willing to do so, the poor commission may institute legal proceedings against such relation, for compensation for its advances.

§ 51. All official documents, services, &c. belonging to the poor administration, are to be granted and executed gratuitously.

§ 52. In like manner, as every administration of the poor retains the peculiar receipts, rights and privileges as hitherto belonging to it, so the general enactments in the ordinance of §§ 23 and 26, 25th May 1804, relative to exemption from the use of stamps; § 17 of the law of 14th July 1827, as to the expense of poor children attending school, and the law of the 13th September 1830, respecting the exemption from payment of postage, will remain valid in future. All the estates or property of the poor administration are exempted from taxes, imposts, quartering of soldiers and other burthens.

§ 53. The competent poor administration may draw up plans and regulations to be submitted for the royal decision, instead of the enactment in this law, principally relating to relief, superintendence and receipts (chap. 5, 6 and 8) which cannot be conveniently carried into effect in the case of mines and fabrics, which have their own peculiar poor administration. In respect to the mode of relief in Ladesteder, which have their poor administration in common with a land district, the mode to be adopted to be fixed by the competent poor administration.

§ 54. All the laws and ordinances relating to the poor administration in the country in force hitherto, are hereby declared null, whenever they shall be found inconsistent with the enactments contained in the present law.

PROJECT of a LAW for the ADMINISTRATION of the POOR in TOWNS.

CHAPTER I.

Of what constitutes an Administrative District of the Poor.

§ 1. Every town constitutes a separate and associated district of administration of the poor, to which is attached that part of the contiguous land district, which appertains to the secular jurisdiction of the town.

A ladested,

Appendix (F.)

Foreign

NORWAY.—
Proposed Law.

A ladested, which has had its own poor administration hitherto, distinct from the remaining part of the parish in which it is situated, still forms a peculiar district, for which the present law is to be in force; however, it rests with the ladested and parish to unite, if they think fit, in an agreement, so as to form a single poor administration; in which case the code of laws in force for the poor administration in the country will remain applicable to the union. The public poor administration of Kongsberg will remain in future separated from the private poor administration of the said town. The mining establishments situated in towns are to be regulated according to the enactments of the law, applicable to the poor administration in the country.

CHAPTER II.

As to the Directors of the Administration of the Poor.

§ 2. The administration of the poor in every district to be superintended by a commission, consisting of the chief magistrate as president, the minister or ministers, the superintendent of the police, and the paid physician, where these functionaries are appointed as fixed members, and as many overseers chosen from the inhabitants as the amtmand may think requisite, upon the representation of the magistracy and in proportion to the extent of the poor administration.

§ 3. In the ladesteder, which have their own poor administration, the functionary which has the direction of the police is to be president, and he, together with the minister of the parish, to be fixed members of the poor commission, to whom is to be added the number of overseers, which the amtmand may deem necessary.

§ 4. The overseers of the poor to be elected for four years by those who, according to the constitution, are eligible to vote, in a meeting to be convened at the end of the year, by the magistracy and foremen of the town; but in case hereafter the foremen themselves shall be elected, then they are to choose the overseers. When the four years after the first election, instituted in conformity with the present law, have elapsed, half of the overseers chosen by lot go out of office, or in case the original number is an odd one, the half with the addition of one, whereupon a like number are to be elected in their stead. Two years afterwards the remaining overseers of the first election secede, and as many more are elected to assume their places; and afterwards the retirement and selection every second year, is to take place in the like order. As long as the overseers are exclusively elected by those entitled to vote according to the constitution, note is to be taken of the two who have most votes at the election, next to the overseers actually chosen, in order to their coming into office in case of any vacancy, by death or other accident. In case any person has thus become overseer at another time than that of the election, he is to remain in office until the second election takes place after his assuming office; and if this should occasion the necessity of more retirements than would regularly occur at the next regular election, lots are to be drawn between those overseers who have been such for two full years.

§ 5. A person more than 60 years old, or who is chamberlain, superior guardian, foreman of a town or royal functionary, is not bound to accept his election as overseer. A retiring overseer can be re-elected, but is not bound to serve until four years after he has quitted office. The overseers of the poor are exempted from other municipal duties, in case the magistracy can get them executed by others. In case any person considers that he has a legal excuse for not serving as overseer, or that he is entitled to demand his dismissal from office, the point is to be decided by the magistracy; or in case fixed electors are introduced in future by them, if the excuse urged is declared valid, and there be no substitute, an election of a new instead of the retiring overseer is to take place.

§ 6. In the capital towns of the Stifts, and at Drammin, a distinct and paid cashier is to be attached to the poor administration, who is to give security, and is likewise clerk of the poor commission. In the other towns, the commission is to elect the cashier from amongst the overseers by a plurality of votes. The poor commission collectively, are security for the cashier, in case he should be deficient; and is, in consequence, entitled to inspect the management of the cash, to decide upon the amount the cashier shall have in his custody at any time, and the manner in which the remaining money should be safely kept.

§ 7. At the request of the poor commission, the magistracy is to appoint the needful number of ward masters, whose term of office is three years, after which time they are entitled to retire. Nobody who is or has been chamberlain, principal guardian, foreman, churchwarden or royal functionary, can be appointed to this office; all other persons may be chosen even if they are not citizens of the town.

CHAPTER III.

As to the Place of Settlement of the Poor.

§ 8. Every one in want of relief shall receive it of the poor administration in the district where he resides, provided he has resided there regularly during the last five years. If this is not the case, the district in which he last resided during five successive years, is his place of settlement; and in case he has not resided so long constantly in any one place, then his native place. By fixed residence, is meant to be understood, that he has had his home in the district during the whole of the stipulated period. However, the place of settlement of the wife is regulated by that of the husband; children in wedlock under the age of 18, by the fathers; and in case of his death, by the mothers; and illegitimate children under the same age, by the mothers, so long as the husband, father and mother live; but after the death of these, by the constant residence of the widow or child, approximating the nearest to five years. In the absence of so long a residence in any one place, the person's place of settlement is his or her place of nativity. Instead of the place of nativity, when the birth only occurred there by chance, while the mother at the same time had her fixed residence in another district, this or if she has no place of residence, then the place of her nativity becomes the place of her settlement and relief. In those cases in which the proper places of settlement cannot be discovered, the individual is to be provided for in the district where he has resided longest during the last five years. In as far as any one in reference to the laws hitherto valid, has acquired the right to be provided for in a given place by means of a shorter residence there than five years, this continues to be his place of settlement until he has resided fixedly for five years in another district.

§ 9. The time which any one is confined in a place of punishment is not taken into the account, or considered when the question is as to the place of settlement or relief, excepting when the individual is the father of a family, a wife in wedlock, or a widow with a family; in which cases, the individual is regarded to have resided there, where the family has resided during the term of the punishment.

§ 10. Persons enlisted in the military service, their wives and children are provided for in case they require relief from the military chest, and consequently cannot acquire a settlement during the period of their continuing in the service. As a result hereof, the military authorities have a right to refuse permission to men who have enlisted, to enter upon the married state. When these are dismissed from the service, and they or the family are in want of relief, the proper district to afford this relief, would be that to which it would have devolved, supposing the period of service of the individual or father of the family to be altogether disregarded.

§ 11. A foreigner who becomes distressed without having resided five years at any one place in the kingdom, is to have the needful relief given him, until he is removed in the district where he was resident at the time his necessity occurred, the expenses of his conveyance out of the kingdom or to his home, to be borne by the national treasury. Whether or no the reimbursement of the expenses for conveyance and relief can be advisedly demanded from the place to which he belongs, is to be decided upon by the competent department of the government, which will take the needful measures in consequence.

§ 12. In case an individual person or family require relief at a place which is not that of his settlement, reimbursement for the assistance afforded at the first-named place, can be demanded from the latter, in case the poor commission in the same has been informed thereof without delay. Nevertheless, the assistance which is rendered essential, in consequence of a misfortune which has occurred casually, such as sickness, without the individual or family requiring relief; when this simple cause of necessity is removed, shall neither give rise to a claim for reimbursement, nor enable the poor commission affording the relief, to enjoin the individual or family to depart to their place of settlement.

§ 13. No person who does not demand relief shall be sent away from the poor district in which he is resident, because in process of time, he may possibly become a burthen to that district. Nor may relief be tendered to or forced upon any person, but must be applied for first by the destitute, before they can be regarded as applicants for relief. However, any person is to be regarded as an applicant who either has been guilty of begging personally, or whose wife or children have done so, either with his knowledge or even without his being privy to it, for the sole reason that the father obviously had not been able to, or would not, provide his family with the needful support.

§ 14. An individual or family removing from his or their previous home to a town, shall bring a minute certificate from the minister of the parish where they have previously resided, containing the particulars of his or their baptism, confirmation, marriage, receipt of the sacrament the last time, their previous deportment and the avowed object of their removal. This certificate is to be delivered by the new comer on the day, or at the latest on the day after his arrival in the town where he intends to fix his residence, to the superintendent of the police, under a penalty of one ort daily in default thereof; which functionary is, without delay, to furnish the minister of the parish with a certified copy of the certificate, to be made use of in the ministerial records, and afterwards to take charge of the certificate as long as the residence in the town may continue. The time of residence to be computed from the day of delivery of the certificate, or the last day of the time in which it should have been delivered. In case of removal from the town, the certificate is to be delivered to the person about to remove from thence, on whom it is incumbent to procure the needful indorsement of the minister of the parish as to his or their deportment, last receipt of the sacrament, increase of the family there, &c.

§ 15. In case it can be inferred with certainty from the certificate of removal brought with them, or by means of other vouchers, where the person's or family's proper place of settlement is, the poor administration in the place, where the necessity for relief occurred, is entitled to remove the pauper by means of the lensmand unless sickness prevents, to his or their proper place of settlement at the expense of the same. On the other hand, if no such certainty exists, the pauper must not, upon mere conjecture as to his correct place of settlement, be sent to another poor district, but his removal must be delayed, until either the needful certainty is attained by correspondence or other means, or the fact is admitted in the proper place of settlement.

§ 16. Disputes respecting the proper place of settlement, and reimbursement between the administrations of the poor in different districts in the same amt, are to be decided by the amtmand, but those between districts in different amts, by the competent department of the government.

CHAPTER IV.

Of the Poor Commissioners.

§ 17. In the capital towns of the Stifts and at Drammin the poor commission is to hold an ordinary meeting once every month, and otherwise as often as the president appoints. In the remaining towns the regular meetings for the year as to number and time are to be fixed by the president; and he is likewise to summon extraordinary meetings. The meetings to be held in the council chamber.

§ 18. At the meeting of the commission is to be discussed every thing relating to relief and the means of carrying the same into effect. Every overseer is to state at the ordinary meeting the decrease of the poor in his district, that has taken place since the last ordinary meeting, and to make such proposals as he may deem necessary with reference to the increase, decrease or discontinuance of assistance, and to report whether any and what persons, since the last meeting, have claimed relief, and the extent to which they have been temporarily assisted. In this case a minute investigation is to take place on the part of the commission with reference to these persons and their necessity, &c. for which purpose the paupers must attend personally, unless sickness prevents them, with their wives and children, even in case commission thinks them deserving of assistance, before they can be received into the number of those relieved.

§ 19. Every one who is specially desired by any member of the poor commission to attend the sitting of the latter, is bound to obey, provided the reason for which he has been summoned to attend, is previously stated, under a penalty of from half to three specie dollars. The member of the commission who absents himself from a meeting without assigning a lawful excuse, which is to be decided by the commission, is to forfeit three specie dollars.

§ 20. In the towns where there is no stipendiary clerk attached to the commission (§ 5) or the clerk of the town or magistracy may not be bound to officiate, the keeping of the minutes of the commission is to be superintended by the president gratis, either personally, or through the means of such an officer of the court subordinate to him, as he may direct, or by such individual member of the commission as he may induce to do so. The needful minutes authorized by the amtmand, must always comprise, besides the minutes of proceedings, a copy-book and minutes of accounts, and a register containing a list of all the paupers collectively, as also of their decrease and increase; the expense of these, as also of the materials for writing, is to be defrayed from the poor fund.

§ 21. The principal meeting of the year is to be held in the month of October, its object is to submit plans for and determine the expenses of providing for the poor during the ensuing year. At this meeting the lists of paupers are to be minutely gone through, for which purpose the wardmasters should attend with their population returns in order to furnish the needful explanations. Moreover a computation is to be made of the receipts of the poor fund for the year ensuing, independent of the poor rates, a deliberation is to be entered upon as to the possible savings, and how far the poor rates for the next year can be reduced, or whether it is necessary to increase them; whether the buildings and premises supported by the poor administration require to be repaired, and if additions are deemed necessary or adviseable; and what outlay they would occasion to the poor funds, and whether any improvement can be adopted in the mode of relief, &c. during the year ensuing. The foremen of the town are to be invited to attend this meeting, and to take part in the deliberations which relate to determining the expenses; these deliberations, as far as possible, should proceed without being mixed up with the other business of the commission. Should the foremen, against the opinion of the majority, oppose one or other item of expenditure or consider the poor rate as having been fixed too high by the commission, after computing the expenditure and remaining receipts of the poor funds, they may cause their opinion to be entered in the minutes of the commissions with the reasons on account of which they refuse their assent. After the withdrawal of the foremen, the commission is to form its decision on the points in dispute, and it is its duty to defer to the objections of the foremen against any particular item of expenditure, so far as the objects of the poor administration will allow. In case the final resolutions of the commission are in any part at variance with the proposals of the foremen, the dispute is to be settled by the sentence of the amtmand to whom is to be transmitted a certified copy of the minute of proceeding, so far as regards the opinions recorded by the said foremen, and the measures adopted by the commission in reference thereto. New establishments must not be determined on without the acquiescence of the foremen unless there exist means for them from the sources of receipt treated upon in § 47, or from legacies, or subscriptions. In towns, where no poor rate is required, the foremen are not to be re-summoned.

§ 22. As soon as this principal meeting is held, or in case, as stated above, a copy of the minutes has been sent to the amtmand, then as soon as his decision is received, the president is to state the amount of the poor rate for the year ensuing to the magistracy, on whom it is incumbent to take care that it be assessed without delay.

§ 23. Should two-thirds of the members of the commission consider another time of the year more convenient for the principal meeting, as enacted by § 21, than that stipulated by law, it is left at the option of the commission to hold its meeting at another time.

§ 24. All measures at the meetings are to be decided by a majority of votes, in case of the number being equal, the president's to be the casting vote. Every member is entitled to insert a written vote in the minutes. When the proceedings are concluded, the minutes are to be all signed by the members, but remain in custody of the president.

§ 25. The superior control of the poor administration is to be vested in the amtmand, to which end he is authorized to examine the minutes of the commissions, to demand the explanations he may find requisite in order to carry on the chief superintendence, both as respects the benefit of the district, the efficiency of the relief afforded, and the regular course of the administration. Also to give the commission instructions and admonitions; to which attention must be paid, unless they are recalled upon further representations, or superseded by higher authority. In like manner at their visitation, the bishop and dean are to cause the minutes of the poor administrations to be laid before them, and to demand explanations in order to ascertain whether spiritual attention is afforded the poor; and they are bound in default thereof, to give information to the competent amtmand, and to report the needful, in the return made of their visitation. On the other hand the control of the poor administrations on the part of the stift's direction expires.

CHAPTER V.

On the Modes of Relief.

§ 26. It is left to every commission to decide as to the modes of relief, which it may deem most adviseable, with reference to the wants and situation of the inscribed poor; however, the commission is to take all possible care that the least expensive mode by which the object in view may be attained, be preferred to the more costly, and that which leads to the greatest industry on the part of the poor, to the mere giving of alms or a residence in the poor house without employment; also that assistance in kind is to be preferred to assistance in money. Where circumstances and the convenience of the poor fund permit, the commission should take measures to establish a kitchen and stores of wood, to be sold to the poor in small quantities on the lowest terms. With respect to the kitchen, the members of the commission should convince themselves by frequent unexpected visits, that wholesome food is supplied to the poor.

§ 27. Where houses of industry exist already, or may be formed with the permission of the foremen (§ 21), or from the assets treated of in § 47, as many as possible of the able-bodied poor should be set to work. The needful measures as to the sort of work, purchase of materials, and the sale of what is manufactured, are to be taken by the poor commission, which is likewise to fix the daily wages, in relation to which reference must be had to the relief given, superintendence, &c. The labourers, while they are in the house, are to be subject to the strictest discipline on the part of the superintendent. Every person who is placed in such an establishment is entitled to leave it as soon as the fact is established that he is able, by working for private persons, or in some other way to provide for himself. The poor commission, and in particular the overseers, should exert themselves, as opportunity may occur, to procure work for the poor who cannot be employed in the house of industry, and who although able, cannot procure work for themselves; work so obtained, such persons are bound to perform at the usual daily wages, or for the customary provisions, under the penalties of § 37.

§ 28. In like manner care should be taken to provide such and as much work as their strength will allow, for the aged single poor which are received into the poor-rooms, provided that the result be not a greater expense than benefit to the poor administration.

§ 29. The poor commission is to decide in what manner and where the sick-poor are to be relieved during their illness; however, new infirmaries can only be provided with the assent of the foremen (§ 21), unless there exist the means of doing so, treated of in § 47.

§ 30. The commission is to decide how often, how much each time and to whom, are to be distributed assistance in money or in kind. In like manner it is left to the commission to determine the needful, in reference to the lodging and clothing of the poor, who could not obtain house-room or clothes but for the assistance of the poor administration. In case a pauper of this class makes away with the clothes received, or treats them improperly, he is to be punished as enacted by § 37, without any previous warning being required.

§ 31. Orphans or deserted children, if in want, are to be provided for by being placed out with decent people in the town or in the country, at the expense of the poor fund, and under the constant inspection of the competent overseer, or the person who is appointed by the poor commission for such purpose.

§ 32. The burial of persons admitted as fixed paupers, as also of those who without having been thus provided for, leave nothing from which the expense might be defrayed, is to be at the cost of the poor fund, in case no one is bound to bear the expense according to § 53, or will voluntarily take upon himself to do so. The corpse is to be carried by watchmen, firemen or any other persons who have been bound to do so hitherto, after a summons on the part of the competent overseer. A fixed yearly salary from the poor-chest should be given to the sexton for making and filling up graves.

§ 33. When want of relief or assistance from the poor administration occur to any person or family on a single occasion, and this aid cannot be deferred until the next meeting of the poor commission, the necessitous applicant is to apply to the overseer of the poor in whose district he resides; which last, after having investigated the case, is to fix and draw on the cashier or ward-master for the assistance which he may find it necessary to afford, until the next meeting is held.

§ 34. In general the poor administration is under no obligation to relieve sick servants, as it is incumbent on the master to provide for those he employs until their term of service expires, after legal notice has been given; nevertheless, the poor commission may grant the needful assistance to the master, whose means do not admit of affording the required relief without some aid.

CHAPTER VI.

Of the Overseers of the Poor and Ward Master's superintendence and discipline as to the Poor.

§ 35. The town is to be divided by the poor commission into as many districts as there are overseers, every overseer is to have his allotted district, whose poor he superintends generally, while the special superintendence belongs to the ward-master or masters subordinate to the overseer appointed by the magistracy. Each overseer's district in which more than one ward-master is appointed, is to be divided into as many wards, so that each ward-master has his peculiar ward.

§ 36. It is the duty of the ward-master to receive and to distribute, according to the directions of the commission, the aid in kind, in as far as the poor administration does not direct such distribution to be effected by others. The overseer is to take care that the distribution takes place at the proper time. The complaints of the poor on this score against the ward-master to be made to the overseer; who, after having caused an investigation to take place, in case he finds the complaint grounded, or has himself discovered any inequality in the distribution, refers the case for the consideration of the poor commission at its next meeting. The commission can then impose on the ward-master, after he has been called in, a fine of two to twenty specie dollars, and discuss whether it be necessary to propose his dismissal; nevertheless it is reserved to the party accused to have the matter, in as far as the fine is concerned, decided by a legal sentence.

§ 37. The ward-master is to see that the poor in the ward conduct themselves properly, both as relates to demeanor and work, and that they observe the directions of the commission or overseer. When he finds that a pauper conducts himself improperly and is guilty of idleness, drunkenness, incivility, obstinacy or quarrelsomeness, he is competent to give the party in question a serious reprimand, and in case this produces no effect, he is bound to report this conduct to the overseer, who after having convinced himself of the correctness of the report, can in the next meeting of the commission propose a reduction to the lowest possible scale of the allowance granted to the said disorderly pauper. Should this likewise prove devoid of effect, or the allowance not bear any reduction, the poor commission is entitled, after having investigated the matter, to adjudge the said disorderly pauper the punishment of imprisonment on bread and water for 20 days, or arrest for a period not exceeding two months.

§ 38. The ward-master is to keep an exact list of all the poor admitted to receive relief in his ward, and to report every alteration that occurs to the overseer, to be notified by him at the next meeting of the commission, in as far as it has any influence on the poor administration.

§ 39. It is incumbent on every poor commission, by instructions, to provide the ward masters with a set of rules and directions respecting the manner in which they are to demean themselves, in executing the duties of their office.

§ 40. It is the duty of the overseer to take care that none in his district receive any assistance or relief over and above what is necessary, or for a longer period than is requisite, and to contribute, according to his means, to ease the burthens of the poor administration by promoting diligence among the house poor in the district and the growing children, which last, however, must not be deprived of the time necessary for attending school. In reference to such children, the overseer should use his endeavours to get them placed out as apprentices with mechanics, or to learn trade, in which case the relief ceases.

As soon as a child under the care of the poor administration is confirmed, and has the needful capacity for service or any other employment, the superintendence is at an end. It is the duty of the police master to take care that the pauper, who has been provided for hitherto, takes a service or otherwise becomes engaged in some lawful calling or employment.

§ 41. The superintendence of the houses of industry, poor chambers and infirmaries in the towns, to be divided amongst the members of the commission, as may be arranged by an understanding between themselves, or as may be determined by a plurality of votes; nevertheless, the overseer is exempted from assuming this superintendence, if he is unwilling to undertake it.

CHAPTER VII.

Of Mendicity and Pauper Beadles.

§ 42. None may beg; but every person who is in such want that he cannot provide for himself and those belonging to him, shall apply to the competent poor commission (§ 33.) or overseer for assistance. In case a person is guilty of begging, the first time he is to be seriously warned by the competent overseer, who is likewise to point out to him what consequences will attend a repetition of the offence. In case he should be guilty afterwards, he is to be punished for the first time, according to the decision of the poor commission, with one of the punishments enacted by § 37, and afterwards, in case of relapse, by a judicial accusation and with from two months to a year's labour in the house of correction. When children under the age of 15, who reside at home, beg at the instigation of the father or mother, or foster-father, or with their consent, the offence is visited on those who have instigated or consented to it, as if they had begged in person; the child is to be punished likewise, if it have attained an accountable age. When a beggar, who belongs to another place than the town, has undergone his punishment, he is to be conducted by the lensmand to the place to which he belongs, with a letter, in which what has occurred is related, from the poor commission or the superintendent of the house of correction to the poor commission of his place of settlement.

§ 43. The collective charges which are incurred in punishing the paupers and the beggars belonging to the town are to be defrayed from the poor fund. The charges attending the arrests of strange beggars, their punishment and conveyance, are to be made good by the poor fund of the place to which they belong.

§ 44. In every town one or several pauper constables, as directed by the poor commission, are to be appointed, with a salary from the poor fund, whose duty it is assiduously to search out and apprehend beggars.

CHAPTER VIII.

Of the Receipts of the Poor Fund, and administration of the Accounts.

§ 45. The ordinary income of the poor fund consists of—

(a.) Interest of legacies, outstanding capitals, ground-rents or other annual receipts.

(b.) A fixed annual duty on distilleries, equal to half what they shall pay at any given time to the National Treasury.

(c.) The fines or penalties which, in accordance with the laws, are adjudged or appropriated to the benefit of the poor, and including all the penalties or fines which are imposed by this law.

(d.) The articles which may be possessed at the time of their death by paupers receiving constant relief, who do not leave any pauper in wedlock, or offspring unprovided for.

(e.) Communion poor-box and money donations to the poor fund, and other similar casual receipts.

(f.) What may be raised by assessment as a poor rate.

(g.) The share which falls to the trading town of the duty on wine and brandy imported from abroad, treated upon in § 47.

§ 46. The receipts named under letters (a.) (e.) and (f.) are demanded or received directly by the cashier of the poor administration. The receipt under letter (b.) is to be collected by the clerk of the tax receiver in the town, together with the duty on distilleries payable to the National Treasury, and are to be transmitted, with a statement, to the cashier through the poor commission. Respecting the assets named under letter (c.), the competent functionaries, or court of reconciliation, are, at the expiration of every quarter, to present the poor commission with attested copies of the resolutions taken, the sentences or adjustments from which penalties have accrued to the poor fund, and to announce, as far as respects the decisions, to what extent they have been appealed against, or not, as then known. In case the time of paying penalties has expired without their being paid, and in as far as respects any sentence against which there is no appeal, the copies to be sent to the competent byfogd,* to enforce the payment. This functionary is to do what may be necessary, and remit the amount collected to the commission, which is to hand over the money, as well as the copies, to the cashier, for insertion in his accounts. On closing the accounts for 12 months, the cashier receives from the competent law courts in the town and the court of reconciliation, a suitable attestation, in case, during any quarter of the year, no penalties have been adjudged to the poor fund. In case the competent functionaries or the court of reconciliation neglect to transmit the aforesaid certified copies, or to enforce the penalties in due time, they become individually responsible.

In respect of the daily fines, 1, 5, 15 of the law, no copies of sentences or adjustments are to be transmitted, but it is the duty of the byfogd, in case and when he enforces the same, to remit the amount collected to the president of the commission, with a copy of the minute of the act of execution. In reference to letter (d.), it is the duty of the president, as soon as a case of death has occurred, to register and take the effects left under his charge until the poor commission decides either upon their distribution to other paupers or sale by public auction, in which latter case the proceeds are handed over by the collector, through the poor commission, to the cashier, to be placed among the assets in his account, together with a certified copy of the minute of the sale, or such part of it as includes the effects of the poor administration so disposed of.

§ 47. On spirits of wine, brandy, rum, arrack, cordials and wine, imported from places abroad, is to be levied one skilling per pot for the poor administration, and paid along with the ordinary duty. The cashier of the customs to transmit the amount received with a statement attested by the inspector of the customs, at the expiration of every quarter, after deducting two per cent. salary for collecting, viz. the two-third parts to the poor commission of the place, to be handed over to the cashier, and one-third part to the individual in the capital town of the stift, named by the government, to superintend the fund accruing from this source; the object of which is, by degrees, according to the directions of the government in respect of place, time and amount, to avail in the forming of, or as contributions towards a stock of grain for the use of the poor administrations in the districts of the stift most in want.

When such a magazine is constructed, the government is to decide the needful in respect to the extent of the district which is to receive benefit from the same; the management of the magazine and the yearly appropriation of the store of grain for distribution, as gift or loan for seed. As often as any thing is received towards the above-named fund, the director is is to see that the amount be placed out at interest, on lawful security; in like manner when any portion shall be appropriated by order of the government, he shall superintend the recalling and repayment of the capital.

The director is to render an account annually of this fund to the competent department of the government, and is to be allowed a certain salary from the fund every year, according to the directions of the government.

In years of scarcity a sum equivalent to the receipts of the fund during the last year, may be applied to furnish grain in the most necessitous districts of the stift for food of persons and families receiving relief, or families as well as other persons in want, which the administration of the poor would be obliged otherwise to support; and in as far as adequate resources permit, to lend seed for sowing the same, to be repaid with the usual interest, to the poor administration of the place. The portion of the additional duty on wine and brandy assigned to the town, to be applied principally to the erection or enlargement of houses of industry, poor houses, infirmaries, regular stores of firewood, and other similar establishments, calculated for a long time to come.

§ 48. The poor rates to be assessed at the commencement of the year, according to the income and fortune of those on whom they are levied. The assessment is to be exposed for public inspection by the magistracy, during 14 days in the council chamber. In case it then happens that any one of the rate-payers conceives he has reason to complain of being rated too high, he has to address himself, with his complaint, before the expiration of the said 14 days, through the magistracy, to the foremen of the town; who, as constituting a superior commission of equalization, are bound to decide within the expiration of four weeks; after which, the result is reported by the foremen to the magistracy. If any reduction of the sum assessed should then take place, or if the rate itself cannot be obtained of any person on whom it is incumbent to pay it, the poor fund is to be indemnified for the amount, from the revenues of the town.

§ 49. As soon as those 14 days are expired, the magistracy is to send the statement of the apportionment to the competent collector of the rates, who is to demand the amount and receive the same from the rate-payers, with observations as to the persons who have preferred appeals, from whom the rate is not to be demanded until the magistracy have notified to the collector the result of the proceedings before the superior commission of equalization. The moiety of what is exacted of each is to be collected directly, and the other half in the month of June. What is not paid within four weeks after the collector of the rates has presented the statement or specification of the rate to the rate-payer which must take place without delay every term, is to be enforced by the collector; and as soon as a sum of 100 specie dollars is collected, he is to send the whole amount which has been collected up to that time, through the poor commission to the cashier.

§ 50. The poor commission is to take care that the needful funds for disbursement at all times are actually in hand and ready to be applied; but in case it should happen at the beginning of the year, on account of the poor rate for the first half year not being in cash sufficiently early, that the chest should at any time unavoidably require an advance from the town funds, the commission has to make timely application on the subject, through the magistracy to the foremen.

§ 51. Before the expiration of the month of March, the cashier, under the responsibility enacted by law, is to transmit, through the poor commission, his account to be examined, setting forth the receipts, and expenses of the preceding year, annexing, as regards the receipts, together with a certificate of the magistracy, attestations, minutes of executions and minutes of sales, as treated upon in § 46, or other needful supplements; and as regards the expenses, the orders or lists, according to which these have taken place. Before the poor commission transmits the account to the competent department of the government, it is to state by endorsement whether it has any thing in general to observe. How far a separate account should be rendered for the house of industry or other such establishment, or whether the like should be subordinate to the general statement of the poor fund, is to be decided by the poor commission.

CHAPTER IX.

Relating to some Rights attaching to the Poor Administration.

§ 52. The poor commission has a right to refuse permission to a male receiving relief to contract matrimony, so long as he continues to receive the relief; and furthermore, in case he renounce the same in consequence of such prohibition, to require of him to make it appear that he and his family, in case he marry, will not become a burthen to the poor administration, or in case that he cannot do this, which is to be adjudged by the poor commission, that he then give security for the same.

§ 53. When the poor administration has been obliged to take under its charge a child whose father is living, it has the same claim against him as by the laws is assigned the mothers of illegitimate children or separated wives. In case it has been obliged to take charge of or grant relief to necessitous persons who have married parents, mother or grown children, having the means to support or assist them, without being willing to do so, the poor commission is authorized to institute legal proceedings for compensation of its advances, from such unwilling relation.

§ 54. All designations and certificates which are granted, or official summonses or services which are effected for the poor administrations, are to be granted and executed gratuitously.

§ 55. In like manner every poor administration is to retain the peculiar rights, receipts and privileges assigned to this single poor administration, which hitherto may have been attached to the same, in this manner will remain valid in future, the general enactments in the ordinance of §§ 23 and 26 of 25th May 1804, relating to stamps, and exemption from the use of the same, and the law of the 13th September 1830 as to exemption from the payment of postage. All the estates or property of the poor administration are exempted from taxes, imposts, quarterings of soldiers and other exactions.

§ 56. All the laws and ordinances relative to the poor administration in trading towns in force hitherto, are hereby rendered devoid of validity, so far as they may be inconsistent with the enactments contained in the present law.

Appendix to Proposed Law.

By the most gracious commission of the 6th November 1829, it is prescribed to the undersigned to assemble in a commission, for the purpose of reviewing the project of a general law on the administration of the poor, compiled by Oftedahl, dean of the bishopric in Christiansand, together with the opinions expressed and received thereupon, and afterwards to draw up the project of a law for the poor administration. As soon as we received this order, the commission held a preliminary meeting, to take into consideration how far we could cherish the hope, with something like a prospect of accomplishing the object for which the commission was instituted, to be ready in so short time, that the proposal might be submitted to the sixth regular storting in the year 1830. It was, however, discerned at once, that this would be impossible, as well on account of the numerous and pressing official duties, which are imposed on each member of the commission, as to the great mass of prolix matter in the current laws, in the above law project, and in the opinions expressed on the subject by poor commissioners, amtmand and stifts directions, all which required of necessity to be first extracted and embodied, before even a commencement could be made in a proper manner with the actual labours of the commission. With the conviction that the poor administration, especially in the rural districts in Norway, is effectually and judiciously arranged, and that the same ordinances, if applied to the whole of the rural districts, which are so diversified in our far extended country, might give rise to perplexities, and render the poor administration additionally imperfect, rather than produce any improvement, and under an opinion that perhaps even the towns, with single exceptions, could without detriment await the period when the individual to whom it has been confided to compile a sketch of the civil code generally, including several special laws, amongst which that for the poor administration is expressly enumerated, was ready with his work, or at least the time when a law should be perfected applicable to foremen in the towns, which law would probably have much influence on the dispositions of a law for the poor administration in towns; the commission had desired to be able to confine its labours to the project of a law on the relation of poor communes to each other, in reference to the duty of providing for particular paupers, as an object which really requires general and fixed regulations, the absence of which hitherto has given rise to many quarrels between the poor administrations, and numerous removals backwards and forwards of the poor and beggars, giving rise to suffering to these, and unnecessary expense to the communes; but notwithstanding the commission, could its labours have been thus limited, would probably have been enabled so far to get ready, that the work might have been presented at the storting last held, we still felt it would be improper to relinquish any portion of the prescribed more ample province, and we have therefore exerted ourselves in order to bring the whole to a conclusion, by the application of all the time which has been left for the purpose. As the commission has been altogether obliged to participate in the view taken by a considerable portion of the authorities, who have expressed opinions of Dean Oftedahl's proposal, that it is quite essential that there should exist distinct laws for the poor administrations in towns and rural districts, as the direction, mode of relief, sources of income and other contingencies, must be widely different; and a legislation common to both, would only lead to unnecessary prolixity, repetitions, ambiguity and difficulty, we have considered ourselves bound to draw up a project for the country, and one for the towns, especially with reference to the fact, that the individuals who will be the dispensers of the laws, are not usually versed in the handling of them, and have a claim on the community on the score of their burthensome sacrifices, that these should not be increased on the part of the legislature by an injudicious mixture of legislative enactments, which partly concern them, and partly apply to others. With reference to this last point, the commission has deemed it a duty to make its project as short and as little complicated as possible; but at the same time, not without apprehension of not having hit upon the proper medium between the opposite claim which might be made of brevity and completeness. It has endeavoured, with reference to the first, to pass over all the enactments which could be regarded as clearly resulting from the nature of the case, or such as notwithstanding they might have more or less influence on the advantage of the poor administration, attach more particularly to other portions of legislation, such as the police, medical regulations, &c. It has equally endeavoured to avoid definitions and classifications of the poor, in the conviction that a sound judgment will be found, on all occasions which may occur, the best and most competent guide, and that definitions, however adequate they may appear to be, more frequently, especially in a matter like this, lead to uncertainty as to the applicability of the law, imperfection and contradiction, rather than to any real utility.

As the object is, that the laws should be general for the whole of the towns and rural districts in the kingdom, the commission has taken care accordingly to guard against enactments ments which, while they might be very useful, and answer the object for which they were designed in one place, would have the contrary effect in another place, and has therefore endeavoured to leave the hands of the directors concerned at liberty to take such measures as they shall consider in the exercise of their best judgment, best suited to their district.

After having thus briefly adverted to the principles which it has endeavoured to follow in the compilation of the accompanying project, the commission now makes free to touch upon the grounds of the most important single enactments.

Ad. CHAPTER I.

Relating to Towns.

A question has been broached as to how far equity prescribed, that the towns, in future, should likewise receive among the number of those relieved, those poor who have exclusively had employment in a town, but were residing on the ground of a land district, because it was not in the power of the latter to prevent their so residing. The commune, which has had the advantage of their work during their healthy days or plenitude of their vigour, should, it would appear reasonable, provide for them in a period of necessity. The commission, however, has not presumed to propose such an alteration in the arrangement and course of proceeding existing hitherto, because it would be attended by a considerable increase of burthen to the towns, and it would be to make an exception to the general rule, viz. that the place of residence, not the place of trade or subsistence, is the place of settlement. Besides, the district situated nearest the towns derives a benefit from its contiguity, in preference to other districts, which somewhat assists to ease the burthen of more extensive claims for relief, and finally, because a burthen to which one is accustomed is less oppressive than a new one.

The object in all probability will likewise be better attained by degrees, by the construction of suburbs on the ground attached to the jurisdiction of the town, in the same manner as took place some years since at Kleven, above Holmestrand.

Ad. CHAPTER II.

In the project for the Rural Districts.

We have particularly wished that the ministers in the country could be relieved of the not a little burthensome occupation of being foremen, secretaries and cashiers in the poor commissions, as it certainly is very oppressive that they should have a considerable portion of their time taken up and abstracted from their proper and highly-important vocation, by these and so many other secular employments as are assigned to them by the laws; but, nevertheless, the commission has not been able to discern, by a different mode of proceeding, how the poor administration in most of the districts could be properly conducted; and besides, among all temporal employments the poor administration is that which approximates nearest to the avocation of the minister.

To have assigned the secretaryship, at the meetings of the commission, to the chorister of the principal church, it has been held would be improper, because in many places this duty would be but very indifferently performed by him, and because it cannot form a troublesome addition to the duties of the minister as member of the poor commission, that as he must be present at meetings, he should, during the time, further take down the proceedings and perform such other writing as may be required at other times; in general the minister would rather do this personally than have to call the chorister each time, who, as the teacher in a fixed school, should not be called away from attending to the duties of the same. As to what respects the business of the cashier and the keeping of the accounts, these might be confided in many places to the lendsmand, or to an individual overseer of the district; however, this could be only casual, and a general rule for the same would be, most assuredly, impracticable in many places; not to name the circumstance, that lendsmoend have so many calls on their time, and frequently have the money of others committed to their charge, for which reason they are less calculated for the purpose; and that the minister, as foreman and distributor of the contributions granted during the intervals between the meetings of the commission, must always have some money belonging to the poor administration in his hands. The other members of the poor commission in the country, it has been thought should be elected by those of the commune who are entitled to vote, so that each overseer should have his district in the parish of which he is a resident, not indeed because the commission takes it for granted that the poor administration cannot be well directed by a commission composed in the manner prescribed by the existing laws, but because it is most in unison with our present mode of thinking, that the affairs of the commune should be directed by persons which are elected by the members of the same. It is deemed unnecessary to state any special grounds as to the detailed enactments as to elections in towns and ladesteder. In what relates to the mines, reference has been had to the law as to them discussed at the last regular meeting of the storthing.

Ad. CHAPTER II.

For the trading Towns.

Here we have thought the ministers might be exonerated from the virtual administration, as there is always a judicial functionary attached, with whose official duties likewise the administration of the poor is more in accordance than with the avocations of the minister. But nevertheless it has been assumed, that the minister of the parish, with reference to the natural relation of his office to the poor, should be a member of the commission as well as the chief magisterial person, the stipendiary physician resident in the town, and the director of the police, which last functionary likewise, with reference to the nature of his office, will participate with advantage in the management.

Ad. CHAPTER III.

For the Land and District Towns as to the place of Settlement.

Which chapter in both projects is to the same effect, with a single exception, respecting with whom the certificate upon a removal should be deposited, and an enactment exclusively relating to the mines. The commission has assumed that the place removed to should not be enjoined to assume the duty of relief until after five years fixed residence, partly as it is obvious that two or three years is too short a period to impose this burthen on a place which previously had no such obligation; and partly as a longer period would make the person in question or family more free and less exposed to chicanery. When the rule is the same for all, no inequality can be reflected by it on particular communes, supposing it is not to have a retrospective effect. The commission has next considered it to be more consonant with justice, and the principle that personal liberty and free agency should be limited as little as possible, provided the laws be observed; that no commune should possess the right to remove a person or family, because by a longer stay in the commune he or they might become a burthen to the same.

In drawing up enactments applicable to the various occurrences on which it shall depend, where a person or family be relieved, the commission has rather exerted itself to lay down short but comprehensive principles leading to fixed enactments, which acquire their equity by extending alike to all, than that they should exactly be drawn from equity in the concrete, which when assumed as a basis would render necessary a great number of casuistical enactments, and introduce intricacies and uncertainty.

In order not to separate families unnaturally, in case of a necessity for relief, it has been thought best to name the child's or wife's place of settlement or relief, after the father's, mother's or husband's, rather than that where the dependent person, considered as insulated, would have been provided for. In order to avoid frequent, and in many respects unreasonable, claims of reimbursement from the place of settlement when a person who works either as a menial servant, or in another capacity in a commune where he is not settled, but without being in want of regular relief, only requires to be relieved once for all, in consequence of sickness or other misfortune which has occurred and is passing away, it has been decided that in reference to reimbursement, a distinction ought to be made between such persons and those who become necessitous and need to be provided for constantly.

In like manner, the commission has exerted itself to prevent the frequent removal of poor persons to the most remote parts of the kingdom, on the mere supposition that a place stated is their proper place of settlement, devoid of regard for the sufferings which such removals, without the object which they have in view being attained, may have produced, and the expense which has been incurred by the commune. The enactment which appears at the close of the chapter with reference to discharged miners, has for its object, as far as possible, to prevent the proprietors of mines, in whose power it is to discharge persons or families whom they apprehend may become a burthen to the poor administration of the mine, from availing themselves of this right to the detriment of the poor administration of other districts, which have not an equal power to free themselves from the burthen (cfr. § 13.) It has been found that it cannot be allowed, in justice to other communes, that the duty of providing relief should cease within certain years after a mine has ceased working, as to the owner of the same. If it is premised that a mine should form a peculiar poor administration by the side of the district's, a person on becoming the owner of the mine, must assume the responsibilities and duties connected with the same, and should not, because he puts down or relinquishes the mine, have it in his power to throw upon another commune a duty which has been assumed by himself.

Ad. CHAPTER IV.

For the Country Districts respecting the Poor Commissioners.

The commission has considered it most proper that the general rule should be, that only one poor commission be held every year, in which every thing is to be regulated for the administration of the poor during the following year.

In the smaller parishes, and wherever the number of the poor is not considerable, and the modes of affording relief are accurately determined, it has been found hitherto, and we may hope will always be found, that one meeting is sufficient; and where this is the case, superfluous meetings ought not to be enjoined, because in many places they impose on several of the members trouble and loss of time. However, as the rule could not be applicable everywhere, it is requisite to give the commission permission to hold as many meetings every year as may be found necessary.

It has been deemed more proper to confide the superior administration of the poor to the amtmand, in preference to the direction of the stift, as the former has better opportunity of knowing the locality, resources, &c., and having a district of less extent than the latter, will be able to carry into effect such superintendence more effectually. In order to prevent partiality in the chief superintendence, it might appear to be advisable to let the dean share the office with the amtmand; but it has been deemed as a preponderating argument for the contrary, that inconvenience and procrastination in the superior superintendence would frequently arise from the remoteness of the places of residence of these functionaries from each other, as also from the circumstance that the dean himself is a member of the poor administration in the parish where he is minister, of which the bailiff must of course individually have the sole superintendence. On the other hand, it has been deemed proper that the ecclesiastical visitors should be allowed an opportunity during their visitations to see that the poor receive spiritual relief.

Ad. CHAPTER IV.

For the trading Towns.

As the poor-rate is usually the most material source of receipt in towns in which poor administrations exist, and indeed is very oppressive to many towns, it is premised that the foremen of the town, with whom it rests principally to preserve it from unnecessary burthens, should have a vote when the question is as to the extent of the poor-rate, and respecting the necessity of the expenses to which it is to be applied; in such wise, however, that they do not, by a groundless protestation, prevent the poor commission from receiving the really essential means for keeping the poor administration effective; for this reason the amtmand is authorized to decide any disagreement on the subject between the commission and foremen. In the country, a similar interference on the part of the commonalty cannot happen, as long as the foremen are not appointed in the thinglangs, but there it is likewise less needed, as the relief is more simple, and either does not want a poor-rate, or at any rate an inconsiderable one, (cfr. § 29, in the project for the country.)

Ad. CHAPTER V.

In both projects—On the modes of providing for the Poor.

The commission has admitted that the poor direction should have its hands at liberty, as regards the choice of modes of providing for the poor, and that the law should only express the principles, in accordance with which, by general agreement, one mode of relief should be preferred to the other, where facility is given to the choice. These principles are to put the poor in a state of the greatest activity in order to lessen the burthen on the poor administration, and to prefer assistance in kind to that in money. The first, especially in the country, may present greater facility on the part of the contributors than money, and cannot be so easily misapplied by the poor. In rural districts it has been held, that the system of out quartering of the poor "in lœgd" as very advantageous, should be the principal basis of relief; because this mode of effecting the object is, on the whole, least expensive to the community, most beneficial to the poor, and the most convenient to the latter, as affording them an opportunity of being employed in the sort of labour they have been accustomed to, from better days, so far as their strength may admit. However, it has not been deemed proper to enjoin every commune to apply this mode of relief, as there are districts, such for instance as those of Salten and Lofoden, where it has not been applied hitherto, and where, according to the declarations made, it must be regarded as detrimental.

Ad. CHAPTER VI.

In both projects—As to the superintendence and discipline of the Poor.

In case a poor administration is to operate with vigour for the attainment of its object, it is not sufficient that it affords relief to the poor, but it is likewise imperative on it, that all possible attention be paid to their conduct, and that it has the right to adopt coercive measures towards them. It is with these considerations, that the present chapter has been drawn up. The reasons why, in rural districts as heretofore, the power of punishment has not been continued to the sorenskriver, while on the contrary the poor commissioners of towns have been endowed with authority to dictate and award such punishments as those of imprisonment on bread and water, are, that in the country it would be attended with too great trouble to get all the poor commissioners together, for the mere purpose of awarding punishment to a single pauper, and that the commissioners there, exclusively consist of members who have not the means of acting judicially with the needful security; while on the contrary, this is the case in trading towns, at least as to the president of the poor commission; and in towns where there is no difficulty of assembling the commission, it is supposed to be both the least expensive and quickest mode of proceeding to let the commission itself decide the case.

The commission has been involved in doubt as to whether it ought to fix the penalties, applicable to the members of the poor commission, and whether they should be sworn upon their coming into office, but the following preponderating arguments have presented themselves for a decision in the negative,—that men who are elected by the confidence of their fellow citizens, and called to employments which are only attended with trouble, should not be punished for every trivial misconception and omission on their part, and that intentional violation of important duties should be alone admitted as grounds for dismissal from the office, or other punishment according to the analogy of the law; which likewise applies to the fixed members of the commission, and that oaths ought only to be applied in cases where they are highly requisite, and otherwise may give rise to unnecessary apprehensions; especially considering that the upright man will attend to the duties which are incumbent on him, with as much zeal without the obligation of an oath as with it.

Ad. CHAPTER VII.

In both projects—Relative to Mendicity and Parish Constables or Beadles.

Although it is to be supposed that the mass of society will never regard mendicity as a crime, and it is evident there exist many instances in which it is hard to visit it with punishment, still it cannot be denied, that a free permission to beg will be productive of laziness and dissolute habits in most cases; consequently mendicity cannot be allowed, where a well organized and efficacious administration of the poor exists. Hence penal enactments applicable to mendicity are regarded to be essential,

But the commission has been of opinion, at the same time, that humanity and justice should, as relates to the country, claim an exemption from punishment in those cases of necessity where the applicants only ask for food, where otherwise hunger might terminate life, before they could apply and receive relief from the poor administration. The possibility of this case cannot be denied in years of scarcity, even with the best wish to do so, the poor administrations are not able to procure the food which is most essential for the poor; of which fact the last year has afforded melancholy experience in many places. As the like occurrences could not easily take place, or at least ought not to occur, in towns where the poor administration is at hand, and where the needful can hardly be wanting for a sparing maintenance of the poor, it has been held that it was unnecessary to say any thing respecting these cases of exemption in the project for them.

Ad. CHAPTER VIII.

In both projects—Relative to the Receipts of the Poor Fund, and keeping the Accounts

It would certainly be the most desirable mode of providing the needful for the administration, as regards society at large, could it be done by the voluntary contributions of those who had heart and means to succour the poor; but the collecting of voluntary contributions in our time, in most places would not be productive of a return equivalent to the trouble attending it, or render a poor rate in towns, and the money exacted or other contributions levied in the country superfluous, and to unite these sources of revenue, would only be a means of easing those who do not subscribe according to their ability, at the expense of the more willing contributors, and give rise to much vexation, not only as respects the collection, but also with regard to the detested investigation as to whether the subscribers had contributed proportionally with their means. The commission has not therefore deemed it proper to retain the existing enactment as to the subscription books being carried round. Nor has it assigned to the poor fund the income which belongs to it in many places, arising from the gifts of communicants, as it is presumed to be no very appropriate time to solicit money from the common man just when he is about to present himself at the altar; as such a donation, although inconsiderable, might easily be the means of deterring some individuals from attending the sacrament, especially as those who would be reached by this mode of proceeding might easily be found, and a contribution be levied on them at another time and place. (cfr. The project for the Country, § 42, b.)

As little has it been deemed proper to tax persons to the poor fund at their marriage, as under such circumstances they have expenses enough besides. In the present times and under the existing state of things, the commission has considered it a questionable policy to ordain the payment of duty to the poor fund upon the sale of real property by auction, on loan, &c., as the sale frequently takes place from necessity, the prices of property are considerably too much depressed already to be subjected to a still further reduction by fresh imposts, and dues upon loans will only tend to oppress the necessitous borrower.

On the other hand the commission has thought it right to propose duties on brandy and wine, as it is presumed not to be detrimental that these articles become a little dearer; and the immoderate use of brandy so frequently renders those paupers with their families, and who would not otherwise become a burthen to the poor fund. It is but just that drunkards, who oblige the community to provide for them, should contribute to the relief of the poor, during their enjoyment of the article which makes them finally paupers themselves.

The only fear has been, lest the duty should be fixed so high, as to give rise to smuggling. To levy the duty upon the sale would most assuredly have the advantage of reaching such a portion which would be smuggled in, but would likewise give rise to a very extensive and difficult control, and occasion a large portion of the commodities to escape the duty, as also that a large quantity might have to pay the duty twice or even oftener. A duty on brandy or wine, payable by the retailers, would yield a too inconsiderable revenue to the poor fund, in case the impost was not unreasonably high; and it would give rise to a considerable quantity of these products being withdrawn from the payment of duty, in consequence of clandestine sales.

For the above reasons it has been thought best that the duty ought, as regards spirits distilled at home, to be levied on the stills and collected at the same time as the duty to the State Treasury; and that the duty on wine and brandy should be collected with the duty to the customs. We have not ventured, for the reasons before stated, to tax home made spirits at more than a moiety of the duty paid to the royal treasury, and foreign wine and brandy at more than 1 skilling per pot; as the duty on these articles must be already regarded as rather high. That to the land districts are assigned, at least one third part of the duty on wine and brandy imported, seems reasonable, as the consumption of these articles in the country ought to be beneficial to them.

In respect of the appropriation of this duty, § 47 contains all that the commission can have to say upon it. With respect to the fixed duty in the country on hunsmænd and servants, it has been thought that this would not be too oppressive to the contributors, unless in the case of a few poor hunsmænd, to whom it may be remitted; and at the same time we have thought it right to spare the poor commission the necessity of rating a large number of persons whose condition, each sex considered for itself, is usually similar.

In respect of inheritances or other casual windfalls which devolve to the poor, the commission has supposed, that these occur so seldom, that the poor fund will be equally well off, if they are left to the poor as at present. The pauper relieved by them will have the better chance of ceasing to be a burthen to the poor administration for the future.

In order to avoid a troublesome operation, and one that usually is disproportionate to the value realized, that of taking an inventory and seeing to the trifles possessed by a deceased pauper, it has been proposed that the right of the poor fund to take the effects left by paupers, should be limited to such of these as do not leave any partner in wedlock or children unprovided for; where such relatives exist, the result would otherwise be to take with the one hand and to give with the other.

When the commission has proposed an apportionment of lægd, contributions in kind or in money, in the country, in preference to applying the cadastre as a scale it has not overlooked, that the latter mode is far more simple and easy, and that there are few complaints of unfairness; but it has conceived, in as much as justice certainly dictates that each should contribute the needful towards promoting the welfare of the community to which he belongs, in proportion to his means and income; that this principle cannot be observed if the cadastre be taken as a basis, but will be, when an assessment is made conscientiously; and it would very little accord with the idea one forms of the benefit supposed to be enjoyed under a constitutional government through the means of free election, if the community should have with reason, so little confidence in the integrity of those it chose for directors of so important an affair as the administration of the poor, that it preferred to submit to being taxed on a scale absolutely incorrect, rather than by the men selected by itself. The assessment is particularly requisite with reference to the individuals treated upon in § 44, in the project for the country as well as the towns.

In the project for the country § 47, and in § 48 for the towns, is afforded the needful opportunity to have the assessment tried by a higher court; in which respect, in as far as relates to the towns, we refer to § 33 of the law project relative to foremen in the towns.

Ad. CHAPTER IX.

In both projects—Relating to certain Privileges attaching to the Poor Administration.

However much it may be admitted that objections exist against the principle that the public should prevent an individual from marrying, the commission has still assumed that the community at large ought to prevent male paupers from increasing the burthens of the community by matrimony; every father of a family should be able to oppose the marriage of parties who are unable to provide for a family by other means than by burthening the fathers of families with their support.

This reflection is the source of the enactment in § 49 of the project for the country, and § 52 in that for the towns. It is deemed to be unnecessary to include the female sex in this prohibition, because if it be a pauper with whom a woman who is then receiving relief intends to marry, then the poor commission has the needful opportunity to object to the marriage on the score of the man; and if the marriage is to be with another, it must be regarded an advantage in general, that a woman relinquishes the provision. In case her marriage should give rise to further and increased relief, even then the poor administration would not be commonly worse off than had he whom she married taken another woman to wife, who was not receiving any relief at the time the marriage was contracted.

The Commission instituted to compile the project of a law for the poor administration,

URUGUAY.

URUGUAY.

I. VAGRANTS.

QUESTION 1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer to Q. 1. Mendicity is scarcely known in the Oriental Republic of the Uruguay.

Q. 2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—A. None.

II. DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

There can be few, if any, destitute able-bodied men in this country, where labour is in so much demand and so highly paid, consequently all the questions under this head are irrelevant.

The average price of beef is under a penny a pound, and the best wheat bread four-pence per pound.

III. IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—A. The labouring part of the community in this Republic being principally slaves, the master is obliged to provide for them in their old age; persons not slaves are provided by their friends, there being no almshouses or other institution for the reception of persons impotent through age.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—A. There are but few poor of any class in this country, and no regulations exist, to my knowledge, that afford relief to them at their homes.

Q. 3 & 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals or quartered or billeted on the householders?—A. No such custom is known here.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—A. The aged and poor are universally taken care of by their relations, but there are no laws to compel their assistance.

IV. SICK.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—A. There is a charity hospital which receives the poor of all classes and countries gratis; it is well conducted, of great capacity, and usually contains from 150 to 200 patients, including foreign seamen, and others who pay for cure. This establishment is supported by a per centage on all merchandise imported, by a tax on foreign and national vessels, and by rents of property belonging to the hospital.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—A. Every medical practitioner is obliged to make a declaration on oath, before his diploma is granted, that he will attend the poor gratis at their own homes whenever sent for; and this practice universally prevails.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—A. Only that expressed in the first of these articles.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—A. There is no such thing as any regulation or institution for assisting lying-in women either at their homes or elsewhere.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—A. None.

V. CHILDREN.

Illegitimate.

Q. 1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—A. The father, if found, must provide for both the mother and child, if not found, the child must be maintained by the mother. This, however, is a matter seldom brought before the public, because if the mother finds the child inconvenient she can send it to the Foundling Hospital, where, as a visitor, she can see it daily.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—A. The relations are under no obligations.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—A. Only as described in No. 1.

Orphans,

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

	ORPHANS.	FOUNDLINGS.	DESERTED CHILDREN whose Parents are known.
Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they taken into establishments for their reception?—	A. There is no provision for orphans, they are usually taken care of by the friends of their parents.	-- A part of the hospital is appropriated for the reception of foundlings, who are received to any extent and without inquiry.	-- If the parents be known, the law compels them to support their children. There are no establishments for their reception.

Q. 5 & 6. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders, or are they boarded with individuals?—A. No regulations exist to this effect.

Q. 7. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—There are no compulsory laws upon relations to this effect.

VI. CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

There is no provision for persons coming under this description.

VII. IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?—A. There are no specific establishments for this purpose, but both idiots and lunatics are admitted into the charity hospital, where wards are appropriated to the purpose.

Q. 2 & 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders, or boarded with individuals?—A. No regulations exist.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—A. The parents only; afterwards they, the idiots and lunatics, become objects of charity, and are provided for in the asylum at the charity hospital.

VIII. EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

There are no poor laws in this country, therefore the several articles under this head are inapplicable.

IX. LABOURERS, &c.

Agriculture, from the nature of the country being appropriated to the rearing of cattle, is yet only very limitedly known, and in no instance pursued as a profession; labour being high and the rent of land low, any given portion of labour can produce more, in the thinly populated state of the country, by rearing cattle for the sale of hides and tallow, than could be produced by agricultural pursuits; and although a certain portion of wheat is grown annually, yet from the crops being liable to a disease much resembling blight, which makes this branch of industry very precarious, and the high price of labour in producing it, the country may be said to depend on the markets of the United States for its supply.

The persons generally employed in taking care of cattle are either slaves or gauchos, hired at about eight dollars a month by the year.

Q. 4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.—A. I have no means of ascertaining the annual expenditure of labourers; but children may be educated at national schools supported by the government, and attended and examined by the clergy of the district.

Q. 5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—A. I know of no other work than the needle, which, generally speaking, must be limited.

Q. 6 & 7. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed? What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy,) expect to earn in a year, obtaining as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A. Unknown.

Q. 8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—A. A family may subsist on the labour of the husband without any earnings of the wife and children, and have a meal with meat three times a day.

Q. 9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—A. If frugal, they may, for I have known several slaves, who were allowed to work on the condition of paying their master a portion of their wages, save enough to buy their own freedom, and afterwards become so rich as to have slaves themselves.

The remainder of the questions unanswered.

FRANCE.—BRITTANY.

I. VAGRANTS.

QUESTION 1. To what extent, and under what form, does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer to Q. 1. To a very great extent, and under every form. It is impossible to particularize without entering into a long statistical account for every parish, as it varies in each.

Q. 2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—People seeking work and unable to procure it obtain a trifling relief from the mayor (out of the parish funds), generally a 3 lb. loaf, and a "Passeport d'Indigent," to some distant town. This passport entitles the bearer to a relief of 15 centimes ($1\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling) per league, payable at each commune through which he passes. Mendicants arriving in towns are permitted to beg two or three days, during which they are supposed to collect sufficient to enable them to go elsewhere. They must then leave the town.

II. DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

Q. 1, 2, & 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders; or boarded with individuals; or are there district Houses of Industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—A. None.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—A. The only religious assistance is charity from the clergy, who seldom refuse an applicant.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—A. None.

Q. 6. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—In Brest, where the population is about 30,000, a few are employed on public works, such as sweeping the streets, repairing public walks, &c. &c. The number varies from 16 to 50, and their pay from 50 cents. to one franc (5 d. to 10 d. sterling) per diem.

Q. 7. To what extent, and under what regulations, are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—A. A sum (16,000 francs, or 660 l.) is annually granted by the town for this purpose. It is far from being sufficient. In severe weather public subscriptions are made; but all this does not suffice for the many cases of distress that occur during winter. The distributions are made by paid agents, under the direction of a committee of charitable persons appointed by the mayor.

Q. 8. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—There are public schools, to which all poor children are admitted for six or eight hours a day; but they do not give either food or raiment: 13,850 francs (554 l. sterling) are annually paid by the town of Brest for public education.

Q. 9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—The laws define the degrees of relationship obliged to assist each other; parents and children; brothers and sisters; but there are no specific regulations; and the laws are easily evaded.

Q. 10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—None.

III. IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—A. The town hospital is the only establishment for the reception of persons of this description. At 70 years of age those who are destitute are admitted and provided for. Such as have small incomes (not sufficient for their maintenance at large) are received, but must pay to the extent of 60 francs per annum to the hospital. All applications for admission must be approved by the mayor.

Q. 2, 3 & 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes? or are they boarded with individuals? or are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—None.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Same Answer as to Question 9. (Able-bodied Destitute.)

It frequently occurs that the relations, unwilling to keep them at home, pay for their maintenance at the hospital.

IV. SICK.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—A. Public hospitals, to which all wounded and feverish applicants are immediately immediately admitted. The average annual expenditure of the Brest hospital amounts to 76,000 francs (3,040*l.* sterling.)

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—A. None.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—A. None.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—A. They are received at the hospitals, where there is a separate ward for them, and taken care of until sufficiently recovered to return to their homes.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—None.

V. CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

Q. 1 & 2. There are no legal means of compelling either fathers or mothers to support their illegitimate children.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—A. In every large town a foundling hospital is constantly open to receive abandoned children, who are maintained until old enough to be placed out as apprentices. The annual expense of the Brest Foundling Hospital is 17,500 francs (700*l.* sterling), 325 to 350 children are annually received.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they taken into establishments for their reception?—A. Same as the illegitimate children.

Q. 5 & 6. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, boarded with individuals?—A. None.

Q. 7. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—A. When deserted by their relations whom it is difficult to compel to support them, they generally are received by the friends or neighbours; if not, they are placed in the foundling hospital. See Answer to Q. 3, respecting illegitimate children.

VI. CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?—A. In the five departments of Brittany there are two establishments for the reception of the deaf and dumb. Admission is obtained by a recommendation from the municipal authorities, approved by the Minister of the Interior. As their subsistence must be paid for, there are few applications; the others remain in their families, or become beggars. There are no establishments for the reception of cripples or the blind.

Q. 2 & 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, boarded with individuals?—None.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Same answer as to Q. 9, (Able-bodied, Destitute.) When abandoned by their relatives, they become mendicants, and are treated as such.

VII. IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

	IDIOTS.	LUNATICS.
Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?	A. None - - -	- - There are two mad-houses in Brittany; each parish pays for the maintenance of the lunatics it sends. Brest pays on an average yearly 1,200 francs (48 l. sterling.)
Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders?	A. None - - -	None.
Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?	A. None - - -	None.
Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?	A. Same answer as to Q. 9, (Able-bodied, Destitute.) Idiots are respected and well treated by the peasantry, who believe they bring good luck to the house they inhabit.	- - Same answer as to Q. 9, (Able-bodied, Destitute.) The dangerous maniacs only are confined. Harmless lunatics roam about and meet with the same charity as idiots.

VIII. EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

1st. On the industry of the labourers? 2d. On their frugality? 3d. On the age at which they marry? 4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—A. None.

5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—A. The able-bodied and self-supporting labourer in town is very little better off than the person subsisting on charity. The difference in food is in favour of the latter. In the country, the relief to beggars being mostly afforded by people living on very low fare, the labourer is better off than the beggar.

IX. LABOURERS, &c.

	ARTISAN.	AGRICULTURIST.
Q. 1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?	A. 1 franc 50 cents (15 d. sterling) per diem.	-- In summer 1 franc (10 d. sterling) per diem. In winter 70 centimes (7 d.) per diem.
Q. 2. Is piece-work general?	A. Yes, among the skilled.	-- No.
Q. 3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?	A. About 450 francs (18 l. sterling.)	About 275 francs (11 l. sterling.)
Q. 4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.	A. Almost all their earnings. The instruction of their children is gratuitously carried on by religious teachers.	Almost all their earnings. Same as artisans.
Q. 5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?	A. For women, needle work, washing, knitting, spinning. The children earn little, being apprentices until 15 or 16.	-- The women work in the fields, spin, knit; boys, when old enough, work in the fields.
Q. 6. What can women and children, under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?	A. Women from 50 to 70 cents (5 d. to 7 d. sterling) per diem. Some children 25 cents (2½ d. sterling) per diem.	-- Women from 30 to 60 cents. (3 d. to 6 d. sterling) per diem. Children, during harvest, about 20 cents (2 d. sterling) per diem; at other times very little.
Q. 7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy,) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?	A. 250 francs (10 l. sterling.)	200 francs (8 l. sterling.)
Q. 8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?	A. Yes. Bread, a small quantity of meat (perhaps 5 lb. a week) vegetables and fish, which are very cheap.	-- Yes. The principal articles of food are buckwheat made into porridge and cakes; barley bread, potatoes, cabbages, and about 6 lb. of pork weekly. A little grease for the cabbage soup, which is poured on barley bread.
Q. 9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?	A. Not above 2 l. per annum.	Seldom more than 1 l. 10 s. per annum.
Q. 10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?	A. None.	A small patch of garden, sufficient for cabbages.

	ARTISAN.	AGRICULTURIST.
Q. 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?	Retired shopkeepers.	A. Petty land owners.
Q. 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?	A. The average price in towns is 2 l. 10 s. for two rooms in a house.	-- In the country about 2 l. for two rooms. Labourers seldom occupy the whole habitation.
Q. 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?	A. None.	-- The industrious labourer sometimes takes 1 or 1½ acres of garden ground, the produce of which is sold by his wife at the market. The rent is generally 2 l. 5 s. per acre.

Q. 14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—A. Average annual deaths, 1,460.

Q. 15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—A. Average annual births, 1,380.

Q. 23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—A. Want of means of support.

Q. 24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—The unmarried enough to buy a stock of clothes; the married very little.

Q. 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—The married, in towns, in savings banks, to a very little extent. In the country they hoard, to have enough to pay the fine on taking a small farm.

It is extremely difficult to obtain any statistical information in Brittany, all inquiries being received with distrust, not only by the authorities, but also by the inhabitants. This has been the principal cause of my delay in replying to the series of Questions herewith. The answers, imperfect as they may appear, are the result of patient and persevering inquiry.

The state of society in Brittany, and its institutions differ so widely from those of any other civilized country, that few of the Questions in this series are applicable. In order, therefore, to convey the information which these Questions are intended to elicit, it is necessary to enter into a description of the population, which I shall endeavour to do as briefly as possible.

The population of Brittany may be classed under the following heads:

Old noblesse possessing a portion of the land.

Proprietors, retired merchants and others, who have vested their money in landed property.

Peasants, owners of the ground they till.

Farmers.

Daily labourers and beggars.

The abolition of the right of primogeniture causes a daily diminution of the two first classes. As property, at the demise of the owner, must be divided equally amongst his children, who can seldom agree about the territorial division, it is put up for sale, purchased by speculators, and resold in small lots to suit the peasantry. Farmers having amassed sufficient to pay a part, generally one half, of the purchase money of a lot, buy it, giving a mortgage at five or six per cent. for the remainder. Thus petty proprietors increase, and large proprietors and farmers decrease.

A man, industrious enough to work all the year, can easily get a farm.

Farms are small. Their average size in Lower Brittany does not exceed fourteen acres. Some are so small as two acres, and there are many of from four to eight. The largest in the neighbourhood of Brest is thirty-six acres. The average rate of rent is 1*l.* 5*s.* per acre for good land, and 8*s.* for poor land (partly under broom and furze).

The farmers are very poor, and live miserably; yet, their wants being few and easily satisfied, they are comparatively happy. Their food consists of barley bread, butter, buck wheat (made into puddings, porridge and cakes). Soup composed of cabbage water, a little grease, or butter and salt poured on bread. Potatoes; meat twice a week (always salt pork.)

A family of twelve, including servants and children, consumes annually about 700 lbs. of pork and 100 lbs. of cow beef; the latter only on festivals.

The class of daily labourers can only be said to exist in towns. In the country they are almost unknown.

The inmates of each farm, consisting of the farmer's family, and one, two or three males, and as many female servants (according to the size of the farm) paid annually, and who live with the family, suffice for the general work. At harvest some additional hands are employed. These are generally people who work two or three months in the year, and beg during the remainder. Daily labourers and beggars may, therefore, in the country, be classed under the same head.

Farmers' servants are orphans or children of unfortunate farmers.

The conditions of the poorer farmers, daily labourers and beggars, are so near akin, that the passage from one state to another is very frequent.

Mendicity is not considered disgraceful in Brittany. Farmers allow their children to beg along the roads. On Saint's days, especially the festivals of celebrated Saints, whose shrines attract numerous votaries (all of whom give something, be it ever so little, to the poor), the aged, infirm and children of poor farmers and labourers, turn out. Some small hamlets are even totally abandoned by their inhabitants for two or three days. All attend the festival to beg.

The Bretons are hospitable. Charity and hospitality are considered religious duties. Food and shelter for a night are never refused.

Several attempts to suppress mendicity have been unsuccessful. District asylums were established. No sooner were they filled than the vacancies in the beggar stands were immediately replenished by fresh subjects from the country; it being a general feeling, that it is much easier and more comfortable to live by alms than by labour.

In towns where the police is well regulated, the only mendicants permitted to sojourn are paupers belonging to the parish. They are known by a tin badge, for which they pay at the police office. All foreign beggars are treated as mentioned in answer to Question 2, (Vagrants.)

No such thing is known as a legal claim for assistance from public or private charities.

In towns, destitute workmen or other persons in distress must be authorized by the municipality previous to soliciting public or private assistance. To effect this, the pauper makes known his case to the commissary of police of the quarter he inhabits, who makes inquiry inquiry among the neighbours. Should the destitute case of the applicant be established, the mayor grants him a certificate of indigence, which authorizes him to apply for relief to the public institutions, and to solicit private charity. It also exempts him (or rather causes his exemption) from the payment of taxes.

The principal cause of misery is inebriety; its frequency among the lower orders keeps them in poverty. The "cabaret" (wine and brandy shop) absorbs a great portion of their earnings. This vice is not confined to men; the women partake of it. It has decreased within the last five or six years, but is still considerable.

I have been unable to procure dietaries of prisons or other institutions. The following are the only particulars I have been able to obtain.

HOSPITAL OF BREST.

Aged Infirm.

Breakfast, eight in the morning. Bread; sometimes a little fruit and vegetables.

Dinner at twelve. Soup; vegetables; fish once or twice a week.

Supper at six. Same as dinner.

Meat twice a week.

The allowance of bread is one pound per diem.

The price paid by the relatives for the support of aged and infirm is 75 centimes ($7\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling) per diem.

FOUNDLING HOSPITAL.

The diet is the same as for the aged infirm, with the difference that milk is given to the youngest.

PRISONS.

Prisoners without the means of paying for accommodation are kept in a most deplorable condition.

The accused and convicted are confined together. The women separate from the men.

The bedding is 10 lbs. of straw, renewed weekly. No blanket or covering of any kind. No clothing is given to them.

The ration is one pound and a half of bread, and a quart of soup daily.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Vagrants are numerous throughout the city and province, and certain orders of friars derive their subsistence from begging. This occupation they pursue deep into the interior, where they levy large contributions in rice, coffee and other produce.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—None of a compulsory character. Relief in such cases is dependent on private benevolence.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—There are no regulations for billeting or quartering such persons on householders.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Answered by No. 1.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no such establishments in this province: no district houses of industry for the purposes enumerated. A correctional prison, on the plan adopted in the United States, is now about to be established.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—Some of the monasteries of the city give out daily rations of meat, &c. to the destitute; others distribute a pittance of alms and a ration of bread. The relief is very circumscribed. No inmates are received.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves? or, 6. Is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—There are no regulations to effect such purposes.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—The answer to No. 4 is the only reply applicable to this question.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—In every parish (freguezia) of this province there exists an elementary school (aula das primeiras letras), the master being appointed and the small expenses of the seminary defrayed by the provincial government. In these establishments the children of all classes are free to acquire the first rudiments of education without fee or charge of any description. The children are not, however, fed or clothed at the public expense, nor are there any regulations for apprenticing them.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—No such regulations are here in existence. In the absence of compulsion by law, private good feeling and charity effects much; the relatives of the destitute being frequently admitted, and, as it were, adopted into the families of their less needy relations.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—There are no regulations to this effect.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—There are no alms-houses or institutions of a similar description for the reception of this class of sufferers.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes? or, 3. Are they boarded with individuals? or, 4. Are they quartered or billeted on the householders? or, 5. Are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—There are no regulations to this effect.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—The city of Bahia possesses a charitable institution, named Santa P. L. (F.)

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.

BAHIA.

Caza da Misericordia, which is maintained on a very extensive and efficient footing by dues exacted from shipping frequenting the port, and occasional benefactions, combined with a large rental from the accumulated bequests of the charitable. It is governed by a provedor or chairman, his deputy and administrators, annually chosen.

The town of Cachoeira, and some others in the province, are likewise provided with similar institutions on a smaller scale. In these charities patients of all ages, colours and descriptions are received, including lunatics, idiots, cripples, deaf and dumb, the blind, deserted children and foundlings.—Infirmity and destitution are titles sufficient for admission.—Deserted children and foundlings are received without investigation or question touching parentage or legitimacy. They are fed, clothed and educated at the cost of the institution until the females become marriageable, and the boys are old enough to learn a trade. This liberality leads to abuse. Instances being not infrequent, in which parents sordid, but not really necessitous, have burthened the charity with their legitimate offspring, whilst by subsequent management they have contrived to get them back from the hospital as unknown foundling out-patients with a monthly allowance for maintenance. The actual number of patients supported by the Caza da Misericordia of this city, is estimated at about two thousand. The particulars of its revenue and expenditure are given in the statement annexed.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—This species of succour is altogether dependent on the individual benevolence of the medical faculty.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There are neither institutions nor regulations for such purposes beyond those described in No. 1.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There are no public establishments for the reception of lying-in women, nor are there any public regulations to ensure their being attended at their private dwellings.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are no regulations by law established. The Santa Caza da Misericordia described in answer to question No. 1 (Sick) is the only public refuge for the indigent sick.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The father only may be compelled to pay for the support of his affiliated child to the extent of Rs. 12. 000, or 30 shillings (ex. 30 d.) per month. The paternity being legally proved, the illegitimate infant at once stands on a footing of equal right and title with the lawful offspring of his recognised parent.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—There is no regulation by which the relatives of the mothers or fathers may be compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—Orphans. The city of Bahia possesses a very stately edifice for male orphans. Its revenue is derived from occasional bequests and donations, aided by a moderate annual grant from the Provincial Government. The funds as they are now administered, by a board consisting of 12 governors and a president, suffice only for the maintenance and education of about 50 boys. Admission to this charity is obtained by ballot.—Foundlings. Misericordia Hospital. See Answer No. 1. (Sick).—Deserted Children, whose parents are known. No appointed place of refuge for such children. See Answer No. 1. (Sick.)

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Are they boarded with individuals? 7. To what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—No regulations thereon.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—No establishment for the relief of this class of sufferers, simply as such. Misericordia Hospital, see No. 1. (Sick.)

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, 3. Are they boarded with individuals? or, 4. To what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—No regulations thereon.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—There is no law to provide for the succour of idiots, but they are freely admitted into the Santa Caza Misericordia.

A ward for lunatics is kept at the Misericordia Hospital; but no curative system for the mental ailment is in practice.

2. To

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? or, 3. Are they boarded with individuals? or, 4. To what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—No regulations thereon.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any and what effect:

1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? and, 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—As the institutions do not exist in this province, no answers can be supplied to these queries.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The condition of the able-bodied self-supporting labourer of the lowest class in this province, is on the whole far superior to that of the persons subsisting on alms or public charity. The industrious artizan or labourer is sure of work, by which his regular wants are as regularly supplied; whilst the dependant on chance charity fluctuates between excess and intemperance one day, and want and inanition the other. The condition of the latter as to food and freedom from labour is therefore less eligible.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—Skilful free husbandmen seldom engage on wages, field labour being left to the slave population. Free agriculturalists, whether white, mulatto or black, derive an easy subsistence from the cultivation of small patches of land, which are readily obtainable at a trifling rent, if not rent free.

A cottage is erected at a small expense and trouble, and the soil soon supplies food for the cottager and his family.

A steady skilful artizan readily finds employment throughout the year, at an average of Rs. 000 640, or circa 2 s. by the day.

2. Is piece-work general?—It is commonly practiced. The journeyman in some cases agreeing to receive one half of the sum paid by the customer, in others a fixed sum for each job.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—The earnings of a year may be described as the aggregate pay for 250 working days, according to the rate described in answer No. 1. The working classes are rigidly observant of Saints' days and holidays, days of complete idleness with them.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—The average annual expenditure of an unmarried free agriculturalist may amount to Rs. 80. 000 (12 l.) The addition of a wife and two children may double this amount. The expenditure of artizans resident in towns must be reckoned full 100 per cent. higher. Neither schooling nor religious teachers, however, form an item of charge.

5. Is there any, and what employment, for women and children?—The wives of free agriculturalists rarely seek employment beyond the duties of their cottage; and the male children soon learn to follow the fathers to the field, or to fishing in the vicinity of rivers or the sea.

6. What can women and children, under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Free women and young children are rarely engaged on hire in field labour.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy,) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—An agricultural labourer's wife and four children of the ages described, not having any regular employment or hire to which to resort, must be chiefly dependant on the husband's exertions.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Such a family might subsist on the earnings of the father, promoted by the domestic industry of the mother, their subsistence being the flour of the mandioca root, jerked beef, salt fish, yams, herbs, &c.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—Under such circumstances it would be difficult to "lay by any thing."

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—It is scarcely practicable to frame correct averages, the ground being uninclosed, and the restriction as to quantity very loose.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—"Senhores de Engenho," owners of the soil.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—The cottages are usually constructed of such simple materials as to make them of very trifling pecuniary worth. Very few would reach so high an estimate as Rs. 20. 000, or 3 l. sterling.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and what rent?—

The quantity designated a "rossados" is dependant on the condition named in answer to No. 10.; and the rent is usually very small, rarely exceeding a few shillings per annum.

14, 15, 16. The proportion of annual deaths, births and marriages to the whole population? 17. The average number of children to a marriage? 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births? 19, 20, 21. The proportion of children that die before the end of their 1st, 10th and 18th year?—The Government of Bahia has at different times issued urgent injunctions for statistical returns regarding births, marriages, deaths, &c.; but down to this period not one has been transmitted. It is not, therefore, in my power to give replies which I may presume to offer as authentic approximations to truth.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—In the absence of official returns, I am only able to offer the collected opinion of the best authorities within my sphere, viz. that a very large proportion of males marry between the ages of 18 and 20, and of females, between 12 and 15.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Independent of the hindrances which are common to all countries, the great laxity of morals in this, and the redundancy of female population, have powerful influence in delaying and preventing marriages.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—There are no data on which to found a satisfactory reply to this question.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—No data.

Prison Dietary, &c.

Unless to members of the military profession, no allowance whatever is made by the government. Almshouses and workhouses are unknown. To prisoners entirely destitute the Caza Santa da Misericordia provides a scanty ration of boiled beef and rice, once a day. Notwithstanding which, deaths from starvation in gaol are by no means infrequent.

Dietary of the Santa Caza da Misericordia.
